

UMASS/AMHERST

312066009251855

THIS SWORN
OF THE
CONNECTICUT VALLEY
MASSACHUSETTS
WITH ILLUSTRATIONS

UMass APR 5 '72

L. H. EVERTS, PUB. PHILA.

CONNECTICUT VALLEY,
MASSACHUSETTS.
LOOKING NORTH FROM MT. NONOTUCK.

GOIST, DEL.

HISTORY
— OF —
THE CONNECTICUT VALLEY

IN MASSACHUSETTS,

— WITH —

Illustrations and Biographical Sketches

— OF —

SOME OF ITS PROMINENT MEN AND PIONEERS.

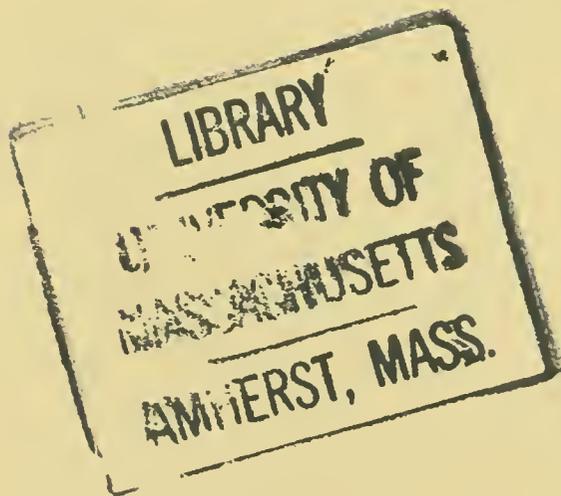

COMPLETE IN TWO VOLUMES.

VOL. I.

PHILADELPHIA:
LOUIS H. EVERTS.

— 1879. —

975
M38h+
v.1

PUBLISHER'S PREFACE.

THE History of the Connecticut Valley in Massachusetts, which has been in course of preparation during the past twelve months, is at length completed, and placed in the hands of the people.

The compilation of a work covering such a large extent of territory, and treating of events transpiring through the lapse of two hundred and forty-three years, as can be readily understood, is a labor of extraordinary magnitude, involving a heavy outlay, and requiring a vast amount of research, the exercise of impartial judgment, and the most critical discrimination.

The subjects treated cover a wide range,—from the adventurous life of the pioneer of 1636, through every branch of human experience, industry, and knowledge, to the wonderful physical and intellectual development of the present day.

Materials for the work have been abundant. Several of the towns in the Valley possess excellent published histories, while the preserved files of newspapers and the various records constitute a mine of wealth which can scarcely be exhausted. The entire region abounds in rich treasures of local history, and such works as the excellent "History of Western Massachusetts," by Dr. Josiah Gilbert Holland, the numberless volumes in public and private libraries, colonial records, family genealogies, and biographies of eminent men and women, are accessible at every turn.

The people of the Connecticut Valley are pre-eminently intelligent and widely alive to all which pertains to the history of their indomitable ancestors, and always ready to assist in the production of meritorious works which may, in any manner, shed additional light upon the past.

The aim of the publisher of the present work has been to make it as full and reliable a compendium of the history of this beautiful and interesting region as a lavish expenditure of money, time, and talent could produce; and it is believed that no similar work has ever been published in this country which could compare with it, either in magnitude, variety and interest of subjects treated, or in the number and beauty of its illustrations, which amount to not far from five hundred, all excellent specimens of the engraver's art.

The plan of illustrating local histories is one which the people themselves have inaugurated, and which has so enhanced the appearance of each successive volume, and so increased the general interest therein, that it has been permanently and successfully adopted by the publishers. The testimony of a most respectable majority of the citizens, wherever such publications have been introduced, and especially among those most prominent and best capable of judging, is ample proof that portraits of those who have been or are citizens of a county at the date of publication; who by their enterprise, integrity, and public spirit have materially aided its growth and prosperity, and whose lives have been worthy examples, may very properly appear upon the pages of such local history.

Ex-Governor Seymour, of New York, remarked of the history of his own county, that the portraits therein of its deceased and living citizens greatly enhanced its value in his estimation. Dr. Holmes,

PUBLISHER'S PREFACE.

State Librarian of New York, considers the illustrated portion, including personal sketches of prominent citizens, a feature which will become more interesting with the lapse of time, and one which gives additional value to the work.

The illustrations of each town, like its written history, are distinct and complete in themselves, and are selected as fair representatives of its worthy citizens, independently of any comparison with those of any other city or town. The highest ideal is not always reached, but the endeavor has been to handle this department with due regard to the rules of propriety and consistency, the tastes and desires of the people of the Valley, and the true interests of the publisher and the community.

This explanation is rendered necessary by the fact that there have been those who criticised without thoroughly understanding the system adopted, and without giving the subject due consideration. Every effort has been put forth to render this work as complete in all departments as possible, and to bring it fully up to the expectations of those who have so liberally indorsed it, with the confident belief that they will appreciate the labor and patient research necessary in the production of a work which contains, among other items, a hundred thousand proper names, and at least one thousand biographies and personal sketches. Perfection is impossible, but the work is placed in the hands of its patrons with the hopeful assurance that its immense array of interesting facts will be invaluable to the student and historian, to the professional man and the mechanic, and to the farmer in the midst of his family.

The writers engaged upon the work have been almost invariably treated with the greatest courtesy, and have had every facility extended which the necessity of the case required, by county and town officials; by the clergy of all denominations, members of the bar, the medical profession, the press, the faculties of the various colleges, the principals of academies, seminaries, and schools, and by manufacturers and business men generally; to all of whom they acknowledge their sincere obligations. They would also gratefully remember the farming community, whose members have added in no small degree to the interest and value of the work.

To the following, among many hundreds of citizens, the publisher would acknowledge himself under special obligations: Judge Henry Morris, William Rice, D.D., and lady, Hon. William L. Smith, David P. Smith, M.D., C. C. Chaffee, M.D., Wm. G. Breck, M.D., P. Le B. Stickney, M.D., Gen. Horace Lee, Major Ingersoll, Paymaster United States Armory; Capt. J. K. Newell, Brewer Brothers, druggists, A. P. Stone, all of Springfield; Hon. E. H. Sawyer, Easthampton; J. R. Trumbull, Rev. Dr. Gordon Hall, O. O. Roberts, M.D., Hamilton J. Cate, M.D., and Sheriff Longley, of Northampton; Ex-Gov. Wm. B. Washburn, Jas. S. Grinnell, Jona. W. D. Osgood, M.D., A. C. Deane, M.D., Hon. David Aiken, Judge C. C. Conant, and Rev. J. F. Moors, of Greenfield; Dr. Roswell Field, of Gill; Hon. George Sheldon, of Deerfield; Dr. C. M. Duncan, of Shelburne; Dr. Parley Barton, of Orange; Jas. H. Waterman, M.D., and Henry Holland, of Westfield; Dr. H. S. Lucas, of Chester; and Dr. J. W. Rockwell, of Southwick.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., July, 1879.

E R R A T A.

On page 65, where mention is made of a small fort erected in Blandford about 1744, it is spoken of as being in the eastern part of Hampden County; it should read western.

On page 855, Rev. A. D. Mayo is mentioned as settling in Springfield in 1874; it should be 1872.

Since the work went to press, Charles McClallan, whose portrait and biography appear between pages 980-81, has deceased, his death occurring on the 22d of June, 1879.

CONTENTS OF VOLUME I.

HISTORY OF THE CONNECTICUT VALLEY IN MASSACHUSETTS AND OF HAMPSHIRE COUNTY.

HISTORY OF THE CONNECTICUT VALLEY IN MASSACHUSETTS.

CHAPTER	PAGE
I.—Introduction	9
II.—Civil Divisions.....	11
III.—Topography.....	14
IV.—Geological Outlines.....	16
V.—Indian Occupancy.....	18
VI.—Early Explorers, Early Patents of New England, The Charter of the Colony of Massachusetts Bay	22
VII.—The New England People, Origin of the English Puritans, The Pilgrim Fathers.....	25
VIII.—The Removal to the Connecticut Valley	29
IX.—The Founding of the Mother Towns, the Planting of Springfield in 1636, William Pynchon and his Books, the Planting of Westfield in 1649, Northampton in 1654.....	31
X.—The Pequot War.....	36
XI.—The Separation of Springfield from the Jurisdiction of Connecticut.....	39
XII.—The Import Duty imposed by Connecticut upon Springfield in 1645, Resisted by Massachusetts.....	42
XIII.—Witchcraft.....	44
XIV.—The Regicides.....	50
XV.—King Philip's War.....	53
XVI.—The French-and-Indian Wars.....	61
XVII.—The War of the Revolution.....	66
XVIII.—The Shays Rebellion.....	75
XIX.—The War of 1812-15, The Washington Benevolent Society.....	80
XX.—Internal Improvements.....	83
XXI.—Internal Navigation, Improvement of the Connecticut River.....	86
XXII.—Railways.....	97
XXIII.—Population, Industry and Wealth, Educational.....	106
XXIV.—Valley and County Agricultural Associations.....	111
XXV.—The Bar of the Connecticut Valley.....	114
XXVI.—The Hampden County Bar.....	121
XXVII.—The Bar of Franklin County.....	127
XXVIII.—Homeopathy in Western Massachusetts.....	134
XXIX.—Military. History of Organizations which served during the Rebellion 1861-65. The Tenth Regiment.....	136
XXX.—Eighteenth, Twentieth, and Twenty-First Regiments.....	145
XXXI.—Twenty-Seventh Regiment.....	146
XXXII.—Thirty-First, Thirty-Fourth, Thirty-Seventh, and Forty-Sixth Regiments.....	151

CHAPTER	PAGE
XXXIII.—Fifty Second Regiment.....	154
XXXIV.—Fifty-Seventh and Sixty-First Regiments, Artillery and Cavalry	161

HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE COUNTY.

CHAPTER	PAGE
I.—Civil Organization	163
II.—The Courts, County Commissioners, and County Buildings.....	163
III.—Representative Districts, Civil Lists.....	168
IV.—Societies.....	170

TOWNS OF HAMPSHIRE COUNTY.

Northampton.....	172
Amherst.....	225
Easthampton.....	263
Westhampton.....	287
Southampton.....	301
Hadley.....	317
South Hadley.....	347
Ware.....	359
Hatfield.....	385
Williamsburg.....	404
Plainfield.....	426
Cunnington.....	439
Worthington.....	454
Middlefield.....	465
Goshen.....	479
Chesterfield.....	492
Huntington.....	506
Belchertown.....	521
Greenwich.....	534
Granby.....	542
Pelham.....	548
Prescott.....	558

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

	PAGE
G. W. Swazey, M.D.....	facing 134
Gen. Luke Lyman.....	146
Dr. C. B. Smith.....	152
Joseph K. Taylor.....	153
E. C. Clark.....	154
Mark H. Spaulding.....	155
Rev. Jonathan Edwards.....	201
Rev. John Hooker.....	202
Rev. Solomon Williams.....	203
Rev. Samuel P. Williams.....	203
Rev. Mark Tucker, D.D.....	207
Rev. Ichabod Spencer, D.D.....	207
Rev. John P. Cleveland, D.D.....	207
Rev. Zachary Eddy, D.D.....	207
L. B. Williams.....	229
Luther Bodman.....	230
Daniel W. Bond.....	231
Austin W. Thompson, A.M., M.D.....	231

	PAGE
U. O. Roberts, M.D.....	232
Josephus Crafts.....	232
Henry A. Longley.....	between 232, 233
H. K. Parsons.....	" 232, 233
Ansel Wright.....	233
George F. Wright.....	233
Gen. John Lord Otis.....	234
J. Howe Demond.....	235
Samuel C. Carter.....	facing 230
Hon. Edward Dickinson, L.L.D.....	261
Waitsill Dickinson.....	262
Ezra Ingram.....	facing 262
Simon Clark.....	between 262, 263
Hon. E. H. Sawyer.....	283
Samuel Williston.....	284
Horatio G. Knight.....	286
Edwin R. Bosworth.....	286
William N. Clapp.....	between 286, 287
Joseph W. Winslow, M.D.....	facing 287
Ansel Clapp.....	" 290
Jesse Lyman.....	" 301
Franklin Bonney, M.D.....	346
Eleazar Porter.....	between 346, 347
Lorenzo N. Granger.....	" 346, 347
Hon. Joseph Smith.....	" 346, 347
Sylvester Smith.....	facing 347
Joseph Carew.....	358
Martin W. Burnett.....	between 358, 359
Capt. Broughton Alvord.....	" 358, 359
Deacon Moses Montagne.....	" 358, 359
Hiram Smith, deceased.....	359
Hiram Smith.....	359
Hon. Chas. A. Stevens.....	376
Epaphras Clark.....	384
Kingsley Underwood.....	385
Joseph Smith.....	facing 402
Cyrus Miller.....	" 420
Daniel Collins, M.D.....	" 421
Hon. Hiram Nash.....	" 422
Elnathan Graves.....	" 423
Thomas Meekins.....	" 424
Benjamin S. Johnson.....	" 425
Horace Cole.....	" 456
Hon. E. H. Brewster.....	" 457
William D. Blush.....	" 478
Harvey Root.....	" 479
Gary Munson.....	" 520
Jabin B. Williams.....	" 521
Deacon Lyman Sabin.....	" 532
Henry Graves, Jr.....	between 532, 533
Joseph R. Gould.....	" 532, 533
John H. Morgan.....	facing 540
S. P. Bailey.....	between 540, 541
Lynus Tourtellott.....	541
Charles S. Record.....	541
Addison Gridley.....	facing 546
Deacon Samuel Smith.....	548
Capt. Wm. B. Clark.....	548

[NOTE.—For additional biographical matter, see chapters on the legal and medical professions, and also the town histories.]

CONTENTS.

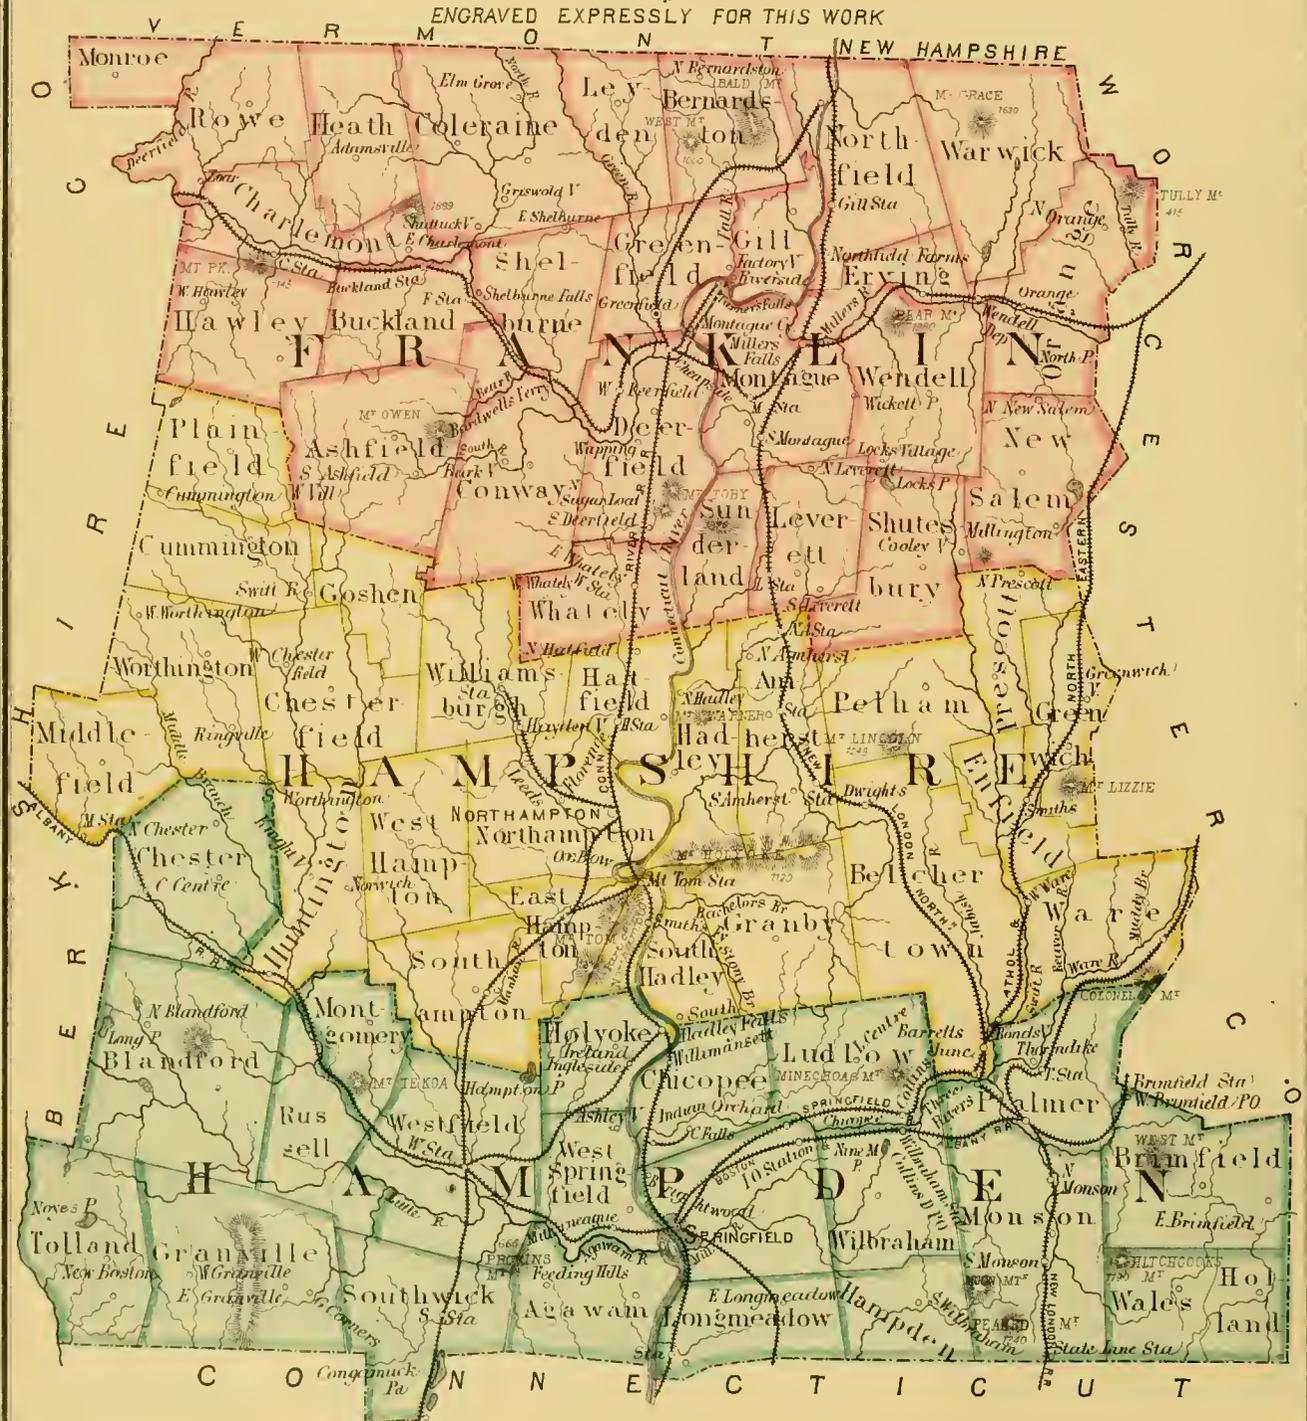

ILLUSTRATIONS.

	PAGE		PAGE		PAGE
View of Connecticut Valley from Mt. Nonotuck (Frontispiece).....	facing title.	Town-Hall.....	267	HATFIELD.
Map of the Connecticut Valley in Massachusetts.....	9	Portrait of Hon. E. H. Sawyer (steel).....	283	Residence of Wm. H. Dickinson.....	386
Portrait of William Pynchon (steel).....	31	Williston Seminary.....	between 284, 285	Smith Academy.....	394
Fac-simile of Tombstone of Mary Pynchon... ..	32	Portrait of Sam'l Williston (steel).....	284, 285	Portrait of Joseph Smith.....	402
“ page from William Pynchon's Court Record.....	35	“ Horatio G. Knight (steel).....	285	Residence of Joseph S. Wells.....	402
“ page from Pynchon's Record.....	41	“ Edwin R. Bosworth (steel).....	286
Portrait of G. W. Swazey, M.D.....	134	“ William N. Clapp.....	between 286, 287
		“ J. W. Winslow, M.D.....	287
				WILLIAMSBURG.
NORTHAMPTON.				Portrait of Cyrus Miller.....	420
Portrait of O. O. Roberts, M.D. (steel).....	135	WESTHAMPTON.		“ Dr. Daniel Collins.....	421
“ Gen. Luke Lyman.....	146	Portrait of Ansel Clapp.....	300	“ Hon. Hiram Nash.....	422
“ E. C. Clark.....	154	“ Jesse Lyman.....	301	“ Elnathan Graves.....	423
“ M. H. Spaulding.....	155			“ Thomas Meekins.....	424
Shackles of the Old Jail at Northampton.....	167			“ Benjamin S. Johnson.....	425
Central Part of Northampton in 1833.....	172	HADLEY.
“ “ 1879.....	172	Hadley in 1663.....	319	CUMMINGTON.
Memorial Hall and Public Library.....	184	Portrait of Franklin Bonney, M.D. (steel),	facing 346	Residence of L. J. Orcutt.....	440
Florence Manufacturing Co. Mills.....	219	Portrait of Eleazar Porter.....	between 346, 347
Portrait of L. B. Williams (steel).....	229	“ Lorenzo N. Granger.....	346, 347	WORTHINGTON.
“ Luther Bolman (steel).....	230	“ Hon. Joseph Smith.....	346, 347	Portrait of Hon. E. H. Brewster.....	456
“ D. W. Bond (steel).....	between 230, 231	“ Sylvester Smith.....	347	“ Horace Cole.....	457
“ A. W. Thompson (steel).....	230, 231
“ Josephus Crafts (steel).....	facing 232	SOUTH HADLEY.		MIDDLEFIELD.
“ H. A. Longley.....	between 232, 233	Mt. Holyoke Seminary (steel).....	facing 351	Portrait of Wm. D. Elush.....	478
“ H. K. Parsons.....	232, 233	Lyman Williston Hall (steel).....	351	“ Harvey Root.....	479
“ Ansel Wright.....	facing 233	Carew Paper Co., Hadley Falls.....	355
“ Geo. F. Wright.....	233	Congregational Church.....	355	HUNTINGTON.
“ Gen. J. L. Otis (steel).....	234	Residence of Joseph Carew.....	355	Portrait of Garry Munson.....	520
“ J. Howe Demond (steel).....	235	Hampshire Paper Co. Mills.....	356	“ Jabin B. Williams.....	521
		Portrait of Joseph Carew (steel).....	facing 358
AMHERST.		“ Martin W. Burnett.....	between 358, 359	BELCHERTOWN.
Portrait of Samuel C. Carter.....	facing 250	“ Capt. Broughton Alvord.....	358, 359	Portrait of Joseph R. Gould.....	527
The Amherst College Buildings and Grounds (double page).....	between 250, 251	“ Dea. Moses Montague.....	358, 359	“ Deacon Lyman Sabin.....	532
Residence and Portrait of Oren Williams,	facing 251	“ Hiram Smith, deceased.....	facing 359	“ Henry Graves, Jr.....	533
Massachusetts Agricultural College.....	254	“ Hiram Smith.....	359
Residence of E. Hobart.....	254			GREENWICH.
“ W. S. Clark.....	255	WARE.		Portrait of John H. Morgan.....	540
Portrait of Hon. Edward Dickinson, LL.D. (steel).....	facing 261	Portrait of Hon. Chas. A. Stevens (steel).....	375	“ S. P. Bailey.....	between 540, 541
Portrait of Waitstill Dickinson.....	262			Residence of Estes Shumway.....	540, 541
“ Ezra Ingram.....	262	ENFIELD.		“ and Portrait of Lynus Tourtellott,	facing 541
“ Simeon Clark.....	between 262, 263	Residence of Henry Fobes.....	376	Portrait of C. S. Record.....	542
		“ J. J. Howe.....	376
EASTHAMPTON.		“ L. F. Shearer.....	377
Residence of Hon. E. H. Sawyer.....	264	“ David Blodgett.....	377	GRANDY.
“ Mrs. Emily G. Williston.....	265	“ Lyman D. Potter.....	382	Portrait of Dr. C. B. Smith.....	facing 152
		“ E. P. Smith.....	383	“ Joseph K. Taylor.....	153
		Portrait of Epaphras Clark.....	384	“ Addison Gridley.....	546
		“ Kingsley Underwood.....	385	“ William B. Clark.....	547
				“ Samuel Smith.....	547

MAP OF THE CONNECTICUT VALLEY.

IN MASSACHUSETTS.
EMBRACING THE COUNTIES OF FRANKLIN, HAMPSHIRE & HAMPDEN.

ENGRAVED EXPRESSLY FOR THIS WORK

HISTORY

OF THE

CONNECTICUT VALLEY IN MASSACHUSETTS.

BY NATHANIEL BARTLETT SYLVESTER.

CHAPTER I.

INTRODUCTION.

I.

SCOPE OF THE WORK.

AROUND the valley of the Connecticut* River, where, in its course from the mountains to the sea, the stream crosses the State of Massachusetts,† clusters an untold wealth of historic memories.

The long history of this valley—long for the New World—begins, strictly speaking, with the story of the building, by John Cable and his companion John Woodcock, in the summer of 1635, of a solitary hut on the old Indian muck-cos-quit-taj, meadow, or corn-planting ground, called Ag-a-wam, which lay along the southern bank of the Ag-a-wam River, a half-mile above its mouth, on the west side of the Quon-eh-ti-cut, nearly opposite what is now the city of Springfield. Or, in a wider sense, it may be said, the history of the Connecticut Valley, in Massachusetts, begins with the planting of Springfield itself, near Us-quaiok, on the east bank of the Quon-eh-ti-cut River, "over against" the Indian meadows Ag-a-wam and Qua-na, by William Pynchon and his little band of pioneer settlers, in the early spring of the year 1636, and begins anew, as it were, with the planting of each new settlement in the valley. It begins anew with the story of the early founding of the plantation of Northampton, in the year 1653, on the old Indian hunting-ground and meadows called Non-o-tuck;‡ with the planting of Hadley in the year 1661, on the site of the Indian hunting-ground called Nol-wo-togg;§ with the organization of the above-named pioneer towns of Springfield, Northampton, and Hadley, and certain contiguous territory, comprising half the State, as early as the year 1663, into the old county of Hampshire; with the first occupation of the Indian beaver-hunting country, called W'o-ro-noak, now Westfield, by the Connecticut fur-traders in 1640,|| and its permanent settlement by Springfield people in 1669; with the planting of Hatfield in 1670, of the laying out of Deerfield on the old Indian hunting-ground Pa-comp-tuck in 1672,¶ and of the reservation by commissioners for a town of Northfield at the Indian Squak-heag in 1669; and so the history stretches on through all the intervening years, until the

* From the Indian Quon-eh-ti-cut, "The Long River."—Trumbull's Hist. Com. Quinmituk, "long tidal river;" Quinmituk-at, country on either side of "long tidal river."—Col. Conn. Hist. Society, Vol. II., p. 8.

† From the Indian Mais-tchu-seag, "country this side of the mountain."—Pownall's Top. Description of North Am. Mass-adchu-sit, "near the great mountain."—Col. Conn. Hist. Society, Vol. II., p. 20.

‡ Mass. Col. Rec., Vol. III., p. 304.

§ Mass. Col. Rec., Vol. IV., Part II., p. 13.

¶ See Mass. Col. Rec., Vol. I., p. 323.

 Mass. Col. Rec., Vol. IV., Part II., p. 558.

 Mass. Col. Rec., Vol. I., Part II., p. 436.

story is told of the final division of the old, historic county of Hampshire into four counties, and of the planting of all the seventy and one towns of the three counties of which this work treats,—the last of which, the town of Hampden, in Hampden County, was organized in the year 1878, just two hundred and forty-two years after the planting of Springfield in 1636.

In pursuing the history of this valley through the changing scenes and the varying fortunes of its almost two centuries and a half of existence as the home of the white man and the abode of Christian civilization, we shall first see in our mind's eye the opening clearing upon the site of the city of Springfield, in the dawn of its birth-year, 1636, with the early traces of what was long its only street—now Main Street—laid out along the "town brook," and facing the long, narrow "home lots" of the settlers, which lots extended from the street to the river, while at the rude wharf is moored Governor Winthrop's little shallop of thirty tons burden, called the "Blessing of the Bay,"†† which of a truth might well be called the "Mayflower" of Springfield, in which the first inhabitants, when they started with their wives and little ones on the old Indian trail, since known as the "Bay Path," for their far-off wilderness home, sent round by water their scanty store of household goods.

We shall see at the infant settlements of Springfield, Northampton, Hadley, Westfield, Hatfield, Deerfield, and Northfield, as they successively spring up in the depths of the virgin wilderness, the first half-dozen log huts in the centres of little clearings, hewn out of the before unbroken forests, bordered on either side by a hundred miles of pathless woods. We shall see at these rude pioneer homes the father, with his gun by his side, planting his corn among the blackened logs or in the little Indian meadow on the river's banks. We shall see the mother, surrounded by her infant children, plying her daily toil within the single room of the humble log dwelling, and often casting anxious glances into the shadowy woods, which her imagination peoples with hordes of wild beasts and wilder men, and with troops of witches, goblins, and other uncanny things. We shall see in the daily struggles for the daily bread, in the hardships and dangers, in the sombre religious life of those early pioneer homes, the origin and the growth of those homely and sturdy virtues upon which the prosperity of great States has since been so securely founded.

We shall follow the varying fortunes of these pioneers of the wilderness and their descendants,—the people of the Connecticut Valley,—through the weary years of the witchcraft delusion, into the clearer light of more auspicious times. We shall witness their sufferings, their fortitude, their bravery, their triumphs, in the Pequot and King Philip wars, and through the long and bloody French and Indian wars. We shall dwell with pride upon the noble part they took in the war for Independence, and bring the story to its close in recounting the wonderful development of the last fifty years,—a progress which has made the valley to-day almost a continuous city, stretching along both banks of its beautiful river across the entire State from north to south, inhabited by almost two hundred thousand people, counting their aggregate wealth by tens of millions, enriching all lands with the material products of their countless workshops, and enlightening the world by the precious fruits of their intellectual labors. And all this long story, from the date of the weak and weary years of the first feeble settlements in the valley, early in the seventeenth century, to the present era of its prosperity and power in the closing years of the nineteenth,—a period of more than two hundred and forty years,—is but the story of the struggles and the triumphs, the ceaseless endeavor and fruitful achievements, of a branch of that people which must be classed among the most remarkable the world ever produced,—the people of New England.

†† Built at Mystic and launched July 4, 1631, being the second bark built in the colony.—Young's Chron. of Mass., p. 185.

But this is not all. For a hundred years this valley and the mountain towns adjoining have been sending forth their full share of that mighty stream of New England emigrants over the Berkshire hills, across the valley of the Hudson, and over the Alleghanias into the ever-retreating West, carrying with them the daring enterprise, the nimble, inventive skill, the cheerful endurance, the love of liberty under law and order, the high, religious life, chastened by the traditions of suffering and sacrifice in early pioneer homes, the vivid appreciation of beauty and refinement everywhere characteristic of the New England people, until every State in the nation, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, bears upon all its institutions the unmistakable impress of its high New England parentage.

Thus has this valley of the Connecticut in Massachusetts for a hundred years been lavishly giving of her best citizens to people the fertile fields of the teeming West, yet the cup of her prosperity is still full to the brim and running over.

II.

THE NEW ENGLAND SPIRIT.

The early settlers who came across the ocean to subdue New England, of whom the first settlers of the Connecticut Valley formed a part, were weak in numbers and mostly poor in worldly goods, but they were rich in faith and strong in spirit; and the result has been that from the handful of feeble pilgrims a mighty nation has arisen, still deeply imbued with their rich faith and strong spirit, which nation now gives sustenance, liberty, and law to the world.

The avowed object of the Pilgrim and Puritan fathers in coming hither was "to advance their church, to build themselves in holiness, to convert the Indian, and to promote freedom."

That this was their object and aim there is abundant evidence. The company in its first general letter to Endicott and his council, under date of 17th April, 1629, says:

"And for the propagating of the Gospel is the thing we do profess above all to be our aim in settling this Plantation. We have been careful to make plentiful provision of godly ministers, by whose faithful preaching, godly conversation, and exemplary life we trust not only those of our own nation will be built up in the knowledge of God, but also the Indians may in God's appointed time be reduced to the obedience of the gospel of Christ."*

Again, in the preamble to the Articles of Confederation between the United Colonies, adopted 19th May, 1643, there is this language: "Whereas we all came into these parts with one and the same end, namely, to advance the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to enjoy the liberties of the gospel in purity with peace."

Having thus come to the solitudes of the New World with this high end and aim in view, and having themselves passed through the fiery ordeal of religious persecution at home, in their treatment of those of different faith, who early sought homes among them, the charge of inconsistency has often been laid at their door.

It has often been urged, and with much plausibility, that they who fled from religious intolerance in the Old World should have themselves practised religious toleration in the New. But those who use this argument forget the spirit of the age as well as the circumstances under which they lived, and the high ideal of the New England fathers.

The spirit of the age was distinguished by its intense religious fervor. The world to come, now of such dim and shadowy aspect to the bodily senses of modern men, although perhaps no less real to their eye of faith, was to the Puritan fathers, in the dim light of the imperious and awful theologic dogmas which guided their daily walk, a tangible, if not visible, reality. To their haunting visions of immortal joy or woe saddening their lives, must be added the contest with the grim wilderness, the hard, unrelenting circumstances of pioneer life. Each age has its own methods of battling for the right and asserting justice. Each age has its own ideas, too, of what is right and just, but conscience—the desire to do right and justly—has been active in all ages, perhaps more active in the age of the Puritans than now.

It should be remembered, also, that while religious intolerance is wrong when it is not necessary for the public safety, it becomes a virtue when needful in self-defence and where tolerance would be public ruin.

The early New England people, in order to protect their religious freedom, were obliged to exclude with a strong hand those in whose presence they could not live with security. They had fled from the powerful English hierarchy to the wild solitudes of America. Should they suffer it to follow them? Divisions in their councils, in their weak and defenceless condition, would be fatal to their peace, if not to their very existence. Should they suffer divisions to occur? In those days, too, religious toleration held no place among the Christian virtues. To differ from the established religion was rank heresy, and heresy was punished in most Christian countries as a heinous crime. It was the high ideal of the New England fathers to engratt upon the new State a new form of Christian worship, subject to the same restrictions as the old. But they sought more. Their aim was nothing less than the complete sanctification of the State. To make a pure and perfect State, founded in every respect upon the sublime teachings of Holy Writ in worship and morals, was what they attempted. To further this end, they rightly judged that to fashion and mould a State the individual members thereof must first be fashioned and moulded, and so they began at the foundation, and kept the strictest watch over every individual in the colony whether high or low.

Every one's conduct was at all times and on all occasions the subject of stricture and discipline, and every infraction of law or duty promptly and severely punished. In religious matters especially, no such thing as freedom of individual opinion existed. Heresy in every form must be nipped in the bud as a thing dangerous to both the State and the souls of men. No impure thing like witchcraft must be suffered to live for a moment. All who participated in the government in any form must be members of the visible church, and must square their every action by the Mosaic law of the Bible. There must be one common faith, one common church, one commonwealth. These facts, so often overlooked in considering their case, while they by no means justify their errors and excesses, explain their conduct. That they were zealots and committed excesses in the line of discipline and punishment is not to be wondered at when we consider their views of things. Judged from their standpoint they were in the right, or at least excusable. In the broader light of modern times they were outrageously in the wrong. Yet no unprejudiced one has ever for a moment doubted the unflinching honesty of purpose, the deep sense of responsibility, and the high moral aims of the New England fathers. Out of their very faults, or rather out of those heroic virtues, which they often carried into grievous faults, have developed the grandest results in modern history. The best things of the nation germinated in New England.

* Young's Chron. of Mass., p. 141.

Local self-government guided by the spirit of law and order, appealing to the conscious dignity and innate self-respect of human nature, and which is the very foundation of our republican form of government, from which so many blessings flow, had its birth-place in the town-meetings,—the first feeble organizations of the early New England towns at Plymouth Rock, at Massachusetts Bay, and in the Valley of the Connecticut. And this is the more remarkable when we consider that it took place in the opening years of the seventeenth century, while the lordly Stuarts were on the English throne, haughty and unrelenting in the enforcement of the royal prerogative, and the Bourbon kings had yet in store almost two centuries of despotic sway in now republican France.

And in the New England Confederacy of 1643, for which they had no warrant in their charters, but which in its inception was a bold assumption of power on the part of the young colonies, we see the prototype and germ of our great republic.

And further still, the high culture, the refined and elegant life of the nation first took root in the rugged soil of New England. The wonder is that so fair and fragile a flower as culture should ever have flourished amid such rocky solitudes as the wild New England shores of two centuries and a half ago.

The very next thought of the Puritan fathers of New England, after making provision for the support of the gospel and organizing their government, was to establish institutions of learning.

As early as the 28th day of October, 1636, the general court provided for a college,* which two years after, on the 13th March, 1638-39, was named in honor of its first considerable benefactor, the Rev. John Harvard.†

"After God," says an old chronicler, "had carried us safe to New England, and we had builded our houses, provided necessaries for our livelihood, reared convenient places for God's worship, and settled civil government, one of the next things we longed for and looked after was to advance learning, and perpetuate it to posterity; dreading to leave an illiterate ministry to the churches when our present ministers shall lie in the dust. And as we were thinking and consulting how to effect this great work, it pleased God to stir up the heart of one Mr. Harvard, a godly gentleman and a lover of learning then living amongst us, to give the one-half of his estate, it being in all about £1700, towards the erecting of a college, and all his library."‡

But the pulpit of New England has after all been its highest educator. In every village and hamlet, in the centre of every hill town in the land, stood a humble church edifice, in which officiated a man of liberal education, and it may be said, almost without exception, of gentle manners and of much culture and refinement. Possessed of almost imperious power, the New England minister moulded the hearts, the minds, the manners of the people into his own image.

And the religious spirit, which was the controlling spirit of the New England people, is itself the most refining of all influences. Religion in its various forms, notwithstanding the enormities committed in its name, is the crucial fire that relieves human life of its dross, and sends forth the pure gold of human conduct to enlighten, to vivify, and to bless the world.

With such surroundings the New England people moulded their own destiny. Under such influences they made themselves the Etrurians of the West.

The settlement of the Connecticut Valley followed close upon the settlement of the Bay. The settlers of the valley, as it were, on their way from their English homes tarried four or five years at the Bay to take a breathing spell before they encountered the dangers of the great wilderness in their final homes on the great river of New England.

It will readily be seen, that while the history of the valley is in many respects the history of a distinct and separate community, yet so bound up are its people in their relations to the people at the Bay and in the mother country, that no intelligible history of the valley can be given without some account at least of what and who the settlers were in their English homes, and without some account of what the settlers did at Plymouth and the Bay.

CHAPTER II.

CIVIL DIVISIONS—COUNTIES—TOWNS.

I.

EXTENT OF TERRITORIES INCLUDED IN THIS WORK.

THE Connecticut Valley in the State of Massachusetts, of which this volume treats, extends along both sides of the Connecticut River, across the whole width of the State from north to south, and comprises the three counties of Hampshire, Franklin, and Hampden, named in the order of their erection.

This territory is bounded on the north by the States of Vermont and New Hampshire, on the east by the county of Worcester, on the south by the State of Connecticut, and on the west by the county of Berkshire. It has an average length from north to south across the State of about forty-nine miles, and an average width from east to west between Worcester and Berkshire Counties of forty miles. It is centrally distant on an air-line from Boston about eighty miles, and about one hundred miles by the usual travelled route.

This territory is situated between latitude 42° and 42° 45' north, and between longitude 3° 52' and 4° 5' east from Washington, and longitude 72° 8' and 73° 4' west from Greenwich.

According to the last census, taken in the year 1875, the population of Hampshire County was 44,821; of Franklin County, 33,696; and of Hampden County, 94,304; the whole territory included in this history containing a population of 172,821.

II.

HAMPSHIRE COUNTY.

The county of Hampshire was erected and organized by the Colonial General Court, at a session of the same held at Boston, on the 7th day of May, in the year of our Lord 1662, by the following act, which is copied from the records of the court in the original orthography, and is as follows, to wit:

"At a General Court of Election, held at Boston, 7th day, 3d month, § a. n. 1662.

"Forasmuch as the inhabitants of this jurisdiction are much increased, so that now they are planted farre into the country upon Connecticut River, who by § May. According to the Julian method of computing time, or what is familiarly known as Old Style, the civil year began on the 25th day of March, and March was called the first month and February the twelfth. To reconcile this method with the historical year, which began January 1, as now, in all dates before March 25, both years were given: thus January 2, 1662-63, meant January 2, 1662, of the civil year, and January 2, 1663, of the historical year. Of course on all dates between March 25 and December 31, both inclusive, the date of the year ran the same in both cases. This method was used in England and her colonies until the Old Style was changed to the New by act of Parliament in 1752.

* Mass. Col. Rec., Vol. I., p. 183.

† Mass. Col. Rec., Vol. I., p. 253.

‡ New England's First Fruits, p. 12.

reason of their remoteness cannot conveniently be annexed to any of the counties already settled, and that publick affairs may with more facility be transacted according to the laws here established, it is ordered by this Court & authority thereof, that henceforth Springfield, Northampton, and Hadley shall be and are hereby constituted as a county, the bounds or limits on the south to be the south line of the patent; the extent of other bounds to be full thirty miles distant from any or either of the foresaid townes, & what townes or villages soever shall hereafter be erected within the foresaid precincts to be & belong to the said county; and further that the said county shall be called Hampshire, & shall have and enjoy the libertjes & privileges of any other county; & that Springfield shall be the shire towne there, & the Courts to be kept one time at Springfield & another time at Northampton; the like order to be observed for their shire meetings, that is to say one yeere at one towne and the next yeere at the other from time to time. And it is further ordered that all the inhabitants of that shier shall pay their publick rates to the country in fatt cattle, or young cattle such as are fit to be putt off that so no unnecessary damage be put on the country; & in case they make payment in corne then to be made at such prices as the law doe commonly passe amongst themselves, any other former or annuall orders referring to the prices of corne notwithstanding.*

Hampshire County an Original County of the State.—It will be seen from the foregoing record that when Hampshire County was erected and organized in the year 1662 it was not set off from or carved out of an older county of the colony but it was erected entirely out of virgin territory, never before placed under county organization. Hampshire County therefore became one of the original or mother counties of the State. That such is the fact will be readily seen by reference to the first division of the colony or the eastern part of it into counties in the year 1643. The following is a copy of the minutes of the General Court, from which it will be seen that in the first division of the State into counties, although the valley of the Connecticut had been settled for seven years, and Springfield had already been recognized as a town by the General Court, it was not included in either county then erected, and that its territory formed no part of any county until nineteen years afterward, when it was united with Northampton and Hadley to form Hampshire County.

* At a General Court of Election held at Boston, 10th day of the 3d month, A.D. 1643.

† The whole plantation within this jurisdiction is divided into four sheires, to wit:†

"ESSEX.	MIDDLESEX.
Salem,	Charlstowne,
Lion,	Cambridge,
Enon,	Watertown,
Ipswich,	Sudberry,
Rowley,	Concord,
Newberry,	Wooborne,
Glocester,	Meadford,
Cochichawick.	Linn Village.
(Andover.)
"SUFFOLK.	NORFOLK.
Boston,	Salsberry,
Roxbury,	Hampton,
Dorchester,	Havrill,
Dedham,	Excetter,
Braintree,	Dover,
Waymoth,	Strawberry Banck."
Hingham,	(Portsmouth.)
Nantaskot.

Large Extent of Old Hampshire County.—It will be seen that when first erected, Hampshire County, although containing within its limits but three towns, Springfield, Northampton, and Hadley, yet in extent of territory it covered all the western half of that part of the State then belonging to the colony of Massachusetts Bay. It included the western tier of towns of what is now Worcester County, and the whole of what are now the counties of Franklin, Hampshire, Hampden, and Berkshire.

First Division of the County—Towns in Worcester County set off.—The first division of the territory of Old Hampshire County was made by the Provincial General Court in the year A.D. 1730, and the fourth year of the reign of George II. Below is given the first section of the act, which shows the territory affected by it. The act took effect on the 10th day of July, 1631.

"An oct for erecting, granting, and making a county in the inland parts of this province, to be called the county of Worcester, and for establishing courts of justice within the same.

"Sec. 1. Be it enacted by his Excellency the Governor, Council, and Representatives, in general court assembled, and by the authority of the same, that the towns and places hereinafter named and expressed, that is to say, Worcester, Lancaster, Rutland, and Lunenburgh, all in the county of Middlesex; Mendon, Woodstock, Oxford, Sutton, including Hassanamisco, Uxbridge, and the land lately granted to several petitioners of Medfield, all in the county of Suffolk, Brookfield in the county of Hampshire, and the south town laid out for the Narragansett soldiers, and all other lands lying within the said townships, with the inhabitants thereon, shall from and after the tenth day of July, which will be in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and thirty-one, be and remain one entire and distinct county by the name of Worcester, of which Worcester to be the county or shire town, and the said county to have, use, and enjoy all such powers, privileges, and immunities as by law other counties within this province have and do enjoy."‡

Berkshire County Set Off.—The second division of Old Hampshire County was made by the provincial General Court in the year A.D. 1761, and the first year of the reign of George III.

The first section of the act given below shows what territorial changes were made by it. The act took effect on the 30th day of June, 1761.

"An Act for dividing the county of Hampshire, and for erecting and establishing a new county in the westerly part of the county of Hampshire, to be called the county of Berkshire, and for establishing courts of justice within the same.

"WHEREAS, The great extent of the county of Hampshire makes it convenient and necessary that there should be a new county erected and established in the westerly part thereof:

"Sec. 1. Be it therefore enacted by the Governor, Council, and House of Representatives, that the towns and plantations hereinafter mentioned, that is to say, Sheffield, Stockbridge, Egremont, New Marlborough, Poontoosack, New Framingham, West Hoosack, Number One, Number Three, and Number Four, and all other lands included in the following limits, viz.: beginning at the western line of Granvill where it touches the Connecticut line, to run northerly as far as said west line of Granvill runs, thence easterly to the southwest corner of Blandford, and to run by the west line of the same town to the northeast corner thereof, from thence northerly in a direct line to the southeast corner of Number Four, and so running by the easterly line of said Number Four to the northeast corner thereof, and thence in a direct course to the southeast corner of Charlemont, and so northerly in the corner of the west line of the same town till it comes to the north bound of the province, and northerly on the line between this province and the province of New Hampshire, southerly on the Connecticut line, and on the west by the utmost limits of this province, shall from and after the thirtieth day of June, one thousand seven hundred and sixty-one, be and remain one entire and distinct county by the name of Berkshire, of which Sheffield for the present to be the county or shire town; and the said county to have, use, and enjoy all such powers, privileges, and immunities as by law other counties in this province have and do enjoy."§

Present Extent of Hampshire County.—After Berkshire County was set off no changes were made in Hampshire County until the years 1811 and 1812, when it was again divided for the third and fourth time, and Franklin and Hampden set off in those years respectively. Up to the year 1811, when Franklin County was set off, Hampshire had increased its number of towns in the territory still remaining to it to sixty-three. Of these, Franklin County took off twenty-four in 1811, and Hampden took eighteen towns in 1812, leaving twenty-one towns in Hampshire County remaining after the fourth and last division. To these two have since been added, and Hampshire now contains twenty-three towns, and is bounded as follows, to wit: north by Franklin County, east by Worcester County, south by Hampden County, and west by Berkshire.

The several towns now belonging to Hampshire County are, with the dates of their incorporation, respectively as follows, to wit:

AMHERST,	incorporated Feb. 13, 1759.
BELCHERTOWN,	" June 30, 1761.
CHESTERFIELD,	" June 11, 1762.
CUMMINGTON,	" June 23, 1779.
EASTHAMPTON,	" June 17, 1785.

‡ See Ancient Charters and Colony and Provincial Laws of Mass. Bay, p. 484.

§ Ibid., p. 638.

* Mass. Col. Rec., Vol. IV., Part II., p. 52.

† See Mass. Col. Rec., Vol. II., p. 38.

ENFIELD,	incorporated Feb. 16, 1816.
GOSHEN,	" May 14, 1784.
GRANBY,	" June 11, 1768.
GREENWICH,	" April 20, 1754.
HADLEY,	" May 20, 1661.
HATFIELD,	" May 31, 1670.
HUNTINGTON,	" June 29, 1773.
MIDDLEFIELD,	" March 11, 1783.
NORTHAMPTON,	organized Oct. 18, 1654.
PELHAM,	incorporated Jan. 15, 1742.
PLAINFIELD,	" March 16, 1785.
PRESCOTT,	" Jan. 28, 1822.
SOUTH HADLEY,	" April 12, 1753.
SOUTHAMPTON,	" Jan. 5, 1753.
WARE,	" Nov. 25, 1761.
WESTHAMPTON,	" Sept. 29, 1778.
WILLIAMSBURGH,	" April 24, 1771.
WORTHINGTON,	" June 30, 1761.

III.

FRANKLIN COUNTY.

The county of Franklin was set off from Hampshire by an act of the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, passed on the 24th day of June, A.D. 1811, the first section of which, indicating the territorial changes involved in the division, is given below, and is as follows, to wit :

"An Act to divide the county of Hampshire and constitute the northerly part thereof into a county by the name of the county of Franklin.

"BE IT ENACTED by the Senate and House of Representatives in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the same :

"That the county of Hampshire shall be divided by a line beginning on the westerly line of the county of Worcester, at the west corner of the town of Petersham, in said county of Worcester; thence southerly, following the east line of the town of New Salem, to the southeast corner of said New Salem; thence westerly on the southerly lines of the towns of New Salem and Shutesbury to the southwest corner of the town of Shutesbury; thence northerly on the line of Shutesbury to the southerly line of the town of Leverett; thence westerly on the southerly lines of the towns of Leverett and Sunderland, to Connecticut River; then beginning on the west bank of said river at the southeasterly corner of the town of Whately; then westerly and northerly upon the line of said Whately to the southerly line of the town of Conway; thence westerly and northerly upon the line of said Conway to the southeasterly corner of the town of Ashfield; thence westerly and northerly upon the line of the said Ashfield to the southeasterly corner of the town of Hawley; thence westerly upon the line of said Hawley to the easterly line of the county of Berkshire.

"And the bounds of the county, by this Act created, on the east shall be the line heretofore established between the counties of Hampshire and Worcester, and on the west by the line between the counties of Hampshire and Berkshire, and on the north by the north line of the Commonwealth.

"Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, That all and every part and parcel of the late county of Hampshire included within the lines before described shall be and the same is hereby formed and created into an entire and distinct county by the name of Franklin, of which Greenfield shall be the shire or county town. And the inhabitants of the said county of Franklin shall hold, possess, use, exercise, and enjoy all the powers, rights, and immunities which by the constitution and laws of this Commonwealth the inhabitants of any county within the same do hold, possess, use, exercise, enjoy, and are entitled to."*

Franklin County is bounded north by the States of Vermont and New Hampshire, on the east by the county of Worcester, on the south by the county of Hampshire, and on the west by the county of Berkshire. When first erected Franklin County contained but twenty-four towns. Two towns have since been added, and the county of Franklin now contains twenty-six towns as named below, with the respective dates of their incorporation.

ASHFIELD,	incorporated June 21, 1765.
BERNARDSTOWN,	" March 6, 1762.
BUCKLAND,	" April 14, 1779.
CHARLEMONT,	" June 21, 1765.
COLERAINE,	" June 30, 1761.
CONWAY,	" June 16, 1767.
DEERFIELD,	" May 24, 1682.
ERVING,	" April 17, 1838.
GILL,	" Sept. 28, 1793.

* Laws of Massachusetts.

GREENFIELD,	incorporated June 9, 1753.
HAWLEY,	" Feb. 7, 1792.
HEATH,	" Feb. 14, 1785.
LEVERETT,	" May, 1774.
LEYDEN,	" Feb. 22, 1809.
MONROE,	" Feb. 21, 1822.
MONTAQUE,	" Dec. 22, 1753.
NEW SALEM,	" June 15, 1753.
NORTHFIELD,	" Feb. 22, 1713.
ORANGE,	" Feb. 24, 1810.
ROWE,	" Feb. 9, 1785.
SHELBURNE,	" June 21, 1768.
SHUTESBURY,	" June 30, 1761.
SUNDERLAND,	" Nov. 12, 1714.
WARWICK,	" Feb. 17, 1763.
WENDELL,	" May 8, 1781.
WHATELY,	" April 24, 1771.

IV.

HAMPDEN COUNTY.

A few months after the county of Franklin was set off from Hampshire County the last-named county was again divided for the fourth and last time, and the county of Hampden erected on its southern border. Hampden County was erected and organized on the 20th day of February, A.D. 1812, by an act passed by the General Court, the first section of which is given below, showing the territorial changes made therein :

"An Act for dividing the county of Hampshire, and erecting and forming the southerly part thereof into a separate county, by the name of Hampden.

"SEC. 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in general court assembled, and by authority of the same, That the county of Hampshire be and is hereby divided; and the following towns, in the southerly part thereof, be and hereby are erected and formed into a county by the name of Hampden, that is to say, Springfield, Longmeadow, Wilbraham, Monson, Holland, Brimfield, South Brimfield, Palmer, Ludlow, West Springfield, Westfield, Montgomery, Russell, Blandford, Granville, Southwick, Tolland, and Chester, of which Springfield shall be the shire town; and that all that part of said county of Hampshire included within the boundaries of the towns before mentioned shall be deemed and taken to compose the said county of Hampden. And the inhabitants of the said county of Hampden shall have, use, exercise, and enjoy all such powers, rights, privileges, and immunities as by the constitution and laws of this Commonwealth other counties within the same have, use, exercise, and enjoy."

Hampden County is bounded north by the county of Hampshire, east by the county of Worcester, south by the State of Connecticut, and west by the county of Berkshire. At the date of its organization Hampden County contained but eighteen towns. Four towns have since been erected, and it now contains twenty-two towns as named below, with the dates of incorporation respectively :

AGAWAM,	incorporated May 17, 1855.
BLANFORD,	" April 10, 1741.
BRIMFIELD,	" July 14, 1731.
CHESTER,	" Oct. 31, 1765.
CHICOPEE,	" April 29, 1848.
GRANVILLE,	" Jan. 25, 1754.
HAMPDEN,	" March 28, 1878.
HOLLAND,	" July 5, 1785.
Holyoke, †	" March 14, 1850.
LONGMEADOW,	" Oct. 17, 1783.
LUDLOW,	" Feb. 28, 1774.
MONSON,	" April 25, 1760.
MONTGOMERY,	" Nov. 28, 1780.
PALMER,	" Jan. 30, 1752.
RUSSELL,	" Feb. 25, 1792.
SOUTHWICK,	" Nov. 17, 1770.
Springfield, ‡	organized May 14, 1636.
TOLLAND,	incorporated June 14, 1810.
WALES,	" Sept. 18, 1762.
WESTFIELD,	" May 16, 1669.
WEST SPRINGFIELD,	incorporated Feb. 23, 1774.
WILBRAHAM,	" Jan. 15, 1763.

† City.

‡ City.

V.

OTHER COUNTIES OF THE STATE.

For convenient reference in connection with the above, a list of the remaining counties of the State, as now divided, is given below, with the date of the organization of each:

BARNSTABLE,	organized	June 2, 1685.
BRISTOL,	“	June 2, 1685.
DUKES,*	“	Nov. 1, 1683.
ESSEX,	“	May 10, 1643.
MIDDLESEX,	“	May 10, 1643.
NANTUCKET,	“	June 20, 1695.
NORFOLK,†	“	March 26, 1793.
PLYMOUTH,	“	June 2, 1685.
SUFFOLK,	“	May 10, 1643.

CHAPTER III.

TOPOGRAPHY.

I.

MOUNTAINS.

THE distinguishing topographical characteristics of the remarkably interesting region of which this work treats are a wide valley stretching entirely across the State from north to south, through the centre of which winds a broad and beautiful stream which has been aptly called the “Nile of New England,” the valley terminating on either side at the foot of mountain ranges, while a third mountain range uplifts its rugged and deeply-serrated cliffs along the central parts of the valley. Such are the main features, the grand outlines of the valley of the Connecticut in Massachusetts. As seen from the top of one of its central peaks or from the towering hills on either side, or even from the arsenal tower at Springfield, no fairer scene anywhere greets the human vision than this valley,—rock-ribbed on either hand and centrally mountain-crowned.

The valley of the Connecticut River in New England seems to be a deep downward fold of the ranges of the great Appalachian mountain system of the Atlantic slope of the continent. This mountain system extends the whole length of the Atlantic slope of the continent from Nova Scotia on the north to Florida on the south.

Through New England and Eastern New York the separate ranges of this great mountain system seem to all trend nearly due north and south obliquely to the general direction of the whole system. Thus we have in Eastern New York and extreme Western Massachusetts the Taconic range bordering the valley of the Hudson and blending its peaks with the Green Mountains on the east. In New England are the Green Mountain range, continued by the Berkshire hills bordering the Connecticut Valley on the west, and the White Mountain range, extending far southward through the States of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and Connecticut, toward Long Island Sound, bordering the valley of the Connecticut River on the east.

The Connecticut Valley, however, differs from its sister valley of the Hudson in its greater width, although resembling it in length and in its general direction north and south.

The average width of the Connecticut Valley through the State of Massachusetts is about twenty miles. Towards the south it widens into broad plains, but grows narrow towards the north. It terminates abruptly on either hand in somewhat precipitous mountain sides, while through its centre rises another mountain range singular in its formation and greatly diversifying the scenery of the charming valley. This other range is the Mount Holyoke, Mount Tom, Mount Toby, and Sugar-Loaf ranges of Red Sandstone and Trapean rocks.

This last-named range extends northerly from the south line of the State along the west side of the river, about equidistant between Springfield and Westfield, into the high precipitous sides of Mount Tom, crosses the Connecticut below Northampton, bends easterly, and ends in the rugged, jagged peaks of Mount Holyoke. Farther to the north this central range appears again in the knobs of two Sugar-Loaf Mountains and the conical summit of Mount Toby, and extends into the high, precipitous ridges near Greenfield.

MOUNTAIN BORDERS OF THE VALLEY.

The two ranges of highlands which border the valley of the Connecticut in Massachusetts are in reality vast swells of land stretching across the State, each with a width of forty or fifty miles, and of an average elevation of a thousand feet above tide-water. These broad swells of highlands form a base from which rise many mountains, sometimes in chains, and at others in isolated groups of peaks rising to an altitude several thousand feet higher than their base, and which fill up both the eastern and western towns of the three valley counties with the wild and rugged grandeur of their mountain masses. These two mountain belts, however, differ somewhat in their structure and form of outline.

THE WESTERN BELT.

The western belt, bearing the general name of the Green Mountains, is made up of two mountain chains, more or less continuous, between which the valley of the Housatonic runs through the central and southern part, while between the northern part runs the valley of the Hoosac. The western range of this belt is the Taconic range. The eastern range of this belt, extending between the Housatonic Valley and the valley of the Connecticut, which is properly the extension of the Green Mountain range into Massachusetts, and which is commonly called the “Berkshire Hills,” is an extremely rugged elevation, averaging in height from one thousand to fifteen hundred feet. This range is deeply furrowed by the transverse valleys of the Agawam or Westfield River on the south, and the Deerfield River on the north. Stretching over these rugged hills lie the western hill towns of Hampshire, Franklin, and Hampden Counties. Between Westfield and Pittsfield the Boston and Albany Railroad bed attains an elevation of fourteen hundred and seventy-five feet in crossing this range. On the northern border of the State, the Hoosac Tunnel road-bed runs under this range at a depth of eighteen hundred feet below the surface of the mountain.

EASTERN BELT.

The broad belt of highland bordering the Connecticut Valley in Massachusetts on the east seems to have no continuous mountain range, like the great western belt, but is a broad, undulating swell of highlands, rising on an average about a thousand feet. Over this belt stretch the eastern mountain or hill towns of the river counties.

Of the central range, in the valley, Mount Tom is twelve hundred and fourteen and Mount Holyoke eleven hundred and twenty feet above the level of the sea.

Of the western belt, Mount Graylock, in the northwestern part of the State, in Berkshire County, rises to the height of three thousand five hundred and five feet above tide.

Of the eastern belt Wa-tat-ick is eighteen hundred, and Wachu-sett over two thousand feet above tide-water.

The two great belts run near to each other in the northern part of the State, until above Greenfield their masses almost interlock, while to the south they separate into a broad valley.

* Duker County was organized by the Duke of York as one of the counties of the province of New York, but was finally allotted to Massachusetts.

† The original county of Norfolk, organized May 10, 1643, contained some of the northern towns of what is now Essex County and a part of what is now the State of New Hampshire adjoining. It is known as Old Norfolk to historians.

II.

WATERS.

The principal running waters of the Connecticut Valley in Massachusetts are the Connecticut River, the Agawam or Westfield River, the Chicopee River, Miller's River, the Mill River of Springfield, the Mill River of Northampton, the Green River, the Deerfield River, and numerous smaller streams.

The CONNECTICUT River, the great river of New England, —the old Indian Quon-eh-ti-cut, meaning in their tongue the "long tidal river,"*—rises on one of the high ridges of the great Appalachian mountain chain, which serves as the division line—the water-shed—between the United States and Canada, at the extreme northern limit of the State of New Hampshire, and running southerly down the mountain slope, between the States of Vermont and New Hampshire, enters the State of Massachusetts in the charming valley above described, and winding through it then crosses the State of Connecticut and empties into Long Island Sound.

Its length is four hundred miles. Through its whole course it separates two broad belts of highland, while a series of terraces breaks the level of its bed. In the first quarter of its course down the mountain slope, between its source and the mouth of the Pa-sam-sic River, opposite the White Mountains, its descent is twelve hundred feet. At this point its bed is four hundred feet above the sea. In eighty miles farther to Below's Falls, Vermont, it descends one hundred feet. From thence to Deerfield it sinks one hundred and sixty feet; from Deerfield to Springfield it falls one hundred feet more, leaving its bed at Springfield but forty feet above the level of the sea. Its average width between Mount Tom and the north line of the State is about eight hundred feet.

Its average breadth between Mount Tom and the Connecticut line is not far from twelve hundred feet, and with a depth of water below Holyoke sufficient to float vessels of considerable tonnage. At Holyoke costly and extensive hydraulic works have been constructed, producing, it is claimed, the greatest artificial water-power in the world. Its channel is remarkably clear of islands in its course through the State, and presents a broad and majestic appearance, sweeping in magnificent curves between its lofty banks, greatly resembling in this respect the lower Mississippi.

In certain localities, as at Holyoke, its waters flow directly over the red sandstone of the valley, but for the greater part of the distance through the county the bed of the river is composed of alluvial deposits,—sand, gravel, and bowlders.

In seasons of annual floods it overspreads its banks, and covers the lowest bottom lands sometimes for miles. This annual overflow produces the same result as in the case of the Nile in Egypt, acting as a thorough fertilizer by reason of the rich silt which it holds in solution. In some places the meadow lands are protected from floods by dykes or levees, similar in construction to those of the lower Mississippi, though generally of smaller dimensions.

The AGAWAM, or Westfield River, as it is often called, rises in the eastern part of Berkshire County, among the Green Mountains, and flows in a southeastern course a distance of about fifty miles, to the Connecticut. Its eastern and largest branch unites with the middle and western branches in the town of Huntingdon. The two last-named branches enter the town of Chester from the northwest, and flow diagonally through it to the junction in Huntingdon. From thence the main stream flows through or between the towns of Montgomery, Russell, Westfield, West Springfield, and Agawam, and unites with the Connecticut by several mouths nearly opposite the city of Springfield. The Little River, which heads in Blandford, Granville, and Tolland, unites with it a short distance below the village of Westfield. Its other principal affluents are Mill Brook, in Westfield, and Great Brook, which heads in Southwick, and discharges into the main stream near the east line of Westfield.

The Agawam is a rapid stream, and affords with its numerous branches an abundant supply of water-power, which is extensively utilized in numerous localities. It has a number of islands in its channel.

The CHICOPEE† River is formed by the union of three considerable streams, the Swift, Ware, and Quaboag Rivers, in the western part of the town of Palmyra. The curious meanderings of these streams in the vicinity of their junction gave rise in early times to a local name—"The Elbows"—which is still to some extent in use.‡

SWIFT River rises for the most part in Petersham, Worcester County, and New Salem and Shutesbury, in Franklin County, and flows in a direction a little west of south through the eastern part of Hampshire County to its junction with Ware River on the town line of Palmer.

WARE River takes its rise in the northern-central portions of Worcester County, and flows in a direction nearly southwest to its junction with the Quaboag River.

The QUABOAG River is formed by the union of numerous branches in the southwest part of Worcester County, and flows in a general direction a little south of west to the village of Three Rivers, where it unites with Ware River. It forms the southern and eastern boundary of the town of Palmer for a distance of about eight miles. From Three Rivers to its union with the Connecticut the stream bears the name of Chicopee River. It forms the boundary between the towns of Ludlow, Wilbraham, and Springfield, and for a short distance between the last-named town and Chicopee. It pursues a tortuous course through the latter town, and there are several important islands in its channel. Its principal affluents below Three Rivers are Broad Brook in Ludlow, Twelve-Mile Brook in Wilbraham, and Higher and Field Brooks in Chicopee. The Quaboag River receives the waters of a considerable stream (Elbow Brook) in Brimfield, and the Chicopee Brook unites with it from Monson. The Chicopee River and its numerous branches affords extensive power, which is employed in numerous places in driving machinery. The best water-power on the stream is in the town of Chicopee, where two thriving villages have grown up in recent years.

The QUINNEBAUG River drains a small region in the extreme eastern end of the county, and the Scantic Brook, which discharges into the Connecticut in East Windsor, Conn., drains the southern portion of Wilbraham and the eastern part of Longmeadow.

In the western part of the county, FARMINGTON River drains the greater part of the towns of Tolland and Granville.

MILL River, of Springfield, rises in the central parts of the old town of Wilbraham, and flowing west through Springfield, discharges into the Connecticut in the southern suburbs of the city. It furnishes considerable power, which is utilized for various purposes in the city. The two branches unite in what is called Water Shops Pond.§ LONGMEADOW and PECOWSIC Brooks, in the town of Longmeadow, flow into the Connecticut, the former in the southwest part of the town, and the latter a little north of the Springfield line. THREE-MILE Brook and STILL and PHILO Brooks are in Agawam.

THE DEERFIELD River takes its rise among the Green Mountains of Southern Vermont, entering Massachusetts in the extreme northwest corner of Franklin County, between the towns of Monroe and Rowe. After skirting for a while the easterly line of Berkshire County, where it touches the east end of the Hoosac Tunnel, it bends easterly, and running centrally throughout Franklin County, reaches the Connecticut River in the north end of the town of Deerfield. Along its course are many important water-powers, and its deep valley, winding among the mountains, leaves the Troy and Greenfield Railroad by easy grades from the Connecticut Valley to the mouth of the Hoosac Tunnel, through which the road-bed runs under the mountain for the distance of four and a half miles, and nearly two thousand feet beneath its summit, being one of the modern wonders of the world.

† Michel Sabattis, an Indian of the Adirondacks, says Che-cau-pee means the place of many springs.

‡ The land in this vicinity was long known as the "Elbow Tract."

§ This pond, which extends for nearly three miles, is produced by the dam erected by the United States Government to furnish power for what are known as the "Water Shops," which are a portion of the armory works.

The MILL River of Northampton rises, one branch of it, in Goshen, Hampshire County; another in Southern Franklin County, and runs southeasterly through Williamsburgh and Northampton to the Connecticut. This stream is famous for recent disasters by flood, occasioned by the breaking away of reservoirs situated among the hills near its source, an account of which is given in succeeding chapters.

MILLER'S River is one of the larger streams which run into the Connecticut from the east. It rises in the northeastern part of Worcester County, enters Franklin in the town of Orange, runs westerly between Wendell and Erving, and then westerly and northerly between Erving and Montague to the Connecticut.

GREEN River rises near the Vermont line, and runs southerly between Leyden and Colerain and through Greenfield and a part of Deerfield to the Deerfield River.

OTHER STREAMS.—There are many ponds and numerous other streams of more or less importance watering the territory of the three counties of which this history treats, all of which are described in the histories of the several towns.*

Paucatock Brook rises in the northwestern part of Holyoke, and draining Wright's and Ashley's Ponds in the same town, flows south through West Springfield, and unites with the Agawam River in the southwest part of that town. A branch of the Monhan River takes its rise on the eastern flank of Mount Tom, runs several miles south, to near the centre of Holyoke in the western part, and then, making a détour, leaves the town near its northwest corner, and flowing along the base of the mountain, unites with another branch and flows into the Connecticut at the base of the mountain on the north.

CHAPTER IV.

GEOLOGICAL OUTLINES.

I.

ERAS—AGES—PERIODS.

THE rocky groundwork of the Connecticut Valley in Massachusetts, while it does not present as many fossils as some regions, yet so rich and varied is its structure that it possesses many curious features of surpassing interest to the geological student.† But it is not within the province or scope of this

* The following account of the fisheries in the valley is from the diary of the late Sewell White, of West Springfield:

"THE SALMON AND SHAD FISHERY IN THE CONNECTICUT RIVER FIFTY YEARS AGO.

"Not a salmon has been caught in the Connecticut River for a good many years, and the shad-fishery has gradually declined ever since the canal dam was built at South Hadley.

"They collected in great schools at the foot of the rapids, and would not venture to go up the river until the water was settled so that they could see their way through the rumble-jumble of the boiling waters.

"Two thousand shad were once taken at one haul at the foot of the falls, at the place called Old Sluggard, and in one case twenty-five shad were taken at one dip by a scoop net. It is said that the shad took fright and went down over Williamset in such a school as to cause the river to rise two inches."

† Acknowledgments are due to Prof. Wm. N. Rice, of Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., for valuable suggestions upon the geology of the Connecticut Valley.

work to enter minutely into the details of this interesting subject, and no more will be attempted here than to give its general outlines so far as the subject relates to the economic interests and historical associations of the valley.

And this outline will relate principally to the departments of Historical and Physiographic geology, leaving to the interested student the inviting fields of Lithological and Dynamical geology, of which the region is so rich in specimens and natural illustrations, to be studied in the field itself here spread out before him in superabundant richness or in the special works devoted to the science.

Geology has been defined as the science of the structure of the earth. It aims to show not only what the rocky structure of the earth is, but it also treats of the origin of its structure. It is therefore an historical science, and unfolds to us to some extent the mysteries of the world's creation. The earth itself, like the plant or animal it sustains on its surface, is a thing of growth, of development from the original chaos when "it was without form and void" into its present wonderfully complicated and varied structure. The different periods of this growth and development are more or less distinctly marked upon the earth's rocky structure by the various fossil forms of vegetable and animal life found therein. These fossil forms of organic nature seem to rise successively from the lowest forms of dawning life found in the oldest rocks up through all the wondrous scale of being to the present age of man, the crowning life of all. So every rock marks a period in the earth's growth, every group of rocks an age, and still larger groups, called geologic systems, mark great eras of geologic time.

The extremely interesting geologic features of the Connecticut Valley and its surroundings can be best explained by referring to the geologic eras and ages of the world based upon the progress of life and living things, as shown by successive rocky formations.

The subdivisions of geologic time are eras, ages, and periods.

The eras are five in number, marked in all by seven ages and each by various periods.

I.—ARCHÆAN ERA, including Azoic and Eozoic (The Dawn of Life).

1. The Laurentian Age—Upper and Lower.

II.—PALÆOZOIC ERA (Old Life).

2. The Silurian or Age of Mollusks.

3. The Devonian or Age of Fishes.

4. The Carboniferous or Age of Coal Plants.

III.—MESOZOIC ERA (Middle Life).

5. The Reptilian Age.

IV.—CENOZOIC ERA (Plant Life).

6. The Age of Mammals (Tertiary).

V.—PSYCHOZOIC ERA (Era of Mind).

7. The Age of Man (Quaternary).

The geologic formations found in the Connecticut Valley and its bordering mountain ranges present rocks which mark only a few periods of the ages indicated by the above table, but those represented present many features of peculiar interest to the scientific inquirer.

II.

ARCHÆAN ROCKS.

It seems to be the favorite theory of the New England geologists of the Hitchcock and Dana schools that all the older rocks of the region have been metamorphosed, that is to say, these rocks were originally sedimentary sandstones, limestones, and clays deposited in the ocean's bed, like the Silurian beds of central New York, and that by the action of heat and the presence of superincumbent strata they were changed into granite, gneiss, schists, slates, and other hard crystalline rocks. That during the change the most of the fossil remains of the primeval animals and plants they contained in their original structure were obliterated. Indeed, Mr. Dana claims that even the oldest Laurentian rocks of Northern New York and Canada are all metamorphic in their nature. Yet, while this theory would seem to be the true one in regard to most of the New England strata, it is open to grave doubts as to the Laurentian. Rather does it seem that the old or Lower Laurentian rocks, and perhaps the Upper Laurentian, notwithstanding the high authority of Mr. Dana is to the contrary, are not metamorphic in their nature, but are original rocks, in which the materials which constitute their structure have stood through countless ages in changeless relation to each other since they first crystallized, as it were in each other's arms, in the slowly-cooling crust of the intensely-heated primeval earth.

Yet, whether these crystalline beds in Massachusetts are metamorphic, or are the result of successive upheavals of original rocks, in tracing out the developments of the continent from its Archaean beginnings in the old Laurentian, such has been the disturbance and upheaval of strata in the region bordering the valley of the Connecticut, that it has been so far a matter of extreme difficulty to correlate their various groups with those of known age in the State of New York, west of the Hudson River, which have given to geological science its American nomenclature.

It would seem, however, that the Azoic and Eozoic rocks were pretty well represented in various beds of granite, gneiss, syenite, mica schist, and other crystalline rocks found in the region. But all these formations belong to an age, it would seem, far younger than the Laurentian.

The Eozoic rocks are divided by geologists into three great series, constituting the lowest accessible portion of the earth's crust.

These three series of old crystalline rocks are the old or Lower Laurentian, the Upper Laurentian, sometimes called the Labradorian, and the Huronian. To some one, if not all, of these three divisions of the ancient rocks geologists now refer the gneissic rocks of the Hoosac Mountain range, the gneiss flanking on both sides the sandstones of the Connecticut Valley, and the mica schists associated with the granite about Amherst and Leverett.

GNEISS.—In the mountain towns of the eastern portions of the three counties of Franklin, Hampshire, and Hampden, which border the beds of sand rock on the east, the prevailing and almost the only rock found is Gneiss, sometimes wrongly called granite. Gneiss, like granite, is composed of the three minerals,—feldspar, quartz, and mica; but the crystals of these minerals in granite are confusedly mixed together, while in gneiss they are arranged in a stratified form or in layers. This rock here is mostly light gray in color. An example of this gneiss is seen in what is commonly called the "Monson Granite," much used for building purposes.

West of the sandstone region of the valley the crystalline rocks underlying the western mountain towns of the counties of Franklin, Hampshire, and Hampden are much more diversified than those east of the valley. While on the east the prevailing rock is gneiss, on the west there are belts of talcose schist, mica schist, calciferous mica schist and granite, as well as gneiss.

CALCIFEROUS MICA SCHIST.—A wide belt of this rock underlies most of the western mountain towns of Franklin and Hampshire and the northern towns of Hampden County, the belt terminating in a point in Granville. Above Northampton this belt borders on the sandstones of the valley.

In this belt "numerous thin beds of dark siliceous limestones," says Prof. C. H. Hitchcock, of Dartmouth, "are interstratified with the schists. These increase at the expense of the other beds in passing north, and in Canada they predominate, containing characteristic fossils of the Upper Silurian system, especially those belonging to the Niagara limestone of New York. . . . In Bernardstown there is a thick bed of limestone containing numerous fragments of the stems of enormous crinoids. Similar ones occur in the upper Helderberg group of New York, belonging to the Devonian system." Soapstone is also found in Blandford, Chester, Rome, Granville, and other towns.

TALCOSE SCHIST.—West of the above-named belt of calciferous mica schist, a narrow belt of talcose schist stretches across the extreme western ends of the three valley counties and borders the easterly line of the gneiss belt of the Hoosac Tunnel range in eastern Berkshire County. In this there are bands of magnesian rocks,—either dolomite, serpentine, or soapstone. In Middleford, Hampshire Co., in the line of this belt, is found the most important soapstone quarry in the country.

In Chester there has lately been discovered and worked the rare mineral called emery. This bed of emery was discovered by Dr. H. L. Lucas, of Chester, in the year 1856, and has since been profitably worked.

GRANITE.—There are several beds of granite, of small extent, lying within the limits of the three counties, the most important of which is the formation extending from the corners of Ashfield and Goshen, southerly through parts of Goshen, Williamstown, Chesterfield, Northampton, Westhampton, Easthampton, and Southampton, and so on, bordering the sandstone on the west to the Connecticut line, between Granville and Southwick. In this granite bed, and between it and the mica schist, lead ore has been found in considerable quantities in several of the towns above named. In Northampton lead was known to exist as early as 1767, and bullets were cast of it during the Revolution.

TRAP OR BASALT.—In the midst of the sandstone beds of the valley a remarkable formation, possessing but little economic value, but of great interest to the student of geology, exists in a singular upheaval of the rock belonging to the Archaean age, known as trap, basalt, or greenstone. This formation consists of the Mounts Tom and Holyoke range. In some wonderful convulsion of nature the beds of valley sandstones, although supposed to have been of the remarkable thickness of many thousand feet, were suddenly rent asunder, and up through the fissures came in molten form these immense masses of trap rocks, which, cooling as they rose, hardened into abrupt mountain ranges. This trap range extends from the northern part of Massachusetts down through the valley of the Connecticut River in somewhat lengthy mountain ranges, or in isolated groups of hills to New Haven, where it ends in East and West Rock. This rock is intensely hard, and much dreaded by railroad men in making excavations.

Besides the minerals mentioned in the foregoing pages as occurring in and among the crystalline rocks, are several others, including ores of iron, oxide of manganese, etc., a description of which will be found in the histories of the towns in which they occur.

PALEOZOIC ROCKS.

To the Paleozoic era, the era of old life, the rocks of which rest in their natural position upon and next above the old crystalline rocks, belong the stratified deposited rocks of the Silurian, or age of mollusks, the Devonian, or age of fishes, and the Carboniferous, or age of coal plants.

The rocks of this era are scarcely represented within the boundaries of the three river counties. Small isolated patches exist here and there.

MESOZOIC ROCKS.

In the valley of the Connecticut the Mesozoic era,—the era of middle life,—distinguished by the age of reptiles, finds its fitting representative in the vast beds of what is commonly called red sandstone, and known to science as Triassic sandstone and conglomerate. This rock is above all others the distinguishing feature of the groundwork of the Connecticut Valley. It is in great part of a dark-red color, and lies in stratified beds.

The upper beds seem to consist of fine sand hardened into rock, and often present the appearance of slates and shales. The lower beds consist mainly of coarse sand and gravel, often mixed with boulders, some of which are known to measure four feet in diameter. This difference in the structure of this rock has led some geologists to suppose that it consisted of two formations,—the Permian of the upper coal measures, belonging to the Palaeozoic era, and the Triassic period of the Mesozoic era. But the better opinion now seems to be that it all belongs to the Triassic period.

On the Connecticut State line the bed of sand rock is nearly twenty miles in width. As it extends up the river it covers a space from four to eight miles in width until it narrows to about one mile on the north line of the State. This bed is computed to be of an average thickness of from three thousand to fourteen thousand feet. The strata of this rock, throughout its whole extent in the valley, have a dip or indication varying from fifty to thirty degrees,—always in an easterly direction,—the dip being the greatest on the western side throughout the valley. This dip of the sand rock strata does not seem to have been affected in the least by the trap irruption through its centre part. It is probable that this red sand rock once filled the valley nearly to a level with the summit of Mount Tom, more than a thousand feet of it having been ground up and carried away by glacial action and the war of the elements.

The question arises, How was this immense bed of sand rock formed? The obvious answer to this question is, the valley far back in the geologic ages was an estuary, or arm of the sea. Its bottom and shores were formed by the gneiss rocks on the east, and the mica schist on the west, while the two met together somewhere in the centre of its bottom, perhaps where the trap afterwards came up through. Into this comparatively quiet estuary the streams from the hills and mountains around washed the sand and gravel formed by the wearing away of the rocks by the action of the elements. The sand and gravel so washed into this estuary settled to the bottom, and in the course of long ages it became gradually hardened into rock and filled up the valley. After the valley was filled with the sand rock to such great depths, the whole continent must have arisen from the water into something like its present position. After the glacial denudation this valley must have again sunk below the sea-level, and have been again filled up with the beds of sand, clay, and gravel that are now found in it. Again rising from the waters, it became fit for the habitation of man.

FOOT-MARKS.

But the most interesting things about this bed of sand rock are the fossil foot-prints to be found between its strata. The ancient foot-marks occur in some thirty places in the valley of the Connecticut between the upper strata. They must have been made by the animals and birds of the period walking in the soft mud of the shallow bottom of the estuary while the tide was out and the water low. During low tide the mud dried rapidly in the then warmer than tropical atmosphere. On the coming in of the waters these tracks were at once filled with another layer of sand, and the impression made permanent as the rock itself.

These foot-prints being mostly those of birds, their existence has given rise to a new branch of natural history called Ichnology, or the "science of tracks."

The "bird tracks" are the most interesting of all these fossil foot-prints. The largest bird that frequented the muddy shores of the primeval estuary of this valley had a foot eighteen inches long, and must have been five times the size of the ostrich of to-day. The smallest bird was like the snipe. Many strange animals now unknown to man left on these rocks their foot-prints. Among these were an order of reptilian birds or horpetoids. The largest foot-mark was made by a gigantic frog, called Otozoum Moodii. Its track is twenty inches long.

To President Edward Hitchcock, late of Amherst, is due the first scientific description of these interesting remains. Dr. Hitchcock made the first geologic survey of the State of Massachusetts, and from 1832—the date of his first report—to 1865 he published numerous works upon the subject, all of which are of high scientific authority.

In speaking of these strange foot-prints on the red sandstone rocks of the valley of the Connecticut, President Hitchcock eloquently says, "Now I have seen in scientific vision an apterous bird some twelve or fifteen feet high—nay, large flocks of them—walking over the muddy surface, followed by many others of an analogous character, but of smaller size. Next comes a biped animal—a bird, perhaps—with a foot and heel nearly two feet long. Then a host of lesser bipeds formed on the same general type, and among them several quadrupeds with disproportioned feet, yet many of them stilted high, while others are crawling along the surface with spreading limbs. Next succeeds the huge Polemarch, leading along a tribe of lesser followers, with heels of great length and armed with spurs. But the greatest wonder of all comes in the shape of a biped batrachian with feet twenty inches long. We have heard of the Labyrinthodon of Europe—a frog as large as an ox—but his feet were only six or eight inches long, a mere pigmy compared with the Otozoum of New England. Behind him there trips along, on unequal feet, a group of small lizards and Salamandridæ, with trifold or quadrifold feet. Beyond, half seen amidst the darkness, there move along animals so strange that they can hardly be brought within the types of existing organization. Strange, indeed, is this menagerie of remote sandstone days; and the privilege of gazing upon it and bringing into view one lost form after another has been an ample recompense for my efforts though they should be rewarded by no other fruit."*

CENOZOIC ERA.

The Cenozoic era, or era of recent times, is represented in the Connecticut Valley by the Tertiary age, or age of mammals, and the Quaternary age, or age of Man.

The geologic formations of this age are composed of two distinct subdivisions, the Glacial or Drift, and the Recent or Terrace formations, which overlie all the others in depths varying from a few inches to one hundred and fifty feet or more. The bottom layers lying directly upon the rock formations are composed largely of coarse boulders graduating into pebbles and sand, while the Terraces are mostly or wholly of finer sands or clay and marls, the last two sometimes beautifully arranged in thin layers, and often curiously convoluted and complex in their arrangements, as may be seen at the brick-works in the southern suburbs of the city of Springfield. The lower deposits are of Diluvian or Drift origin, while those on and near the surface are of Fluvial or Lacustrine formation. The Terrace formation is finely exhibited to the west and southwest of Holyoke, and on the east side of the river below Springfield.

CHAPTER V.

INDIAN OCCUPANCY.

I.

THE INDIAN TITLE TO THE SOIL.

THE New World was the natural home of the Indian. He was the sole proprietor of its soil. His title was the clearest of all titles, the right derived from undisputed, immemorial possession. His tenure was that of absolute property in the soil, covered by no shadow of incumbrance. The white man was first an invader and trespasser, and then a purchaser. No white man's title to the soil to-day is worth a straw in the eyes of absolute law, unless it can be traced back to some Indian deed. It may be true that Sir Edmund Andros once said that an Indian deed was worth no more than the "scratch of a bear's paw," but no sound jurist will consider Sir Edmund's dictum worth anything in the case.

* Quoted in Holland's Hist. West Mass., Vol. I, p. 348.

On the 16th of February, 1629, Governor Cradock wrote in behalf of the Company as follows: "The earnest desire of our whole company is that you have a diligent and watchful eye over our own people, that they live unblamable and without reproof, and demean themselves justly and courteously towards the Indians."

When William Pynchon, the father of the settlements in the Connecticut Valley,—the founder of Roxbury and Springfield,—in the year 1636, first led his little band of pioneers along the old "Bay Path" through a hundred miles of howling woods to the garden-banks of the great river at Ag-a-wam, he found the fertile meadows of the stream owned by a few feeble, broken bands of Indians, each governed by its own petty sachem or sagamore.

From each of these petty tribes the early settlers of the valley took exceeding care to obtain deeds of the lands by them owned and occupied.

Thus, from "Cut-to-was, the right owner of Ag-a-wam and Qua-na," his mother Kew-e-nask, the Tam-a-sham or wife of We-na-wis, and Ni-ar-com, the wife of Co-a, the English bought the ancient site of Springfield, by deed bearing date the 15th day of July, in the year 1636,—a fac-simile of the record of which may be found farther on in this volume, in the history of Springfield. From Chick-wal-log, alias Waw-hil-low, Hen-es-scha-lant, Nas-si-co-ha, Re-unks, Pa-quah-ah-at, As-sel-la-quom-pas, and A-wo-nunsk, wife of Wal-lut-ha, all Indians and right owners of Non-o-tuck, they took a deed of Northampton, bearing date 24th September, 1653.*

From Chick-wal-lopp, Um-pan-cha-la, and Wamp-shaw, sachems of Nol-wo-togg, they took a deed† of Hatfield, dated July 10, 1660. And again, on the 8th day of August, 1662, We-qua-gon, his wife A-wo-nunsk, and Squomp, their son, also deeded land in Hatfield.

From Um-pan-cha-la, alias Woms-com, sachem of Nol-wo-togg, they took a deed‡ of Hatfield, dated July 10, 1660.

From Al-quot, the Indian sachem of Wo-rc-noak, they took a deed§ of Westfield, bearing date June 30, 1669.

From We-qua-u-gan and Wa-wa-paw they took the title of lands for the "use and behoof" of the town of Springfield, by deed|| bearing date in the year 1674, being parts of the present towns of West Springfield and Agawam, and Nee-sa-hea-gan, alias Squam-scat, and Ke-pa-quomp, alias Squi-ma-mop, also deeded part of West Springfield by deed¶ dated 20th June, 1666.

From Mas-se-met, Pa-noot, Pam-mook, Ne-nc-pow-man, his squaw, Wom-pe-ly, and Nes-sa-cas-com, Indians of Squak-heag, in the year 1671, they took a deed of ten thousand five hundred and sixty acres in Northfield; and again, on the 9th September, 1673, they took a deed from Nal-lah-am-eom-gon or Na-ta-nas, Mas-hep-c-tot, and Kis-quan-do Pam-pat-e-ke-mo, "a squaw, which is Mas-hep-c-tot's daughter," of another part of Northfield. For an account of the Pa-comp-tuck Indian deeds of Deerfield see history of that town in this work.

II.

TWO FAMILIES OF NATIONS.

When the Europeans first landed on this continent the Indians who inhabited the Atlantic slope of the Alleghany range, the basin of the great lakes, and the valley of the St. Lawrence were divided into two great families of nations. These two families were soon known and distinguished by the whites as the Iroquois and Algonquin families, so named by the French.

These two families differed radically, both in language and lineage, in the manner of building their wigwams, as well as in many of their manners and customs.

III.

THE IROQUOIS.

The Iroquois proper, the best types and leading people of this family, were the Five Nations of Central New York, called by themselves the Ho-de-no-sau-nee. To the south of the Five Nations, in the valley of the Susquehanna, were the Andastes, and to the westward of them, along the southern shore of Lake Erie, were the Eries. To the northward of Lake Erie lay the Neutral Nation, and near them the Tobacco Nation, while the Hurons, another tribe of the Iroquois, dwelt along the eastern shore of the lake that still bears their name. There was also a branch of the Iroquois family in the Carolinas,—the Tuscaroras,—who came north and united with the Five Nations in 1715, after which the confederacy was known as the Six Nations.

On every side these few kindred bands of Iroquois were surrounded by the much more numerous tribes of the greater Algonquin family.

Among all the aboriginal inhabitants of the New World there were none so politic and intelligent, none so fierce and brave, none with so many germs of heroic virtues mingled with their savage vices, as the true Iroquois, the people of the Five Nations of Central New York. They were a terror to all the surrounding tribes, whether of their own or of Algonquin speech and lineage. In 1650 they overran the country of the Hurons; in 1651 they destroyed the Neutral Nation; in 1652 they exterminated the Eries; in 1663 they ravaged the country of the Pa-comp-tucks and Squak-heags, in the valley of the Connecticut; in 1672 they conquered the Andastes and reduced them to the most abject submission, calling them the women of their tribe in derision.

They followed the war-path, and their war-cry was heard westward to the Mississippi, southward to the great gulf, and eastward to the Massachusetts Bay. The New England nations mostly, as well as the river tribes along the Hudson, whose warriors trembled at the name of Mohawk, all paid them tribute. The Montagnais, on the far-off Saguenay, whom the French called the paupers of the wilderness, would start from their midnight sleep and run terror-stricken from their wigwams into the forest when but dreaming of the dreadful Iroquois. They were truly in their day the conquerors of the New World, and were justly styled "The Romans of the West." "My pen," wrote the Jesuit Father Ragueneau, in the year 1650, in his Relations des Hurons—"My pen has no ink black enough to paint the fury of the Iroquois."

The Iroquois dwelt in palisaded villages upon the fertile banks of the lakes and streams which watered their country. The houses of all the Iroquois families were built long and narrow. They were not more than twelve or fifteen feet in width, but often exceeded one hundred and fifty feet in length. Within they built their fires at intervals along the centre of the earth-floor, the smoke passing out through openings in the top, which likewise served to let in the light. In every house were many fires and many families,—every family having its own fire within the space allotted to it.

From this custom of having many fires and many families strung through a long and narrow house comes the signification of the Indian name the league of the Five Nations called themselves by. This Indian name was Ho-de-no-sau-nee, "The people of the Long House." They likened their confederacy of five nations or tribes, stretched along a narrow valley for more than two hundred miles through Central New

* Recorded in office of Register of Deeds at Springfield, Book A, B, p. 13.

† Recorded in Book of Deeds A, p. 11.

‡ Recorded in Book of Deeds, Book A, p. 6.

§ Recorded in Book of Deeds A B, p. 50.

|| Recorded in Book of Deeds A B, page 19.

¶ Recorded in Book of Deeds A B, page 21.

 See Collier's History of the Five Nations.

York, to one of their long wigwams containing many families. The Mohawks guarded the eastern door of this typical long house, while the Senecas kept watch at the western door. Between these doors of their country dwelt the Oncidas, the Onondagas, and the Cayugas, each nation around its own family fire, while the great central council-fire was always kept brightly burning in the land of the Onondagas.

The nation of the Iroquois to whom the Indians of the Connecticut Valley paid unwilling tribute was the Mohawk.

In the Algonquin speech of the Connecticut River Indians the Mohawks were called Mau-qua-wogs or Ma-quas, that is to say, "man-eaters."^{*}

The Mohawk country proper, called by themselves Ga-ne-a-ga-o-no-ga, all lay on and beyond the westerly bank of the Hudson, but by right of conquest they claimed all the territory lying between the Hudson and the sources of the easterly branches of the Connecticut.

By virtue of this claim all the Indians in the valley of the Connecticut paid annual tribute to the Mohawks.

Every year two old Mohawk chiefs would leave their castles on the Mohawk River, in their elm-bark canoes, and crossing the Hudson, ascend the Hus-sicke (Hoosac) to its head, and carrying them over the mountain range, re-embark in the headwaters of the Ag-a-wam (Westfield River) and the Deerfield River, come down to the villages of the Wo-ro-noaks, the Ag-a-wams, the Non-o-tucks, the Pa-comp-tucks, the Squak-heags, in the valley, and to the Nip-mucks at the head of the Chicopee, and gather the wampum in which tribute was paid.

As will be seen further on in these pages, when all these river tribes joined King Philip in his attempt to exterminate the whites in New England the Mohawks sided with the English, and did material service against Philip.†

IV.

THE ALGONQUIN FAMILY.

Surrounding the few tribes of the Iroquois on every hand dwelt the much more numerous tribes of the Algonquin family, to which belonged all the New England tribes, as well as the New York Indians who dwelt east of the Hudson.

Northward of the Iroquois were the Nipissings, La Petite Nation, and La Nation de l'Isle, and other tribes in the valley of the Ottawa River. Along the valley of the St. Lawrence dwelt the Algonquins proper, the Abenakis, the Montagnais, and other roving bands below the mouth of the Saguenay.

The Algonquins and Montagnais, and the other wild rovers of the country of the Saguenay, who subsisted mostly by the chase, were often during the long Canadian winters, when game grew scarce, driven by hunger to subsist for many weeks together upon the buds and bark, and sometimes upon the young wood, of forest-trees. Hence their hereditary enemies, the more favored Mohawks, called them in mockery of their condition Ad-i-ron-daks, that is to say tree-eaters. This name, thus borne in derision, was given by Prof. Emmons to the principal mountain chain of Northern New York, and has since been applied to its whole wilderness region, now so famous as a summer resort.‡

The New England tribes of the Algonquin family dwelt mostly along the sea-coast, and on the banks of larger streams. In Maine the Et-et-che-mins dwelt farthest east at the mouth of the St. Croix River. The Abenakis, with their kindred tribe the Taratines, had their hunting-grounds in the valley of the Penobscot, and as far west as the river Saco and the Piscataqua. In the southeast corner of New Hampshire, and over the Massachusetts border, dwelt the Pemacook or Pawtucket tribe. The Massachusetts nation had their home along the bay of that name and the contiguous islands. It was a tradition of this tribe that they formerly dwelt farther to the southwest, near the Blue Mountains, and hence their name Mass-ad-chu-sit, "near the great mountains."[§]

The Wampanoags or Pokanokets dwelt along the easterly shore of Narragansett Bay, in Southeastern Rhode Island, and in the contiguous part of Massachusetts adjoining these, being near neighbors of the Plymouth Pilgrims. The Nansets along Cape Cod were a family of the Wampanoags, and paid them tribute. Next in line were the Narragansetts, and their sister tribe the Nyantics, along the westerly shore of Narragansett Bay, in Western Rhode Island. Between the Narragansetts and the river Thames in Southeastern Connecticut, then called the Pequot River, dwelt the Pequot nation; and between the Pequots and the east bank of the Connecticut River was the home of Uncas and his Mahicans.

On the west side of the Connecticut the territory of the Mohawks was supposed to begin; and in Western Massachusetts, and in what is now the State of Vermont, no Indian tribes had permanent homes. This large territory was a beaver-hunting country of the Iroquois.

Before the great distemper visited these New England Indian nations, just prior to the landing of the Plymouth Pilgrims, their numbers must have been from thirty to forty thousand souls. Of these Connecticut and Rhode Island probably contained one-half.

V.

THE INDIANS OF THE VALLEY.

The valley of the Connecticut in Massachusetts was occupied by several tribes, or remnants of tribes, all of which seemed to owe some sort of fealty to the Nipmucks or Nipnets of Central Massachusetts, if not to the more powerful Pequots, Wampanoags, and Narragansetts.

AG-A-WAMS.—In the vicinity of what is now the city of Springfield dwelt the Ag-a-wam Indians. They claimed all the territory lying on both sides of the Connecticut, between the Enfield Falls below and the South Hadley Falls above. The principal village of the Ag-a-wams was situated on the Pecowsie Brook, which heads in the eastern part of Longmeadow and discharges into the Connecticut nearly on the town line between Springfield and Longmeadow; another on the bank of the Ag-a-wam River, and probably others in various parts of the county.

On a peculiarly-shaped bluff, about a mile and a half south of the centre of Springfield and some fifty rods southeasterly of the east end of the new bridge crossing to Agawam and on what is called "Long Hill," they had a strong palisaded work overlooking the valley and virtually impregnable to Indian attack. It was protected on all sides excepting a narrow neck, fifty yards in width, which connected it with the mainland by steep banks descending to two deep ravines on the north and south, and to the bottom-lands bordering the Connecticut on the west. Water was convenient immediately under the wall of the fortress on the south, and the whole area, occupying from one to two acres, was admirably adapted for defense against anything except artillery.

The meadows or corn-planting grounds of the Ag-a-wams, called by them muck-cos-quit-taj, were quite extensive. On the leaf of the book containing the record of the first Indian deed of what is now Springfield and vicinity is a memorandum in the following words, supposed to have been made by John Holyoke, in the year 1679, which contains an accurate description, doubtless, of the situation of the various corn-planting meadows of the Ag-a-wams:

"Memorandum: Agam or Agawam. It is that meadow on the South of Agawam Riv^r wheer y^e English did first build a house, w^{ch} now we comonly cal y^e house meadow. that piece of ground is it w^{ch} y^e Indians do call Agawam, & y^r y^e English

* Brief History by Increase Mather, p. 38.

† Conn. Col. Rec., Vol. II., p. 461, etc.

‡ See Historical Sketches of Northern New York, by N. B. Sylvester, pp. 39, 40.

§ See Collections of Conn. His. Soc., Vol. II., p. 8.

kept y^r residence who first came to settle and plant at Springfield now so called: & at y^r place it was (as is supposed) that this purchase was made of the Indians. Quana is the middle meadow adjoining to Agaw^m or house meadow. Masacksick is y^r English call the Longmeadow below Springfield, on y^e East of Quinecticat River; Usquaiok is the Mil River wth the land adjoining; Nayasset is the lands of Three corner meadow & of the Plaine."

From the date of the first settlement, in the year 1636, the Ag-a-wam Indians lived on terms of peace and amity with their white neighbors until the year 1675, when they joined King Philip in his war of extermination. On the evening of the 4th day of October, 1675, they admitted into their fort three hundred hostile Indians, who assisted them on the morrow in the burning of Springfield. Upon the arrival of Maj. Treat with his men from Connecticut, and Maj. Pyncheon with the Springfield troops from Hadley, on the afternoon of the burning, We-quo-gan, the chief sachem of the Ag-a-wams and ring-leader in the affair, with all his people suddenly left their village, fort, and corn-planting ground, never to return.

WO-RO-NOAKS.—Ten or twelve miles up the Agawam River, in a direction nearly west from Springfield, on the site of what is now Westfield, dwelt the tribe of Indians called the Wo-ro-noaks, who were a part of the Ag-a-wams.

The Wo-ro-noaks were famous for the number of beaver-skins and other furs caught by them on the near mountains to the west of them, along both branches of the Agawam, now Westfield River, and in the marshes at their head-waters. So famous was their village for its furs that Governor Hopkins, of Hartford, as early as the year 1640, obtained a grant of land there, and that year or the next built trading-houses there. This grant was made to him by the Connecticut people, who supposed it to be within their jurisdiction. But the earliest surveys showed it to be within the boundaries of the Massachusetts Bay Colony, and the Connecticut settlement was abandoned.

NON-O-TUCKS.—Above the point in the Connecticut River where it breaks through between Mounts Tom and Holyoke its valley widens and the river takes an extremely tortuous course, winding around two or three peninsulas which are almost islands, on one of which is situated the village of Hadley. Between Northampton and Mount Tom is another of these bends in the river, which is called the Oxbow, in the middle of which lies an island.

The name Non-tuk, No-ah-tuk, or, as it is now written, Non-o-tuck, means "in the middle of the river," in allusion to such peninsulas and islands.

The Non-o-tucks claimed all the country on both sides of the river, from the head of the South Hadley Falls to the south side of Mount We-quomps, now Sugar-Loaf Mountain.

They had several villages and forts on both sides of the river, and numerous corn-planting fields of from twelve to sixteen acres each. Their principal fort was on a high bank near the mouth of Half-Way Brook, between Northampton and Hadley. This fort was occupied until the night of the 24th August, when Um-pan-cha-la, chief sachem of the Non-o-tucks, left the land with all his tribe for some far-off Western home, no one knows whither. Another fort, containing about an acre inclosed, was occupied by another Non-o-tuck sachem, called Quon-quont. It stood on the east side of the river, in Hadley, on a ridge between East and West School Meadow.

PA-COMP-TUCKS.—In the fertile valley of Deerfield River, and on its adjoining hills, dwelt the Pa-comp-tucks, the most numerous, best known, warlike, and powerful tribe in the valley. They claimed all the country lying on the east side of the river, from Mount We-quomps to the north side of the meadow called Nal-la-hum-com-gon, now Bennett's Meadow, in Northfield, and indefinitely westward. Their principal fort was on what is now known as Fort Hill, which is about one-half mile northeast of the Deerfield meeting-house. Their corn-planting fields were in the valley of the Deerfield River. Here they raised such quantities of corn that in the spring of the year 1638 they furnished fifty canoe-loads for the starving people of Connecticut, impoverished by the Pequot war of the year before.

In the year 1656, Uneas, with his Mahicans, made war upon the Pa-comp-tucks, but was defeated and driven back. The next year the Pa-comp-tucks invaded the country of Uneas and did his people considerable damage.

In the year 1663 the Mohawks made war upon the Pa-comp-tucks, and invaded their country. They attacked the fort on Fort Hill, and carried it after a severe contest, driving the Pa-comp-tucks before them with great slaughter. From this severe blow the Pa-comp-tucks never recovered. In the year 1669 the Pa-comp-tucks, Non-o-tucks, and Squak-heags united with the Massachusetts Indians and the Narragansetts in an expedition into the Mohawk country. Chic-ka-taw-but, the chief sachem of the Massachusetts tribe, was in command. The band numbered some seven hundred warriors. They penetrated the Mohawk country and laid siege to the nearest castle, called Tc-hon-de-lo-ga, at the mouth of the Schoharie kill, afterwards the site of Fort Hunter. But failing in the attempt, the allied tribes retreated towards their own country. The Mohawks followed, and making a détour formed an ambuscade, into which the Eastern Indians fell and suffered fearful loss. After King Philip's war the Pa-comp-tucks went west, and settling on the east bank of the Hudson, at the mouth of the Hoosac River, became known as the Schaghticoke Indians. A part of the Wampanoags and Narragansetts fled with them.*

SQUAK-HEAGS.—On the northerly border of the State, at what is now Northfield, dwelt the fourth tribe of river Indians. Their country reached on both sides of the Connecticut northerly beyond the bounds of the State. The Squak-heags were allied by consanguinity to the Pennacooks of the New Hampshire sea-coast. They had numerous corn-planting fields, and also villages and forts. The famous fishing-ground which they called Pas-quams-cut, now Turner's Falls, was in the country of the Squak-heags. When the Mohawks, in the year 1663, invaded the Pa-comp-tucks they also overran the whole territory of the Squak-heags, captured all their forts, destroyed their villages, and drove them from their homes. From this blow as a tribe they never recovered.† In King Philip's war Squakheag was an important post to the hostile Indians. At its close the Squak-heags went east and north into Canada.

FORTS.—The Indians of the valley built their forts on high bluffs near springs of water, and usually on or not far from the bank of some river. The forts were circular in form, inclosing about one acre of ground, and constructed of palisades set close together in the ground, and some twelve or fifteen feet in height. Within they built rows of wigwams along both sides of well-defined streets.

WIGWAMS.—The Indians of the Algonquin family of nations built their wigwams small and circular, and for one or two families only, unlike the Iroquois nations, who built theirs long and narrow, each for the use of many families. The Algonquin-shaped wigwam of the valley tribes was made of poles set up around a circle, from ten to twelve feet across. The poles met together at the top, thus forming a conical frame-work, which was covered with bark mats or skins; in the centre was their fireplace, the smoke escaping through a hole in the top. In these wigwams men, women, children, and dogs crowded promiscuously together in distressing violation of all our rules of modern housekeeping.

CORN-PLANTING FIELDS.—The meadows of the Connecticut Valley were famous in Indian annals for their corn-fields. Every autumn, after the fall of the leaf, came the Indian summer, in which they set fire to the woods and fields, and thus burned over the whole country, both upland and meadow, once a year. This burning destroyed all the underbrush, and mostly all the timber on the uplands save that growing in swales and on wet lands. When the whites came they found much of the State of Massachusetts as bare of timber as the Western prairies. Their corn-fields on the meadows usually contained from fifteen to twenty acres of ground. One tool for planting was all they had. This was a hoe, made of the shoulder-blade of a deer or moose, or a clam-shell fastened into a wooden handle. For manure they covered over a fish in each hill of corn at planting-time. Their planting-time was about the 10th of May, or as soon as the butternut-leaves were as large as squirrels' ears. Some idea may be formed of the large extent of their planting-fields, when it is stated that the Pa-comp-tucks alone planted in the valley of the Deerfield River in the spring of 1676, the second year of Philip's war, about three hundred acres. Perhaps this was an exaggerated story, and that one hundred acres would have been nearer the truth. But Philip was killed in the summer following, and the Pa-comp-tucks abandoned their unharvested corn-field for the new home on the east bank of the Hudson, at the mouth of the Hoosac. They took what is now the "Tunnel Route" for the west. The women did all the corn-planting and raising, but the men alone planted and took care of the tobacco. It was too sacred a plant for women to handle or smoke, and no young brave was allowed to use it until he had made himself a name in the chase or on the war-path.

* See paper by John Fitch, in New York His. Mag., June, 1876.

† History of Northfield, by Temple and Sheldon.

FOOD.—The Indians had fish and game, nuts, roots, berries, acorns, corn, squashes, a kind of bean now called seiva-bean, and a species of sunflower whose tuberous root was like the artichoke.

Fish were taken with lines or nets made of the sinews of the deer or of the fibres of the dog-bane. Their fish-hooks were made of the bones of fishes and birds.

They caught the moose, the deer, and the bear in the winter season by shooting with bows and arrows, by snaring or in pitfalls. In the summer they took a variety of birds.

They cooked their fish and flesh by roasting before the fire on the point of a long stick, or by boiling in stone or wooden vessels. They made water to boil, not by hanging over the fire, but by the immersion in it of heated stones. Their corn boiled alone they called hominy; when mixed with beans it was succotash. They made a cake of meal, pounded fine by a stone-pestle in a wooden mortar, which they called nookhik, corrupted by the English into "no cake."*

SOCIAL CONDITION.—Their government was entirely patriarchal. Each Indian was in his solitary cabin the head of his family. His wife was treated as a slave, and did all the drudgery. The only law that bound the Indian was the custom of his tribe. Subject to that only, he was as free as the air he breathed, following the bent of his own wild will. Over tribes were principal chiefs called sachems, and inferior ones called sagamores. The succession was always in the female line. Their war-chiefs were not necessarily sachems in time of peace. They won their distinction only by prowess on the war-path.

The language of the Indian, in the terms of modern comparative philology, was neither the monosyllabic, like the Chinese, nor inflecting, like that of the civilized Caucasian stock, but was agglutinating, like many of the northwestern Asiatic tribes, and those of southeastern Europe. They express ideas by stringing words together in one compound vocable. The Algonquin languages were not euphonious, like the Iroquois dialects, but were harsh, and full of consonants. Contrast the Iroquois names, Ta-wa-sen-ta, Hi-a-wat-ha, or O-no-

* What we now call johnny-cake, in the early days was known as journey-cake, from the facility with which it was carried while traveling. It is said that it was changed to johnny-cake in honor of Governor Jonathan Trumbull, of Connecticut, the friend of Washington, who always addressed him familiarly as "Brother Jonathan." Hence that title of the typical Yankee to this day.

a-la-go-na, with the Algonquin names, Squak-heag, Qua-boag, or Wampan-oag.

RELIGION.—The Indian had but the crudest possible ideas, if any at all, of an abstract religion. He had no priests, no altars, no sacrifice. His medicine men were mere conjurers. Yet he was superstitious to the last degree, and spiritualized everything in nature. The mysterious realm about him he did not attempt to unravel, but bowed submissively before it with what crude ideas he had of religion and worship. The flight or cry of a bird, the humming of a bee, the crawling of an insect, the turning of a leaf, the whisper of a breeze, were to him mystic signals of good or evil import, by which he was guided in the most important relations of life.

In dreams the Indian placed the most implicit confidence. They seemed to him to be revelations from the spirit-world, guiding him to the places where his game lurked and to the haunts of his enemies. He invoked their aid on all occasions. They taught him how to cure the sick, and revealed to him his guardian spirit, as well as all the secrets of his good or evil destiny.

Although the Indian has been for three centuries in more or less contact with the civilized life of the white man, he is still the untamed child of nature. "He will not," says Parkman, "learn the arts of civilization, and he and his forest must perish together. The stern, unchanging features of his mind excite our admiration from their very immutability; and we look with deep interest on the fate of this irreclaimable son of the wilderness, the child who will not be weaned from the breast of his rugged mother."†

CHAPTER VI.

EARLY EXPLORERS—EARLY PATENTS OF NEW ENGLAND—THE CHARTER OF THE COLONY OF MASSACHUSETTS BAY.

I.

EARLY EXPLORERS.

As the early settlers of the Connecticut Valley were themselves among the comparatively early voyagers to the New World, and in coming here suffered the dangers of the deep incident to early navigation, it will be necessary, in order properly to understand their history, briefly to consider the voyagers who preceded them, as well as the results of their explorations and attempts at settlement.

If the glory of the discovery of the New World by Europeans belongs forever to Columbus, under Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain, on the 12th day of October, 1492, it is no less certain that the honor of the first exploration of the continent of North America belongs to John Cabot and his son, Sebastian Cabot, under Henry VII. of England. If neither can justly claim that glory or this honor, but both must give way to the Scandinavian mariners,—the Northmen of the tenth century,—then it was upon the virgin soil of New England that the first white men landed, and within her borders that the first white settlement was attempted on the wild American shore.

Of this visit of the Danes to America in the tenth century there is considerable evidence, amounting almost to a demonstration of the theory; but there are still some missing links in the chain of testimony, which, until supplied, will forever place the matter, with the burial-place of Moses, the coming of the Etruscans to Italy, the building of the pyramids, and the story of the Western mound-builders, among the unsolved problems of history.

THE NORTHMEN.

The historical evidence upon the coming of the Danes to America as early as the tenth century consists principally in extracts from the compositions of some eighteen writers, chiefly Icelandic, which have been published by the Royal Society of Northern Antiquaries at Copenhagen.

† Conspiracy of Pontiac, Vol. I., p. 44.

If the accounts of these writers are not romance, but are veritable history, then about the year 986 one Biørne sailed from Iceland for Greenland in search of his father, who had preceded him thither. He was overtaken by fogs and lost his way. When the weather cleared, and he recovered his lost reckoning, to his surprise he discovered that, while he was sailing in the wrong direction, on his larboard-side lay a low woodland shore. Continuing the same course for nine days, he reached Greenland in a direction directly opposite to that with which the voyage had been begun.

It is evident, from the direction Biørne was sailing after having recovered his reckoning, that he saw on his larboard-side the "low and wooded land" of the eastern shore of North America. If the account of this voyage is trustworthy, Biørne was the discoverer of the New World.

For fourteen years the discovery of Biørne was talked about by the Danish navigators, when, in the year 1000, Lief Eriksen, with a single ship and a crew of thirty men, went in search of the newly-found land. Lief found it and, landing, gave it the name of Helluland, signifying in Icelandic the land of slate. Re-embarking and sailing southerly along the coast, he came to a country "well wooded and level," which he called Markland, in allusion to its wood. Sailing in a southwesterly direction out of sight of land for two days more, he came to an island, along whose northern shore he passed westwardly, and reaching the mainland went on shore and built huts, in which he passed the winter. One of his men, a German, while wandering in the woods found an abundance of wild grapes, such as wine was made of in his own country, and from this circumstance Lief called the country Vinland.

It is supposed that the name Helluland was applied by Lief to the rocky shore of Labrador, long since famous for its beds of dark Laurentian rock, mistaken by him for slate. Markland may have been Nova Scotia, and it is highly probable that Vinland was the southeastern shore of Massachusetts and Rhode Island. In the year 1003 Thorwald, and in the year 1005 Thorfinn, are said to have visited Vinland, and such visits are said to have been continued until the middle of the fourteenth century.

But whether the Northmen were or were not the first European explorers of the New World, it is certain that in the year 1497, but five years after Columbus made his first voyage, the Cabots—father and sons—discovered and explored the coast of North America in the region of New England, thus laying the foundation of the British claim to such vast American possessions.

John Cabot was a merchant of Venice, who settled at Bristol, invited by the peaceful commercial policy of Henry VII. —On the 5th day of March, 1496, Henry granted to John Cabot and his three sons, Lewis, Sancius, and Sebastian,—the last of whom, Sebastian, was born in England, at Bristol, in 1477,—his royal letters-patent authorizing them to "sail to all parts, countries, and seas of the East and of the West, and of the North, under our banners and ensigns, with five ships of what burden or quantity soever they may be, to seek out, discover, and find whatsoever isles, countries, regions, or provinces of the heathen and infidels, whatsoever they may be, and in what part of the world soever they may be, which before this time have been unknown to all Christians."

The Cabots, by these letters-patent, were to occupy, subdue, possess, and govern such regions as they might discover for their own behoof, but in the name of England, the king to have one-fifth part of the profits of the enterprise. This was the first patent for discovery issued by the British crown.

In May, 1497, Cabot, with his son Sebastian, set out on his voyage. His fleet consisted of two, or perhaps five ships, with three hundred men on board. The expedition touched at Iceland, and from thence sailed boldly into the unknown, mysterious west in search of gold and empire. They were the first in the search for the still undiscovered northwest passage to the "harbor of Cathay," on the eastern shore of Asia, all unconscious of the mighty continent which lay between them and the object of their desire. Unexpectedly soon they reached the shores of Newfoundland or Labrador. Cabot first sailed northwardly along the coast in search of the northwestern passage as far as the sixty-seventh degree of north latitude. Although in July, the cold became intense, and he reversed his course, and sailed south as far as the thirty-sixth degree of north latitude. Failing in his object he returned, taking to the king as trophies three American Indians. The Cabots probably saw nothing but the bays and headlands along the shores, but upon their discovery rests England's claim to her North American possessions.

The next year the king renewed his patent to John Cabot. But John Cabot presently died, and whether his son Sebastian made a second voyage to America is one of history's unsolved problems.

In the year 1500 the Portuguese admiral, Gaspar Cortereal, made a voyage to America, sailed along the coast some six or seven hundred miles, and returned with a number of Indian captives, giving glowing accounts of the country.

John Verazzano, a Florentine, sailing in the service of France, in the year 1524 made a voyage to America, which was followed by results as important to France as Cabot's voyage was to England. Verazzano, during this voyage, lay at anchor for fifteen days in what is now the harbor of Newport, and entered the Hudson River more than eighty years before the visit of the explorer whose name it bears. About the same time, in the year 1524 or 1525, Stephen Gomez was fitted out at the joint expense of the Emperor Charles V. and some merchants of Coruña and sent on a voyage in quest of the northwest passage. He first touched at Newfoundland, and then passing Cape Cod, sailed through Long Island Sound, and also entered the Hudson, which he named the Rio de San Antonio. In the year 1655, Jacques Cartier, the eminent mariner of St. Malo, in Brittany, on the 10th of August of that year, it being the festival of St. Lawrence, discovered the bay and river of that name, and laid the foundation of the French claim to Canada.

These discoveries opened a large field for industry and tempting sources of profit to European adventurers. As early as the year 1503, only three years behind Cortereal, fishing-vessels began to arrive at Newfoundland and along the coast from Brittany and Normandy, and by the year 1517, only twenty years after the voyage of the Cabots, no less than fifty ships, French, Spanish, and Portuguese, were engaged in these fisheries.

Henry VIII. paid little attention to American discovery. It was not until the year 1548, during the reign of Edward VI., that Parliament took the matter in hand, and passed laws protecting English fishermen on the American coast.

But it was not until during the last half of the reign of Elizabeth that a permanent settlement of the American continent was undertaken by Englishmen. Sir Humphrey Gilbert was the half-brother of Sir Walter Raleigh, and his fellow-soldier in the Protestant armies of France. He had been a member of Parliament, was well versed in geographical and commercial knowledge, and the well-known author of a "Discourse to prove a Passage by the Northwest to Cathaia and the East Indies."

With Raleigh, he cordially embraced the scheme of the colonization of North America. Mexico, the West Indies, and Peru were pouring immense wealth into Spain. How could London and Bristol behold unmoved the strange prosperity of Cadiz? The queen gave Sir Humphrey Gilbert a patent, conveying privileges on him similar to those granted by Henry VII. to John Cabot. He and his heirs were to be proprietors of such countries, paying homage therefor to the crown of England, together with one-fifth part of all precious metals found. Sir Humphrey was given admiralty jurisdiction over neighboring seas as well as full power to govern on the land. After making his first attempt, which proved abortive, Gilbert finally set sail the second time, on the 11th of June, 1583, with two hundred and sixty men in five ships. He reached the coast of North America, on the fifty-first parallel, north latitude, July 30, and on the 3d of August entered the harbor of St. John, in Newfoundland. On the 5th of August he landed, and, pitching his tent on shore, called around him the commanders of the thirty-six fishing-vessels of different nations he had found there, and, with imposing ceremonies, took possession of the territory in the name of the British crown. His commission was read and interpreted, a turf and a twig were formally delivered to him in token of investiture and of allegiance to the crown, and proclamation made of his authority to govern the country for two hundred leagues on every side. He set up a pillar with the royal arms affixed thereto graven on lead, and made grants of land in severalty for erecting stands for curing fish.

But this attempt of Sir Humphrey Gilbert at settlement, the first made by Englishmen on American soil, heads also the long list of frustrated settlements whose sad details are more interesting to the historian than those of many a successful one. His search for gold was unavailing. His company was unused to hardships, and many sickened and died. One disaster followed another, and, utterly discouraged, Gilbert sailed for England. He took passage himself on the least seaworthy vessel, thus choosing the place of danger; and on the 9th of September his little ship, in a violent storm, went to the bottom, and every soul on board perished. The last words he was heard to utter by those who survived on other ships were, "We are as near heaven by sea as by land."

After Gilbert's death his patent was renewed to Sir Walter Raleigh, who, in 1584 and the following year, made his attempt to colonize Virginia, so named in honor of England's virgin queen.

EARLIEST ENGLISH SETTLEMENT IN MASSACHUSETTS.

It was in the year 1602, nineteen years after the failure of Sir Humphrey Gilbert, that Bartholomew Gosnold, a mariner of the West of England, under the command and with the consent of Sir Walter Raleigh, at the cost among others of Henry Wriothesley, Earl of Southampton, in a small ship called the "Concord," set sail for "the north part of Virginia" with a view to the establishment of a colony. Gosnold sailed from Falmouth on the 26th of March, and had with him a company of thirty-two persons, eight of whom were seamen, and twenty men to become planters. On the 14th of May he saw land in Massachusetts Bay, and soon after taking a large quantity of fish near a headland, he named it Cape Cod.

Gosnold, Breton, and three others went on shore, being the first Englishmen who are known to have set foot on the soil of Massachusetts. Sailing southerly and westerly to the south of Nantucket, Gosnold, after landing at No-man's-land, to which he gave the name Martha's Vineyard, since transferred to the larger island, reached an island now called by the Indian name of Cut-ty-hunk, where he laid the foundation for a settlement. In three weeks after landing he had dug a cellar, prepared timber, and built a house fortified with palisades after the Indian fashion. A dispute arose between the planters and the sailors as to their provisions, and a party going out in search of shell-fish was attacked by hostile savages. Becoming discouraged, at the end of a month from landing on the island Gosnold abandoned his settlement and returned to England. But his enterprise, although a present failure, was fruitful in its consequences. Out of it slowly developed the final settlement of New England. Such glowing accounts were given by his men of the fruitfulness of the soil and the salu-brity of the climate that other expeditions soon followed. The land was "overgrown," said they, "with wood and rubbish, viz.: oaks, ashes, beech, walnut, witch-hazel, sassafrage, and cedars, with divers others of unknown name. The rubbish is wild pease, young sassafrage, cherry-trees, vines, eglantine, gooseberry-bushes, hawthorn, honeysuckles, with others of like quality. The herbs and roots are strawberries, rasp, ground-nuts, alexander, surrin, tansy, etc., without count."

In the year 1603, Richard Hakluyt, the learned cosmographer, took an active interest in schemes for the further exploration of North Virginia, as New England was then called, which resulted in the voyage of Martin Pring of that year, and in 1605 Lord Southampton fitted out and sent George Waymouth.

In the mean time, between the years 1603 and 1606, the French, through the Sieur de Monts, came near taking possession of North Virginia. De Monts, with Pontgravé and De Poutrincourt for his lieutenants, and Samuel de Champlain for his pilot, in 1604 set sail for the principality of Acadie, of which he had a patent. Thinking the climate of that region too severe, the next season he embarked for the shores of Massachusetts, and was upon the coast nearly at the same time with Waymouth; but the Indians were hostile, and he did not stay. The next year his companions renewed the voyage, and De Poutrincourt sent a party on shore at Cape Cod to plant a cross in the name of the king of France. The Indians attacked his men, killed two and wounded others. His situation becoming dangerous he returned to Port Royal, leaving North Virginia to become New England, and not New France.

In pursuing this rapid sketch of the early navigators, we now come to many names more prominently identified with the early settlement of the country, conspicuous among which are Sir Fernando Gorges and Capt. John Smith, the one the founder of Virginia, and the other, in a certain sense, the father of Puritan New England.

In the year 1604, Sir Fernando Gorges was made governor of Plymouth. Waymouth, on his return from America in the year 1605, brought with him several Indian captives. Three of these he gave to Gorges. "This accident," writes Gorges, "was the means, under God, of putting on foot and giving life to all our plantations." Gorges took the natives into his house and kept them three years. He taught them to speak in the English tongue, and listened with delight to their accounts of the "stately islands and safe harbors" of their native land, "what great rivers ran up into the land, what men of note were seated on them, what power they were of, how allied, what enemies they had, and the like."*

Sir John Popham, another name conspicuous in early New England history, was then lord chief-justice of the King's Bench, and Gorges, who had befriended him in former times, obtained his powerful influence at court for authority to renew operations in America. This movement of Gorges and Popham, in the west of England, was seconded by "certain noblemen, knights, gentlemen, and merchants" of London, who were desirous of renewing the attempt made by Raleigh in Virginia.

The result of this joint application was the incorporation of two companies, called in the patent the "First and Second Colony." Both companies were placed under the common supervision of a body called "THE COUNCIL OF VIRGINIA," to be appointed by the crown, and each company was to be governed on the spot by a council appointed in like manner.

The First or London Company had assigned to it South Virginia, being the territory extending from the thirty-fourth to the forty-first degree of north latitude, with a breadth of fifty miles inland. The Second or Plymouth Company, under the management of "sundry knights, gentlemen, and other adventurers, of the cities of Bristol and Exeter, and of the town of Plymouth, and of other places," was authorized to plant in North Virginia, between the thirty-eighth and forty-fifth parallels. As their territory overlapped in part, neither company was to settle within one hundred miles of land previously occupied by the other. All the rights of British subjects were granted to the colonists and their descendants.

* MASS. HIST. COLL., XXVI., 50, 51.

Under this last-named patent various abortive attempts at settlement were made by both companies—notably that of Gorges, of the Plymouth Company, to plant a colony at the mouth of the Kennebeck, in Maine, in the year 1607.

But it was not until the year 1614 that a new impetus was given to the settlement of America. In that year Capt. John Smith sailed from London for the American coast, in command of two ships, fitted out by some private adventurers.

The history of John Smith, the founder of Virginia, under the London Company, reads more like some mythical romance of prehistoric times than the sober account of events occurring in the seventeenth century, and in the very days of William Pynchon, the father of Springfield. The fascinating story belongs rather to the Old Dominion than to New England.

Suffice it to say that Smith visited the coast of North Virginia in the year 1614, drew a map of it "from point to point, isle to isle, harbor to harbor, with the soundings, sands, rocks, and landmarks," and he was the first to call it by the name of New England.

After his failure on the Kennebeck, in 1607, Gorges, in the interest of the Plymouth Company, sent out Richard Vines to New England in 1616-17, and Thomas Dermer in the early summer of 1620, who landed at Plymouth a few months before the Pilgrim Fathers came, and carried back to England the news of the terrible plague among the Indians, that had so nearly depopulated the country.

II.

GREAT PATENT OF NEW ENGLAND.

At length, on the 3d day of November, 1620, King James granted to the Plymouth Company a separate charter of their part of the patent under the control of the "Council of Virginia," and formed them into a separate corporate body, styled in the patent "The Council established in Plymouth, in the county of Devon, for the planting, ruling, ordering, and governing of New England in America."

Of the forty patentees named in this patent thirteen were peers, some of the highest rank, and most of the others were men of distinguished consequence.

The following extracts from this patent will be interesting to New England readers:

"We, therefore, of our special grace, mere motion, and certain knowledge, by the advice of the lords and others of our privy council, have, for us, our heirs, and successors, granted, ordained, and established that all that circuit, continent, precincts, and limits in America lying and being in breadth from forty degrees of northerly latitude from the equinoctial line to forty-eight degrees of the said northerly latitude, and in length by all the breadth aforesaid, throughout the main land, from sea to sea, with all the seas, rivers, islands, creeks, inlets, ports, and havens within the degrees, precincts, and limits of the said latitude and longitude, shall be the limits, and bounds, and precincts of the said second colony."

"And to the end that the said territories may forever hereafter be more particularly and certainly known and distinguished, our will and pleasure is that the same shall from henceforth be nominated, termed, and called by the name of NEW ENGLAND in America; and by that name of New England in America, the said circuit, precinct, limit, continent, islands, and places in America aforesaid, we do, by these presents, for us, our heirs, and successors, name, call, erect, found, and establish, and by that name to have continuance forever."

As it is a matter of interest to the people of the present day to know who were the "principal knights and gentlemen and other persons of quality" who were the real projectors and founders of the New England colonies resident in England, some of whom came over to this side and many of whom were represented in the infant settlements by their near relatives and friends, we give below a list of the first patentees and proprietors with their titles as recited in the patent:

"Our right trusty and right well-beloved cousin and counselor, Lodowick, Duke of Lenox, lord steward of our household; George, Lord Marquis Buckingham, our high admiral of England; James, Marquis Hamilton; William, Earl of Pembroke, lord chamberlain of our household; Thomas, Earl of Arundel; and our right trusty and right well-beloved cousin, William, Earl of Bath; and our right trusty and right well-beloved cousin and counselor, Henry, Earl of Southampton; and our right trusty and well-beloved cousins, William, Earl of Salisbury, and Robert, Earl of Warwick; and our right trusty and right well-beloved John, Viscount Haddington; and our right trusty and well-beloved counselor, Edward, Lord Zouch, lord warden of our cinque ports; and our trusty and well-beloved Edmond, Lord Sheffield; Edward, Lord Gorges; and our well-beloved Sir Edward Seymour, Knight and Baronet; Sir Robert Mansel; Sir Edward Zouch, our knight marshal; Sir Dudley Diggs, Sir Thomas Roe, Sir Ferdinando Gorges, Sir Francis Popham, Sir John Brooks, Sir Thomas Gates, Sir Richard Hawkins, Sir Richard Edgecomb, Sir Allen Apsley, Sir Warwick Heale, Sir Richard Catchmay, Sir John Bourghin, Sir Nathaniel Rich, Sir Edward Giles, Sir Giles Momesson, Sir Thomas Worth, Knights; and our well-beloved Matthew Sutcliffe, Dean of Exeter; Robert Heath, Esq., Recorder of our city of London; Henry Bourghin, John Drake, Raleigh Gilbert, George Chadley, Thomas Hamon, and John Argall, Esquires to be . . . the first modern and present council, established at Plymouth in the county of Devon, for the planting, ruling, ordering, and governing of New England in America."

It will be seen that at the very date this patent of New England was granted a little ship—the "Mayflower"—was on the ocean with its precious freight,—the Pilgrim Fathers,—who were destined to be its first permanent settlers.

III.

THE CHARTER OF THE COLONY OF MASSACHUSETTS BAY.

Following closely upon the patent of New England, and being the immediate title of settlers of the Connecticut Valley in Massachusetts, came the colony charter.

The charter of the colony of Massachusetts was granted by King Charles I., in the third year of his reign, on the 4th day of March, 1628.

The charter made and constituted the persons below-named, among whom was William Pynchon, the founder of Springfield, "one body corporate and politick in fact and name, by the name of the Governor and Company of the Massachusetts Bay in New England," viz.: Sir Henry Roswell, Sir John Younge, Sir Richard Saltonstall, Thomas Southcott, John Humfrey, John Endicott, Simon Whetcombe, Isaac Johnson, Samuel Aldersey, John Ven, Matthew Cradock, George Harwood, Increase Nowell, Richard Puey, Richard Billingham, Nathaniel Wright, Samuel Vassall, Theophilus Eaton, Thomas Goffe, Thomas Adams, John Browne, Samuel Browne, Thomas Hutchins, William Vassall, William Pinchion, and George Foxcrofte.

This charter was brought over to New England in the year 1630, by John Winthrop, and the colony founded.

CHAPTER VII.

THE NEW ENGLAND PEOPLE—ORIGIN OF THE ENGLISH PURITANS—THE PILGRIM FATHERS OF NEW ENGLAND—THE PURITAN FATHERS OF NEW ENGLAND.

I.

THE NEW ENGLAND PEOPLE.

THE early settlers of the Valley of the Connecticut in Massachusetts were almost without exception English Puritans. Of a truth almost all the inhabitants of the valley, up to the beginning of the present century, were descendants of English Puritans. "Civilized New England," says John Gorham Palfrey, "is the child of English Puritanism." The English emigration to New England began with the Pilgrim Fathers in the year 1620. It was not until 1630, ten years later, that they came in any considerable numbers. Ten years later still, in 1640, the English emigration to New England almost ceased. During the twenty years of this active movement about twenty thousand English people in all came to New England. These twenty thousand people thenceforth, for over a century and a half, multiplied on their own soil in remarkable seclusion from other communities who were their neighbors in the New World. "Till the time of the Boston Port Bill, eighty-four years ago," says Palfrey, writing in 1858, "Massachusetts and Virginia, the two principal English colonies, had with each other scarcely more relations of acquaintance, business, mutual influence, or common action, than either of them had with Jamaica or Quebec."* Thus isolated and almost free from foreign influences, this remarkable people preserved its identity quite unimpaired. During all this long period of one hundred and fifty years it was making of itself a homogeneous race, and as such was forming a distinct character and working out its own problems in religion and government. It is true that some small settlements were composed of other elements, and there were from time to time small accessions to its numbers from abroad. Thus, in 1651, Cromwell, after the battles of Dunbar and Worcester, exiled some four or five hundred of his Scotch prisoners to Massachusetts Bay, few traces of whom are left. In the year 1685, after Louis XIV. had revoked the Edict of Nantes, about one hundred and fifty families of French Huguenots came to Massachusetts, and in 1719 about one hundred and twenty families of Scotch-Irish came over and settled in Londonderry, N. H., and elsewhere in New England. But these few strangers had no perceptible influence upon the sturdy New England character. In the solitudes of the old primeval wilderness this remarkable people worked out its own high destiny in suffering and in faith. The reader must bear in mind, however, the distinction that is made in New England history between the Pilgrim Fathers, of Plymouth, and the Puritan Fathers, of Massachusetts Bay. Although both are of English Puritan stock, yet they differ in this: the Pilgrim Fathers, who landed at Plymouth Rock in 1620, separated from the Church of England several years before they fled to Holland, from whence they came to America, while the Puritan Fathers, who mostly landed at the Massachusetts Bay, about the year 1630, did not separate from the English Church until after their arrival here. In fact, their first religious services after their arrival were in strict accordance with the Book of Common Prayer, save in such matters of non-conformance as had led to their coming here. With the Pilgrim Fathers no ministers came. Their religious services were conducted by laymen for several years after their arrival.

The ministers who came with the Puritan Fathers were without exception all regularly-ordained clergymen of the Church of England. It is true the most of them had been silenced in the mother-country for non-conformity, yet their full connection with the church had not been lawfully severed.

II.

ORIGIN OF THE PURITANS.

Christianity, it is probable, was first planted in Britain in the beginning of the second century by the early Christian fathers, if it was not even earlier by Saint Paul himself, as some say. It is known to have existed there in the fourth century, and that British bishops during that period attended the general councils of the church on more than one occasion. The Saxons invaded England about the middle of the fifth century, and not only drove out the ancient British people, but nearly exterminated the early British church.

From this early Christian church of Britain, the Protestant Church of England claims descent. The sway of the See of Rome over the Church of England began with the missionary efforts of St. Austin or Augustin in the year 596, when he was sent by Pope Gregory I. to convert the Anglo-Saxons. St. Augustin was made the first archbishop of Canterbury, but the few remaining British bishops refused to come under his rule.

It is claimed by the Church of England that the Protestant Reformation of the sixteenth century was but a revival of the ancient church of Britain freed from the sway of Rome.

Of a truth the Church of England, even from the days of the Saxon Heptarchy, all through the long centuries of Roman rule, was always more or less Protestant in spirit. At the time of the Reformation the Church of England protested against the rule of the Church of Rome. The Puritans protested against the sway of the Church of England in turn, and thus became, as they have aptly been called, the "Protestants of Protestants."

Almost from the conversion of the Saxons in England by St. Augustin, Saxon versions of the Bible were in use among the people, from which they obtained Scriptural knowledge, and in the Anglo-Saxon ritual of the Mass both the gospel and the epistle were read by the clergy from the steps of the altar, not in the Latin but in the Anglo-Saxon tongue.†

In the year 1076 even William the Conqueror came near to a quarrel with the Holy See, by forbidding his bishops to obey its citations to Rome, and ordering spiritual causes to be tried in the county courts.‡ In the reign of Henry I., which began in the year A.D. 1100, the larger portion of the English clergy had wives, with Henry's approval, in doubtful submission to the injunctions of the Holy See, and even in the fifteenth century there were married priests in England.§

In the year 1301 the barons of Edward I., in the dispute about the Scottish crown with the See of Rome, denied the latter's supremacy in unmistakable terms, and Edward's Statute of Mortmain was passed to protect the people against the heavy pecuniary exactions of the monks and priests.

And so we find from the earliest times up to the days of Wycliffe in the fourteenth century a succession of acts showing that no inconsiderable part of the English people were extremely jealous of what they called continental interference in their religious and civil affairs.

JOHN WYCLIFFE.

The father of English Puritanism was John Wycliffe. He was born in Yorkshire, near Richmond, about the year 1324, and died peacefully at the age of sixty years, in December, in the year 1384.

Wycliffe first came into notice while he was still an obscure young student at Oxford, when in the year 1351, King Edward's famous Statute of Provisoes asserted for the English church, in certain matters, independence of the See of Rome.

A tract published by Wycliffe on this occasion, in which he warmly espoused the English cause, not only brought him into notice, but made him famous. Ten years of study and controversy only served to widen his departure from the Orthodox, or Roman standard. His departure from the Orthodox faith was radical. His views, boldly published in England in the middle of the fourteenth century, differ in no important particular from those held upon the same subjects by the Pilgrim and Puritan fathers of New England, three hundred years later, in the beginning of the seventeenth, nor of their descendants now living, nearly three hundred years later still, at the close of the nineteenth, century.

Wycliffe asserted the entire sufficiency of the Bible as a rule of faith. He denied the supremacy of the Pope. He denied the dogma of the real presence in the eucharist, the validity of absolution and indulgences, as well as the merit of penance and monastic vows. He opposed ecclesiastical forms and ceremonies, and the observance of festival days. He protested against auricular confession, prayers to saints, the use of set forms of prayer, and denounced the canonical distinction between priests and bishops.¶

His numerous writings, many of them in the English tongue, were extensively circulated and read with eagerness

† See Palfrey's History of New England, Vol. I., p. 100.

‡ Ibid., p. 101.

§ Palfrey, Vol. I., p. 102. Lyttleton, Life of Henry III., pp. 42, 328. Wilkins, Concilia III., p. 277.

¶ Palfrey's New England, Vol. I., p. 104.

* Preface to Vol. I., History of New England, p. viii.

by all classes of people. There was a decided tendency of opinion in the realm toward change in religious matters, of which movement Wycliffe was the acknowledged leader. Among his supporters were persons no less exalted than the queen and the king's mother, widow of the Black Prince. The House of Commons threw out a bill to suppress his translation of the Bible by a large majority. Chaucer, the father of English literature, was the reformer's friend, and influenced, doubtless, the cultivated intelligence of England by dealing somewhat freely with the Church, the clergy, and the friars in the direction of reform. Yet Wycliffe did not produce all this. The spirit of reform was alive and active in the heart of the English nation. The people heard him gladly. With prophetic tongue he uttered the people's voice.

But the English Reformation, so auspiciously begun, in the days of Wycliffe, under Edward III., was yet destined to slumber for nearly two hundred years, until the great awakening in the religious thought of the first quarter of the sixteenth century, known in history as the Reformation, shook to their centre all the kingdoms of the world.

Under the Lancastrian kings the court took a different direction, in attempting to prop "the unsteady throne of an unlineal house," by calling to its aid the spiritual power of Rome. In the troublous times of the Wars of the Roses, questions of religion were mostly lost to view. It was not till the reign of the second Tudor, Henry VIII., that allegiance to Rome was sundered by act of Parliament, and the English sovereign declared to be the head of the English Church. Yet, under Henry VIII., all that the Church of England gained was this emancipation from the control of the See of Rome. Her doctrines were still mainly unchanged.

THE PROTESTANT CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Church of England, as modified by the Reformation, and mainly as she is constituted to-day, assumed her form and shape in doctrine and observances through the measures instituted in her behalf during the reign of the boy-king, Edward VI., who ascended the throne in the year 1547.

In the year 1540, under his father's reign, the Statute of the Six Articles had condemned to death by burning, and to forfeiture of estate, whosoever should deny the real presence, and to imprisonment and confiscation for the first offense, and to death for the second, such as should "in word or writing speak against the celibacy of the clergy, the communion in one kind, vows of chastity, private masses, or auricular confession."* Under this law, and others no less severe, against the using or keeping of the Bible in Tyndal's translation, then just made, many suffered death at the stake, and many fled the realm. But an entirely new order of things was inaugurated under Edward VI. "The thunder of the Six Articles," says Palfrey, "was permitted to die away. Prisoners for heresy were set at liberty, and fugitives were allowed to return from the Continent. Church images were destroyed. Preaching, which had fallen much into disuse, was revived. The Bible, in English, was placed in every church."† During the young king's first year laws were passed directing the dispensation of both the elements, bread and wine, to the laity in the Lord's Supper, and repealing the statute of the Six Articles.

In April, 1552, uniformity of public worship was provided by requiring all ministers to use the liturgy which had been prepared under Bishop Cranmer, which is substantially that used by the Church of England to-day in her Book of Common Prayer. Incense, candles, and holy water were forbidden, and the high altar exchanged for the communion table.

But the use of ministerial robes and vestments, the rochet, the cape, the surplice, was still enjoined upon the clergy.

THE PURITANS.

It was the requirement last above named—that in regard to the use of vestments by the clergy, as provided for in the ritual of Edward VI.—that was destined soon to dismember the Protestant Church of England; and it was in the young king's reign that this question of clerical costume came forward into prominent importance.

Those who advocated uniformity in the use of sacred vestments claimed that they contributed largely to the seemliness, decency, and dignity of public worship; that unnecessary departures from the practice of the Church of Rome were inexpedient; and that to oppose the will of rulers in so small a matter indicated a factious temper rather than the possession of sound sense. On the other hand, it was alleged that in the popular mind clerical vestments were intimately associated with the "idolatry of Rome," and were part and parcel of the "mischievous machinery of the Mass," and that a "Christian minister owed it to the simplicity and godly sincerity which became his vocation" to abstain from their use.

The party in opposition to the use of the clerical habit soon became known as Puritans, and shortly afterward were called Non-conformists.

In the year 1550, the first overt act occurred in this dispute in the English Protestant Church over the use of vestments by the clergy, which resulted in the coming of the Pilgrim Fathers to Plymouth Rock. In that year (1550) John Hooper was appointed bishop of Gloucester. Belonging to the opposing or Puritan party, he took the resolution to decline the promotion rather than to submit to what he considered the dishonor of clothing himself in the Episcopal robes. The young king was inclined to relent, but Bishops Cranmer and Ridley insisted upon his compliance. He was so obstinate that they put him in jail. At length they persuaded him so far to yield his scruples as to consent to wear the habit of his order at his consecration, and once afterward in preaching at court. After this he put it on no more. His example was followed by a few bishops and numbers of the other clergy.

But the reign of the young king was short, and at its close the Princess Mary succeeded to the throne. During her short reign the old order of things in matters of religion was re-established. In November, 1554, Parliament at a single blow rescinded all the laws respecting religion which had been passed during the last reign. The unholy fires of religious persecution were soon lighted, and over three hundred persons were burned at the stake, among whom were five bishops. Numbers of the dissentients fled to the continent, taking refuge in Frankfort-on-the-Main and other placés.

Upon the death of Queen Mary, Nov. 17, 1558, the Princess Elizabeth, the youngest daughter of Henry VIII. by Ann Boleyn, succeeded to the throne of England. Her long reign began with the restitution of the Protestant order. The laws concerning religion passed in the time of her brother, Edward VI., were re-enacted. This was soon followed by two important acts, the one called the Act of Supremacy, and the other the Act of Uniformity. The first required of all the clergy and official laymen an oath renouncing the authority of any foreign priest or prelate in matters both temporal and spiritual, and recognizing the supremacy of the sovereign of England "in all causes ecclesiastical and civil." The latter act forbade all ministers to conduct public worship otherwise than according to the rubric under the penalty of life-imprisonment for the third offense. But religious persecution did not cease with the death of Queen Mary. During the reign of Elizabeth, numbers of Roman Catholics were punished by imprisonment and forfeiture of estates, and two hundred of them put to death for their religion. On the accession of Queen Elizabeth to the throne, numerous Protestant fugitives to the continent, driven into exile by the rigorous laws of Queen Mary, returned to England. During their absence in different continental cities they had kept up the controversy regarding vestments and other requirements of the rubric of Edward VI., begun during his reign, and on their return this controversy was transferred to England.

* Burnett, History of the Reformation.

† History of New England, Vol. I., p. 111.

The party who followed in the lead of Bishop Hooper, and who were opposed to the use of vestments, had now come to be called Puritans. They not only opposed the use of the clerical habit, but also objected to the use of the sign of the cross in baptism, of the ring in marriage, and of the kneeling posture in the communion.

The queen and Parliament both sided with the advocates of the Prayer-Book, and in 1565 a royal proclamation was issued requiring uniformity in peremptory terms. Upon the issuing of this proclamation of conformity, thirty-seven out of ninety-eight London ministers were summoned for contumacy before the bishops, suspended, and deprived of their livings. This began the long contest in the English Church between the Churchmen and the Puritans, which resulted in the withdrawal of a part of the Puritans to New England in search of that religious liberty which was denied them at home, and in the complete triumph for a while, at least, of the Puritan cause in the mother-country, under Cromwell.

In the year 1583, upon the death of Archbishop Grindal, who was a man of moderate temper and principles, Archbishop Whitgift succeeded to the primacy of England. In the week of his consecration he issued instructions to his bishops to forbid and prevent preaching, catechising, and praying in any private family in the presence of persons not belonging to it, and to silence all preachers and catechists who had not received orders from episcopal hands, or who refused or neglected to read the whole service, or to wear the prescribed clerical habit, or to subscribe to the queen's supremacy, the Thirty-Nine Articles, and the Book of Common Prayer. This was aimed at the Puritan party, and during the first year two hundred and thirty-three ministers of the Church of England, of Puritan proclivities, were suspended in six counties of the province of Canterbury.

By the Act of Supremacy, passed in the first year of Elizabeth's reign, the sovereign had been authorized to appoint a "Court of High Commission," with power "to visit, reform, redress, order, correct, and amend all errors, heresies, schisms, abuses, contempts, offenses, and enormities whatsoever." This was the royal tribunal for the trial of ecclesiastical causes, and Archbishop Whitgift, in the year 1584, was ordered by Elizabeth to organize this court.

The Court of High Commission was formed by the appointment of forty-four commissioners, of whom twelve were bishops, and began at once to try persons accused of violating the Acts of Supremacy and Uniformity.

And so the contest went on from year to year, with varying intensity, between the two parties of the Church of England, through the remaining years of Queen Elizabeth's reign and into the reign of her successor, until a part of the Puritan party, at least, sought refuge from further persecution in the wilds of America.

III.

THE PILGRIM FATHERS.

But years before the appointment of the Court of High Commission a new party in this religious controversy appeared upon the troubled scene, which was destined, in the persons of some of its humble followers, to play a prominent part in the world's history. This was the party of "Separatists," or "Brownists," as they were sometimes called, from the name of their first leader, one congregation of which, in the year 1620, were the Pilgrims of the "Mayflower."

As early as 1567 separate congregations had been formed, and in 1572 the "first-born of all presbyteries" was established at Wandsworth in Surrey.*

Robert Brown was the leader of the new sect which bore his name in 1581. He not only preached against the ceremonies and discipline of the Established Church, but also advocated the democratic doctrine of the independency and the complete jurisdiction of every congregation in its own affairs,—in short, the Congregational system. But Robert Brown soon went back to the Establishment, and his followers, refusing to be called by his name, became known as Separatists or Independents.

In 1592 a congregation of Separatists was gathered at London by Francis Johnson. It was soon after broken up by the authorities, and the pastor, with a portion of his flock, escaped to Amsterdam, in Holland.

About the year 1594 the Church of the Pilgrims first met at Gainsborough and afterward at Scrooby, "to the north of the Trent, near the joining borders of Nottinghamshire, Lincolnshire, and Yorkshire." In 1594, Mr. William Brewster, so well known as the leader of the church at Plymouth, was appointed postmaster at Scrooby, and occupied as tenant the Scrooby manor-house. It was at his house that the first meetings were held, Scrooby was situated near the high-road from York to London, in the vicinity of the Hatfield Chase. It was a favorite resting-place for the Archbishops of York in their journeys to the metropolis, and was often resorted to for the enjoyment of field-sports. Archbishop Savage often resided there in the reign of Henry VII., and it was for some time the abode of Cardinal Wolsey in his disgrace. Yet Scrooby has most honor as the first home of the Church of the Pilgrim Fathers.

But the story of the flight of this church to Holland, and from thence back to England on its way to Plymouth Rock in the "Mayflower," need not be related here.

IV.

THE PURITAN FATHERS.

The reader should bear in mind the distinction between the Pilgrim Fathers and Puritan Fathers. It has been seen above that the Pilgrims of Plymouth who landed in 1620 separated from the Established Church of England, and first held their meetings in the Congregational form at the Scrooby manor-house in 1694; that they went to Holland as Separatists, and came to America as such. On the other hand, the Puritans, who came to Massachusetts Bay in the year 1630, were simply Non-conformists, and did not separate from the English Church until after their arrival here. Connected with the National Church, they submitted to her authority so far as they could, acknowledged her as their "mother" in all matters of doctrinal concern, and only differed from her as to the propriety of some of her observances. Had liberty been allowed them, they would doubtless have remained in England, and in the bosom of the mother-church. It has been seen in the last preceding chapter that the charter of the colony of Massachusetts was granted in the year 1628. In the same year John Endicott came over and settled in Salem. The next spring he was followed by Francis Higginson and his company, and in the year 1630 John Winthrop came over with the charter and founded the colony of Massachusetts Bay. William Pynchon, the founder of Springfield, came over with Winthrop and the charter and settled at Roxbury.

True to the object of their coming, the first care of the Puritan Fathers after landing was to provide for their ministers, as will be seen by the record of the first General Court held in New England, which is as follows, viz.:

THE FIRST COURT of Assistants holden at Charlton, August 23, Ano. Dom. 1630.

"Present—Mr. Jo: Winthrop, Goumr., Mr. Increase Nowell, Mr. Tho: Dudley, Deput. Goumr., Mr. Tho: Sharpe, Sr. Rich: Saltonstall, Kt., Mr. Will: Finchon, Mr. Robte: Ludlowe, Mr. Sim: Bradstreete, Mr. Edward Rossiter.

"INRR., it was pponded howe the ministers should be mayntayned. Mr. Wilson & Mr. Phillips onely pponded.

"It was ordered that houses should be built for them with convenient speede, att the publike charge. Sr. Rich: Saltonstall undertooke to see it done att his planacon for Mr. Phillips and Mr. Goumr., at the other plantacon for Mr. Wilson.

* Barry's Hist. of Mass., Vol. I., p. 46.

"It was poulded what should be their present mayntenance.

"Ordered, that Mr. Phillips should have allowed him 3 hogsheds of meale, 1 hogsh of malte, 4 bushells of Indian corne, 1 bushell of oatmeale, half an hundred of salte fishe; for apparell and other provisions XXL, or els to have XL given him in money p. ann., to make his owne provisions if hee chuse it the rather, the yeare to begin the first of September nexte.

"It, that Mr. Wilson should hereafter XXL p. ann. till his wife come over; his yeare to begin the 10th of July last. All this to be att the common charge, those of Mattapan & Salem only exempted."*

CHAPTER VIII.

THE REMOVAL TO THE CONNECTICUT VALLEY.

IN the preceding chapter some account is given of who and what the early settlers of Massachusetts were, and what occasioned their coming to the New World. In this chapter will be given some account of the early emigration of a part of them to the fertile valley of the Connecticut, and the establishment of the principal towns in the Connecticut Valley in Massachusetts.

The removal of William Pynchon and his few followers in the year 1636 from Roxbury at the bay across the virgin wilderness, one hundred miles to the fertile wild meadows of the Connecticut Valley, was not a separate undertaking, but formed a small part only of an important movement which resulted in not only the planting of Springfield, at the mouth of the Agawam, but also in the founding of the State of Connecticut. At the time of this removal from the bay to the river the people at the bay were in the midst of a serious religious controversy, occasioned by the promulgation of what they called the heretical views of Ann Hutchinson and Roger Williams, and religious considerations may have had something to do with the removal. That this may have been the case more particularly with Mr. Pynchon, he being a man of what were then considered liberal religious views, as the sequel will show, is more than probable. That Mr. Pynchon with the rest had some desire to settle outside the jurisdiction of the Massachusetts colony, and set up a separate government, the facts seem to warrant, for during the first two or three years after their arrival in the valley the settlement of Agawam (now Springfield) was deemed to be a part and parcel of the Connecticut colony, and as such sent delegates to Hartford to meet in General Court.

Mr. Pynchon had been engaged in the fur trade at the bay, and his selection of Agawam, at the mouth of the stream of that name, down which the Indians brought their furs in bark canoes from the great mountain beaver-hunting country of the Mohicans and from the Wo-ro-nooks at Westfield, was doubtless influenced by that consideration as well as others.

It was not until Mr. Pynchon had some serious difficulty with the Connecticut people, and the discovery was made that Springfield really lay within the Massachusetts jurisdiction, that she quite abruptly separated herself from the control of the Hartford colony, and her people renewed their governmental relations with the people at the Bay. And this change of allegiance by the Springfield people, from the Hartford authorities to the Bay, was not made without sharp controversy between the General Courts of the two colonies, and was followed by a bitter feud in regard to import duties, which is treated of in a succeeding chapter of this work.

FIRST VISIT OF THE QUON-EH-TA-CUT SAGAMORES AT THE BAY.

As early as the year 1631, the year after the founding of Boston by Winthrop, and five years before Pynchon and his band founded Springfield, three Indian sachems came to the Bay from the Connecticut River, for the purpose of inviting the English to come and settle in the fertile meadows that border the stream.

In "Winthrop's History of New England," the following graphic account is given of this visit, which seems to have been the first time the attention of the settlers at the Bay was called to the subject of emigrating to the Connecticut River Valley, and doubtless led the way to their coming. Winthrop's account † is this:

"April 4, 1631, Wah-gin-na-cut, a sagamore on the River Quon-ch-ta-cut, which lies west of Nar-a-gan-cet, came to the governour at Boston with John Sagamore and Jack Straw (an Indian who had lived in England, and had served Sir Walter Raleigh, and was now turned Indian again), and divers of their sannops, and brought a letter to the governour from Mr. Endecott, to this effect: that the said Wah-gin-na-cut was very desirous to have some Englishmen to come plant in his country, and offered to find them corn, and give them yearly eighty skins of beaver, and that the country was very fruitful, etc., and wished that there might be two men sent with him to see the country. The governour entertained them at dinner, but would send none with him. He discovered after that the sagamore is a very treacherous man, and at war with the Pe-koath (a far greater sagamore). His country is not above five days' journey from us by land. The governour," continues Winthrop, "entertained them at dinner, but would send none with him."

FIRST WHITE VISITOR FROM THE BAY.

It was not until two years after the visit of the Quon-ch-ta-cut sachem Wah-gin-na-cut at the Bay, that it was returned by the whites. From Winthrop's Journal, under date of Sept. 4, 1633, it appears that John Oldham, then an inhabitant at the Bay, made an overland journey to the Connecticut River Valley, which visit is the first there appears any account of in history made by the New England people.

The account of Oldham's visit to the valley is in the following words:

"1633, 4th September.—About ten days before this time, a bark was set forth to Connecticut and those parts to trade.

"John Oldam, and three with him went overland to Connecticut to trade. The sachem used them kindly and gave them some beaver. They brought off the hemp, which grows there in abundance, and is much better than the English. He accounted it to be about one hundred and sixty miles. He brought some black lead, whereof the Indians told him there was a whole rock. He lodged at Indian towns all the way."‡

THE DUTCH ON THE CONNECTICUT.

The Dutch settlement on the Island of Manhattan, at the mouth of the Hudson River, where now stands the city of New York, has the honor of sending the pioneer white occupants to the valley of the Connecticut.

Henry Hudson, an English navigator, in the employ of the Dutch East India Company, had explored the river which still bears his name as early as the year 1609, but no permanent settlements were made on its banks by the Dutch until five years later. In the year 1615 the Dutch began two settlements on the Hudson,—one on the island of Manhattan, and the other one hundred and forty miles up the river, where now stands the city of Albany.

Soon after these settlements on the Hudson, the Dutch made voyages to the mouth of the Connecticut, which they called the Fresh River, or the Fresh Water River, and drove a profitable trade with the Indians on its banks, claiming the stream and its fertile valley by the right of prior discovery. But the Dutch made no attempt to plant a colony on the Connecticut or to take actual possession of the territory adjoining its banks till the year 1633, about the time of Oldham's visit. During the summer of that year the Dutch sailed up the Connecticut, landing at the point where the city of Hartford now stands, and threw up a rude work, upon upon which they mounted two small cannon. But the Dutch, although the first white occupants of the valley of the Connecticut, were not its first permanent settlers.

* Col. Recs. of Mass., Vol. I., p. 73.

† See Winthrop's History of New England, Vol. I., p. 52.

‡ Winthrop's Hist. of New Eng., Vol. I., p. 178.

THE PLYMOUTH MEN ON THE CONNECTICUT.

The Pilgrim Fathers, from a year or two after their settlement at Plymouth in 1620, doubtless from time to time made voyages of trade and discovery to the Fresh River, so called by the Dutch, but they made no attempt to colonize its banks until the year 1633.

In July of that year, having heard that the Quon-eh-ta-cut River afforded "a fine place both for plantation and trade," the plan was conceived by Winslow and Bradford to form a partnership with certain men at Boston with the view of building a fort and trading-house on its banks, and thus if possible anticipate the Dutch, who, it was said, had projected a similar scheme. The Massachusetts men having formed the opinion that the river was shallow, and that warlike Indians were to be found in great numbers inhabiting its banks, concluded to take no part in the enterprise. The men of Plymouth, not so easily discouraged, fitted out a vessel with the frame of a house and materials for its building, and sailed up the Connecticut in search of a suitable place to plant a colony. This was in October, and the Dutch had already preceded them. At what is now Hartford, where, as above stated, the Dutch had built a fort, they were challenged by the little garrison. After a parley and many threats on both sides the Dutch let them pass on up the stream without molestation. They went up to what is now Windsor, built, fortified, and provisioned their house. A part of the company remained to hold it, and the rest returned to Plymouth. The next summer the Dutch sent up a company of seventy men to dispossess them. But the Dutch wisely concluded not to attack the spirited little English garrison, and returned without accomplishing their object. It was the destiny of the English people and not the Dutch to settle the Connecticut Valley.

THE MASSACHUSETTS PEOPLE ON THE CONNECTICUT.

It has been seen in the last chapter that the people who came over with Winthrop in such numbers to the Massachusetts Bay in the year 1630, and the two or three following years, dispersed themselves into several plantations at and near Boston. Among these plantations were Dorchester, Watertown, Newtown (now Cambridge), and Roxbury. The people of these four towns were destined soon to take an important part in the settlement of the valley of the Connecticut River. Roxbury in particular is of interest to the readers of this history, as from it came Mr. William Pynchon and his little band,—the pioneers of Springfield and of the "Connecticut Valley in Massachusetts."

While William Pynchon was the leader of those from Roxbury, who settled in the Massachusetts part of the valley, those from Newtown and Dorchester, who settled in and founded what is now the State of Connecticut, were led by the ministers Thomas Hooker and Samuel Stone, and their parishioner, John Haynes, of Newtown, and Roger Ludlow, the principal lay-citizen of Dorchester.

The ministers Hooker and Stone had both been educated at that institution of Puritan proclivities—the Alma Mater of most of the early New England clergy—Emmanuel College, Cambridge, England. Mr. Stone before coming over had been a lecturer in Northamptonshire, and Mr. Hooker had been in the same employment at Chelmsford, in Essex, near the English home of Pynchon. Doubtless the friendship that must have existed between Hooker and Pynchon in their common English home led to their association in this new project. John Haynes was governor of Massachusetts Bay in 1635, of Connecticut in 1639 and other years, and Roger Ludlow was deputy-governor of Massachusetts in 1634, and deputy-governor of Connecticut in 1639 and other years.

It was at the first General Court, held at Boston in the year 1634, May 14, that the Newtown people, the first to move in the matter, presented their petition for leave "to look out either for enlargement or removal." This general proposition, doubtless not fully understood, was at once granted. At the next meeting of the General Court, held on the 4th of September following, the purpose was avowed to remove to Connecticut. This proposition to remove to Connecticut met with much opposition and to many days' warm debate in the General Court.

"The principal reasons for their removal," says Winthrop, "were, 1st. Their want of accommodation for their cattle, so as they were not able to maintain their ministers, nor could receive any more friends to help them: and here it was alleged by Mr. Hooker as a fundamental error that towns were set so near each to other. 2d. The fruitfulness and commodiousness of Connecticut, and the danger of having it possessed by others, Dutch or English. 3d. The strong bent of their spirits to remove thither.*"

"Against these," continued Mr. Winthrop, "it was said, 1st. That in point of conscience they ought not to depart from us, being knit to us in one body, and bound by oath to seek the welfare of this commonwealth. 2d. That in point of state and civil policy we ought not to give them leave to depart." In support of this last objection the following reasons were urged: "(1.) Being we were now weak and in danger to be assailed. (2.) The departure of Mr. Hooker would not only draw many from us, but also divert other friends who would come to us. (3.) We should expose them to evident peril both from the Dutch [who made claim to the same river and had already built a fort there] and from the Indians, and also from our own State at home, who would not indure they should sit down without a patent in any place which our king lays claim to."

The remaining objections urged were as follows, viz.: "3d. They might be accommodated at home by some enlargement which other towns offered. 4th. They might remove to Merrimack, or other place within our patent. 5th. The removal of a candlestick† is a great judgment."

When the matter came to be voted upon, the House of Deputies stood fifteen to ten in favor of granting the privilege of removal. Of the magistrates, all but Governor Dudley and two assistants voted in the negative. So the two houses disagreed, and leave was refused. But the next year—1635—John Haynes was made governor, the magistrates ceased to press their objections, and on the 6th of May, 1635, they consented to vote as follows:

"There is liberty granted to the inhabitants of Watertown to remove themselves to any place they shall think meet to make choice of, provided they still continue under this government."‡

In the mean time, without waiting for the decision of the General Court, during the summer of 1635 a party from Dorchester went to what is now Windsor, to the spot where the Plymouth colony had planted two years before, and another party from Watertown established themselves at the place now Weathersfield. It was also in the year 1635, as late as October, that another party of sixty persons—men, women, and children—set out overland, driving their cattle before them, to the infant settlements on the Connecticut. The winter set in early, and they had little time to prepare for it. In six weeks from the date of their departure twelve of the number struggled back to Boston, suffering untold hardships on the way.

* Winthrop's Hist. of New England, Vol. I., p. 140.

† This refers to the figure in Revelations i. 11-13, etc.

‡ Mass. Col. Rec., Vol. I., p. 146.

William Pynchon

It was in the same year—1635—that John Cable and his assistant, John Woodcock, built the first rude dwelling in the "House Meadow," at Agawam, which led the way to the planting of Springfield.

But the year 1636 witnessed the great emigration of the founders of the settlements in the valley of the Connecticut.

Early in that year William Pynchon, and six other heads of families from Roxbury, removed to Agawam, now Springfield; and Mr. Hooker with his whole flock, consisting of about one hundred persons, followed in June to near the little Dutch fort, at what is now Hartford. Later in the summer the church of Dorechester, under Mr. Warham, settled at Windsor; and the church at Watertown, under a new pastor, Mr. Henry Smith, found their way to the valley and settled Weathersfield.

The reader must bear in mind, however, that in the month of October, of the year before this important removal, John Winthrop the younger came the second time to New England, bearing a commission from Lord Say and Sele, Lord Broke, and others, proprietors of the patent, as governor of Connecticut for one year, and laid the foundation of Saybrook, at the mouth of the river.

The General Court at Boston of course knew this, and were also aware of the fact that the lower towns on the river were not within the jurisdiction of the Massachusetts, but as a matter of necessity a commission was granted to the emigrants for their government the first year, which was as follows, viz. :

"At the General Court, holden at Newe-Towne, March 3d, 1635-6.

"A COMMISSION granted to severall persons to governe the People att Connecticutt for the space of a yeare nowe nexte coming, an exemplification whereof ensueth :

"WHEREAS, upon some reason and grounds, there are to remove from this or commonwealth and body of the Mattachusetts in America dyvs of or loving friends, neighb^{rs}, freemen and members of Newe Towne, Dorchester, Watertown, and other places, whoe are resolved to transplant themselves and their estates unto the Ryver of Connecticutt, there to reside and inhabit, and to that end dyvs are there already, and dyvs others shortly to goe, wee, in this present Court assembled, on the behalfe of or said memb^{rs}, and John Winthrop, Junr, Esqr, Govur, appointed by certaine noble personages and men of qualittie interested in the said ryvr, who are yet in England, on their behalfe, have had a serious consideration there(ou), and thinke it meete that where there are a people to sit down and cohabite, there will followe, upon occasion, some cause of difference, as also dyvers misdeameours, weh will require a speedy redresse; and in regard of the distance of place, this State and government cannot take notice of the same as to apply timely remedy, or to dispencc equall justice to them and their affaires, as may be desired; and in regard the said noble personages and men of qualittie have something engaged themselves and their estates in the planting of the said ryver, and by vertue of a pattent, doe require jurisdiction of the said place and people, and neither the mindes of the said personages (they being writ unto) are as yet knowne, nor any manner of gov^{rn}t is yet agreed on, and there being a necessitie, as aforesaid, that some present gov^{rn}t may be observed, wee therefore thinke meete and see order, that Roger Ludlow, Esqr, William Pinchon, Esqr, John Steele, William Swaine, Henry Smythe, William Phelpes, William Westwood, and Andrew Ward, or the greater parte of them, shall have full power and authoritee to hear and determine in a judicial way, by witeesses upon oathe examine, w^{ch} in the said plantation, all those differences weh may arise betweene partie and partie, as also, upon misdeameour, to inflict corporall punishm^{ts} or imprisonment, to fine and levy the same if occasion see require, to make and decree such orders, for the present, that may be for the peacefull and quiett ordering the affaires of the said plantation, both in trading, planting, building, lotts, militarie discipline, defensive warr (if need see require), as shall best conduce to the publike good of the same, and that the said Roger Ludlow, Wm. Pinchon, John Steele, Wm. Swaine, Henry Smythe, Wm. Phelpes, Wm. Westwood, Andrew Ward, or the greater parte of them, shall have power, under the great^{ts} pr^{ts} of their hands, att a day or dayes by them appointed, upon convenient notice, to convey the said inhabitants of the said townes to any convenient place that theye shall thinke meete, in a legal and open manner, by way of Court, to proceed in executing the power and authoritee aforesaid, and in case of present nessesitie, two of them joyneing together, to inflict corporall punishment upon any offender if they see good and warrantable groundes see to doe; provided, alwayes, that this commission shall not extende any longer time than one whole yeare from the date thereof, and in the meane time it shall be lawfull for this Court to recall the said presents if they see cause, and if see be there may be a mutual and settled gov^{rn}t condescended unto by and with the good likeing and consent of the saide noble personages, or their agent, the inhabitants, and this comonwealth; provided, also, that this may not be any prejudice to the interst of those noble personages in the s^d ryver and confines thereof within their severall tymitts."

The reader will see that this instrument constituted a new General Court similar to that at Boston, and the sequel shows that the colony of Connecticut was organized under it, and General Court held by virtue of its provisions the first year, and that Mr. Pynchon, of Agawam, now Springfield, attended its sittings.

CHAPTER IX.

THE FOUNDING OF THE MOTHER TOWNS—THE PLANTING OF SPRINGFIELD IN 1636—WILLIAM PYNCHON AND HIS BOOKS—THE PLANTING OF WESTFIELD IN 1640—NORTHAMPTON IN 1654.

I.

THE PLANTING OF SPINGFIELD.

SPRINGFIELD, the garden town of the old Bay State, is at once the mother settlement and the queen city of the Valley of the Connecticut in Massachusetts. Its name was bestowed upon it by William Pynchon, its illustrious founder, in honor of his country-seat of that name, near Chelmsford, in Essex County, England. As the reader has seen in the preceding chapter, Springfield was settled in the year 1636, in connection with the movement to the valley of the Connecticut River of that year, which resulted in the founding of the State of Connecticut.

In this chapter it will only be attempted to give some account of the first planting of the mother towns in the valley, leaving the main incidents of the settlement and development to the several town histories, which will be found farther on in these pages.

THE JOURNEY THROUGH THE WILDERNESS.

As has also been seen in the last chapter, the inhabitants of the infant towns at the Bay, who had, for want of more room, determined to remove to the valley of the Connecticut, experienced considerable difficulty in obtaining the consent of the General Court. At length, on the 6th day of May, 1635, that consent was reluctantly given to the people of several towns, and among others to Roxbury, in the following words, viz. :

"The inhabitants of Rocksbury hath liberty granted them to remove themselves to any place they shall think meet, not to prejudice another plantation, provided they continue still under this government."

To carry out his undertaking, and to provide some shelter for the families of the new wilderness home, in the summer of 1635, Mr. Pynchon sent on two men to build a home at Agawam, the Indian name of the new settlement. These two men were named John Cable and John Woodcock. They built a small house on the Agawam meadow, on the west side of the Connecticut River, and south side of the Agawam River, about one-half mile above its mouth. This meadow has since borne the name of the "House Meadow." It now lies in the town of Agawam, and is beautifully situated in what was once a bend of the stream, afterward cut off by a change in its bed. Its surface was mostly some ten feet higher than the adjoining meadows, which were subject to overflow. The Indians, however, told them that it was likewise subject to overflow in extreme high water, and therefore, as a place of settlement, it was abandoned. The house, however, probably stood there for a year or more.

It was not until the spring of the next year, 1636, that everything was in readiness for the departure of the emigrants. But before we follow them to their new homes, along the old Indian trail leading west from Boston, afterwards known to the people of Springfield as the "Bay Path," and since celebrated in story and song, let us first take a survey of the situation in the early spring of that year, and attempt to form some notion of the magnitude and danger of their undertaking. From ocean to ocean, from sea to sea, from the frozen Northland to the flowing Gulf-Land, the whole vast continent was one unbroken solitude, covered with limitless forests filled with savage beasts, and still more savage men, and within it all were only a few feeble white settlements at vast distances from each other. On the north Champlain was nursing his little colony of Quebec. On the west there was a small fur-trading Dutch colony at Fort Orange, now Albany, and another at Manhattan, now New York. Farther to the south, in small numbers, were the English on the James, and the Spaniards in Florida; but it was two years before the Swedes landed on the banks of the Delaware. But neither of these settlements, if it would, could afford them any aid or sympathy. But this was not the worst of it. As they journeyed through the State from east to west, the Bay Path on which they trod was flanked on their left with no less than four powerful Indian nations,—the Wampanoags, the Narragansetts, the Pequots, and the Mohicans, either of which could send a thousand warriors into the field. Along their route lay the villages of the Nipmucks, and in the valley of the river which was to be their future home dwelt four or five tribes more. Would the time ever come when all these tribes throughout New England should rise and rend them? Alas! too soon.

The very next year after their arrival in the valley the terrible struggle with the Pequots occurred. In this war the inhabitants of Springfield took no active part, yet towards it they contributed their full share of the expenses.*

Of the journey of William Pynchon and his little band of settlers in the early spring of 1636 over the old Indian trail which led from the Bay to Agawam on the Connecticut, and often called in the early records the "Bay Path," we have no authentic account. It must be left to the imagination, therefore, to picture the incidents of the journey.

Of their leave-takings and tearful farewells from old and long-tried friends; their daily march through the almost pathless forest for weeks together; their arrival at their new home in the old wilderness, welcomed only by its savage occupants; of their first ravishing view of the fertile meadows of the beautiful river, the largest in New England, there is no recorded word.

Their household goods were sent around by water, as will be seen by an extract from a letter written by Governor Winthrop to his son John at the time,† in the "Blessing of the Bay:"

"Son,—Blessed be the Lord who hath preserved and prospered you hitherto.

"I received your letters by the 'Blessing,' which arrived here the 14th of this present, and is to return to you with Mr. Pynchon's goods so soon as she can be laden.

* * * * *

"I think the bark goeth away in the morning. Therefore I here end with salutations to all our friends with you.

"This 26th of the 2 Mo. (April), 1636.

"To my very loving son, Mr. Winthrop, Jun., Gov. of the new Plantation upon Connecticut."

Upon their arrival at the site chosen by Pynchon, finding the "House Meadow" unsuitable for their settlement, they pitched upon the spot which lies over against Agawam, on the east bank of the Connecticut, now the site of the city of Springfield.

Not far from the present line of the Boston and Albany Railroad a small stream of pure water ran down from the hills across the marshy ground, and striking the higher level of the sandy plain which borders the river's bank, separated into two parts, one running south and the other north, each emptying into the river a mile or more from the point of separation.

The part of this stream which turned toward the south they called the Town Brook. It ran along the easterly side of what is now Main Street, and emptied into Mill River just above the point where that stream enters the Connecticut.

Along this stream of pure water running southerly they laid out their first street, now known as Main Street, and between this street and the river extended the home lots of the settlers, of different widths.

On these home lots bordering the Main Street the settlers built their first rude log cabins opposite the town brook, and began their life in the wilderness.

To each settler a portion of the "Hasseky Marish," which lay between the town brook and the hill to the eastward, was allotted, as well as parts of the meadow land and corn-planting ground lying on the opposite side of the river in Agawam and Quana.

The further interesting incidents of their history, with copies of the compact they entered into for the government of their plantation, and the Indian deed which they took, will be found farther on in these pages, in the history of the town and city of Springfield, to which the reader is referred.

II.

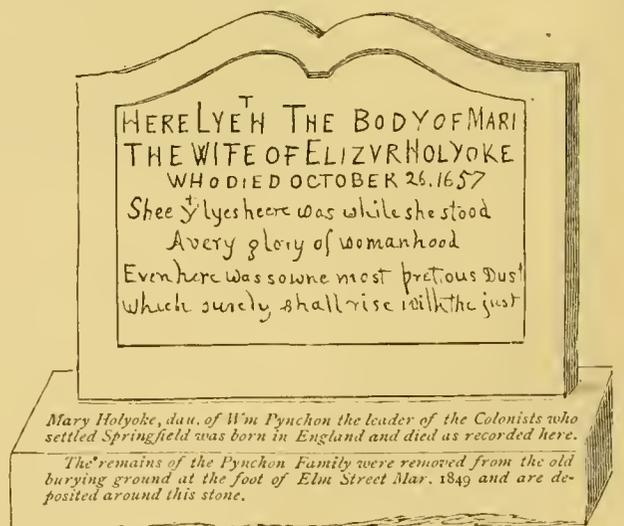

WILLIAM PYNCHON.

William Pynchon, the founder of Springfield and the pioneer settler of the Connecticut Valley in Massachusetts, was no common man.

He was possessed of a considerable estate in England, and on its inception became interested in the colony of Massachusetts Bay. He was one of the assistants named in the charter, and came over with Winthrop when that instrument was brought from England to the Massachusetts Bay in the year 1630. He was one of the founders of Roxbury, near Boston, and remained there until his removal to the Connecticut Valley. His wife died soon after his arrival, leaving an only son and daughter, John and Mary, who accompanied him to the Connecticut River.

JOHN PYNCHON remained at Springfield, and became distinguished in history in after-years as the "Worshipful John Pynchon." John Pynchon, on the 30th day of October, 1645, married Amy, daughter of George Wyllis.‡

MARY PYNCHON, on the 20th day of November, 1640, was married to Elizur Holyoke, another name distinguished in the early annals of Springfield. A simple, upright slab of the Old Red Sandstone which underlies the valley of her home in the cemetery at Springfield tells the story of her death and good qualities in touching language, a copy of which is herewith given:

In the year 1638, two years after the planting of Springfield, William Pynchon became involved in difficulties with the Connecticut people at Hartford, under whose jurisdiction he had till then remained, on account of which, and also on account of the fact then discovered that Agawam, now Springfield, lay within the boundaries of the Massachusetts jurisdiction, he seceded from Connecticut, and became subject to the authorities at the Bay.

* See Trumbull's Hist. of Conn.

† Winthrop's Hist. of N. E., Vol. I, p. 389.

‡ Hartford records give this date incorrectly as the 6th of November, 1646. See Mass. Hist. Coll., 4th series, Vol. VI., p. 375.

The controversy which arose on account of the separation is set forth somewhat at length in a succeeding chapter. In the mean time we must follow the fortunes of Wm. Pynchon until he leave the colony.

In the year 1637, being the autumn after the first arrival of the colonists at Agawam, came the Rev. George Moxon, the first minister at Springfield. Mr. Moxon was educated at Sidney College, Cambridge, England, where he took the degree of A. B. in 1623. He came to Massachusetts in the year 1637, and first settled at Dorchester. He was made a freeman Sept. 7, 1637, and that very autumn followed his old friend to Agawam, on the Connecticut River.

The following records, transcribed from the early town books of Springfield, throw some light upon Mr. Moxon's coming, and the early establishment of religious services at the infant colony at Agawam :

I.

March 20, 1637.—It is ordered that in consideration of certayn charges which the present inhabitants have been at for Mr. Moxon's house and fencing his lott, such as shall for future tyme come to inhabeite in ye place shall bear a share in the like charges in propotion with ourselves.

II.

January 16, 1638.—It is ordered that the three rod of grownd y^e lyes betwixt John Woodcock's parcell and Goodman Gregory's lott, shall be appropriated, two rod of it to Goodman Gregory and one rod of it to Rich^d Everitt, reserving 40 rods for a place for a meeting-house, which is to be allowed out of Goodman Gregory's lott.

III.

The 13th of January, 1638.—A voluntary vote agreed upon the day above said for ye raising of forty pounds toward ye building of a house for Mr. Moxon.

John Searle.....	00	01	00	00
Thomas Horton.....
Thomas Mirack.....	00	01	00	00
John Leonard.....	00	12	00	00
Robert Ashley.....	00	01	00	00
John Woodcock.....	00	00	12	00
Richard Everitt.....	00	01	10	00
John Alline.....	00	01	00	00
John Bart.....	00	00	10	00
Henry South.....	00	05	00	00
Jehu Burr.....	00	07	00	00
Mr. William Pynchon.....	00	21	00	00
John Cable.....	00	01	12	00
	00	41	04	00

IV.

13th January, 1638.—For Mr. Moxon's maintenance till next Michaelmas.

	£.	s.	d.
Mr. William Pynchon.....	24	06	08
Jehue Burr.....	08	03	04
Henry Smith.....	05	10	00
John Cable.....	02	00	00
	40	00	00
John Searle.....	01	00	00
Rich. Everitt.....	01	00	00
John Alline.....	01	00	00
Thos. Horton.....	01	00	00
John Woodcock.....	01	00	00
Robt. Ashley.....	00	16	00
John Leonard.....	00	10	00
Thos. Mirack.....	01	05	00
	07	11	00

In 1653, Mr. Moxon returned to England with Mr. Pynchon, and died there Sept. 15, 1687.

MR. PYNCHON'S BOOKS.

In the year 1650, Mr. Pynchon published a book in England upon a controverted religious topic, which shortly after caused his removal from the colony. The title of this book was,

"THE MERITORIOUS PRICE OF OUR REDEMPTION, JUSTIFICATION, ETC., CLEERING IT FROM SOME COMMON ERRORS, AND PROVING,—

"Part I.—1. That Christ did not suffer for us those unutterable torments of God's wrath, that commonly are called Hell-torments, to redeem our soules from them. 2. That Christ did not bear our sins by God's imputation, and therefore he did not bear the curse of the Law for them.

"Part II.—3. That Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the Law (not by suffering the said curse for us, but) by a satisfactory price of atonement, viz., by praying or performing unto his Father that invaluable precious thing of which his Mediatorial sacrifice of atonement was the master-piece. 4. A sinner's righteousness or justification is explained, and cleared from some common errors.

"By William Pynchon, Gentleman, in New England.

"The Mediator saith thus to his father in Psal. 40: 8-10: 'I delight to do thy will, O my God; Yea, thy Law is within my heart;' viz., I delight to do thy will or Law as a Mediator.

"I have not hid thy righteousness within my heart; I have declared thy faithfulness and thy salvation;' namely: I have not hid thy righteousness or thy way of making sinners righteous, but have declared it by the performance of my Mediatorial sacrifice of atonement, as the procuring cause of thy atonement, to the Great Congregation for their everlasting righteousness.

"London: Printed by T. M., for George Whittington and James Moxon, and are to be sold at the blue Anchor in Cornhill, near the Royal Exchange, 1650. 158 pages."

The doctrines upon the Atonement advocated by Mr. Pynchon in this book were repugnant to the gloomy dogmas of the New England theologians of the time, and were considered to be heretical and dangerous.

The matter was promptly brought before the General Court at Boston, and action taken thereon, of which the following is a record :

"October 19, 1650.

"This Court having had the sighte of a booke lately printed under the name of William Pinchon, in New England, gent., and judginge it meete, doe therefore order, first, that a protest be drawne fully and clearly to satisfy all men that this Court is so farre from approvinge the same as that they doe utterly dislike it and detest it as erroneous and dangerous.

"2ndly, That it be sufficiently answered by one of the reverend elders.

"3dly, That the said William Pinchon be summoned before the next Generall Court, to answer for the same.

"4thly, That the said booke now broughte over be burnt by the executioner (or such other as shall be appointed thereto, provided that the party appointed be willinge), and that in the market-place in Boston on the morrow immediately after the Lecture. Per Curia.

"The declaration and protestation of the Generall Court of the Massachusetts in New England.

"The Generall Court, now sittinge at Boston, in New England, this sixteenth of October, 1650. There was broughte to o^r hands a booke written as was therein subscribed, by William Pinchon, Gent., in New England, entitled, 'The Meritorious Price of o^r Redemption, Justification, etc., cleeringe it from common errors,' etc., which booke, brought over hither by a shippe a few days since, and containing many errors and heresies generally condemned by all orthodox writers that we have met with, wee have judged it meete and necessary for vindication of the truth, so far as in us lyes, as also, to keepe and preserve the people here committed to our care and trust in the true knowledge and fayth of our Lord Jesus Christ, and of our owne redemption by him, as likewise for the clearinge of ourselves to our Christian brethren and others in England (where this booke was printed and is dispersed), hereby to proteste our innocency as being neither parties nor privy to the writings, composing, and printinge, nor divulginge thereof; but that, on the contrary, we detest and abhorre many of the opinions and assertions therein as false, eronyous, and hereticall; yea and whatsoever is contayned in the said booke, which are contrary to the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament, and the generall received doctrine of the orthodox churches extant since the time of the last and best reformation, and for proffe and evidence of our sincere and playne meaninge therein, we doe hereby condemne the said booke to be burned in the market-place, at Boston, by the common executioner, and doe purpose with all convenient speede to convent the said William Pinchon before authority, to find out whether the said William Pinchon will owne the said booke as his or not; which if he doth, we purpose (God willinge) to procede with him accordinge to his demerits, unless he retract the same, and give full satisfaction bothe here and by some seconde writinge, to be printed and dispersed in England; all of which we thought needfull, for the reasons above aleged, to make knowne by this shorte protestation and declaration. Also we further propose, with what convenient speede we may, to appoint some fitt person to make a particular answer to all materiall and controversyall passages in the said booke, and to publish the same in print, that so the errors and falsities therein may be fully discovered, the truth cleared, and the minds of those that love and seeke after truth confirmed therein. Per Curia.

"It is agreed upon by the whole Court that Mr. Norton, one of the reverend elders of Ipswich, should be intreated to answer Mr. Pinchon's booke with all convenient speede.

"It's ordered, that the foregoing declaration concerninge the booke subscribed by the name of William Pinchon in New England, gent., should be signed by the secretary and sent into England to be printed there. Per Curia.

"It is ordered that Mr. William Pinchon shall be summoned to appeare before the next Generall Court of Election, on the first day of their sittinge, to give his answer for the booke printed and published under the name of William Pinchon, in New England, gent., entitled 'The Meritorious price of o^r Redemption, Justification,' etc., and not to depart without leave from the Court. Per Curia."*

In accordance with this order, the Rev. Mr. Norton was employed by the court to confer with Mr. Pynchon upon the subject, and prepare an answer to his book.

At a General Court held in Boston, on the 7th of May, 1651,

* Mass. Col. Records, Vol. III., page 216.

Mr. Pynchon presented the following recantation, a copy of which we give from the records :

"ACCORDING to the court's advise I have conferred with the Revs. Mr. Cotton, Mr. Norrice, and Mr. Norton, about some points of the greatest consequence in my book, and I hope I have so explained my meaning to them as to take off the worst construction; and it hath pleased God to let me see that I have not spoken in my book so fully of the price and merit of Christ's sufferings as I should have done, for in my book I call them but trials of his obedience, yet intending thereby to amplify and exalt the mediatorial obedience of Christ, as the only meritorious price of man's redemption; but now at present I am much inclined to think that his sufferings were appointed by God for a further end, namely, as the due punishment of our sins by way of satisfaction to divine justice for man's redemption.*

"Your humble servant, in all dutiful respect,
"WILLIAM PYNCHON."

On the 23d of October, 1650, Roger Williams, writing to John Winthrop, Jr., among other things speaks of this book as follows :

"He tells me of a booke lately come over, in Mr. Pynchon's name, wherein is some derogation to the blood of Christ. The booke was therefore burnt in the market-place at Boston, and Mr. Pynchon to be cited to the court.

"If it is in hand, I may hope to see it. However, the Most High and only Wise will by this case discover what liberty conscience hath in this land."†

Mr. Pynchon gave bail for his further appearance at court, and the matter was further continued until the next meeting.

In the mean time, before the day of hearing came on, Mr. Pynchon had left his adopted country, a voluntary exile, never to return.

In the year 1653, and after Mr. Pynchon's arrival in England, Mr. Norton's answer was published in London. It was entitled "A DISCUSSION OF THAT GREAT POINT IN DIVINITY, THE SUFFERINGS OF CHRIST," etc.

Mr. Pynchon published a rejoinder to this book, of which the following is the title in full :

"THE MERITORIOUS PRICE OF MAN'S REDEMPTION ;

"OR,

"CHRIST'S SATISFACTION DISCUSSED AND EXPLAINED.

"1. BY SHEWING how the sufferings and the sacrifice of Christ did satisfie God's Justice, pacifie his Wrath, and procure his Reconciliation for Man's Redemption from Satan's Head plot.

"2. By vindicating the sufferings and the sacrifice of Christ from that most dangerous, Scriptureless Tenent, that is held forth by Mr. Norton, of New England, in his Book of Christ's suffering, affirming that he suffered the Essential Torments of Hell, and the second death, from God's immediate vindictive wrath.

"3. By showing that the Righteousness of God (so called in Rom. 3: 21, 22, 26; in Rom. 10: 3; in Cor. 5: 21; and in Phil. 3: 9) is to be understood of God the Father's performance of his covenant with Christ; namely, that upon Christ's performance of his Covenant (by combating with Satan, and at last by making his death a sacrifice) he would be reconciled to believing sinners, and not impute their sins to them. And therefore : 1. This Righteousness of God must needs be the formal cause of a sinner's justification. And 2. It must needs be a distinct sort of Righteousness from the Righteousness of Christ, contrary to Mr. Norton's Tenent. This is evidenced in Chap. 14, and elsewhere.

"6. By explaining God's Declaration of the Comitate between the Devil and the seed of the Woman in Gen. 3: 15, from whence (as from the foundation principle) this present reply doth explain all the after-prophecies of Christ's Sufferings.

"7. By clearing several other Scriptures of the greatest note in these Controversies from Mr. Norton's corrupt Expositions, and by expounding them in their right sense; Both according to the Context, and according to sundry eminent Orthodox Writers.‡

"BY WILLIAM PYNCHON, ESQ., LATE OF NEW ENGLAND. 1655."

Mr. Pynchon followed up the discussion in a book printed at London in 1662, called "The Covenant of Nature made with Adam Described, etc., and cleared from sundry great mistakes." In this last-named volume, the address to the reader is dated "From my Study, Wraybury, Feb. 10, 1661."

* Mass. Col. Rec., Vol. III., p. 229.

† Mass. Hist. Coll., 4th Series, Vol. VI., p. 285.

‡ The author is indebted to the kindness of the Librarian of Harvard University for the privilege of examining this rare volume.

Mr. Pynchon died at Wraybury on the Thames, in Buckinghamshire, some time during the month of October, 1662, aged seventy-two years.

OTHER BOOKS OF MR. PYNCHON.

Mr. Pynchon published other works than those above referred to, among which is one entitled

"THE TIME WHEN THE FIRST SABBATH WAS ORDAINED.

"1. Negatively. Not in the times of Adam's innocency, as many say it was.

"2. Affirmatively. It was ordained after the time of Adam's fall and re-creation.

* * * * *

"And herein it follows :

"1st. That as the Sabbath was ordained to be a typical sign, so it must be abolished as soon as Christ had performed his said propitiatory sacrifice.

"2d. As it was ordained to be the sanctified time for the exercise of the said blessed ordinance, so the next day of the week into which it was changed must continue without intermission until the end of the world.

"By William Pynchon, Esq., London. Printed by R. L., and are to be sold by T. N., at the three Lyons in Cornhill, near the Royal Exchange. 1654."

In this work Mr. Pynchon's argument sounds strange enough to our modern ears, and to give the reader some idea of the methods of the speculative theology of that day, a statement of some of his propositions is given, and a single quotation from the last-named work is indulged in.

Mr. Pynchon argues that Adam and Eve fell from Paradise on the first day of their creation, which was the sixth of the creation as mentioned in Genesis.

That God made Adam out of the dust of the earth, and commanded the beasts of the field as well as the angels in heaven to become man's ministering servants. The beasts were brought before Adam, and, as no helper was found among them meet for him, Eve was formed, and the pair was placed in Paradise; that a part of the angels obeyed and ministered unto Adam and Eve, but that a large number of the angels, seeing that Adam was but formed of dust, disobeyed and refused to serve them. Upon this, the disobedient angels were cast out of heaven, and, uniting together, became Satan's head. Hearing the covenant between God and Adam as to the tree of knowledge of good and evil and the tree of life, the fallen angels resolved to accomplish the fall of man also. So, in the first few hours of man's innocency, Satan's head appeared in the serpent as an angel of light and tempted the woman Eve. We now quote at this point of the argument what Mr. Pynchon says: "Now, God, being a cunning and complete Workman, would not be outbidden by Satan's brags, and therefore he gave Satan leave to do his worst (as he did afterwards give him leave to do his worst to Christ); for he knew that if his workmanship should fail upon the trial, he could tell how to mend it, and how to make it better able to endure the trial for the time to come."

On page 35 is a fac-simile of one of the pages of Mr. Pynchon's Book of Records, kept at Springfield while acting as a magistrate in his infant settlement. It is interesting, not only as showing Mr. Pynchon's handwriting, but as being the first page of the records of his court. The first action recorded was between Cable and Woodcock about the building of the historic house on the "House Meadow," or Agawam, in the summer of 1635. In the second action recorded it will be seen that Mr. Pynchon was not only judge of the court, but the plaintiff in the suit in which Henry Smith, his son-in-law, was foreman of the jury.

III.

THE PLANTING OF WESTFIELD.

Although Northampton was the first permanent settlement made after Springfield in the Connecticut Valley in Massachusetts, yet the first attempt at settlement was made, and the first buildings outside of Springfield were put up, at Woo-ro-noak, now Westfield.

This settlement at Woronoak was begun by Connecticut people as early as the year 1640, they supposing that the place lay within their jurisdiction.

In that year Governor Hopkins erected a trading-house at what is now Westfield, and had considerable interest in the plantation.* About this time Agawam, now Springfield, was leaving the jurisdiction of Connecticut for that of Massachusetts.

In the dispute which then arose regarding the boundary line, Wo-ro-noak was claimed by both jurisdictions. The matter was taken to the General Courts of the respective colonies; and at a General Court, held in Boston on the 4th of March, 1641, the following letter concerning Wo-ro-noak was addressed by the General Court at Boston to the General Court at Hartford, which will throw some light on the subject:

"From the General Court at Boston, 2d of the 4th month, 1641.

"SR,—It is grievous to us to meete wth any occasion that might cause difference to arise betweene yr people and us, standing in so near relation of friendship, neighborhood, and Christianity, especially; therefore or study is (when any such arise) to labor the removinge of them upon the first appearance. Now so it is, that wee have been certified that you have given leave to some of yours, to set up a trading-house at Waronoch, which is known to bee wthin or patents lying as much or more to the north than Springfield. Wee heare also, that you have granted to Mr. Robt. Saltonstall a great quantity of land, not far beneath Springfield, which wee conceive also to belong to us. Wee desire you to consider of it, as that which wee apprehend to bee an injury to us, and do us such right in redresse hearof as you would expect for us in a like case. Wee suppose wee shall not need to use other Arguments; wee know to whome wee wright. Wee have thought meete upon these occasions to intimate further unto you that wee intend (by God's help) to know the certainty of or limits, to the end that wee may neither intrench upon the right of any of or neighbors, nor suffer ourselves and or posterity to bee deprived of what rightly belongeth unto us, which wee hope will bee wthout offense to any; and upon this wee may have some ground of proceeding in or further treaty wth you about such things as may concerne the welfare of us all. These things wee leave to your consideration, and shall expect your answer.

"In the mean time wee rest."

The matter was finally referred to the Commissioners of the United Colonies, and on the 27th day of October, 1648, an order entered by the Commissioners awarding Wo-ro-noak to the jurisdiction of Massachusetts, and the Connecticut people seem to have abandoned their settlements, and Wo-ro-noak became a part of the town of Springfield.

In 1662 another movement was made to settle Westfield by certain gentlemen who appear to have belonged in Windsor and Dorchester. They petitioned the General Court for, and received, a tract of land six miles square, conditioned that in case the petitioners should settle themselves, and a minister within three years, "the order for Wo-ro-noak henceforth to lye to Springfield should be void," otherwise the land should belong to Springfield until a plantation should be settled there.

This scheme seems to have entirely failed, only one man having acquired title by his residence of five years there. At length, on the 7th of February, 1664, at a town-meeting held at Springfield, Capt. Pynchon, Elizur Holyoke, and Messrs. Ely, Colton, and Cooley, were appointed a standing committee, "To have the sole power to order matters concerning Wo-ro-noak, both for admitting of inhabitants to grant lands, or for any other business that may concern that place, and conduce to its becoming a town of itself."

Under this arrangement a permanent settlement was made at Wo-ro-noak. In 1669 it was incorporated as a town, by the name of Westfield.†

IV.

THE PLANTING OF NORTHAMPTON.

Northampton sits at the foot of the towering central mountain chain of the Connecticut Valley in Massachusetts, filled with the lingering charm of more than two centuries of cultivated and refined life.

"Art's storied dwelling, learning's green retreat."

Her Indian name Non-o-tuck, or Nan-o-tuk as oftener written in old records, and sometimes Not-wo-togg, is of local significance descriptive of a feature of her near landscape. In the Indian tongue Noen-tuk, or No-ah-tuk, means "in the middle of the river," in allusion to the island situate between Northampton village and Mount Tom, surrounded by an old channel of the stream, and to the peninsula upon which Hadley is built.‡

After Springfield had become firmly established at the mouth of the Agawam, the first movement of her people in search of "fresh fields and pastures new" was not westward, but northward, and up the "Great River," as it was then called. The first record which we find looking towards a settlement at Non-o-tuck is the following:

"ATT A GENERAL COURT OF ELECTION, held at Boston the 18th of the 3d mo., Anno 1653. Mr. Samuel Cole, of Boston, having longe since disbursed fifty pounds in the common stocke, as appeared by good testimony to the court, on his own request hath 400 acres of land granted him at Nonotucke, to be layd out by Captayne Willard."

In the mean time a petition had been filed in the General Court, by certain inhabitants of Springfield, asking the privi-

November 14 1639 A meeting to order some town affairs & to trye raised by jury

The Jury Henry Smyth Henry Gregory Jo Leonard Jo Sawle Samuella Hubbard Samuella Wright

The Allow John Woodroffe complainant against Jo Doble in avation of his rate for wages due to him for retaint work he did to a carpenter that had built an agawam for for his habitation

The verdict The Jury find for the defendant; and will all they find the sume that Jo Doble made to be plaintiff to for the said for his work firm & good. But al for he 5 daye in spinning by work for Jo Doble not for you not due to be paid but for ranke not so properly but in his spinning. Or aimed at a better rate and if he did draw more we agree that Jo Doble is engaged to v. plaintiff for work done about the house; & we also judge that Jo Woodroffe is fully satisfied in regard to the said rate for his work upon ground & of the carpenter all the summe hee had for al Jo Doble and him self.

November 14 1639 William Byndon complainant against the members in an action of the case for not dolmoring back to the board of the Court

The Jury Henry Smyth John Burr Henry Gregory Jo Sawle Samuella Hubbard Samuella Wright

The Jury find for the plaintiff; viz that he doth want it to make good 3 daye like bound at work & not yet delmored with the work.

PAGE FROM WM. PYNCHON'S COURT RECORD.

* See Trumbull's Hist. of Conn., Vol. I., p. 147.

† Mass. Col. Rec., Vol. I., p. 323.

‡ Holland's Hist. of Western Mass., Vol. I., p. 65.

§ Col. of Conn. Hist. Society, Vol. II., p. 11.

lege of making a settlement at Non-o-tuck, on the Connecticut, which was in the following words :

"YOUR HIGHLY HONORED, the General Court of the Massachusetts. The humble petition of John Pynchon, Eleazar Holliock, and Samuel Chapin, Inhabitants of Springfield, sheweth, We hartly desire the continuance of your peace. And in exercise of your subirch in these parts, In order where unto we humbly tender or desire of that liberty may be granted to erect a plantation, About fifteen miles Above us, on this river of Connecticut, if it be the will of the Lord, the place being, as we think, very commodious,—sideratis con Sizondo sor,—the containing Large quantities of excellent land and meadow, and tillable ground sufficient for two long plantations, and work, w^{ch}, if it should go on, might, as we conceive, prove greatly Advantagous to your Common Wealth,—to w^{ch} purpose there are divers monr Neighboring plantatur that have a desire to remove thither, with your approbation thereof, to the number of twenty-five families, at least, that Already appear, whereof many of them are of considerable quality for Estates and for the matter for a church, when it shall please God to find opportunity that way: it is the humble desire that by this Hon^d Corte some power may be established or some course appointed for the regulating, at their 1st proceedings, as concerning whome to admit and other occurrences that to the glory of God may be furthered, And your peace and happiness not retarded. And the Inducement to us in these desires is not Any similar respect of our owne, but that we, being Alone, may by this means may have som more neighborhood of your jurisdiction. thus, not doubting your acceptance of our desires, w^d thus entreat the Lord to sit among you in All your conasels, And remain your most humble servts.

"SPRINGFIELD, the 5th of ye 3d Mo. 1653.*

"JOHN PYNCHON,
"ELEAZER HOLLIOCK,
"SAM'L CHAPIN."

This petition seems to have been favorably received by the General Court, and the prayer thereof granted in the following words :

"ATT A GENERAL COURT of Election held at Boston the 18 day May, 1653, IN ANSWER to the inhabitants of Springfield's petition and others thereabouts, this Court doth order, that Mr. John Pinchon, Mr. Holyoke, and some other of the petition^{rs} should be appointed a committee to divide the land petitioned for into two plantations and that the petition^{rs} make choice of one of them, where they shall have liberty to plant themselves; provided, they shall not appropriate to any planter above one hundred acors of all sorts of land, whereof not above twenty acors to be meadow, till twenty inhabitants have planted there, whereof twelve to be freemen, or more, which said freemen shall have power to distribute the land and give out proportions of land to the severall inhabitants as in other townes of this jurisdiction, and that the land be divided according to estates or eminent qualifications, and that Samuel Chapin be joined with Mr. Pynchon and Mr. Holyoke for the dividing of the townes."†

In pursuance of this order the Commissioners appointed thereby performed the duty therein enjoined, and returned to the General Court the following report, to wit :

"Nov. 1, 1654.

"To the honored Generall Court of the Massachusetts. Wee whose names are underwritten, being appointed to divide the lands at Naotucke into two plantations, wee accordingly have granted to them that now first appeared to remove thither to plant themselves on the west side of the River Connecticut, as they desired, and have laid out their bounds, viz.: from the little meadowe above their plantation, which meadowe is called Capawonk or Mattaonett, doune to the heal of the falls which are belowe them, reserving the land on the east side of the said river for another plantation when God, by his providence shall so dispose thereof, and still remaine‡

"Your humble servants,

"JOHN PINCHON,
"ELEZER HOLYOKE,
"SAMUEL CHAPIN."

Upon the completion of these proceedings a settlement was made at Non-o-tuck, the particulars of which the reader will find related in the history of Northampton contained in the following pages.

It has been said by many, and among others by Mr. Sylvester Judd, the learned historian of Hadley, that there was no act of the General Court incorporating the town of Northampton. It would seem, however, that this is an error, as will be seen by the record below.

If the establishing of government at a place and the appointing of officers to administer the same thereat is not an

* To this record in the town-book at Northampton is the following attestation: "That which is above written is a true copie, compared with the original exhibited in the C^t sitting in Boston in May, 1653.

† Synced and left on file.

"Attest: EDWARD ROBBINS."

‡ Mass. Col. Rec., Vol. III., p. 208.

§ Mass. Col. Records, Vol. IV., part I., p. 215.

act of incorporation, what is it? The act of the General Court above referred to may be found in the Massachusetts Colonial Records, Vol. IV., Part I., page 227, and is as follows, to wit :

"May 23, 1655.

"In answer to the petition of the inhabitants of Nonotucke, humbly desiring the establishment of government amongst them, their petition is granted, and itt is ordered that William Houlton, Thomas Bascome, and Edward Elmer shall and hereby are impowered as the threemen to eud all smole causes, according to lawe here, they repaying to Springfield, to Mr. Pinchon, Mr. Holyoke, &c., who are authorized to give them their oathes, as also the constable's oath to Robert Bartlett."

In a diary kept by Judge Samuel Sewall, while holding court in the Connecticut Valley, in the year 1689, will be found interesting allusions to the customs of the day as well as a flattering reference to Northampton. It is printed in a late volume of the collections of the Massachusetts Historical Society :

"Aug. 15.—Second day. Set out for Springfield; lodged at Marlborow. Aug. 16. To Quabog with a guard of 20 men, under Cornet Brown. Between Worcester and Quabog we were greatly wet with rain, wet to the skin. Got thither before 'twas dark. A guard of 20, from Spgfield, met us there, & saluted us with their trumpets as we alighted.

* * * * *

"Aug. 20.—Went to the Long Meadow to bring the Maj.-Gen., going toward Hartford. Meet with Joe Noble; with him went to Westfield, and kept Sabbath with Mr. Taylor Aug. 21.

"Aug. 22.—Returned to Springfield, Mr. Tailor with me. Rained hard in the afternoon and night, and part of the morn, Augt. 23, By which means were not able to reach Quabog; and it 'twas thought could not pass the Rivers. So went to Northampton,—a very Paradise. Lodged at the Ordinary, getting to town in the night. Aug. 24 very fair day. Mr. Cook & I went with Mr. Stoddard, & heard Mr. I. Chauncey preach his first lecture at Hadley. Made a very good sermon. Invited us to dinner. Went over to Hatfield. Lodged all night with Mr. Williams."

For a history of the planting and development of the towns of Hadley, Hatfield, Deerfield, Northfield, and all the others of the seventy and one towns included within the territory on which this work treats, the reader is referred to the separate histories of the several towns respectively, which will be found placed in their order farther on in this volume.

CHAPTER X.

THE PEQUOT WAR.

I.

CAUSES OF THE WAR.

AMONG the earliest important events which interested the pioneer settlers of the valley of the Connecticut, was the destruction of the Pequot Indian nation by the whites in 1636-37. This war occurred so soon after the first settlers arrived at Springfield, and they were then so few in number, that they took but little if any part in it, but its results were of the utmost importance to them. The Pequots were the most powerful tribe living in the vicinity of the Connecticut Valley, and their destruction was a great relief to the infant settlements.

The situation of the settlements on the Connecticut River at the time was perilous in the extreme. In all the towns from Springfield to New Haven, in the year 1636, there were scarcely two hundred and fifty men capable of bearing arms. The savage tribes of the wilderness surrounding them, whose hunting-grounds reached from the Hudson River on the west to the Narragansett Bay on the east, could, if united, have fallen upon them with a force of four or five thousand warriors. The three most powerful nations were the Pequots, near by, the Narragansetts, farther east, and the Mohicans, on the west. Their near neighbors, the Pequots, endeavored to unite their sister tribes in a war of extermination against the whites, not only of the Connecticut Valley, but of all New England; but failing to do this, the Pequots entered the contest alone. The result was the total destruction of them as a nation. They were all slain, or scattered as slaves to the English or to the surrounding savage tribes.

This decisive blow doubtless saved the colonies of New England from annihilation. It struck such terror into the surrounding nations that it was forty years before another generation of warriors, under King Philip, again threatened the destruction of the New England people.

The Pequot country was in the southeasterly part of what is now the State of Connecticut, bordering on Long Island Sound, and running northward between the river Pawcatuck, now the western boundary of Rhode Island, and the river then bearing their name, but now called the Thames. It will be seen that the western boundary of the Pequot country was not more than thirty miles distant from the nearest infant settlement on the Connecticut River.

The Pequots had overawed the Narragansetts, whose hunting-grounds lay to the east of theirs, but had not yet subjected them; while the Mohicans, their near neighbors to the east, had long paid them unwilling tribute, but were now ready for rebellion.

The chief sachem of the Pequots, whose name was Sas-sa-cus, had twenty-six subordinate sachems, with their people, under his sway.

Sas-sa-cus had become discontented at what he considered to be the encroachments of the English people upon his hunting-grounds in the valley of the Connecticut, and resolved to drive them away.

To effect his purpose, he attempted to unite the neighboring tribes in a war of extermination against the English.

He made overtures to his hereditary enemies the Narragansetts for a union against the English, and had he succeeded in conciliating them would doubtless have enlisted the Mohicans in the scheme. But Roger Williams, at the risk of his life, visited the Narragansett country, and through his influence the ancient hostility of the Narragansetts was too much for the insidious diplomacy of Sas-sa-cus, and the Pequots were obliged to enter the contest alone.

Through the influence of Williams, some of the Narragansett chiefs even went to Boston in the autumn of 1636, and concluded a treaty of peace and alliance with the English.

Sas-sa-cus was the prototype and forerunner of King Philip, Pontiac, and Tecumseh, and had he succeeded in forming his union of the tribes, the days of the New England people would have been numbered before they had scarcely begun their settlements in the New World.

The Pequot war had virtually begun four years before, in 1633, when some Indians belonging to the tribe of Sas-sa-cus murdered two English traders, with their whole company, who had gone up the Connecticut River to trade with the Dutch. These traders were named Stone and Norton.

In going up the river with their crew of six persons they admitted twelve of the natives on board their vessel, and engaged others to pilot two of their men farther up the stream. These two men were murdered by their guides, and the twelve Indians on board the vessel the same night rose upon her company, while all were asleep, and put them to death.

Sas-sa-cus, in October of the year following, fearing attacks, both from the Narragansetts and the Dutch, sent messengers to Boston to make overtures of peace.

His envoys agreed to surrender the only two murderers of Stone then surviving, and pay smart-money in the form of wampum and furs, but the Pequots soon grew arrogant and violated their treaty.

The murder of Stone was followed up by the murder of John Oldham, on the 20th of July, 1636. Oldham, with two boys on board his vessel, was on a trip to the Connecticut River, with whose people he had opened commercial relations. While near Black Island, he was surprised and killed by the Indians. When the intelligence of the death of Oldham reached Boston it occasioned great uneasiness, and Governor Vane dispatched ninety men, under the command of John Endicott, of Salem, in three small vessels, to Long Island Sound, to chastise the arrogant Pequots.

It seems that Endicott did not acquit himself of this trust in a very satisfactory manner. He killed and wounded some of the Block Islanders, destroyed their canoes, burned their houses, and cut down their corn.

He then sailed for the Pequot country and demanded of Sas-sa-cus surrender of the murderers of Stone, the delivery of hostages for further good conduct, and the payment of a thousand fathoms of wampum. The Pequots, before this conference was ended, discharged their arrows at his men and fled to their forts. After burning some of their wigwams and canoes, and collecting some corn, he returned to Boston without loss.

The Narragansetts afterward reported that Endicott killed thirteen and wounded forty Pequots. This movements only served to irritate the warlike Pequots, and Sas-sa-cus, without delay, attempted the union of the tribes spoken of above.

Failing in this, and resolving to carry on the war alone, Sas-sa-cus took immediate measures to spread consternation among, and to provoke the resentment of, the whites and their allies.

In October, 1636, they murdered Butterfield near Gardiner's fort, at the mouth of the river, and a few days later took two white men out of a boat and tortured them to death with ingenious barbarity.

During the winter they constantly kept a marauding-party near the fort, burning out-buildings and killing cattle.

In the spring Gardiner went out with ten men to do some farming-work. His party was waylaid by Pequots, and three of them slain.

Soon after, two men while sailing down the river were taken out of their canoe, their bodies cut in two lengthwise, and the parts hung up by the river's bank.

A man who had been carried off by the Indians from Wethersfield was roasted alive, and soon after that place was attacked by a hundred Pequots, who killed seven men, a woman, and a child, and carried away two girls into captivity.

II.

THE WAR BEGINS.

The Pequots had now put to death no less than thirty of the English, and the infant settlements on the Connecticut River had become thoroughly aroused to a sense of the impending danger.

The time had come when the question must be settled, once for all, which should hold the land, the white man or the Indian,—but the two hundred and fifty men were sufficient for the emergency.

The Pequots numbered no less than a thousand warriors, and had they succeeded in uniting with them the Narragansetts and the Mohicans, the combination could have sent into the field no fewer than five thousand warriors. As there was still danger of such a union of the tribes, no time was to be lost.

Massachusetts and Plymouth Colonies were both solicited for aid. Massachusetts made a levy of a hundred and sixty men, the sum of a hundred and sixty pounds in money, and "ordered that the war, having been undertaken on just grounds, should be seriously prosecuted;" but such was the emergency that the Connecticut people could not wait till these troops should come up, and a force of ninety men, under the command of Capt. John Mason,—forty-two of whom were furnished by Hartford, thirty by Windsor, and eighteen by Wethersfield,—was on the 1st of May dispatched against the Pequot country.

Capt. Mason had seen service in the Netherlands, under Sir Thomas Fairfax, who then formed so high an opinion of his merits that he afterward urged him to return to England and help the patriot cause.

Capt. Mason first settled at the Bay, and while there was a member of a committee to direct fortification at Boston, Dorchester, and Castle Island. Before he came with his fellow-townsmen to the Connecticut Valley, he had served two years as a deputy from Dorchester to the General Court.

Mason was first sent down the river, with twenty men, to reinforce the garrison at its mouth; but meeting Underhill there, with an equal force from Massachusetts, Mason, leaving Underhill at the fort, returned to Hartford.

III.

THE DESTRUCTION OF THE PEQUOTS.

On the 10th of May, 1637, Mason set out with his whole levy, besides seventy friendly Indians, for the Pequot country. The whole company embarked in three small vessels. The Rev. Mr. Stone, of Hartford, was chaplain of the expedition, while Uncas, sachem of the Mohicans, led the Indian warriors.

Upon arriving at Gardiner's fort, at the mouth of the river, Mason added to his forces Underhill and his company of twenty men, and sent back twenty of his own men for the better security of the settlements up the river.

Before proceeding farther, a council of officers was held. Mason had been ordered to land at the mouth of Pequot River (now the Thames), and attack the enemy on their western frontier, but knowing that Sas-sa-cus, expecting to be invaded from that quarter, had strengthened himself accordingly, Mason was desirous of approaching him from the east, and surprising them in their rear; but this would require several days' additional time, and his officers opposed leaving their homes so long, as well as shrunk from disobeying their positive instructions.

Mason, left alone, proposed that the conference should be adjourned until the morning, and that during the night their chaplain, Mr. Stone, should seek divine guidance in prayer. Early in the morning Mr. Stone went on shore, declaring that the captain's plan was the proper one. The council immediately determined unanimously, upon the advice of the chaplain, to adopt the captain's proposal.

The little squadron at once set sail from the fort, and on the following evening (that being the 20th of May) arrived near the entrance of Narragansett Bay, at the foot of what is now Tower Hill, which overlooks Point Judith.

The next day was the Sabbath, which they kept quietly on shipboard, and a storm prevented them from embarking till Tuesday evening.

While here Mason received a message from Providence, from Capt. Patrick, who had arrived there with a Massachusetts party, requesting him to wait until it could come up. But Mason, deeming that a rapid movement was of more consequence than a larger force, concluded not to wait for Capt. Patrick, and with his sixty Mohican allies, and four hundred more Indian warriors, furnished by the friendly sachems of the Narragansetts, on the 24th of May marched twenty miles westward to the Pequot country.

At night the party stopped at a fort, which, being occupied by some suspected neutrals, they invested for the night. On Thursday they marched fifteen miles farther west, and encamped at a place lying five miles to the northwest of the present village of Stonington.

They were now within two miles of the principal Indian fort, at which it was evident that no alarm had been given, for the sentinels could hear the noisy reveling within the place until long after midnight. Their Indians, however, had mostly deserted.

Sas-sa-cus had seen the little fleet pass to the eastward along the sound, and supposed the English had abandoned their hostile intentions.

The encampment of Capt. Mason was at a place that is now known as "Porter's Rocks," at the head of Mystic River.

The site of the Indian fort was two or three miles farther down the river, on its western side, toward Mystic village.

It was a palisaded fort, inclosing a circular area of an acre or two of ground within the fort. Along two streets were some seventy wigwams, covered with matting and thatch. At points opposite each other were two gateways leading into the fort, and it was resolved that Mason and Underhill, each at the head of half the Englishmen, should force an entrance through these openings from opposite directions, while the Indians that were left should invest the fort in a circle, to arrest the fugitives, should the attack prove successful.

The little band of Englishmen, wearied by their long march, slept soundly, until awakened in the morning, two hours before dawn.

Before breaking up their camp they took time to join in prayer, and under a bright moonlight set out toward the fort.

The surprise was complete. Mason had come within a few feet of the sally-port which he was seeking, when a dog barked, and the cry of O-wan-ux! O-wan-ux!—meaning Englishman! Englishman!—was heard within, showing that the alarm was given. At the head of sixteen men Mason pushed into the inclosure, while Underhill did the same on the opposite side.

The awakened savages rushed out of their wigwams in terror, but were soon driven back by the English broadswords and firearms. Again rushing forth, the contest became general, and there was danger that the English would be overpowered by numbers.

In this emergency Mason snatched a live firebrand from a wigwam and threw it on a matted roof, and Underhill set a fire with a train of powder in his quarter. The straw village was soon in flames. The scene within now beggars description. The Indians who escaped the fire were shot down by the muskets of the English, and those who escaped from the fort fell into the hands of the surrounding circles of Indian allies, who slaughtered them without mercy.

Underhill, in his account, says: "It is reported by themselves that there were about four hundred souls in this fort, and not above five escaped out of our hands."

Says another old chronicler: "The number they destroyed was considered to be above four hundred. At this time it was a fearful sight to see them thus frying in the fire, and the blood quenching the flame, and horrible was the sight and scent thereof; but the victory seemed a sweet sacrifice, and they gave praise thereof to God who had wrought so wonderfully for them, thus to inclose their enemies in their hands, and give them so speedy victory over so proud, insulting, and blasphemous an enemy."^{*}

It was doubtless a revolting scene, distressing to humanity; yet the exigences of the hour demanded the sacrifice. At the most urgent reasons of public safety less than a hundred determined men had taken their lives into their hands, and marched into the enemy's country. Had they failed, the result would have been the utter extermination not only of themselves, but of their wives and little ones, whom they had left behind.

The awful conditions of the case seemed to justify the stern means of winning the victory which they employed. "At all events, from the hour of that carnage Connecticut was secure; there could now be unguarded sleep in the long-harassed homes of the settlers. It might be hoped that civilization was assured of a permanent abode in New England."*

* New England's Memorial, page 134.

Only two of the English were killed, but the number of the wounded was more than a quarter of the force.†

Mason, encumbered by his wounded, had no little difficulty in making his way out of the Indian country. His vessels were to meet him at the mouth of the Pequot River. While slowly pursuing his way he was attacked by another party of Pequots, numbering more than three hundred, who approached from another neighboring fort, tearing their hair, stamping on the ground, and clamoring for vengeance. The Narragansetts drove the Pequots away. At ten o'clock in the morning Mason ascended an eminence with his exhausted party, when his eyes were gladdened by the sight of his vessels coming to anchor in the harbor. At evening they all went to rest on board their vessels.

What was left of the Pequots collected in the western fort, and debated the question whether they should fall upon the Narragansetts and the English or seek safety by flight. After a stormy council, they resolved on the latter course, and, setting fire to their wigwams, started off on their journey to join the Mohawks on the Hudson. On their way they put to death some Englishmen, and a party of them, some three or four hundred strong, were pursued by Capt. Mason with forty Connecticut men, who had been joined by one hundred and twenty men from Massachusetts under Capt. Stoughton.

The Indians were overtaken a little west of what is now New Haven, encamped in the centre of a swamp. But few of them escaped. Stragglers of the tribe from time to time were put to death in large numbers by the Mohicans and the Narragansetts, among whom the survivors of the Pequot nations were divided by the English and held as slaves.

Sas-sa-cus, the last of the Pequots, fled beyond the Hudson, and was killed by the Mohawks. His nation was extinct.

After the destruction of the Pequots, troubles arose between Uncas, of the Mohicans, and Mi-an-to-no-mo, of the Narragansetts, which finally resulted in the triumph of Uncas, and the death of Mi-an-to-no-mo at his hands; but, so far as the white settlers of the Connecticut Valley and the rest of New England were concerned, from that hour of slaughter in the Pequot fort, on the banks of the Mystic, there was peace for forty years, until King Philip, at the head of another generation of Indian warriors, waged the second war of extermination between the white man and the Indian, which deluged the land with blood.

At the conclusion of the Pequot war, the General Court of the Massachusetts colony adopted the following resolutions, to wit:

I.

PEQUOT WAR.

"THE COURT did intreat the magistrates to treat with the elders about a day of thanksgiving upon the return of the soldiers, and the soldiers to be feasted by their towns."

Gen. Court at New Town, Aug. 1, 1637.

II.

"The 12th of the 8th mo. was ordered to be kept a day of publike thanksgiving to God for his great mercies in subduing the Pequots, bringing the soldiers in safety, the successe of the conference, and good news from Germany."

Gen. Court, Sept. 26, 1637.

CHAPTER XI.

THE SEPARATION OF SPRINGFIELD FROM THE JURISDICTION OF CONNECTICUT.

THE reader has seen in chapter VIII., of this volume, that the removal of William Pynchon and his company from Roxbury, near Boston, to Agawam, now Springfield, on the Connecticut River, was not a distinct and separate movement, made for the planting of Springfield only, but formed a part and parcel of a larger undertaking entered into by several towns at the Bay, which resulted in the foundation of the State of Connecticut.

It has also been seen that, before the departure of the emigrants to the Connecticut Valley, the General Court of the Colony of the Massachusetts Bay, at Boston, granted them a commission, which in effect organized a separate government, in which commission William Pynchon and Henry Smyth, his son-in-law, were, with Roger Ludlow, John Steele, William Swaine, William Phelps, William Westwood, and Andrew Ward, named as assistants.

Soon after the colonists of the Connecticut Valley had arrived at Hartford, Windsor, Wethersfield, and Springfield, in the spring of 1636, the General Court authorized in their commission met at New Town, now Hartford.

The following heading to the first meeting, copied from the Connecticut records, shows the time of said meeting, and which of the above-named assistants were then present:

"A Corte Holden at Newtowne, † 26 April, 1636. Present, Roger Ludlow, Esq., Mr. Steele, Mr. Phelps, Mr. Westwood, Mr. Ward."

It will be seen that at this court, first held at Connecticut, neither Mr. Smith nor Mr. Pynchon was present. They were doubtless so busily engaged in their removal from Roxbury, and in providing places of shelter for their families at Agawam, that it was inconvenient for them to attend.

General Courts were afterward held at Dorchester, now Windsor, on the 7th of June; at Watertown, now Wethersfield, on the 1st of September; and again at Newtowne, now Hartford, on the 1st of October. At neither of which the Agawam assistants were present.

The first General Court of Connecticut at which any one from Springfield appeared was held in November following, of which we give a copy of the records,‡ so far as it shows those who were present.

"A Corte held at New Towne 1st Novemb^r, 1636. Present, Mr. Ludlow, Mr. Pynchon, Mr. Swaine, Mr. Steele, Mr. Phelps, Mr. Westwood, Mr. Ward."

It appears by the "Connecticut Colonial Records," above referred to, that Mr. Pynchon had furnished to the Connecticut people considerable quantities of Indian corn, upon contract with the General Court, and that out of this trade in corn, and other matters arising between Mr. Pynchon and the Connecticut people, a difficulty arose, which resulted in the sudden withdrawal of Mr. Pynchon and his company of settlers at Agawam, now Springfield, from the jurisdiction of Connecticut into and under the jurisdiction of Massachusetts.

At a General Court held at Hartford on the 5th day of April, 1638, among others, Mr. Pynchon, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Moxon of Agawam were all present.

At this General Court the following resolution in reference to the difficulty with Mr. Pynchon about the corn was adopted: ||

"Whereas, There was some complaint made against Mr. William Pynchon, of Agawam, for that as was conceived and upon proof appeared, he was not so careful to promote the public good in the trade of corn as he was bound to do. It is ordered the said Mr. Pynchon shall, with all convenient speede, pay as a fine for his so failing, 40 bushels of Indian corn for the publick, and the said corn to be delivered to the treasurer to be disposed of as shall be thought meete."

This was the last appearance of any of the Springfield people at the Connecticut General Court. It will be seen by the following documents, that shortly after this the inhabi-

† Changed to Hartford, Feb. 21, 1636-37, in honor of the residence of Rev. Mr. Stone, in England. The emigrants to the river first named these towns after the places they had left at the Bay, and Dorchester was changed to Windsor and Watertown to Wethersfield respectively.

‡ Col. Rec. of Conn., Vol. 1, p. 5.

|| Ibid., p. 19.

* Palfrey's Hist. of New Eng., Vol. I., page 467.

† Mason's Pequot War, p. 141.

tants of Agawam set up a provisional government for themselves. It must also be considered that the Agawam people had satisfied themselves in the mean time that Agawam did in reality lie to the north of the Connecticut line, and was actually within the bounds of the territory under the jurisdiction of the Massachusetts.

Mr. Pyncheon was, however, a magistrate of Connecticut, and not of Massachusetts; and in the absence of any authority from the General Court at Boston, the inhabitants of the little hamlet of Agawam in the February following adopted a form of government of their own in the following compact, which is unparalleled in the history of this country, saving the compact entered into by the Pilgrim Fathers, on the "Mayflower," before landing at Plymouth Rock. By this compact they made Mr. Pyncheon their magistrate. His authority was derived from the people themselves,—now, but not then, recognized as the highest of all authority. Their compact was as follows, to wit:

"February the 14th, 1638-9.—We the Inhabitants of Agaam, upper Quinneticot, taking into consideration the manifold inconveniences that may fall upon us for want of some fit magistracy amonge us; Being now by Godes providence fallen into the line of the Massachusetts jurisdiction; & it being farr off to re-payer thither in such cases of justice as may often fall out amonge us, doe therefore thinke it meete by a generall consent & vote to ordaine (till we receive further directions from the Generall Courte in the Massachusetts Bay) Mr. William Pyncheon to execute the office of a magistrate in this our plantation of Agaam, viz.:

"To give oathes to constables or military officers, to direct warrantes, both process, executions, & attachmentes, to heare and examine misdemeanours, to depose witnesses, & upon prooffe of misdemeanour to inflict corporal punishment, as whipping, stockinge, byndinge to the peace or good behaviour, & in some cases to require sureties, & if the offense require to commit to prison, and in default of a common prison to commit delinquents to the charge of some fit person or persons till justice be satisfied; also in the Tryall of actions for debt or trespasse, to give oathes, direct juries, depose witnesses, take verdicts & keepe Records of verdicts, judgments, executions, & whatever else may tend to the keepinge peace and the manifestation of our fidelity to the Bay Jurisdiction & the restraining of any that shall violate Godes lawes; or lastely whatsoever else may fall within the power of an assistant in the Massachusetts.

"It is also agreed upon by a mutual consent, that in case any action of debt or trespasse, he to be tried seeinge a jury of 12 fit persons cannot be had at present amonge us, that six persons shall be esteemed & held a sufficient Jury to try any action under the some of Ten pounce till we shall see to y^e contrary, & by common consent shall alter the number of Jurors, or shall be otherwise directed from the generall court in the Massachusetts."

Thus, in the depth of winter, they boldly seceded from the jurisdiction of Connecticut, and, going back to first principles, adopted a constitution of their own, until they could find safety under the sheltering wing of the General Court at the Massachusetts Bay.

Out of this abrupt separation of Mr. Pyncheon and his Agawam colony there grew up between the Connecticut people and the people of Agawam and the Massachusetts Bay a bitter controversy, which lasted for several years, and interfered even with the union formed by the colonies, known as the United Colonies.

Thus, we find, in a letter of the Rev. Thomas Hooker, of Hartford, to Governor Winthrop, written in 1638, in speaking of the proposition of the aforesaid union of the colonies, he says: "The negotiation was interrupted in consequence of the claim preferred by Massachusetts to the jurisdiction of Agawam (Springfield), which had been hitherto conceded to belong to Connecticut."

Governor Winthrop, in his reply to this letter of Mr. Hooker, under date Aug. 28, 1638, complained of three things; the third matter complained of related to the controversy about Agawam. "3d. That they [the people of Connecticut] still exercise jurisdiction at Agawam, though one of their commissioners disclaim to intermeddle in our line, and thereupon we challenged our right, and it was agreed so; and I had wrote to desire them to forbear untill that Mr. Pyncheon had small encouragement to be under them; that if his relation were true, I could not see the justice of their proceeding against him."

To this letter of Governor Winthrop, of August, 1638, Mr. Hooker replied in the autumn of that year.

This reply is so interesting that we copy it entire, so far as it has reference to the third complaint of Mr. Winthrop, above stated.

"THE THIR^d thing touching the busines of Agaam comes last into consideration, in which I shall crave leave to open myself freely and fully, that the rule of righteous proceeding may appear in undeniable plainness where it is. The sum of that cause is to be attended in two things: partly in the jurisdiction we have exercised, partly in the jurisdiction which at this time you so suddenly, so unexpectedly, take to yourselves.

"For a fair and full answer you may be pleased to understand: 1. That I have advised with the commissioners, and their expressions to me were these: that they were so far from consenting that you should take away the jurisdiction in Agaam from them to yourselves that your best remembrance there was no such thing mentioned; nor were there one syllable sounding that way in all the agitation of the business. When the commissioners of other towns, and amongst them one from Agaam, came to establish the jurisdiction which they now exercised, in reason it could not be their commission, nor the intention of the towns, to destroy their own jurisdiction, for that was to cross the scope of the treaty, and overthrow the combination for the establishment whereof they were now sent.

"The act of jurisdiction which hath been exercised since your letter, it was this: there was an inhabitant in Agaam apprehended in some misdemeanor; the town sent the delinquent to the court to desire justice, which they answerably did; and why they might not do it, nay, how they could avoid it, according to rule, it is beyond all my skill to conceive. For at the time of our election* the committees from the town of Agaam came in with other towns, and chose their magistrates, installed them into their government, took oath of them for the execution of justice according to God, and engaged themselves to submit to their government and the execution of justice by their means, and dispensed by the authority which they put upon them by choice.

"Now when these men demand justice from magistrates so chosen and engaged, how, in a faithfulness and according to their oath, they could deny it without sin, the covenant continuing firm on both parts, and renounced at this time by neither, it is beyond my compass to comprehend, and, under favor, I do think beyond the skill of any man by sound reason to evince.

"The magistrates who are lawfully called, and stand bound by oath to execute justice unto a people, to deny the execution of justice when it is demanded by such, is a grievous sin. But the magistrates were thus called, thus by oath bound, and justice was in this manner demanded. Therefore had they then refused it they had grievously sinned. Yea, taking it for granted that it is in each inhabitant's liberty in Agaam to choose his jurisdiction (which is to me beyond question), if I was there as an inhabitant, I should judge myself bound in conscience to submit to the jurisdiction of the river, and do believe I should make a breach of the eighth command if I should otherwise; because in so doing I should steal from mine estate, in that I should rush myself into needless and endless inconveniences; namely, to cast myself into that condition that for a matter of five shillings (as the case may fall out) I should put myself to unreasonable charges and trouble to seek for justice a hundred miles off in the wilderness. If Mr. Pyncheon can devise ways to make his oath bind him when he will, and loosen him when he list; if he can tell how, in faithfulness, to engage himself in a civil covenant and combination (for that he did, by his committees in their act) and yet can cast it away at his pleasure, before he give in sufficient warrant, more than his own word and will, he must find a law in Agaam for it; for it is written in no law or gospel that ever I read. The want of his help troubles not me nor any man else I can hear of, I do assure you; we know him from the bottom to the brim, and follow him in all his proceedings, and trace him in his privy foot-steps; only we would have him and all the world to understand he doth not walk in the dark to us. By this it is evident what the jurisdiction was which was exercised since your letter.†

Early in the controversy the Rev. Mr. Moxon, of Springfield, addressed the following letter to Gov. Winthrop, in relation to the Agawam matter. The reader will remember that Mr. Moxon was the first minister of Springfield. His letter is characteristic of the man, and illustrative of the history of the controversy in question. It was first published by the Massachusetts Historical Society, and is as follows:

"To y^e Wor^d his much-respected friends, Mr. Winthroppe, at his house in Boston, be these dd.

"WORTHY SR,—Salutation in Ct. JESUS. SR, I make bold to trouble you with these few lynes, in thus intreating your helpe to cleare this poynt, whether we of Agawam were dismissed out of the Bay with this proviso to continue of the Bay's jurisdiction. If there be any order of court touching that matter it may give light. Ye grounde of my request is thus much: I have heard that some of our neighbors in the River are doubtful whether we lye not in sia (not in falling from their government but) in falling disorderly from them without first orderly debatinge ye matter, and our grievances if we had any. I would therefore gladly have such grounds as may be convincing to any that shall desire a reason of us if any shall hereafter speake of it to any of us. I conceive some objection may be grounded on this, that they were possesd of us at that tyme. Through Gods mercy we [are] all well in our plantation, only Mr Pyncheon lately lost a boy who tendinge coves near our river too ventuously went into a birchen canowe, web overturned and he was drowned. Remember myne and my wife's trust love to yor selfe and Mrs. Winthrop.

* In this sentence Mr. Hooker has supplied an important omission in the colony records. Nothing has been known, hitherto, of the constitution of government in Connecticut between the expiration of the Massachusetts commission in March, 1637, and the adoption of the Fundamental Laws in January, 1639. At the General Court at Hartford, April 5, 1638, the names of Mr. George Moxam and Mr. John Burr, both of Agawam, appear in the list of committees, and those of Mr. Pyncheon and Mr. Smith among the magistrates. [Note by Mr. Trumbull in Col. Rec. of Conn., Vol. I., p. 17.]

† Copied from the Conn. Hist. Soc. Col., Vol. I., p. 2, etc.

"The Lord sanctifye ye passages of His providence to you and bear up your spirits in close walking with Him. See prayes yor lovinge frinde to use in the service of ye Gospell."

"G: Moxon."

This controversy was at length ended by a resolution of the General Court of the Massachusetts Bay, adopted on the 2d of June, 1641, in which Massachusetts asserts her right of jurisdiction over the town of Agawam, which not until the year before had been named Springfield, and organized a government, with Mr. Pyncheon at the head as chief magistrate.

In the light of the facts above stated, this resolution of the General Court, although somewhat lengthy, becomes interesting to the student of history, and we copy it entire:

"THE ANSWER TO THE PETITION OF Mr. Pyncheon and others of Springfield, upon Conectecott, exhibited to the Genral Court, holden at Boston 2d, 4th mo.

"The Petition being read in open Court and the records and other writings perused and referred a committee to bee further examined, upon their report, the matter was again considered by the whole Court, and agreed, that answers should be given thereunto as followeth, viz.: whereas the said petitioners do certify as that some of their neighbors and friends upon Conectecott have taken offense at them for adhering to our government and withdrawing from that upon the river, supposing that they had formerly dismissed from their jurisdiction, and that wee had bound ourselves (by our own act) from claiming any jurisdiction or interest in Agawam, now Springfield, and for proove hereof they alleadge some passages in a commission granted by this Court in the first m.

"In 1635, to the said Mr. Pyncheon and others, for the government of the said inhabitants upon the said ryver, and some passages also in certeine articles supposed to have been propounded to them by the authority of this Court. It is hereby declared,—

"1st. That the said passages in the said commission (as they are expressed in the petition) are mis-recited, so as the true scope and intention is thereby altered; as 1st, Whereas the words in the commission are, they are resolved to transplant themselves; in the recital it is, to plant themselves. 2nd, In the commission it is said that those noble personages have interest in the ryver, and by vertue of their patent do require jurisdiction; in the recital it is, that wee confesse it belongeth to their jurisdiction. 3d, In the commission it is provided this may not bee any prejudice to the interest of those noble, &c.; in the recital it is, that nothing should bee done or intended to the prejudice of the lords or their intentions.

"2nd. That the said commission was not granted upon any intent either to dismise the persons from us, or to determine any thing about the limits of jurisdictions, the interest of the lands, and our owne limits being as then unknowne; therefore it was granted onely for one yeare; and it may rather appeare, by our granting such a commission, and then accepting of it, as also that clause, viz.: Till some other course were taken, by mutuall consent, &c., that wee intended to reserve an interest then upon the ryver, and that themselves also intended to stand to the condition of the first licence of departure given to the most of them, web was, that they should remaine still of our body.

"3d. For those argumts web they draw from those articles certified in the petition, wee answer, that they were propounded and drawn out onely by some of the magi-strats of each party without any order or allowance of this Court; and therefore (whatsoever those magi-strats might intend thereby) the intent of the Court cannot be gathered from any thing therein; but in those articles web were agitated and brought to some issue in our Genall Court at Cambridge, in the 4th mo. 1638, when their commissioners were present, Springfield, then called Agawam, was claimed by the Court (though by occasion of some private speach, &c.) to belong to us; and it was then agreed by the Court, and yielded unto by their commissioners, that so much of the ryver of Conectecot as should fall within the line of our patent should continew within our jurisdiction (and it was then taken for granted that Springfield would fall to us without question); and those articles had then beene fully agreed on betweene the Court and their Commissionrs, had there not beene some question about them granting us free passage up the river, in regard of the lords' interest (as they alleaged).

"ITS NOW HEARBY ORDERED, that Willi: Pinchew, gent, for this yeare shall hearely have full power and authority to govern the inhabitants at Springfield, and to heare and determine all causes and offenses, both civill and criminall, that reach not to life, limbs, or banishment, according to the lawes here established; provided, that in matters of weight or difficulty, it shall bee lawfull for any party to appeal unto the Court of Assistants, at Boston, so as they prosecute the same according to the order of this Court; provided, also, that these tryalls bee by the oathes of 6 men, untill they shall have a greater number of inhabitants for that service."

The reader who is familiar with the law relating to the construction of statutory enactments will not fail to discover that the order which concludes the above record organizes a government at Springfield, and is in reality the act incorporating the town. It may, therefore, be considered that the town of Springfield was incorporated by the General Court on the 2d day of June, 1641.

It will be a matter of interest to the reader to know who were the freemen of Springfield eighteen years after this event, and to show this we produce another fac-simile page from the Record-Book of Mr. Pyncheon. This page, however, is in the handwriting of the "Worshipful" John Pyncheon, his father, William, having been self-exiled to England ten years before.

The names of the freemen in Springfield this 8th of May 1663. See 8 leaves further where a list of names of all freemen as they are this May 1691

Cap^t John Pyncheon. M^r Pelatah Glover
Leiv^d Elizur Holyoke Deacon Sam Chapin
Enfranchis^d: Cooper W^m Warner
Joseph Danforth Tho: Stebbins
Miles Morgan: Benja Mourn
W^m Beach: Robert Ahley
John Lamb: Sam Marshfield
Reice Bedortha Nath Eliy
John Dumbleton Benja Paxson
Griffith Joanes Laurence Phillips
John Leavord Anthony Dorchester
Jonath Burt Rich Sikes
John Lumbard
Tho: Bancroft
Geo: Colton: made free at Genl Court, May 3rd 1665. Benja: Cooly & John Wood to freedom in Oct 1665. Tho: being 15 years in Capt Pr. held in Capt. Co. at Court. Tho: to be admitted into our colony, took their oath at Genl Court, Sept 20 1669.

Thomas Merick admitted to freedom at Genl Court in Oct 1665. Tho: at Springfield Jan 27 1667. Admitted to freedom by Genl Court in Oct 1668. B. S. Stone March 30th 1669 at Newbury Court.

John Keepe: admitted to freedom at Genl Court May 1669. & sworn in by Genl Court at Springfield 6th of June 1670. John Barber: (last ferry) admitted to freedom at Genl Court in May 1670. & sworn in at Springfield 6th of June 1670. John Ralov: admitted to freedom at Genl Court in May 1670. & sworn in at Springfield 6th of June 1670.

Joseph Croisfoote admitted to freedom at Genl Court in May 1670. & sworn in at Springfield 6th of June 1670. John Holyoke admitted to freedom at Genl Court in May 1670. & sworn in at Springfield 6th of June 1670. John Colehead admitted to freedom at Genl Court in May 1670. & sworn in at Springfield 6th of June 1670. Vice Sikes, Josh Colehead, admitted to freedom at Genl Court in May 1670. & sworn in at Springfield 6th of June 1670. James Walker, & John Warner admitted to freedom at Genl Court in May 1670. & sworn in at Springfield 6th of June 1670. Onrd and Benlow, & John Chapman & Saml. Th^y admitted to freedom at Genl Court in May 1670. & sworn in at Springfield 6th of June 1670. W^m & Abin/ Colehead Tho Collier Sworne Sept 27th 1671

FAC-SIMILE OF PAGE FROM PYNCHON'S RECORD.

* Mass. Hist. Society Col., 5 series, Vol. I., p. 296.

CHAPTER XII.

THE IMPORT DUTY IMPOSED BY CONNECTICUT UPON SPRINGFIELD IN 1645—RESISTED BY MASSACHUSETTS.

In the year 1639 George Fenwick, with his lady and family, left England and arrived in Connecticut with the intent of making a plantation. Mr. Fenwick is described as a worthy and pious gentleman, who had been a barrister at Gray's Inn. His wife was a daughter of Sir Edward Apsley. He was interested in the Connecticut patent, and came over as agent for the patentees.

The little fort at the mouth of the river, commanded by Gardiner in the Pequot war, had no political connection with the upper towns, and Fenwick took possession of it, made his residence there, and named it Saybrook, in honor of the two noblemen who were the most distinguished members of the company.

Fenwick, in the year 1644, sold out his interest in the settlement at Saybrook to the upper towns of Hartford, Windsor, and Wethersfield. The conditions of the sale were that Mr. Fenwick, during the period of ten years, should receive the avails of certain duties to be collected from all vessels passing out of the river, and of certain taxes on the domestic trade in beaver and live stock.

As the purchase and maintenance of the fort were deemed necessary by the Connecticut people for the protection of all the towns on the river, including Agawam, to pay this debt to Mr. Fenwick and to raise money sufficient to maintain the fort, it was resolved to impose a duty upon all exports which should pass out of the river. To effect this object, officers were appointed at Windsor, Hartford, and Wethersfield to give clearances to vessels outward bound, and the fort at Saybrook was authorized to "make stays" of vessels which did not produce such clearances.

The traders from Springfield, the other river town, refused to pay this duty, on the ground that, as they belonged to the jurisdiction of Massachusetts, Connecticut had no right to impose the same upon them, and they promptly laid the matter before the General Court of Massachusetts, at Boston. This duty was imposed on the 5th day of February, 1645.

On the 18th day of June of that year the Massachusetts General Court adopted this resolution, viz.:

"It is ye minde of this House yt none of ours should pay any import to any of Connecticut jurisdiction, with relation to ye passing through any parte of Connecticut River."

Information of this resolution was conveyed to the people of Connecticut, and an animated dispute grew up between the two colonies, which was referred to the judgment of the commissioners of the other colonies for settlement.

The penalty prescribed for the non-payment of these duties was confiscation of property, but Connecticut deferred the execution thereof until the decision of the commissioners could be obtained.

Accordingly, on the 22d day of September, 1646, at a meeting of the commissioners of the United Colonies, held at Hartford, Connecticut brought the question before that body, representing that the purpose of the import was "chiefly to maintain the fort for security and conveniency," and that "Springfield had in its proportion the same benefit" as the towns lower down the river.

It will be seen by the following record of the action of the commissioners that they were of the same mind; but the matter was postponed for further consideration, at the request of Massachusetts:

"September, 1646.—A question was propounded by the Commissioners for Connecticut concerning an imposition layd on goods passing by the River's mouth to the sea, which all the plantations on Connecticut River pay, chiefly to mantayne the fort for security and conveniency, onely Mr. Pincham, at Sprinkfield, who have in their proportion the same benefit, refuse. The Commissioners thought it of weighty concernment to the plantations above, that the mouth of the River be secured; but Mr. Pincham being absent, and noe instructions given from the General Courte in the Mattachusetts, the issue and determination was respited till the Commissioners' next meetings."*

At a meeting of the General Court at Boston, held on the 4th day of November next after, the resolution of the Commissioners of the Colonies was presented, and action taken thereon. The resolutions adopted by the General Court at this meeting were presented in the argument of the matter before the Commissioners of the United Colonies, which was held in Boston the succeeding summer, an account of which follows.

In the month of July, 1647, a special session of the Commissioners of the United Colonies was held at Boston, and the matter of the Connecticut import duties again considered.

In the mean time, however, the fort had been destroyed by fire.

Upon the argument written briefs were delivered by both the contending colonies.

That of Massachusetts consisted of the resolves of her General Court adopted at the November session, as above stated, which were in words as follows:

"November 4th, 1646.—THE COMMITTEE having considered ye controversy between the jurisdiction of Hartford upon Connecticut & the inhabitants of Springfield, on ye same river, touching either the purchase of ye fort, &c., at the river's mouth, or the payment of such customes as is or shall be imposed upon them towards the maintanance of the same, doe declare their judgments as followeth:

"1st. They conceive yt ye jurisdiction of Hartford upon Connecticut had not a legall power to force any inhabitant of another jurisdiction to purchase any fort or other lauds out of their jurisdiction without their consent.

"2d. They conceive yt it were injurious to require custome to ye maintanance of such a fort which is not usefull to such of whom it is demanded.

"3d. They think it very unequal for them to impose a custome upon their friends and confederates, who have not more benefit of the river, by exporting and importing of goods, &c., than straingers of another nation, who (though they live within Hartford jurisdiction) pay none.

"4th. The pounding and standing upon an imposition & custome, to be paid to ye river's mouth by such as were or are within our jurisdiction, hindered our confederation above ten years since, and then never any paid to this day, & now to impose it on any of our confederation will putt us to new thoughts.

"5th. It seems to us very hard yt any of our jurisdiction should be forced to such a bondage as will either constrain them to depart their habitations or weaken much their estates, especially when as they, with the first, tooke possession of the river, and were at great charge of building, etc., which, if they had fore-seene, would not then have been planted.

"6th. If Hartford jurisdiction shall make use of their power over any of ours, we conceive we have the same power to imitate them in ye like kinde, which wee desier may be forborne on both sides. The whole Courte approves of this retourne. By both."

Upon the presentation of these resolutions of her General Court the Massachusetts Commissioners rested their case.

On the part of Connecticut, Mr. Hopkins, "some respite being given him to consider of the same," delivered the following answer in writing:

"A SHORTE ANSWER to the reason propounded by general Corte of the Mattachusetts for Springfield not paying of the imposition at Seabrook forte presented the Commissioners of the United Colonies, 27 July, 1647.

"The first argument seemed (at least to us) to labour of a greate mistake in reference to the case in hand (to omit all other just exceptions that might be made against that affirmation) and doth not touch the present question, which is, whether such an imposition be lawfull and regular, bottomed upon a foundation of equity and righteousness, & not to what uses or improvement the means raised upon the imposition is put; for if there be sufficient grounds & reason for the imposition, that it transgresse not a rule of righteousness in regard to of the thing itself, not exceeding a rule of moderation in regarde of the quantity, it concernes not the party that payes to inquire after, or call to account for, the employment of the monies raised by ye imposition; therefore, the further answer, it might be denied that which is imposed to be payed by Springfield as they passe is to purchase land or forte. The second, as it is a position in itselfe, nakedly considered, seems at least to lay most of the government of Europe under the guilt of injustice; yet because it hath an appearance of an equitable consideration in it, we are content the issue of the present difference may lye there, for we affirme the forte mentioned hath beene for nigh 12 yeares past, is at present, & may be still for the future, usefull to that plantation, & yet not ja. pd by them towards it to this very day.

* Plymouth Col. Rec.

"The third is but a presumption, & if it had any cleare foundation, yet the comparison is not equal.

"The fourth, ever since the first readinge of it, hath bene a reall trouble to our thoughts, laboringe of so apparant mistakes, both in the one part of it & in the other, which makes us heartily wish that we may be all conscientious careful that our publick records may carry such evidence of the truth that those who desire to take advantages may not have any just occasions given them; for whereas it is said the combination was hindred above 10 years by the means propounded, if a due consideration be had of it, it will appeare it was not above five years from the mentioned agitation for combination & the conclusion of this present confederation, the one beinge in June, 1638, the other agreed upon in May, 1643; and whereas it is affirmed that the propounding and standing upon an imposition of customes at the River's mouth hindered the combination soe many yeares, it shall (if need) be made appeare by the oath of those who were employed in that service, that they were soe far from stiffly standing upon such an imposition that they did not soe much as propounde it, as it is there expressed, nor could they in reason doe it, the townes havinge no interest in nor relation to the forte at that time.

"The fifth carrieth not that strength of reason with it as to compell our understanding to fall in therewith, for what intradement such an imposition is or can be to the inhabitants there, as to cause them to forsake their habitations upon that grounde, our thoughts reach not, especially considering if that jurisdiction grow exorbitant in their taxes, there is a remedy provided in this combination to rectify any such deviations; but if weakninge of estates be a sufficient plea to free men from paynge of taxes, we know not who will pay, for all such payments doe weaken men's estates.

"What is meant by taking of possession of the River (which was possesed by the other townes a considerable time before the foundation of that plantation was layd) & the greate charges in buildings we understand not, for we are wholly ignorant what expences they have bene at in that kinde, But for their owne particular private advantages; nor can we yeild a ready beleefe to what is affirmed, that if they had foreseen the or present imposition would have beene required they would not then have planted, for the thing carryeth that evidence of equity with it that Mr. Pinchon, while he looked upon himselfe as a member of that jurisdiction, acknowledged the same & yielded upon a motion made by himselfe to Mr. Fenicke (as we have it from his testimony deserving credit) that the trade of beaver upon the River, which is the greatest thing now stuck at, ought in reason to contribute to the charge of the forte; besides the encouragement given by Mr. Pinchon under his owne hand, by others to the gentlemen interested in Seabrooke forte, which might well draw out from them an addition to the former expense, there seems to deserve some weight of consideration in the present case.

"To the sixth we willingly assent, & in parallel cases shall readily submit."

The argument being concluded on the part of the colonies, the Commissioners gave their decision thereon in writing, of which the following is a copy, to wit:

"WHICH ARGUMENTS & answers being read & a further debate betwixt the Commissioners of the Massachusetts & Connecticut had, & Mr. Pinchon, then in Boston, being sent for and desired to add what further reasons he could against the impositions in question, he wholly referring to what the Generall Corte had done, it appeared to the Commissioners for the other two Colonies, upon their most serious consideration, that it was of weighty concernment to all the plantations upon the River of Connecticut that the mouth of the River & the passages of goods through it to and fro (though at some charge) be preserved, and seemed to them that though the forte at Seabrooke be not of force against an enemy of any considerable strength, yet an English plantation being now settled there it may more easily be preserved, & may in a comfortable measure secure the passage aforesaid for the convenience of all the plantations upon that River, of which benefite Springfield doth share with the rest. That though nothing be as yet demanded from the Dutch house within Hartford limits, yet this imposition, with other difference, are like to be considered in a fit season. That whatever conference hath formerly passed about the custome or imposition at Seabrooke, there never was any settled or demanded of any of the plantations upon that River have paid it, hath upon the same grounds bene demanded and expected of it from Springfield. That it is no impeachment of any liberty granted by patent to the Massachusetts that Springfield, seated upon the River of Connecticut, doe beare a moderate & equal parte of charges, whither of scouring any parte of that River, or River's mouth (if there should be occasion) or in making or maintayning such a forte as is in question to secure the passage to and fro. That the imposition in question is but the payment of 2*l* p. bushell for corne and about 1*l* p*t* for beaver passing out through ye mouth of that River, and therefore seemeth a moderate charge in reference to the custome propounded & no matter of just grievance or discouragement to the plantations themselves, then settled.

"The premises being weighed & considered with all due tenderness & respects to the Intresies, the said Commissioners for Plymouth & New Haven doe conceive and conclude: First, that Springfield doe henceforward from time to time give in to Connecticut or the Agent or agents a true note or account of all corne & beaver they or any of them ship, or carry out through the mouth of that River to the sea, to pay or deposit into their hands after the rate of 2*l* per bushell for corne & 20*s* per hogshedd for beaver soe exported.

"That the mentioned imposition be neither at any time hereafter raised nor increased upon any of the inhabitants of Springfield nor just & necessary cause, to be first approved & allowed by the other Colonies, nor continued longer than the forte in question is maintayned & the passage as at present thereby secured.

"That at the next meetinge of the Commissioners any Deputy from the Massachusetts Colony, or from Springfield plantation, shall have liberty further to propound or object as they see cause against the present imposition, which, according to the nature & proper weight of the matter alleadged, shall be duly heard & considered, without any disadvantage from the conclusion now made in the premises."

But this did not end the matter. On the 7th of September, 1648, the commissioners of the United Colonies met at Plymouth, and the dispute between the two colonies of Connecticut and Massachusetts in reference to import duties levied upon goods passing out of the mouth of Connecticut River was again renewed with considerable bitterness on both sides.

In addition to the reasons urged in the argument before the commissioners, the following year further reasons were urged on both sides, for a statement of which the reader is referred to the records of the commissioners.

After the conclusion of the arguments, the commissioners decided that they found not sufficient cause to reverse what was done the last year; but, as there were some questions in the matter still unsettled, among others, that of jurisdiction over Springfield, they desired that, if there were cause, the matter should be brought and presented to the commissioners for further consideration the next year, and "that in the mean time the colonies would agree upon some equal and satisfying way of running the Massachusetts line."

On the 3d of May, 1649, the action at the last meeting of the commissioners held at Plymouth, in September, 1648, confirming the action of the commissioners of the United Colonies at their meeting held in July, 1647, was presented to the court, and caused great indignation. Retaliatory measures were at once resolved upon, the nature of which can best be shown by quoting the records of the General Court, expressed in the quaint but forcible language of the times:

"May 3, 1649.

"THE ANSWER of the Court concerning Springfield wee think it meete that our commission^{ers}, at their next meeting, be mindfull to press what argumets and reasons they can for the reversion of the last order of the commissioners concerning Springfield, and, amongst other, these in speciall:

"1st. That the commissioners of Connecticut produced no pattent, or exemptionification thereof, or any order of their own Courte for their custome they require of Springfield.

"2nd. They had no evidence of any forte at all in being at the river's mouth, as we are informed.

"3d. By a clause in the commissioners' order, July, 1647, when they first determined against Springfield, page 111, they provided that the said imposition should be continued no longer than the forte in question was maintained, and the passage thereby secured as at that present; yett after the said forte was demolished by fire, and no security of the passage provided, the commissioners confirmed their former order at the last meeting.

"WHEREAS, the commissioners for the United Colonies have thought it but just & equal that Springfield, a member of this jurisdiction, should pay custome or contribution to the erecting and maintanency of Seabrooke forte, being of no force against an enemy of any considerable strength (before it was burnt) in the commissioners' owne judgment, expres in their owne order, page 109, which determination against Springfield they have also continued by an order at their last meeting at Plymouth (though the said forte was then demolished by fire, and the passage not secured), contrary to a clause in their order, provided on Springfield's behalfe, page 111; and forasmuch as this jurisdiction hath expended many thousand pounds in erecting and maintaining several forts which others (as well as ourselves) have received the benefit of, and have at present one principall forte or castle of good force against an enemy of considerable strength, well garrisoned, and otherwise furnished with sufficient ammunition, besides severall other fortes and batteries, whereby vessels and goods of all sorts are secured.

"IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED by this courte and the authority thereof, that all goods belonging, or any way appertaining to, any inhabitant of the jurisdiction of Plymouth, Connecticut, or New Haven, that shall be imported within the castle or exported from any parte of the Bay, shall pay such custome as hereafter is expressed, viz.: all skins of beaver, otter, mouse, or beare, two pence per skio; and all other goods packt up in hogsheds or otherwise, ten shillings pr tunne; meale and corne of all sorts, two pence per bushell; biskett, sixe pence pr hundred; & it is further ordered, that all such skins and other goods as shall be imported or exported as aforesaid shall be dewly entered with the Auditor Generall, and the custome thereof paid or deposited, before any parte of the said goods be either sold, shipt, landed, or otherwise disposed of, under the penalty of forfeiting the said goods not so entered, or the dew value thereof.

"And if any inhabitant of this jurisdiction, or stranger, shall buy any of the forementioned goods belonging or any ways appertaining to any of the inhabitants of Plymouth, Connecticut, or New Haven, aforesaid, imported to any other parte of our jurisdiction, or shall sell or deliver to any such inhabitant any other goods in any parte of the Bay, without the Bay, without the Castle, he shall enter the said goods with the auditor general, and pay or deposit the same, after the same manner and proportion, and under the same penalty, as is provided for goods, &c., brought within the castle. This order to take place the first day of the next month.

"And the auditor general is hereby appointed and authorized to take care for the execution of this order in all the particulars thereof, either by himself or by his deputy or deputies."*

In July, 1649, another special meeting of the commissioners of the United Colonies was convened at Boston, and the controversies between Massachusetts and Connecticut were again brought to its notice.

In behalf of Massachusetts it was represented that she had agreed with Mr. Fenwick, who represented Connecticut, to run the boundary-line between the two colonies at their joint expense. That the line had been run accordingly, but at the sole charge of Massachusetts. And as Mr. Fenwick had "failed to send in any to join," and as Connecticut was dissatisfied and desired the work to be done anew, it ought to be at her own cost.

The nature of the past relations of Springfield, both to Massachusetts and Connecticut, was now at some length discussed. On the part of Massachusetts, it was denied, 1st. That there was "any fort at all in being, worthy the name of a fort." 2d. It was denied that "any instance could be given of any government in the world that had compelled the people of any other jurisdiction to contribute to the erecting of a fort or place of strength by which they might rule over them and order them at pleasure, as well as be a protection to them." Massachusetts also produced the vote passed two months before, quoted above, imposing retaliatory duties, not only upon Connecticut, but also upon Plymouth and New Haven.

As the quarrel was now becoming general, the commissioners of the other colonies forwarded a remonstrance to Massachusetts against her action, and with proper dignity resolved that they "desired to be spared in any case all further agitations concerning Springfield."

This prompt and decisive action on the part of Massachusetts, the more powerful colony, and which seems to have been just, under the circumstances, at once decided the contest. The manner of its termination is best shown by quoting from the Massachusetts General Court.

"May 23, 1650.

"IN ANSWER to the petition of the inhabitants of Boston for repealing the order that requires custome of the other colonies.

"This Court, having been credibly informed that the jurisdiction at Quenebecott will for the present suspend the taking of any custome of us, & that at their next Generall Court, they intend to repeale the order whereby they imposed it, doth therefore HEREBY ORDER that there shall be no more custome required of the other confederate colonies until we shall certainly know that Connecticut doe take custome of us p. curiam."

CHAPTER XIII.

WITCHCRAFT.

I.

THE BELIEF IN IT UNIVERSAL IN FORMER TIMES.

THE tragic events growing out of the witchcraft delusion of the seventeenth century in New England cast sombre shadows over the brightest page of her history, the era of her early struggles through the wilderness to the promised land of her prosperity and power. But those tragic scenes were after all the outgrowth of the prevailing errors and superstitions of the times, heightened by the rigorous circumstances under which they lived, rather than the result of any inherent viciousness in the character of the New England people.

The belief in witchcraft was one of the lingering superstitions of the Middle Ages. It was by no means peculiar to New England. All Christendom was at the time still thoroughly imbued with the most implicit belief in witches, and in the power of Satan to possess individual men and women, and use them as his instruments in tormenting and destroying the souls and bodies of their fellows. All Christendom, too, at the time, with rare exceptions, was ferreting out witches by due form of law, convicting them at courts presided over by the most eminent judges of the day, and burning their bodies eventually at the stake. What wonder then that the stern and sombre theologians of New England should be zealous in doing what no one, unprejudiced, disputes they honestly believed was God's service, in ridding the world of those whom they deemed to be Satan's chosen children?

These considerations are not urged by way of excuse or justification, for to excuse or justify such doings would be to uphold grievous wrongs, but they are urged by way of explanation. They do not justify, but they do explain, many things which have so often been charged as being inconsistent with the religious professions of the Puritan Fathers. Duty, duty toward God and man, was the one solemn incentive which moved the stern hearts and strong minds of the primitive people of New England, and do it they must, though to do it was to walk, with stained hands and blistering feet through blood and fire.

Books on sorcery, magic, witchcraft, and kindred subjects, were brought to this country by the early settlers, and taken with them to their lonely, secluded homes, in the dreary solitudes of the New World. These books, doubtless, were most attentively studied, and their contents colored and enlarged upon by imaginations expanded into marvelous powers by the unseen terrors of the limitless wilderness,—the boundless extent of woods and waters and mountain chains, stretching off in infinite expanse on every hand, peopled, they knew, with savage beasts and still more savage men, and, for aught they knew, with countless ghosts, hobgoblins, nymphs, and fairies.

So the early settlers around Boston about 1630, and the early settlers of the Quin-nee-ti-cutt Valley, who came with William Pynchon to Ag-a-wam, now Springfield, in the spring of 1636, and the early settlers of Indian Non-o-tuck, now Northampton, in 1654, and of Indian Nol-wo-togg, now Hadley, in 1661, had hardly got within the rude walls of their log cabins before the trouble of witchcraft began to haunt their firesides, like dim spectres of evil.

Yet so much prominence has been given to the so-called Salem witchcraft, which occurred as late as the year 1692, that the numerous cases which happened both before and since, in all parts of the country, have been quite overlooked by the general, and almost entirely passed over by the local, historians of New England. "It can hardly be supposed," says Samuel G. Drake, in his "Annals of Witchcraft in New England" published as No. VIII. of "Woodward's Historical Series," at Boston, in 1869, "that they purposely omit those Details with a Belief that they will be forgotten, and the Reproach they occasion with them. This would be a short-sighted Decision indeed. But the Affair at Salem has not been omitted. That has been a Peg on which to hang Reproaches against New England, early and late; as though it were the Corner-stone of all the Troubles of the kind which ever happened in the land."

EDWARD SEYMOUR'S PROPHECY IN 1637.

Dr. Cotton Mather, in his book called "The Wonders of the Invisible World," printed in Boston, in 1692, thus begins his first discourse, entitled "Enchantments Encountered."

"It was as long ago as the year 1637, that a faithful minister of the Church of England, whose name was Mr. Edward Seymour, did, in a sermon afterwards printed, thus express himself: 'At New England now the sun of comfort begins to appear, and the glorious day-star to show itself; Sed Venient

* Mass. Col. Rec., Vol. III., p. 151.

Annis Sæculæ Scæis, there will come times in after-ages when the clouds will overshadow and darken the sky there. Many now promise to themselves nothing but successive happiness there, which, for a time, through God's mercy, they may enjoy, and I pray God they may a long time; but in this world there is no happiness perpetual.' An observation, or I had almost said an inspiration," continues Mather, "very dismally now verify'd upon us."

WITCHCRAFT DEFINED.

Edward Phillips, a nephew of John Milton, was one of the earliest English lexicographers. The third edition of his work, "The New World of Words," was printed in 1671. In that he defines witchcraft to be "A certain evil Art whereby with the Assistance of the Devil, or evil Spirits, some Wonders may be wrought which exceed the common Apprehension of Men. It cometh from the Dutch Word Wiechelen,—that is, to divine or guess; it is called in Latin Veneficium; in Greek, Pharmaccia,—i.e., the Art of making Poisons."

Dr. Ogilvie, in his "Imperial Dictionary," published in Glasgow in 1856-59, thus defines it:

"WITCHCRAFT: the practice of witches; sorcery; enchantments; intercourse with the devil; a supernatural power persons were formerly supposed to obtain possession of which by entering into compact with the devil. Indeed, it was fully believed that they gave themselves up to him body and soul, while he engaged that they should want for nothing and be able to assume whatever shape they pleased, to visit and torment their enemies, and accomplish their infernal purposes. As soon as the bargain was concluded, the devil was said to deliver to the witch an imp or familiar spirit, to be ready at call, and to do whatever it was directed. By the aid of this imp and the devil together, the witch, who was almost always an old woman, was enabled to transport herself through the air on a broomstick or a spit, and to transform herself into various shapes, particularly those of cats and hares; to inflict diseases on whomsoever she pleased, and to punish her enemies in a variety of ways. The belief in witchcraft is very ancient. It was universally believed in Europe till the sixteenth century, and even maintained its ground with tolerable firmness till the middle of the seventeenth century. Vast numbers of reputed witches were condemned to be burned every year, so that in England alone it is computed that no fewer than thirty thousand of them suffered at the stake."

The bargain between the witch and the devil was said to have been this: "The witch as a slave binds herself by vow to believe in the devil, and to give him either body or soul, or both, under his handwriting or some part of his blood. The devil promiseth to be ready at his vassal's command, to appear in the likeness of any creature, to consult and to aid him for the procuring of pleasure, honor, wealth, or preferment; to go for him, to carry him any whither, and to do any command."*

LAWS AGAINST WITCHCRAFT.

In the year 1636 the colony of Plymouth included in their summary of offenses "lyable to Death" a statement in these words: "Solemn Compaction, or conversing with the Divell by way of Witchcraft, Conjuraction, or the like."

In 1641 the colony of Massachusetts Bay adopted their "Body of Liberties," in which they incorporated these words, drawn from the Bible: "If any Man or Woman be a Witch, that is, hath or consulteth with a familiar Spirit, they shall be put to death."

In 1642 Connecticut also included witchcraft in her penal code as a crime subject to the death penalty.

In 1647 the General Court of Rhode Island, in the Acts of May of that year, included this: "Witchcraft is forbidden by this present Assembly to be used in this Colonie; and the penalty imposed by the Authoritie that we are subject to is Felonie of Death."

II.

TRIALS FOR WITCHCRAFT.

In the year 1648, on the 15th of June, the first execution for witchcraft in the colony of Massachusetts took place at Boston.† The victim was Margaret Jones, wife of Thomas Jones, of Charlestown. She was a nurse and physician,—an employment common enough in those days among the mothers of the early settlements,—and literally went about doing good. But she was suspected of witchcraft, and "was found to have such a malignant touch as many persons were taken with deafness or vomiting, or other violent pains or sickness." Her accusers also said that "her medicines, though harmless in themselves, yet had extraordinary violent effects." It was further said that to those who refused her medicines "she would tell that they would never be healed, and accordingly their diseases and hurts continued with relapse against the ordinary course, and beyond the apprehension of all physicians and surgeons." It was proved in court against her that, as she lay in prison, "a little child was seen to run from her into another room, and, being followed by an officer, it was vanished." Other testimony, equally ridiculous, need not be recited. The poor forsaken woman was deserted by all those to whom she had shown nothing but kindness, and she perished miserably on the gallows, a victim to the infatuation of the hour.

WITCHCRAFT IN SPRINGFIELD.

Among the earliest trials for witchcraft which took place in the colony were those of Hugh Parsons and Mary, his wife, of Springfield. Hugh Parsons was one of the first settlers of Springfield. He probably went there in Mr. Pyncheon's company in the year 1636, or very soon after. He was a laboring man, and a sawyer and brick-maker by occupation. On the 27th of October, 1645, he married a young woman, named Mary Lewis. The first child of this marriage of which there is any record was born the 4th of October, 1649. It was named Samuel, and lived but one year. On the 26th of October, 1650, their son Joshua was born. It was soon after the birth of this child that the charge of witchcraft was made against the father. The mother's sickness, joined with the exciting incidents of the blight upon her family, rendered her hopelessly insane. It was alleged her unhappy condition was brought about by witchcraft. In her ravings she accused both her husband and herself of witchcraft. Her second child, bereft of a mother's care, died on the 1st of March, 1651. She first accused her husband of being the cause of its death, brought about by his league with the devil, and at last accused herself of murdering it under the same satanic influence.

Early in the year 1651, Hugh Parsons was apprehended, and a long and tedious examination of his case was had before Mr. William Pyncheon, sitting as magistrate in Springfield. At the close of the examination he was sent to Boston for trial. At Boston a bill of indictment was found against him, as follows, to wit:

"The grand jury for this commonwealth present Hugh Parsons, of Springfield, not having the fear of God before his eyes, in or about March last, and divers times before and since at Springfield aforesaid (as they conceived), had familiar and wicked converse with the Devil, and did use divers devilish practices and witchcraft, to the hurt of divers persons, as by several witnesses and circumstances doth appear, and do leave him to the court for his further trial for life."

His trial came on. Witnesses were produced in court, and

* See Drake's Hist. Witchcraft Delusion in N. E., Vol. I., p. 18.

† Drake's Annals of Witchcraft in New England, p. 58.

the testimony taken before Mr. Pynchon, at Springfield, was read to the jury. The verdict of the trial-jury was in writing, as follows:

"The jury of Life and Death finds against Hugh Parsons, by the testimony of such as appeared in court, so much as gives him grounds not to clear him; but considered with the testimonies of divers that are at Springfield, whose testimonys were only sent in writing, as also the confession of Mary Parsons, and the impeachment of some of the bewitched persons of the said Hugh Parsons, and the impeachment of the bewitched persons, or other of them, and the testimonies that are in writing, but appeared not in person,—authentic testimonies, according to law,—then the jury finds the said Hugh Parsons guilty of the sin of witchcraft.

"EDWARD HUTCHINSON, Foreman.

"With the consent of the rest of the jury."

In the mean time the poor demented wife had confessed herself a witch, and that she had killed the child herself, whose death it had been alleged was caused by the practice of witchcraft in the husband. Mary Parsons was imprisoned upon the double charge of witchcraft and murder. Her case was presented to the grand jury, and two indictments found. She was tried, and found guilty of murder only. Her case was reviewed by the General Court, and on the 7th of May, 1651, the following opinion was recorded:

"Mary Parsons, of Springfield, having two Bills of Indictment framed against her, the one for having familiarity with the Devil, as a witch, to which she pleaded not guilty, and not sufficient evidence appearing to prove the same, she was acquitted of witchcraft. The second indictment was for willfully and most wickedly murdering her own child, to which she pleaded guilty; consent the fact, and according to her deserts condemned to die."

This proceeding against the miserable wife changed the aspect of the husband's case. His case was reviewed by the General Court on the 27th of May, 1651, and the following conclusion is recorded:

"The magistrate, not consenting to the verdict of the jury in the Parsons case, the cause coming legally to the General Court for issue, the court, on perusal of the evidence brought in against him for witchcraft, do judge that he is not legally guilty of witchcraft, so not to die by our law."

So ended the first trial for witchcraft in Springfield. The wife was doubtless hanged, and Parsons never returned to the valley of the Connecticut to live.

Capt. Edward Johnson, in his "Wonder-Working Providence," published in 1654, says of Springfield, "There hath of late been moer than one or two in this town greatly suspected of witchcraft, yet they have used much diligence both for the finding them out and for the Lord's assisting them against their witchery; yet have they, as is supposed, bewitched not a few persons, among whom two of the Reverend Elder's children." The Reverend Elder referred to was Mr. George Moxon, the first minister settled at Springfield, who went to England with Mr. Pynchon the year after.

To show the reader the flimsy and nonsensical nature of the evidence in such cases a part of the testimony adduced in this case is given below, that relating to the death of the child being omitted. The whole testimony is printed at length in the Appendix to Drake's "Annals of Witchcraft in New England."

HUGH PARSONS' EXAMINATION.

"All these testimonies now taken upon oath Before me.

"WILLIAM PYNCHON.

"HUGH PARSONS—You are attached upon supposition of Witchcraft.

"Feb. 25, 1650, George Lankton saith on oath that his wife made a pudding in a bag, and because my wife had the child, I took it and put it out of the bag at dinner this day fortnight

(which was the 11th of Feb.), and as it slipt out of the bag it fell into two pieces lengthwise, and in appearance it was cut straight along as smooth as if it had been cut with a knife. It was cut straight along almost the whole length; it lacked but very little. Hannah, the wife of George Lankton, doth upon oath concur with her husband in the said testimony.

"Feb. 23, 1650-51, George Lankton and Hannah, his wife, jointly testify upon oath that they had another pudding in the former bag that was cut lengthwise, and as it was slipt out of the bag it fell into three parts, one piece being cut all along on the one side, and two pieces all along on the other side. Then they sent for some neighbors to see it.

"Roger Pritchard testified upon oath that he saw the said pudding, and it seemed to him to be cut all the three pieces as evident and as plain to him as that which George Lankton cut with his knife.

"These testimonies were all taken upon oath before me.

"WILLIAM PYNCHON.

"George Lankton and Hannah, his wife, do jointly testify upon oath that on Friday last, being the 21 February, they had a pudding in the same bag, and that as soon as it was slipped out of the bag it was cut lengthwise like the former pudding and like another on the 23 Feb., as smooth as any knife could cut it, namely, one slice all along, wanting but very little from end to end.

"Also Hannah, the wife of George Lankton, saith upon oath that a neighbor came in and she showed it to him, and that neighbor took a piece of it and threw it into the fire; and she saith that about an hour after, perhaps a little moer, she heard one mutter at the door; then she asked Goody Sewell, who was then at her house (and near the door), who it was; she said it was Hugh Parsons, and that he asked whether Goodman Lankton were at home or no. I said no, and so he went away, but left not his errand.

"Deposed in court by Hannah.

"Hugh Parsons being asked what his answer was, he spake to other things and not to the question. Being asked the 2d time what his errand was, he spake again of other matters and not the question. Being asked the 3d time what his errand was, and charged to make a direct answer, then he said it was to get some hay of him. Being asked again whether he had propounded his errand since to Goodman Lankton, he said he never saw him since.

"Then one or two that weer present testified that they saw him meet Goodman Lankton next day below.

"Symon Bemon and Rice Bodorthe say upon oath, that the next day but one they saw Hugh Parsons meet Goodman Lankton accompanied with Thomas Sewell in the street, and they saw him speak to Goodman Lankton.

"George Lankton saith on oath that he never to this day asked him for any.

"When Hugh Parsons saw himself taken tardy in this put of, then he said that he did not ask him because John Lumbard had told him that Goodman Lankton had sold more hay to Goodman Herman than he could spare. But after inquiry, John Lumbard saith upon oath, March 17, 1650-51, that the Wednesday before that Hugh Parsons came to Goodman Lankton's House for hay; that he had spoken to buy some hay of Goodman Lankton, namely, as he passed by, wheer he and Hugh Parsons were at work together, and had a denial. And then he told Hugh Parsons that Goodman Lankton could spare him no hay, for he had already sold more to Goodman Herman than he could spare, and said he should now want himself.

"John Lumbard also saith on oath, that the Friday after when the said Pudding was so strangely cut he told Hugh Parsons that Lankton had no hay to sell.

"Hugh Parsons not being able to reply any further, it is evident that his coming to the door of Goodman Lankton presently after the burning of the pudding, which was the next day after John Lumbard had told him that he had no hay to spare, that his errand to get hay was no true cause of his coming thither, but rather that the Spirit that bewitched the pudding brought him thither.

"Mary Parsons being present at the 2d examination saith, one reason why I have suspected my husband to be a witch is because all that he sells to any body doth not prosper. I am sorry, said she, for that poor man Tho. Millar, for two days after my husband and he had bargained for a piece of ground Thomas Millar had that mischance of that cut in his leg.

"Thomas Millar being present saith upon oath, that he being in company with several other workman about timber trees in the woods, as we weer at dinner and merry together Hugh Parsons sat on a bough somewhat higher than the rest. Then one of the company started this question: I wonder why he sits there? Thomas Miller saith he answered, To see what we have, and then I began to speak of the cutting of the pudding in town.

"Thomas Cooper being present with the said workmen saith, that he was much troubled in his mind because Thomas Millar spake so plainly to Hugh Parsons least some evil event should follow.

"And both Tho. Cooper and Thomas Millar say upon oath, that Hugh Parsons was as merry and as pleasant before this speech about the pudding as any in the company, but after this he was wholly silent and spake not a word in reply about the pudding, but sat dumb. And Thomas Millar saith, that about half-a-quarter of an hour after, at his first setting to work, his leg was cut.

"April 3, 1651, Thomas Burnham saith upon oath, that he said to Hugh Parsons, a little before his apprehension, 'heer is strange doings in town, about cutting of puddings and whetting of saws in the night time.' Hugh Parsons heard these things much agitated among divers then present, and was wholly silent, but at last he said, 'I never heard these things before this night.' Thomas Burnham saith he said to him that is strange that you should not hear of these things, and I, being but a stranger in town, do hear of it in all places, wherever I come. At this Hugh Parsons held down his head and was wholly silent, but he took occasion to speak of other by matters, as pleasantly as anybody else, but to the matter of the pudding he would say nothing; and yet, saith Thomas Burnham, I spake to him of it several times, and of the whetting of saws, on purpose to see what Hugh Parsons would say to it, but still he continued silent, and would not speak anything about these things. Then Goodman Mauu being present, said, I would that those who whet saws in the night time and on Lord's days were found out. Then saith Thomas Burnham, I said you sawyers you had need to look to it. Hugh Parsons being a sawyer, never returned any answer, but still continued silent. This matter about the pudding and whetting of saws was often tossed up and down between several persons, and many said they never heard the like. And Hugh Parsons was often spoken to in particular and asked if he ever heard the like, but still he continued wholly silent.

"Joane, the wife of William Warrence, and Abigall, the wife of Goodman Mann, being present when the said speeches were used, do acknowledge that they remember all things that have been related by Thomas Burnham, and that Hugh Parsons was wholly silent, and do testify the same upon oath, the day and year above said.

"SECOND COUNT.

"Blanche Bodorthe saith on oath, Feb. 27, and March 1st, and March 18th, 1649, that about two years since, Hugh Parsons being at our house, we had some speeches about a bargain with my husband about some bricks, and then Blanch Bodorthe saith that she spake something about the said bricks that did much displease Hugh Parsons; thereupon he said unto me, Gammer, you needed not have said anything. I spake not to you, but I shall remember you when you little think on it. . . . Blanch Bodorthe doth testify upon oath, that soon after this threatening speech, as she was going to bed, and had put off her waistcoat made of red shag cotten, and as she was going to hang it up on a pin, she held it up between her hands, and then she saw a light, as it had been the light of a candle, crossing the back of her waistcoat on the inside, three times, one after another, at which she was amazed; and therefore she saith that after she had laid it down she took it up again, to try if the firelight might not be the cause of it, but she saith that the firelight being all one, as it was before, she could not perceive any such light by it, and besides, she saith it could not be the firelight, because there was a double Indian mat compassing the bed and the place where she was, so that it could not be the firelight, for this double mat was betwixt her and the fire; and she saith, moreover, that because this light was so strange to her, she took her waistcoat several other nights to try if the firelight would not give such a light as she saw first, and held it up the same way that she did at first, but she saith she could not perceive any such light afterward.

"2dly. About a month after this she saith that when she was in child-bed, and as well as most women used to be and better than she used to be, yet at the week's end, being desirous to sleep, she lay still that she might sleep, and she did sleep. And yet about an hour or more after she awaked and felt a soreness about her heart, and this soreness increased more and more in three places, namely, under her left breast and on her left shoulder and in her neck: and in these three places the pain was so tedious that it was like the pricking of knives, so that I durst not lie down but was fain to be shored up with a bag of cotton-wool and with other things, and this extremity continued from Friday in the forenoon till Monday about noon, and then the extremity of the pain began to abate, and by Tuesday it was pretty well gone; and suddenly after my thoughts were that this evil might come upon me from the said threatening speech of Hugh Parsons.

"3dly. Blanch Bodorthe saith, upon oath, that my child, being about two years old, as he was standing near to his father, did hastily run to him, and strived to get up upon his knees, and cried, 'I am afraid of the dog!' and yet theer was no dog theer. His father asked him wheer the dog was: he said it was gone under the bed. His father asked him whose dog it was. He said it was Lumbard's dog: his father said that Lumbard had no dog; then he said again it was Parsons' dog: but the child's meaning was at first that it was Parsons' dog. I know it by this, because when Parsons did after use to come to our house, he did often call him Lumbard. And ever and anon he is much affrighted with this dog, and doth often speak of it, and yet Parsons hath no dog, neither was there any dog in the house; but the earnestness of the child, both then and since, doth make me conceive it might be some evil thing from Hugh Parsons.

"Hugh Parsons having heard all these testimonies, alleged stood still at his 2d examination, as at the first, and made no answer.

"MR. MOXON'S CHILDREN.

"Your wife saith that she suspects you may be the cause of all the evil that is befallen to Mr. Moxon's children, because, when she hath spoken to you about the bargain of bricks that you undertook to make for Mr. Moxon's chimnies, and that she thought Mr. Moxon would expect the performance of the said bargain, thereupon you said if Mr. Moxon do force me to make bricks according to bargain I will be even with him, or he shall get nothing by it; for she saith that these two speeches are very usual with you when you are displeased with anybody.

"Answering, Hugh Parsons saith, I said not that I would be even with him; but this I said, if he would hold me to my bargain I could puzzle him in the bargain.

"John Mathews being present, saith, upon oath, that when he went with Hugh Parsons to fetch some of his fannell bricks, he said to Hugh Parsons: 'Do not you make more bricks for Mr. Moxon's chimnies he will stay with us now, and then I believe he will have up his chimnies.' Hugh Parsons said, 'No; that I know of;' then said I, 'Mr. Moxon will hold you to your bargain about the said bricks;' then said he, 'If he do I will be even with him.' And when Hugh Parsons made my chimnies he did often use the same speech; and when he is displeased with anybody it his usual speech.

"At this testimony of John Mathews, Hugh Parsons was silent and made no reply.

"Mr. Moxon being present, saith, the same week that I spake to Hugh Parsons about the bricks, and to his wife about another business, my daughter Martha was taken ill with her fitts. I confess, also, that when I spake to him of the said bargain, that Hugh said I could not, in strictness, hold him to the bargain. But this last answer doth not take off the ill purpose of his former threatening.

"4th. Sarah, the wife of Alexander Edwards, testifies upon oath, Feb. 27th, 1650, that about two years ago, more or less, Hugh Parsons, being then at the Longmeadow, came to her house to buy some milk; she said, 'I will give you a half-penny worth, but I cannot let you have any more at this time.' This was at that time when my cow gave three quarts at a meal; but the next meal after she gave not above a quart, and it was as yellow as saffron, and yet the cow ailed nothing that I could discern. The next meal it altered to another strange, odd color, and so it did every meal; for a week together it still altered to some odd color or other, and also it grew less and less; and yet all the while the cow was as well as at any time before, as far as I could discern; and about a week after she began to mend her milk again, without any means used. Upon this I had thoughts that Hugh Parsons might be the cause of it.

"Alexander Edwards swore that George Coulton saw the milk in strange colors.

"Hugh Parsons saith that he did not lie one night at ye Long Meddow that Somer, but only in the Spring of the Yeere, eather in March or in the beginning of Aprill, when he set up fencing there, and that he never had Milk of her but that one Tyme; and at that Tyme of the Yeere he thinks her Cow could not give three Quarts at a Meale.

"But now at his 2nd Examination, May the 18th, 1650, he seeing Alexander Edwards about to testify ye contrary, he confesseth that he lay a night there in plantinge Tyme, about the end of May.

"I remember ye Alexander Edwards came to me to tell me of this accident, and said that he was perswaded the Cow was bewitched by Hugh Parsons; but I did not believe him at that tyme. I rather conceived that the Cow was falling into some dangerous sickness; for such a sudden abatement I tould him was a sign of some dangerous sicknesse at hand; but, seeing no sicknesse followed, I tould Hugh Parsons that such a sudden change could not come from a Naturall Cause.

"5thly. Anthony Dorchester saith upon oath, Feby. 25, 1650, the 1st Day of the 1st Month and the 18th Day, that about September was twelve Monthes, four had equall shares in a Cow; each had a Quarter, and ye Offall was to be divided also; and Hugh Parsons desired to have the roote of the Tongue; but he had it not, it fell to my share; and a certaine time after I had salted it, I tooke the said Roote and another peace of Meete, and put it into the Kettle as it was boylinge over the Fire at Hugh Parsons' House, where I lived at that present; and there was no body there but his wife, and I and my wife, who was sick of a consumption, sittinge on her bed and not able to gett of without help; neather were any of my children able to take such a Thinge out of a boyling kettle. This being the Sabbath Day, Hugh Parsons and his wife went to Church before me; then I made myself ready and went presently after them, and came Home before them, and took up my Meate before they came Home, but the Roote of the Toung, which Hugh Parsons formerly desyred, was gonn; his wife come Home presently after me (but he came not with her). Then I told her, and she wondered how it could be gonn; and she went to ye Tubb where it was salted to see if it might nott be forgotten, and it was not there. Then said I to her, I am sure I put it into the boyling Kettle, and she confessed that she saw me pick it and wash it, and being present did much wonder ye strange going of it away, and said that she feared her Husband might convey it away. She tould me that her Husband went along with her till we came to Goodman Merricke's, and was very pleasing to her, more than usually he had bin a great while before; but there he laid the Child downe and went no further with her; and she saw him no more till ye Meeting was almost donn (all this Mary Parsons, being present, dothe aeknowledg). Presently after this he came home; then I spake of it to him, and all that he said was that he thought I did not put it in; but I tould him that I was sure I put it into the boyling Kettle. And I have ever since believed that no Hand of Man did take it away, but that it was taken away by Witchcraft.

"Ans. Hugh Parsons confesseth that he desyred the Roote of ye Toung, but withall saith he is ignorant as ye Child unborn which way it went. Some by-Standard objected it might be taken away by his wife as well as by him. But that is not so likely, because Hugh Parsons went not with her to ye Meeting, but laid down her Child and went from her, and she saw him no more till Meeting was almost donn.

"Ans. Hugh Parsons saith that he doth not remember that he went away any whither, unlesse he might go into Goodwin Merricke's Howse to take a pipe of Tobacoe; and though his wife saw him no more till the Meeting was almost donn, yet he saith he might be standing without the Dore, though she saw him not. And at his 2nd examination he asked how it did appeare that he came not to the Meeting till it was almost donn.

"Abigail Mun, being present, doth testifie upon Oath that she knew by the Talk about the strange going away of this Roote of the Toung what Sabbath was meant, and she saith that she saw him come that Sabbath to ye meeting when ye Sermon was well onward.

"Jonathan Taylor deposed in open Courte, saith that he heard the said Parsons say (notwithstanding the Roote of the Toung was desired by Anthony Dorchester for his wife, being sicke), yett he said I will have it.

"6thly. Griffin Jones saith upon Oath, Feby. 25, 1650, March 1 and 18 Day, that when he lived at his House nere Hugh Parsons' House about 2 yrs. agoe, on a Lord's Day I went Home to Dinner; I took up my Dinner and laid it on a little Table made on ye Cradle Head. I sought for a Knife and could not find any. I cleered the Table where I dined to see if any were there; and I searched every where about ye House, and I could find none. I went to an ould Basket where I had Things to mend Shoes withall, and there was a rusty Knife, and with that I was faine to eate my Dinner. After I had dined, I tooke away ye Victuals that were left and laid it up; and then I laid the rusty Knife on the corner of the Table to cutt a pip of Tobacoe withall.

"But before I cut my Tobacoe I first went out of Dore to serve a Pigg that was a very little of the Dore, and no man could come in but I must see them; and as soon as I come in to cutt my Tobacoe with the said rusty knife, there lay three Knives together on ye Table, which made me blush, wondering how they come there seeing no Body was in ye House but my self; and I was going to cut ye Tobacoe, Hugh Parsons come in, and said, where is the Man? Are you ready to go to ye Meet-inge? I said by and by, as soon as I have taken a pipe of Tobacco. So he staid and took some with me.

Ans. Hugh Parsons saith he is ignorant of any such Thing, and in the sight of God can cleare his Conscience.

"It was tould him that such a strange Thinge fallinge oute just at his comeing in did minister just occasion of Suspition of Witchcraft; he replied that one Witness was not sufficient.

"7thly. Mary Parsons, his wife, saith that one Reason why she doth suspect you to be a Witch is because you cannot abide that any thing should be spoken against Witches. She saith that you tould her that you were at a Neighbor's House a little before Lecture, when they were speaking of Carrington and his Wife, that were now apprehended for Witches; she saith that when you came Home and spake these speeches to her she said to you, I hope that God will find out all such wicked Persons and purge New England of all Witches ere it be long. To this she saith you gave her a naughty looke, but never a word; but presently after, on a leight Occasion, you took up a Block, and made as if you would throw it at her head, but yet, in ye end, you did not, but threw it downe on ye hearth of ye chimney. This expression of ye anger was because she wished the Ruin of all Witches.

"Mary Ashley testifies this substance uppon Oath.

Ans. Hugh Parsons saith he dare not remember that ever he tooke up a Block to throw at her, but uppon further Debate he said at last that he tooke up a Block but remembered not the Occasion; at his 2nd Answer he saith that he took up no Block on that Occasion.

Replie: it might well be on that Occasion, for not long since she saith that you said to her, if ever any Trouble doe come unto you, it will be by her Meanes, and that she would be the Meanes to hang you.

Ans. Hugh Parsons saith that he might say so, because in his Anger he is impatient, and doth speak what he should not. At his 2nd Examination, he said he might say so, because she is the worst Enemy that I have, considering the Relation that is betweene us; and if any Body bespeake Evill of me she will speake as ill and as much as any Body else.

"Mary Parsons replied, I have often intreated him to confesse whether he were a Witch or no. I tould him that if he would acknowledge it I would begg the Prayers of God's People on my knees for him; and that we are not our owne, we are bought with a Price, and that God would redeeme from the power of Sathan, &c.

"Hugh Parsons was asked if his Wife had spoken Anything to him at any Tyme to confess Witchcraft.

Ans. Not anything to me about Witchcraft, that I remember.

"Mary Parsons saith, did I not speake of it to you uppon the death of my Child? did I not tell you then that I had jealousies that you had bewitched your own Child to Death?

"To this he was silent, and made no answer.

"Then she desyred Anthony Dorchester, that lived then in their House, whether he could not remember that she had charged her husband with the bewitching of his child.

"Anthony Dorchester said that he did not remember that ever she spoke directly to him of bewitching his Child, but that she had jealousies that he had bewitched his child to death.

"Mary Parsons said that when her last Child was ill she tould him that she suspected he had bewitched that, as he had done his other child, and said, I have spoken of it to him, and to other Folkes, together above forty Tymes.

"It was alledged that he might well be suspected to have he witched his former Child to Death, because he expressed no Kind of Sorrow at the Death of it.

Ans. Hugh Parsons saith that he was loath to express any Sorrow before his wife, because of the weak condition that she was in at that Tyme.

MARY RANDALL.

The foregoing trial of Hugh Parsons and Mary, his wife, for witchcraft, seems to have been the first one had for that offense in the valley, and the case of Mary Randall seems to have been the last one entertained in the Hampshire County courts.

On the 29th day of September, 1691, Mary Randall was brought before the court at Springfield upon the charge of witchcraft. The complaint against her was entertained by the court, but for some reason or other,—it may have been for want of sufficient evidence to conviet her,—the case was put over for a year. William Randall, her father, became surety for her good behavior, but no trial or other proceedings were ever had. In her case the following record was made:

"Mary Randall being presented to this court for Witchcraft, the several evidences were produced and read in court. The court, upon the serious thoughts of her examination and alleged evidence against her, did declare that there was vehement suspicion of her having familiarity with the Devil; did therefore order her committed to prison in Springfield, until security be given in the sum of ten pounds for her good behavior until the next court at Springfield, this time come twelve months.

"William Randall, her father, did become surety in the sum of twenty pounds for his said daughter, for her good behavior as aforesaid."

III.

WITCHCRAFT IN NORTHAMPTON.

Mrs. Mary Parsons.—Among the most important trials for witchcraft which took place in the colony of Massachusetts Bay was that of Mrs. Mary Parsons, wife of Joseph Parsons, a man of wealth and high standing residing at Northampton.

In the month of July, in the year 1674, Mrs. Mary Bartlett, wife of Samuel Bartlett, of Northampton, sickened and died. Such "chirurgeons" as the young settlement then afforded were at a loss as to the nature of her malady, and a ready solution of the difficulty was arrived at by attributing it to witchcraft. Of course some one must be fixed upon for the witch. To the surprise of everybody, in this instance a person of no less standing and accomplishments than Mary Parsons was fixed upon as the guilty person. Soon after the death of Mrs. Bartlett, her husband, Samuel Bartlett, began to procure evidence, in the shape of depositions made by divers persons against Mrs. Parsons, for the purpose of substantiating his accusations against her before the next court, to be held at Springfield on the 29th day of September following.

Mrs. Parsons, aware of what was going on, did not wait to be served with process, but voluntarily appeared in person before the court to answer her accusers. In her plea she denied her guilt, and in a speech to the court "she did assert her own innocency, often mentioning how clear she was of such a crime, and that the righteous God knew her innocency, and she left her cause in his hand." But, notwithstanding her most solemn protestations of innocence, the court at Springfield proceeded to entertain the case, and, as the record shows, "appointed a jury of soberdized, chaste women to make diligent search upon the body of Mary Parsons, whether any marks of witchcraft appear, who gave in their account to the court on oath of what they found." This report, with the depositions, was sent to the governor and magistrates, at Boston, and Mrs. Parsons was ordered to appear before them; and she was also bound over in the sum of fifty pounds, with her husband as surety, for her further appearance at the Hampshire County court.

On the 2d day of March, 1675, her case was presented to the grand jury of the court, and an indictment found against her. Upon the finding of the bill of indictment against her, she was sent to prison to await her trial.

Her trial came on on the 13th day of May following. In the indictment she was charged with witchcraft, "in that she had, not having the fear of God before her eyes, entered into familiarity with the Devil, and committed sundry acts of witchcraft on the person or persons of one or more." To this charge she entered the plea of "not guilty," and after the matter was submitted to the trial-jury they brought in a verdict of acquittal. Thus ended the trial of Mary Parsons, of Northampton. An attempt was made afterward to fasten the guilt upon her son, John Parsons, but the court deemed the evidence against him insufficient, and the case was abandoned.

Again, in 1679, the "powers of darkness" were visible in Northampton. On the 7th of March of that year one John Stebbins died in an "unusual manner."

An inquest was held upon his body, with Dr. Thomas Hastings, of Hatfield, among the twelve jurymen. The "jury found several hundred small spots on the body, as if made with small shot. These spots were scraped, and holes found under them into the body." It was suspected that this was caused by witchcraft. It is a tradition in Hadley that a short time before John Stebbins died he was at work in a saw-mill, when the logs and boards became bewitched, and cut up strange and divers capers.

The county court received the evidence in the case and transmitted it to Governor Bradstreet, but no further notice was taken of it.*

IV.

WITCHCRAFT IN HADLEY.

In 1683 the noted case of Mary Webster, the wife of William Webster, occurred in Hadley. She was charged before the court at Northampton, consisting of Col. John Pyncheon, of Springfield, Peter Tilton and Philip Smith, of Hadley, William Clarke and Aaron Cooke, of Northampton. She was sent to jail at Boston in April, and on the 22d of May was taken before the Governor and assistants and indicted by the grand jury. Her trial began in Boston on the 4th of September following, and resulted in her acquittal. This case created a great deal of excitement at the time in the Connecticut Valley, and was considered one of the most noted cases of the kind occurring in Hampshire County.

In 1685 Mary Webster was again accused of sorcery, and of committing murder by the practice of the art. But the charge was not substantiated, and the poor harassed old woman lived some years afterward, dying in 1696.

CHAPTER XIV.

THE REGICIDES.†

AFTER the restoration of Charles II. to the throne of England, in the year 1660, the valley of the Connecticut in New England became the exile home of three of the judges who signed the death-warrant of the unfortunate Charles I. in the year 1649, namely, Edward Whalley, William Goffe, and John Dixwell, since famous in American history as the Regicides.

The story of the Regicides imparts to the history of the Connecticut Valley an interest quite as melancholy as it is instructive. Of the one hundred and thirty judges commissioned by the House of Commons to conduct the trial of the king, "seventy-four sat, sixty-seven were present at the last session and were unanimous in passing the definitive sentence upon the king, and fifty-nine signed the warrant for his execution, 1649."

At the time of the Restoration, in 1660, when Charles II. became king, twenty-four of the judges had died; but the vengeance of the crown followed the survivors with unflinching pertinacity. Nine were executed and sixteen escaped from the kingdom. Three of these came to New England,—Maj.-Gen. Edward Whalley, Maj.-Gen. William Goffe, and John Dixwell.

The family of Whalley was prominent in the reign of Henry VI. Gen. Whalley's father, Richard, was a grandson of Richard Whalley, Esq., of Kirkton, in the county of Nottingham, who died in 1583, aged eighty-four. His mother was Frances, a daughter of Sir Henry Cromwell, knight, and was aunt to Oliver Cromwell, the Protector. •

Gen. Whalley married the sister of Sir George Middleton, knight, an enemy of Charles I., and had several children, of whom one became the wife of Gen. Goffe. Although "brought up to merchandise," he was a man of great strength of mind, and took a prominent part in the stirring events of the twenty years anterior to the conviction of Charles. He was noted as a civilian, as a military commander, and as a member of Parliament, and was among the foremost of those who opposed the king.

Gen. Goffe was a son of Rev. Stephen Goffe, a Puritan divine, rector of Stanmore, in Sussex. He abandoned the business of merchandising while yet a young man, entered the Parliament army, and won successively the positions of colonel of foot and general. He, like Whalley, became an active agent in the proceedings against the king, and was subsequently a member of Parliament under Cromwell. It is recorded that he "by degrees fell off from the anti-monarchical principles of the chief part of the army, and was the man, with Col. William White, who brought musqueteers and turned out the Anabaptistical members that were left behind of the Little, or 'Barebones,' Parliament out of the house,"‡ April, 1653.

It was the opinion of some historians that Whalley and Goffe had "escaped to the Continent, and were at Lucerne, in Switzerland, in 1664," and by others that they "wandered about for years and died in a foreign clime, but when or where unknown." The newly-settled provinces in the wilds of the Western continent promised them a safer asylum, and so, anticipating by a short period the restoration of the monarchy with its quick-following penal decrees toward the surviving judges, they came to New England.

Governor Hutchinson, who wrote in 1764, and who had possession of Goffe's diary and other papers,§ gives the following account:

"In the ship which arrived at Boston from London the 27th of July, 1660, there came passengers Col. Whalley and Col. Goffe, two of the late king's judges. Col. Goffe brought testimonials from Mr. John Row and Mr. Seth Wood, two ministers of a church in Westminster. Col. Whalley had been a member of Mr. Thomas Goodwin's church. Goffe kept a journal or diary from the day he left Westminster, May 4, until the year 1667, which, together with several other papers belonging to him, I have in my possession. Almost the whole is in characters or short hand, not difficult to decipher. The story of these persons has never yet been published to the world. They did not attempt to conceal their persons or characters when they arrived at Boston, but immediately went to the Governor, Mr. Endicott, who received them very courteously. They were visited by the principal persons of the town; and, among † Fasti Oxoniensis, p. 79, as quoted by President Stiles.

‡ Mr. Judd says (page 215), "Governor Hutchinson was in possession of Goffe's diary and his papers and letters, which had long been in the library of the Mathers in Boston. Hutchinson was a Tory, and his house was rifled by a mob in 1765, and the journal of Goffe and other papers relating to the judges are supposed to have been destroyed. From them he had published in 1764 a short account of Whalley and Goffe in his first volume of the 'History of Massachusetts.'"

* Drake's Annals of Witchcraft, p. 140.

† This chapter was prepared by Horace Mack.

others, they take notice of Col. Crown's coming to see them. He was a noted Royalist. Although they did not disguise themselves, yet they chose to reside at Cambridge, a village about four miles distant from the town, where they went the first day they arrived. They went publicly to meetings on the Lord's day, and to occasional lectures, fasts, and thanksgivings, and were admitted to the sacrament, and attended private meetings for devotion, visited many of the principal towns, and were frequently at Boston; and once, when insulted there, the person who insulted them was bound to his good behavior. They appeared grave, serious, and devout, and the rank they had sustained commanded respect. Whalley had been one of Cromwell's lieutenant-generals, and Goffe a major-general. The reports, by way of Barbadoes, were that all the judges would be pardoned but seven. When it appeared that they were not excepted, some of the principal persons in the government were alarmed; pity and compassion prevailed with others. They had assurances from some that belonged to the General Court that they would stand by them, but were advised by others to think of removing. The 22d of February, 1661, the Governor summoned a court of assistants to consult about securing them, but the court did not agree to it. Finding it unsafe to remain any longer, they left Cambridge the 26th following, and arrived at New Haven the 7th of March, 1661. One Capt. Breedan, who had seen them in Boston, gave information thereof upon his arrival in England. A few days after their removal, a hue and cry, as they term it in their diary, was brought by way of Barbadoes, and thereupon a warrant to secure them issued the 8th of March from the Governor and assistants, which was sent to Springfield and other towns in the western part of the colony, but they were beyond the reach of it."

They tarried at New Haven for some days, where they met with kind treatment, but, learning of the king's proclamation, decamped on the 27th of March, and, employing an adroit strategy, appeared openly at New Milford, making themselves known, and then returned secretly to New Haven, where they lay concealed at the house of Mr. Davenport, the minister, until April 30. About this time news came of the execution of ten of the judges, with another mandate from the king, dated March 5, 1660-61, which stimulated the court to more vigorous search for the fugitives. Thomas Kirk and Thomas Kellond, who were zealous Royalists, were commissioned to search "through the colonies as far as Manhados,"—Manhattan, now New York.

Informed of this procedure, the judges began a series of hegiras, which, with the accompanying incidents, would form one of the most interesting and romantic chapters of American history. These can only be briefly summarized in this narrative. They soon removed from Mr. Davenport's to the house of William Jones, remained there until May 11, spent the next two days in a mill, and on the 13th joined Mr. Jones and two others—Sperry and Burrell—in the woods, and were conducted to a place known as "Hatchet Harbor," where they remained two nights, by which time their friends had prepared "a cave or hole in the side of a hill" for their reception. Here they remained from May 15 to June 11, during which time the country was being scoured to "Manhados" by the merchant-minions, Kellond and Kirk, who offered large rewards to insure their capture. Mr. Davenport was suspected of having given them aid and comfort, and was liable to arrest, whereupon they offered to surrender, that their friends might not suffer, and actually made known their whereabouts to Deputy-Governor Leet, who took no advantage of the information. They were the next day advised not to surrender. They, however, appeared publicly at New Haven, thus relieving Mr. Davenport "from the charge of still concealing them," and again retired on the 24th of June to their cave at "Providence Hill," as they termed the place.* On October 19 the hunt for them had nearly ceased, and permitted a change to better quarters, which they secured "at the house of one Tompkins, near Milford meeting-house, where they remained two years, without so much as going into the orchard. After that they took a little more liberty, and made themselves known to several persons in whom they could confide."

In 1664, the commissioners from Charles II. having landed at Boston, they again sought the privacy of their cave, and lived there eight or ten days. Soon after this the cave and the bed were discovered by Indian hunters and became untenable, whereupon, on the 13th of October, in the same year, they set out for the new frontier-town of Hadley, which would seem almost to have been "planted" purposely for their reception, begun as it was only the year previous to their arrival at Boston. They were doubtless on the road four nights, arriving on or about the 17th at the house of the minister, Mr. Russell, who had engaged to receive them. Rev. Ezra Stiles, then president of Yale College, writing in 1794,† gave the following hypothetical account of this journey of the fugitives:

"On the 13th of October, 1664, they left Milford and proceeded on their excursion. I shall suppose that the first night they came over to New Haven to their friend Jones,—though of this there is no tradition, as there is of their making a lodgment at Pilgrims' Harbor, so called from them, being twenty miles from New Haven, at a place since called Meridon, half-way between New Haven and Hartford. Here they might rest and lodge one day, and the next night proceed to Hartford, and the night following to Springfield, and the succeeding night reach Hadley. But of this I find no tradition, saying only that on their route to Hadley they made one station at Pilgrims' Harbor."

Once at the minister's home, they remained in almost absolute seclusion for fifteen or sixteen years, or until they died, though not wholly at Mr. Russell's. Little concerning their life in Hadley can be known, outside of what has been gleaned from the diary and papers of Gen. Goffe. Governor Hutchinson gives the following, some of which seems to be traditional:

"The last account of Goffe is from a letter dated Ebenezer, the name they gave their several places of abode, April 2, 1679. Whalley had been dead some time before. The tradition at Hadley is, that two persons unknown were buried in the minister's cellar. The minister was no sufferer by his boarders. They received more or less remittances every year, for many years together, from their wives in England. Those few persons who knew where they were made them frequent presents. Richard Saltonstall, Esq., who was in the secret, when he left the country and went to England, in 1672, made them a present of fifty pounds at his departure; and they take notice of donations from several other friends: They were in constant terror, though they had reason to hope, after some years, that the inquiry for them was over. They read with pleasure the news of their being killed, with other judges, in Switzerland. Their diary, for six or seven years, contains every little occurrence in the town, church, and particular families in the neighborhood. They had, indeed, for five years of their lives, been among the principal actors in the great affairs of the nation. They had very constant and exact intelligence of everything which passed in England, and were unwilling to give up all hopes of deliverance. Their greatest expectations were from the fulfillment of the prophecies. They had no doubt that the execution of the judges was the slaying of the witnesses. They were much disappointed when the year 1666 had passed without any remarkable event, but flattered themselves that the Christian era might be erroneous. Their among the rocks on the top of "West Rock," about two miles and a half north-west of New Haven.

† A History of Three of the Judges of King Charles I., by Ezra Stiles, late President of Yale College.

* According to President Stiles, this cave was not "in the side of a hill," but lives were miserable and constant burthens. They complain of being banished from all human society. A letter from Goffe's wife, who was Whalley's daughter, I think worth preserving. After the second year Goffe writes by the name of Walter Goldsmith, and she of Frances Goldsmith, and the correspondence is carried on as between a mother and son. There is too much religion in their letters for the taste of the present day; but the distresses of two persons under these peculiar circumstances, who appear to have lived very happily together, are very strongly described.

"Whilst they were at Hadley, Feb. 10, 1664-65, John Dixwell, another of the judges, came to them; but from whence, or in what part of America he first landed, is not known. He continued some years at Hadley, and then removed to New Haven. He married at New Haven and had several children. After his death his son came to Boston, and lived in good repute; was a ruling elder of one of the churches there, and died in 1725. Colonel Dixwell was buried in New Haven."

In the house of Mr. Russell there already existed, or he had caused to be prepared, a secret chamber or hiding-place, to which his unfortunate guests could betake themselves at short notice. The main or south part of the house—a double one, about twenty by forty-four feet in size—"had two large rooms below, with an old-fashioned chimney and a front entry and stairs between them." Above were corresponding chambers, separated in part by the chimney, which had on the north side a passage-way, or dark closet, used as a communication between the rooms. A door from each room opened into this closet, in the floor of which was a loose board, nicely adjusted, that might be taken up, permitting entrance to a similar space between the lower rooms, but with no opening into either. The judges occupied the upper apartment, on the east side, and it is related that they "once were concealed in this dark place behind the chimney when searchers went through the passage above."

President Stiles, who visited Hadley, May 21, 1792, says: "The Rev. Mr. Hopkins carried me to Mr. Russell's house, still standing. It is a double house, two stories and a kitchen. Although repaired, with additions, yet the chamber of the judges remains obviously in its original state, unmutated, as when these exiled worthies inhabited it. Adjoining to it, behind or at the north end of the large chimney, was a closet, in the floor of which I saw still remaining the trap-door through which they let themselves down into an under closet, and so thence descended into the cellar for concealment, in case of search or surprise." He adds, "They must have been known to the family and domestics, and must have been frequently exposed to accidental discoveries, with all their care and circumspection to live in stillness. That the whole should have been effectually concealed in the breasts of the knowing ones is a case of secrecy truly astonishing."

Chester Gaylord, born in 1782, in the Russell house, which his father then owned, told Sylvester Judd, in 1858, that when a boy he had frequently entered the "dark hole" behind the chimney and replaced the board above him; and that "if there was once a passage into the kitchen cellar, it had been closed."*

One or both of the judges, for a longer or shorter period, stayed at the house of Peter Tillton; and a tradition in the Smith family, narrated by Rev. Samuel Hopkins, in 1793, claims that they were "a part of the time" at the house of Lieut. Samuel Smith.

Much speculation has been indulged concerning the times and places of the death and burial of these self-immured exiles. The veil that so effectually concealed them, living, was not lifted when they died; and circumstance, embarrassed by conflicting traditions, yields but an imperfect clue for the historian.

Mr. Hopkins submitted the several traditions to President Stiles,—one claiming that after Whalley's death Goffe went to Hartford, thence to New Haven, where he was suspected and disappeared; another, that Whalley died at Tillton's and was buried behind his barn, and that Goffe then went to "the Narragansett," and there being set upon went southward, as far as Pennsylvania and Virginia; another, that both died in Hadley; and still another, that the one that died in town was buried in Mr. Tillton's garden or in his cellar. Mr. Hopkins adds, "It seems to have been a matter of conjecture among the inhabitants,—in Tillton's cellar, in his garden, or behind his barn, as they imagined most probable. Of his being buried under a fence, between two lots, I do not find anything; † nor of his being afterward removed."

President Stiles appears to have formed the belief that Whalley and Goffe both died at Hadley,—the former at Mr. Russell's, and the latter at Mr. Tillton's. This conclusion was strengthened when, in 1795,—one year after he wrote the history of the judges, and three years subsequent to his visit to Hadley,—at the rebuilding of the main part of the old house of Mr. Russell, the bones of a man of large size were found four feet below the surface and near the middle part of the front wall.

In August, 1674, Gen. Goffe wrote to his wife concerning her father, "He is scarce capable of any rational discourse, his understanding, memory, and speech do so much fail him, and he seems not to take much notice of anything that is either said or done, but patiently bears all things and never complains of anything. The common question is to know how he doth, and his answer for the most part is, Very well, I praise God. He has not been able of a long time to dress, undress, or feed himself, without help; it is a great mercy to him that he has a friend who takes pleasure in being helpful to him."

As Governor Hutchinson says Whalley had been dead some time when the last known letter of Goffe was written, April 2, 1679, it is probable that he was not alive when Capts. Lothrop and Beers came to Hadley in August, 1675, during the war of King Philip. The bones found, it is more than probable, were those of Gen. Whalley.

Mr. Judd intimates that Mr. Russell began to entertain the officers of the Indian war in 1675. Such being the case, it is reasonable to suppose that Gen. Goffe—after the death of his companion, to whom he took "pleasure in being helpful"—

† This missing tradition was secured by President Stiles himself; he says: "On my return from Hadley, passing through Wethersfield, on the 25th of May, I visited Mrs. Porter, a sensible and judicious woman, aged 77. She was a daughter of Mr. Ebenezer Marsh, and born at Hadley, 1715, next door to Mr. Tillton's, one of the temporary and interchanged residences of the judges. This house was in her day occupied by Deacon Joseph Eastman. She had the general story of the judges, but said she knew nothing with certainty concerning them, but only that it was said they sometimes lived at Mr. Russell's, and sometimes where Deacon Eastman lived,—that one was buried in Mr. Russell's cellar and another in Mr. Tillton's lot. As she said she had nothing certain, I pressed her for fabulous anecdotes. She said she was ashamed to tell young people's whims and notions. But in the course of conversation she said that when she was a girl it was the constant belief among the neighbors that an old man, for some reason or other, had been buried in the fence between Deacon Eastman's and her father's. She said the women and girls from their house and Deacon Eastman's used to meet at the dividing fence, and while chatting and talking together for amusement, one and another at times would say, with a sort of skittish fear and laughing, 'Who knows but we are now standing on the old man's grave?' She and other girls used to be skittish and fearful, even in walking the street, when they came against the place of that supposed grave; though it was never known whereabouts in that line of fence it lay. She supposed the whole was only young folks' foolish notions; for some were much concerned lest the old man's ghost should appear at or about that grave. But this lady was very reluctant at narrating these circumstances and stories, to which she gave no heed herself.

"In repeatedly visiting Hadley for many years past, and in conversation with persons born and brought up in Hadley, but settled elsewhere, I have often perceived a concurrent tradition that both died there, and were buried somewhere in Hadley unknown, though generally agreed that one was buried at Russell's."

* The visit of President Stiles must have been during the "boyhood" of Mr. Gaylord.

went to the house of Mr. Tillton, and there eked out his days in solitude. The time of his death is matter of conjecture,—possibly as early as 1680.

In concluding his history, President Stiles says: "The enlightened, upright, and intrepid judges of Charles I. will hereafter go down to posterity, with increasing renown, among the Jephthahs, the Baraks, the Gideons and the Washingtons, and others raised up by Providence for great and momentous occasions; whose memories, with those of all the other successful and unsuccessful, but intrepid and patriotic defenders of real liberty, will be selected in history, and contemplated with equal, impartial, and merited justice; and whose names, and achievements, and SUFFERINGS will be transmitted with honor, renown, and glory, through all the ages of liberty and of man."

It is certainly to the credit of New England that so early in her history there existed such manifest love of liberty and scorn of oppression, that no son of hers who had knowledge concerning the refugees accepted royal gold for their betrayal.

The story which connects the name of Gen. Goffe with an alleged defense of Hadley is given place in the history of that town.

Mr. Israel P. Warren, in his book entitled "The Three Judges," in substance says, that after the death of Whalley the danger of the discovery of the retreat at Hadley was enhanced by the coming to America of Edward Randolph, with a sort of roving commission, as a spy upon the colonies; and that in consequence Gen. Goffe may have changed his place of abode, as he had done before under similar circumstances. In support of such a change, Mr. Warren quotes from the letters of Gen. Goffe and Mr. Tillton.

The former, in a letter to Dr. Increase Mather, of Boston, dated "Ebenezer, Sept. 8, 1676," says, "I was greatly beholding to Mr. Noell for his assistance in my remove to this town. I pray, if he be yet in Boston, remember my affectionate respects to him."

This would seem certainly not to mean the removal to Hadley twelve years previous; and the expression "my remove" indicates that he was alone, Whalley having died. In the same letter, he writes, "I have received the letters from England that you inclosed to Mr. Whiting." And again, Oct. 23, 1678, "I should take it as a great kindness to receive a word from you, if you please to inclose it to Mr. Whiting, onely with this short direction (these for Mr. T. D.). I hope it would come safely."

Mr. Warren remarks, "This Mr. Whiting was doubtless Mr. Samuel Whiting, one of the ministers of Hartford at that time. 'T. D.' were the initials used by himself in his letters to Dr. Mather, and were evidently well known to Mr. Whiting. The inference seems almost unavoidable that the latter gentleman was made the medium of transmitting Goffe's letters, in consequence of living near and being intimately acquainted with him.

"Still more conclusive is a letter to Goffe from Mr. Peter Tillton, of Hadley, dated July 30, 1679. 'Yours, which I cannot but mention, dated M^{ch} 18, '78, I received, crying howe wellcome and refreshing to my poore unworthye selfe (which as an honeycombe, to use your owne similitude, full of pretious sweetenes), I would you did but knowe, being a semblance or representation of what sometimes, though unworthye, I had a fuller fruition of. I have here sent you by S. P. tenn pounds, haveing not before a safe hand to convey it, it being a token of the love and remembrance of severall friends who have you upon their hearts.' Then, after mentioning certain news lately received from England, he says, 'which I presume Mr. Russell hath given you a full account of, as understanding he hath written to Hartford, that I neede not tawtologize in that matter, —i.e., repeat it.'"

CHAPTER XV.

KING PHILIP'S WAR.

I.

ITS CAUSES.

THE Indian war of 1675 and 1676, known to historians as King Philip's War, was the culmination, and to the Indians the final catastrophe, of the long struggle between the white and the red races for the mastery of the soil of New England.

Its ravages filled New England with mourning over new-made graves. It found the beautiful valley of the Connecticut in Massachusetts, from Springfield to Northfield, prosperous and thriving, but left it a desolate, blackened, blood-stained, and almost desolate waste.

In the autumn before its close Springfield was in ashes, and its terrified people were about deserting it forever. The inhabitants of Northfield and Deerfield had fled from their ruined homes, and the people of Westfield, Northampton, Hadley, and Hatfield were debating whether it were not too dangerous to stay longer in their isolated position in the very heart of the enemy's land, for their old Indian neighbors of the valley, with whom they had lived so long in peace,—the Ag-a-wams, the Wo-ro-noaks, the Non-o-tucks, the Pa-comp-tucks, and the Squak-heags,—had all joined King Philip.

But at its close the Indian fled and the white man stayed. From the first settlement of New England by the whites it was evident that sooner or later there must come a war of races. On the part of the whites every effort was made to conciliate the savage and win him into the paths of civilization and peace. On the first landing of the Pilgrims and Puritans, a fearful distemper was almost exterminating the natives. The white men and women visited them in their wigwams, at the risk of contagion, and afforded them every relief in their power. A few years later missionaries devoted their lives to the object of converting the Indians to Christianity, and with infinite labor learned their language and translated the whole Bible into their difficult tongue. Everywhere their right to the soil was respected, and no part of it was occupied, that had not been already deserted by them, without fairly purchasing the same and taking deeds therefor. But all of these efforts proved unavailing.

Over the mind of the Indian the influences of a humane civilization bore little sway. Under all circumstances his temper was sullen, jealous, passionate, intensely vindictive, and ferociously cruel. It was impossible that the Indian of New England should ever become a good neighbor. "The white man or the Indian must cease from the land."

The reader should bear in mind, however, that for the first fifty years after the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers, in the year 1620, there was but little actual warfare between the whites and the Indians of New England. This long immunity from the horrors of Indian warfare was doubtless occasioned in part by the uniform fair treatment of the savages by the Fathers of New England, and also in part by the decisive measures taken by the early-settlers in the total destruction of the once-powerful Pequot nation in the year 1637.

II.

UN-CAS AND MI-AN-TO-NO-MO.

Although the destruction of the Pequots relieved the whites of New England from further Indian ravages for a period of forty years, and until another generation of men came on the stage of active life, yet it tended to intensify the hatred which had long existed between the neighboring tribes of Mohicans and Narragansetts.

The Pequots, the reader will remember, dwelt on the eastern border of Connecticut, between the Rhode Island line and the river Thames, then called the Pequot River. To the east of the Pequots were the Narragansetts, and to the west of them, between the Thames and the Connecticut, dwelt the Mohicans.

At the close of the Pequot war the captives were divided by the whites between Uncas, of the Mohicans, and Miantonomo, of the Narragansetts.

These two tribes were hereditary enemies, although both were the allies of the English, and both aided the whites in the war against the Pequots. The deserted hunting-grounds of the Pequots soon became a bone of contention between the rival tribes, and in the year 1643 war broke out between them. Previous to the commencement of hostilities the emissaries of Miantonomo had made several attempts upon the life of Uncas, and Uncas had made complaints to the whites of such treatment.

Miantonomo had also made an ineffectual attempt, about the year 1642, to unite the New England tribes in a war of extermination against the whites. Failing in this scheme, and incensed at Uncas for not joining him in it, he determined to make war upon the Mohicans.

In the month of July, in the year 1643, Miantonomo, without giving Uncas any previous notice of his intentions or making any formal declaration of war, set out at the head of some seven hundred warriors to invade the Mohican country. Uncas, learning of his approach, hastily gathered an equal number, and marched out to bar his progress.

The two hostile bands met upon the old Pequot hunting-ground, and, halting in sight of each other, with a level plain between them, the two rival chieftains advanced to the front and held a parley.

The wildest romance of the old wilderness warfare presents no more striking scene than this meeting of Uncas and Miantonomo. Uncas proposed that they, the two chieftains, should there and then decide the contest by single combat, and that the people of the one vanquished should become the subjects of the victorious sachem.

To this proposal of Uncas, Miantonomo made haughty answer: "My warriors have come to fight, and they shall fight."

Upon receiving this defiant answer, Uncas fell prostrate upon the ground. It was the signal for his men to rush over his body upon the Narragansetts. The Mohicans were victorious. Miantonomo was overtaken in the flight, and made a prisoner by Uncas. Haughty and defiant still, he would ask no quarter; but Uncas for the time being saved his life, and delivered him to the English, at Hartford, for safe-keeping.

The case of Miantonomo was brought by Uncas before the commissioners of the United Colonies, and they ordered that he should suffer death, and that Uncas should be his executioner.

Miantonomo was taken to the field of the fight, and, in the presence of two Englishmen, a warrior of Uncas sunk a hatchet into his brain. The spot where he is said to have fallen, in the town of Norwich, Conn., is marked by a block of granite, simply inscribed with his name, MIANTONOMO. Thus died the second prominent Indian conspirator against the whites,—the prototype, after Sas-sacus, the Pequot, of Philip and Pontiac, of Tecumseh, Black Hawk, and Osceola.

The part which the English took in this quarrel between Uncas and Miantonomo, still ranking in the minds of the Narragansetts, doubtless led to their union with the Pokanokets, nearly forty years later, in Philip's war. The killing of the Narragansett sachem in cold blood, while a prisoner of war, was without doubt justifiable in the minds of the New England fathers as a means of self-defense, for had his life been spared the dreadful scenes of Philip's war would, it is probable, have been enacted long before they were, while the colonists were too feeble to withstand the savages. Yet it must be confessed that the side of the Indian has never been written.

III.

MAS-SA-SOIT AND HIS TWO SONS, WAM-SUT-TA AND MET-A-CO-MET.

The powerful tribe of the Wampanoags, or Po-ka-no-kets, dwelt at the head of Narragansett Bay and along its eastern shore, and consequently were the near neighbors of the Pilgrim Fathers of Plymouth. Mas-sa-soit, the chief sachem of the Pokanokets, was always the warm friend and steadfast ally of the English. Mas-sa-soit had two sons, who were the hereditary heirs of his sachemship, named Wam-sut-ta and Met-a-co-met. Early in the summer of 1660, Mas-sa-soit died at an advanced age, and was succeeded by his eldest son, Wam-sut-ta. In the month of June, 1660, Wam-sut-ta visited the General Court at Plymouth, and among other requests was desirous of an English name. It was easy for the court to grant this last request, and so they "ordered that for the future he should be called by the name of Alexander Pokanoket." Desiring the same in behalf of his brother, the court at the same time ordered that Met-a-co-met should from thenceforth be called Philip.

But the reign of Alexander over the Pokanokets was short. It was reported at Plymouth in the summer of 1662 that he was plotting with the Narragansetts, and a message was sent to him to come to town and explain his conduct. Failing to come, an armed party was sent for him. He made satisfactory explanations, and set out on his return. At the end of two or three days he changed his mind, and turned back toward Boston. He reached Maj. Winslow's house at Marshfield, and there was taken sick of a fever. He was carefully taken home by water, soon died there, and his brother, Philip, became chief sachem of the Pokanokets.

IV.

PHILIP OF POKANOKET.

In the month of August, 1662, at the beginning of Philip's sachemship, he was summoned to attend the General Court at Plymouth. Apprehensions were felt as to the temper he was in, and he was called to answer such questions as should be proposed to him, and to deliberate upon such matters as might tend to the promotion of peace and good-will. At this interview "it was concluded by the court and him mutually, that the ancient covenant betwixt his predecessors and them should be continued," and Philip, with five of his sagamores, signed an instrument acknowledging himself to be a subject of the king of England, and to faithfully keep and preserve inviolate the agreements made by his father, Mas-sa-soit, and his brother, Alexander.

At the end of five years of peace, in June, 1667, it was rumored at Plymouth that Philip was making overtures to the Dutch or French for a combined movement against the English; but Philip so explained the matter that the apprehensions of the English were allayed.

Again, in 1671, Philip began to excite suspicions of misbehavior. His arms were ordered to be given up, and the court appointed eight persons to act with the magistrates as a "Council of War." Advice was also asked of the colonies of Massachusetts and Rhode Island. Philip in the mean time continued contumacious, and made complaint to divers gentlemen of Massachusetts. The latter colony offered its assistance in the quarrel between Philip and the Plymouth court. This resulted in another compact with Philip, and three more years of peace ensued.

In the year 1674 new troubles began. Sau-sa-man, a faithful Indian, informed the Governor of Plymouth "that the said Philip was undoubtedly endeavoring to raise new troubles, and was endeavoring to engage all the sachems round about in a war."† This resulted in the murder of Sau-sa-man in June, 1675. His murderers were caught, tried by the court, convicted, and executed.

A short time before the court met at which this trial took place, "Philip," says an old chronicler, "began to keep his men in arms about him, and to gather strangers unto him, and

* Plym. Col. Rec., Vol. V., p. 63, etc.

† Records, etc., in Hazard, II., 532; quoted in Palfrey's Hist. of New England, Vol. III., p. 150.

to march about in arms toward the upper end of the neck on which he lived and near to the English houses."

Mount Hope, the home of Philip, which he inherited from his father Massasoit through his elder brother Wamsutta, alias Alexander, was on that beautiful peninsula, about twelve miles long, which extends southerly from the north-eastern shore of Narragansett Bay, and now belongs to the town of Bristol, R. I. Down through this peninsula runs a range of hills, on one of which, called Mount Hope, was Philip's home.

The Beginning of the War.—The English settlement nearest to Mount Hope was Swanzey, in the Plymouth colony. As early as the 14th of June, 1675, news came to Swanzey that Philip was continually in arms; that many strange Indians were flocking to his fort; that they had sent their wives to the Narragansett country; and that they "were giving frequent alarms by drums and guns in the night, and invaded the passage toward Plymouth; and that their young Indians were earnest for war." At length, on Sunday, the 20th day of June, the first blow of the war came. On that day a party of Philip's Indians approached Swanzey, burned two houses, and then withdrew. On the 23d the Indians again appeared at Swanzey, and robbed a dozen houses. During the next three days several Englishmen were killed and their bodies brutally mangled.

Decisive measures were at once taken by the colonists. Troops from Plymouth under Maj. Bradford and Maj. Cudworth, and from Boston under Capt. Hinchman, a troop of horse from Boston under Capt. Prentice, and a hundred volunteers under Capt. Mosely, all reached the scene of action on the 28th. The troops were attacked on the evening of their arrival, one man killed, and others wounded. The next morning the Indians approached the English camp, were driven back by Capt. Mosely, and five or six of them killed.

But Philip, in the mean time, found his position untenable, and, leaving it in the night, went over in canoes to the east shore of the bay. The English, under Maj. Savage, who had arrived from Boston to assume the chief command, now crossed over and occupied Mount Hope. While this was going on, Philip's Indians marched toward Plymouth, and, falling upon the settlements at Dartmouth, Taunton, and Middleborough, burned the houses and killed three inhabitants.

But our account of this war must hereafter be confined principally to the bloody scenes enacted during its continuance in the valley of the Connecticut. And in this chapter but little more than a summary of the main incidents of the struggle will be attempted, leaving the details to the histories of the different towns in which such incidents occurred.

V.

THE CAMPAIGN OF 1675 IN THE CONNECTICUT VALLEY.

The Rising of the Nipmucks.—Up to the middle of July, 1675, the war had been confined to the eastern country bounded on Narragansett Bay, but now a new danger menaced the English,—that of the union of all the tribes in a common war of extermination. With the view of preventing this, on the 15th of July the commissioners of the colonies of Massachusetts and Connecticut, attended by a strong military force, went into the country of the Narragansetts, and concluded with them a treaty of alliance, by the terms of which that powerful tribe agreed to aid the English against Philip.

But at this time the Nipmucks, who occupied the central region of Massachusetts, in what is now the county of Worcester, commenced hostilities against the English by attacking the town of Mendon, on the 14th day of July, and the Indians in the valley of the Connecticut began to show decided symptoms of uniting their fortunes with Philip. Then the war suddenly assumed a new and more formidable aspect, and the English prepared for the work.

At Quaboag, now Brookfield, some fifteen or sixteen families had settled. At this place, by the middle of July, a large number of Nipmucks had assembled. On the 28th, Capt. Edward Hutchinson arrived at Quaboag, with the object of making with the Nipmucks a treaty similar to the one just made with the Narragansetts. Arrangements were made for a conference, and Hutchinson, on the 2d day of August, repaired to the spot agreed upon, but the Indians failed to appear. Hutchinson proceeded seven miles farther in search of the Indians, but fell into an ambuscade, and was driven back with severe loss. In the mean time, on the day before this fight, Philip arrived at Quaboag. The little force under Hutchinson made their way back to the settlement, and, joining the inhabitants, hastily fortified a large house. On the 3d and 4th days of August the Indians invested the fort, and made repeated attempts to destroy it by fire. An hour after nightfall of the 4th, Maj. Simon Willard galloped into town at the head of forty-seven horsemen, and relieved the little garrison. In this affair the Indians lost about eighty men. The day after the siege was raised, Philip, with forty of his warriors, met the Nipmuck chiefs in a swamp some ten miles from Brookfield, and made them presents for their bravery in the late encounter with the English.

Brookfield was deserted, and Maj. Willard went to Hadley with his troops, where he remained three weeks.

The seat of war was now transferred to the valley of the Connecticut, and the Indians of the valley were animated and encouraged by the presence of Philip himself.

First Signs of War among the River Indians.—In the spring of 1675 the inhabitants of the Connecticut Valley noticed that the Indians who lived among them exhibited many signs of discontent, if not of open hostility. Among other things the Indians neglected to plant the usual breadth of corn, and began to remove their effects to within the shelter of their forts. Some friendly Non-o-tuck squaws also told families at Northampton of the impending trouble.

After the affair at Brookfield was over, the exposed state of the towns in the Connecticut Valley excited the special solicitude of the General Court, and large forces were immediately sent in that direction from the seaboard towns, which, now that Philip had left them and gone into the Nipmuck country, were enjoying a season of peace.

Hadley, being protected on three sides by water, was designated as the principal military fort, and the place of deposit for supplies.

The Massachusetts troops sent to the valley were under the command of Capt. Beers, of Watertown, Capt. Lothrop, of Ipswich, and Capt. Mosely, of Boston. The Connecticut troops sent from Hartford were commanded by Maj. Treat, of Milford, who had with him at Hadley a band of Mohican Indians. The highest officer in command of these forces after Willard went eastward was Maj. John Pynchon, of Springfield.

When the news reached Springfield of the attack on Quaboag, Maj. Pynchon immediately sent Lieut. Thomas Cooper, with a Springfield company and thirty men from Hartford, to the relief of that settlement. But this force arrived at Quaboag after the Indians had been driven away by Maj. Willard and the troops from the Bay under Capts. Lothrop and Beers. *

After the return of the troops from Quaboag, the people of the valley awaited further developments with great anxiety. Precautions were taken to guard against surprise, and detachments of troops from Hadley were stationed at Northampton, Hatfield, Deerfield, and Northfield.

In the latter part of August, Maj. Pynchon wrote to Capt. John Allyn, of Hartford, as follows:

"SPRINGFIELD, Aug. 22, 1675.

"CAPT. JOHN ALLYN, Sr.—In ye night a Post was sent me from Hadley that of forces are returned; Capt. Wats thither and the Bay forces to Quaboag. Nothing done, but about 50 wigwams they found empty w^{ch} they have burnt.

"They write from Hadley they expect nothing but ye enemy to insult and fall upon ye remote Townes; that they are in great feares; a guard of 20 left at Squakeok is too weak; some of y^r soldiers left at Pacomruck Capt. Wats speaks of calling of, wth trolles y^m g^{ttly}; suspect of Indians y^t went out to be fearefull or false or both; say y^t ye sheepe at Squakeake are driven away since y^r soldiers were there; suspect y^e enemy to be between Hadley and Squakeok, at Paquayag, about 10 mile from y^e Gr^t River. I am sending to Capt. Wats to stay wth his forces there: I would gladly you would allow it, and give further order about it; as y^t they may make discovery for y^e enemy at ye place forenamed. The Indian you formerly writt off coming in to Uncas, it must be seriously considered whether none that are murderers of y^e English be among them, and such must be delivered up. I pray God direct you and us & be our salvation.

"Communcate advice and counsell as you may judge needfull. They much desire y^e presence of some principall man at Hadley to direct, as need reg's & to expedite affairs.

"Yours in y^e L'd Jesus,

"JOHN PYNCHON.

"Momonto thinks y^e Indian enemy may be in a swamp called Momattanick, about 3 mile off Paquayag, between Hadley and Squakeake; it is a pitty, but they should be disrested; and y^r Indians will be y^e most likely to doe something. I pray give further orders about Capt Wats, & if Major Talcott might be wth y^m, I hope it w^{ld} turne to good.

[Directed] "These For Mr. John Allyn, Hartford.

"Hast, Post Hast."

On the 25th of August the first engagement occurred in the valley. At Hatfield was a little stockaded fort garrisoned by some friendly Indians. These Indians were suspected of being unfaithful, and Capts. Beers and Lothrop were sent to disarm them. The Indians had left the fort the night before the arrival of the English. The English pursued, and overtook them in a swamp near the foot of Sugar-Loaf Mountain. In the battle which then occurred ten of the whites and twenty-six of the Indians were killed.

An attack was made on Deerfield on the 1st day of September; several houses and barns were burned, and two men killed. On the 1st day of September also occurred, it is said, the attack on Hadley, during which it is a tradition that the Regicide, Col. Goffe, mysteriously appeared amid the confusion occasioned by the outeries of the furious savages, and, throwing himself at the head of the frightened populace, restored order and expelled the foe. The authenticity of this story is questioned by Mr. Sheldon, the historian of Deerfield. The details of this affair will be found by the reader in the history of the town of Hadley, farther on in this volume.

On the 2d of September, at Northfield, a small party ventured out of the fort, and on their return were intercepted by the savages and nine of their number killed.

On the 4th of September, Capt. Beers, with thirty-six men, was sent up from Hadley with wagons, to bring off the remainder of the garrison at Northfield, with its stores. When within three miles of the fort the English fell into an ambuscade, and fought bravely till their ammunition was exhausted. Capt. Beers, with twenty of his men, was slain, as well as twenty-six of the enemy.

Two days after, Maj. Treat went up the river with one hundred men, to repeat the attempt to bring off the Northfield garrison. Although attacked by the Indians, he fought his way through, succeeded in bringing away the people from Northfield, and that settlement was abandoned to the enemy.

After Northfield was abandoned, Deerfield became the frontier-town in that direction. It was deemed to be so insecure, that about the 9th of September its inhabitants left it and sought shelter in the towns below. The Deerfield people left behind them a large quantity of wheat, which it was thought desirable to secure. Capt. Lothrop, with a company of ninety men, was sent with eighteen wagons and their teamsters to bring this wheat away. The wheat was thrashed, the wagons loaded, and Capt. Lothrop, on his return on the 18th of September, fell into the ambuscade of Bloody Brook. Lothrop was soon shot dead. His company, known as "The Flower of Essex,"—having been "all culled out of the towns of that county,"—were all slain save seven or eight at the utmost. "The day," says Hubbard, "was the saddest that ever befell New England." The details of this fight will be found farther on, in the history of Deerfield.

A few days after the affair at Bloody Brook, Deerfield was abandoned by its little garrison, under Capt. Mosely. And now that Northfield and Deerfield were both deserted by their white inhabitants, the Squak-heags and Pa-comp-tucks recovered for a time the possession of their ancient hunting-grounds. This was an important acquisition to the Indians. The most famous fishing-ground on the river, the Pas-quamscut,—now Turner's Falls,—was again theirs, as well as the extensive corn-planting meadows on the Deerfield River. This region now became the headquarters of the savages, and in its secure fastnesses King Philip lurked.

THE BURNING OF SPRINGFIELD.

The next blow fell upon Springfield. On the morning of the 5th of October following, Springfield was attacked by the Indians, and, save two or three buildings, laid in ashes. The most of the inhabitants, however, having received timely warning, had assembled at the fortified house of Mr. John Pynchon, and saved their lives. Only Ensign Thomas Cooper and two or three others were killed. For the details of the sacking of Springfield the reader is referred to the history of Springfield, farther on in these pages.

On the first page of Vol. III. of the Town Records of Springfield is pasted a sheet of paper on which is written the following pathetic memorandum of this event:

"On the 5th day of October, in the year 1675, a day to be kept in memory by posterity, when the Barbarus heathen made an attack on this poore towne, killed two men and a woman and wounded severall, one of which dyed. Soon after Burned down 29 dwelling-houses and Barns, much Corne and Hay; but God did wonderfully preserve us, or we had been a prey to there teeth. God in his good providence so ordered it, an Indian gave intelligence of the enemies' designs to fall on this Towne, whereby we escaped with our lives, for which we should give God the glory.

"JONATHAN BURT being an eye-witness of the same."

The day before Springfield was destroyed Maj. Pynchon, with the Springfield troops, had marched to Hadley, leaving his home defenseless. The inhabitants of Springfield contrived to send a messenger to Hadley, and Maj. Pynchon hastened back with his troops for the relief of his beleaguered home, arriving about three o'clock in the afternoon. Maj. Treat, with his Connecticut troops, had reached the opposite side of the river, in West Springfield, in the forenoon of that day, but the Indians, being in overwhelming numbers, succeeded in preventing him from crossing the stream. The Indians, therefore, were not driven away from Springfield until the timely arrival of Maj. Pynchon with the Springfield troops.

SITUATION OF THE VALLEY IN THE AUTUMN OF 1675.

In the autumn of 1675 the situation of the valley of the Connecticut in Massachusetts was critical in the extreme. At the north Deerfield and Northfield were both held by the enemy. At the south Springfield, with all its stores of corn and hay, was in ashes. In the centre were the three small towns of Hadley, Northampton, and Hatfield, garrisoned by small bodies of troops. Ten miles west of Springfield was Westfield, also defended by a body of troops.

In the mean time Maj. Pynchon had resigned his command of the forces on the Connecticut River, and Capt. Appleton had been appointed in his place.

THE EFFICIENT AID OF CONNECTICUT.

It should not be forgotten that in this emergency Connecticut, with generous hand, did everything in her power to assist her struggling neighbors farther up the river. Her efficient troops, under Maj. Treat, Maj. Taleot, and others, were almost constantly in the field, and her Council met almost daily at Hartford for many months to devise means to carry on the war.

CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO THE SITUATION OF THE VALLEY IN THE FALL OF 1675.

The following letters are of such historical interest, and so well explain how matters stood in the valley at the time, that we copy them here entire. The first is from Rev. John Russell, of Hadley, to Governor Leverett, and was written after receiving a letter from Maj. Pynchon, at Springfield, dated the 5th October, acquainting him of the disaster there, and requesting him to inform the governor. The letter of Maj. Pynchon, dated the 5th October, will be found in the history of Springfield, farther on in this volume.

FROM REV. JOHN RUSSELL TO GOV. LEVERETT.

"Right Wor^{sh}—The light of another day hath turn'd or yesterday fears int^o certainties and bitter lamentations for y^e calamities and distresses of o^r bretheren and friends at Springfield, whose habitations are now become an heape. Such increase of judgm^t shows y^e greatness of y^e wrath y^t is kindled against us and y^e greatness of y^e provocations y^t have caused it. We have nothing to say but that the Lord is righteous and we have rebelled, greatly rebelled, against him.

"The inclosed from the Honor^d Major will give you such account of it as is wth us to make. We have little more to adde, only that the houses standing are about thirteene. Two men and one woman slain, viz., Leift. Cooper, who was going toward the fort to treat wth the Indians y^t the day before p^{ro}ted great freindship, being wth three or four more gott about a quarter of a mile out of Town, was shott so as he fell off his horse; but got up again and rode to the end of y^e Town, when he was shott again and dyed. The other was one Miller, of Springfield. There appeared not (according to their estimate) above 100 Indians, of whom their own were the cheife. Their old Sachem Wequogon (in whom as much confidence was putt as in any of their Indians) was ringleader in worde and deede. Another of their principall men cryed out to them, and told them he was one y^t burnt Quabaug, and now would make them like to it.

"They were gone ere Major Pynchon came in with his forces, w^{ch} was about two or three of ye clocke. They signified their sence of his approach by their hoops or watchwords, & were p^{re}sently gone. Major Treaté was gote down some hours sooner on y^e west side of the River; whose coming being perceived, five men went out of Town, and, altho pursued by twenty Indians, carried over a boat w^{ch} was filled wth men; but the Indians, standing on River's banke, shott at them, & shott one through the necke (who is not likely to recover); they durst not adventure to passe ye River, till Major Pynchon was come in & the Indians gone.

"It was but the day before, viz., on y^e 4th of October, y^t y^e garrison souldiers, about 45 in number, left them; for their mutual sorrow, as looking they should quickly after be in hazard of y^t ruine w^{ch} is now come upon them.

"Our Army had p^{re}pared all things in readinesse to goe forth on Monday at night (w^{ch} was y^e occasion of calling forth these from Springfield) against a considerable party discovered about five or six miles from Hadley. But the three alarms we mett wth, & y^e tydings from Springfield, wholly disappointed it. O^r men in their Towns, who before trembled at the order, That none should be left in the garrison when the Army went out, are now much more distressed at the thoughts of it, as looking at y^emselves thereby exposed to inevitable ruine upon y^e enemies' assault w^{ch} we must then expect; especially o^r Town of Hadley is now likely to drinke next (if mercy p^{re}vent not) of this bitter cup. We are but about 50 families, & now left solitary.

"The nearest Town now left upon the river on this side, being (as I guesse) about 70 miles distant, And those on y^e other side the River being so unable to come at as wth any help had they it to afford, Experience shews us that an hundred men on the other side y^e River can lend little reliefe. We desire to repose of confidence in the eternal & living God, who is the refuge of his people, a p^{re}sent one in the time of trouble; and to stand ready to doe and suffer his will in all things, acquainting y^emselves wth o^r p^{re}sent state, y^t so if there be anything y^t y^e wisdomes see it to call for, & y^emselves in a capacity to apply it, we may not faile thereof. Perhaps the empowering of some man or men as the Honor^d Major or Capt. Appleton, or both, to direct & order us in o^r fortifications, might not be unusefull. We are in the Lord's hands, and then we would be in keeping his way & doing his will wthout any amazement. Yet the Lord's now delivering his own as well as o^r houses into y^e enemies' hand is more amazing & threatening to us. His will is done. To his grace I commend you. And rest, Yo^r Wor^{sh} humbly in all service.

"JNO. RUSSELL.

"O^r wounded men are greatly distressed for want of Medicines. Those by sea not yet come at us; those expected by Capt. Waite left at Roxbury."

FROM MAJ. PYNCHON TO GOV. LEVERETT.

The second letter is from Maj. Pynchon himself to the Governor, and was written before he knew that his resignation had been accepted. The messenger was then on his way to inform him of that fact.

"SPRINGFIELD, Oct. 8, 1675.

"HONORED SR.—I desired Mr. Russell to give you an acct^o of y^e stroke upon Pore distressed Springfield, w^{ch} I hope will excuse my late doing of it. On y^e 4th of Oct. o^r Souldiers w^{ch} were at Springfield I had called all off, leaving none to secure y^e Towne by y^e commissioner's order was so strict.

"That Night Post was sent to us that 500 Indians were about Springfield, intending to destroy it, so y^t ye 5th of Oct., wth about 200 of o^r Souldiers, I marched downe to Springfield, when we found all in flames, about 30 dwelling houses burnt downe, & 24 or 25 Barnes, o^r Corne-mill, saw-mill, and other Buildings.

"Generally mee's Hay & Corne is Burnt, & many men whose houses stand had their goods burnt in other house w^{ch} they had carryd y^e too.

"Leift. Cooper & two more slayne & 4 persons wounded, 2 of w^{ch} are doubtfull their Recovery.

"The Ld hath made to drinke deepe of the cup of sorrow. I desire we may consider y^e operation of his hand, & what he speakes yet. That ye Town did not utterly perish is cause of gr^t Thankfulness. As soon as o^r forces appeared y^e Indians all drew off, so y^t we saw none of y^m. Sent out Scouts y^e night & y^e next day, but discovered none, neither can we satisfie o^rselves w^{ch} way they are gon, their Tracts being many ways. Some we think they are gon downe ye River. O^r last discovery was of a considerable Tract upward. O^r Indeavours here are to secure ye houses and Corne y^t is left; for this sad providence hath obstructed or going out wth ye Army, & w^t can be done, I am at a gr^t loss. O^r people are under gr^t discouragem^{ts}, Talke of Leaving y^e place. We need yo^r orders & direction about it. If it be deserted, how wofully doe we yield to & Encourage of insolent enmy, and how doth it make way for y^e giving up all ye Townes above. If it be held, it must be by strength and many souldiers, & how to have Provision,—I meane Bread,—for want of a mill, is difficult. Ye Souldiers here already complaine on y^t acct^o, although we have flesh enough; & this very strait—I meane no mill—will drive many of o^r Inhabitants away, especially those y^t have noe Corne, & many of them noe houses, w^{ch} fills & throngs up every Roome of those y^t have, together wth ye souldiers now (w^{ch} yet we cannot be wthout) increasing o^r numbers, so y^t, indeed, It is very uncomfortable Living here; & for my owne particular, it were far better for me to goe away f^r here. I have n^t anything left. I mean noe Corne, neither Indian nor English, and noe means to keep one beast here, nor can I have Reliefe in this Towne, because so many are destitute. But I resolve to attend what God calls me to, & to stick to it as long as I can, and though I have met gr^t loss of my Comforts yet to doe what I can for defending ye Place. I hope God will make up in himselfe what is wanting in ye creature to mee & to us all. This day a Post is sent up from Hartford to call off Major Treaté wth a part of his Souldiers, from Intelligence they have of a party of Indian lying at Wethersfield, on East side of y^e river, so y^t matters of action here doe Linger exceedingly, w^{ch} makes me wonder what y^e Ld intends wth his people, strange Providences diverting us in all o^r hopeful designs, & ye Ld. giving opportunity to ye enmy to doe us mischief, & then hiding of y^m, And answering all o^r Prayers by Terrible things in righteousness.

"SR, I am not capable of holding any command, being more and more unfit & almost confounded in my understanding; the Ld. direct yo^r to Pitch on a meeter person than ever I was; according to Liberty from y^e Council I shall devolve all upon Cap^t. Appleton, unless Major Treaté retaine againe, till yo^r shall give yo^r orders as shall be most meete to yo^rselves.

"To speake my thoughts, all these Townes ought to be Garrisoned, as I have formerly hinted, and had I bin left to my selfe I should I think have y^t w^{ch} Possibly might have prevented this damage. But ye express orders to doe as I did, was by y^e wise disposing hand of God, who knew it best for us, & therein we must acquiesce. And truly to goe out after y^e Indians in ye swamps and thickets is to hussard all o^r men, unless we knew where they keepe, w^{ch} is altogether unknown to us, & God hides from us for ends best knowne to himselfe. I have many tymes thought y^t y^e winter were y^e tyme to fall on y^m, but there are such difficultys y^t I shall leave it, yet suggest it to consideration. I will not further Trouble yo^r at present, but earnestly crave yo^r Prayers for ye Ld's undertaking for us and sanctifying all his stroaks to us.

"I remain, yo^r unworthy serv^t,"

"JOHN PYNCHON.

"We are in gr^t hassard if we doe but st^r out for wood to be shot downe by some skulking Indians. Mr. Glover had all his Bookes Burnt; not so much as a Bible saved; a gr^t loss, for he had some choice bookes and many."

The next letter is from the Council, at Boston, to Captain Appleton, at Hadley, informing him of the resignation of Major Pynchon, and his appointment in the major's place as commander of the forces of the valley.

COUNCIL OF MASSACHUSETTS TO CAPT. SAMUEL APPLETON.

CAPT. APPLETON,—The Council have seriously considered the earnest desire of Major Pynchon, and the great affliction upon him & his family, and have at last consented to his request to dismiss him from the chief command of the army in these parts, and have thought meet upon mature thought to commit the chief command unto yourself, being persuaded that God hath endowed you with a spirit & ability to manage that affair; and for the better enabling you to your employ we have sent the Council's order enclosed to Major Pynchon to be given to you, and we refer you to the instructions given him for your directions, ordering you from time to time to give us advice of all occurrences, and if you need any further orders and instructions they shall be given you as the matter shall require.

"So committing you to the Lord, desiring his presence with you and blessing upon you, we remain

"YOUR FRIENDS & SERVANTS.

"BOSTON, 4th October, 1675.

"CAPT. SAMUEL APPLETON,

"Commander-in-Chief at the headquarters at Hadley."

CAPT. APPLETON TO GOV. LEVERETT.

"Oct. 12, 1675.

"RIGHT WORSHIPFULL,—Yours by Lieut. Upham I received, as also that of Oct. 9th, from you, together with the order from the Commissioners, concerning the number and order of management of the forces in these parts. In reference whereto, I humbly present two things to your consideration: First, as to the ordering the chief command to one of such an inferior capacity; the very thoughts of it were and are to be such matter of trouble and humiliation, as that I know not how to induce my spirit to any compliances therewith, lest it should prove a matter of detriment and not help to the public, from which nothing should have moved me but the consideration of the present exigencies, together with the remembrance of the duty I owe to you and the common concerns; unto which the Hon. Major having added his sorrowful complaints, for which there was such abundant and manifest cause. It was indeed an heart-breaking thing to me, and forced me against my own spirit to yield to the improvement of the whole of my small talent in your service, until I might send to you (which I now do) to intreat that there may be speedily an appointment of some other, more able to the work, and likely to obtain the desired end. I humbly intreat your most serious consideration and help herein. Secondly, my humble request is, that you would be pleased to revive that part of your work, and that the Hon. Commissioners' orders, which doth strictly prohibit the fixing of any of our soldiers in garrison. I doubt not but the reasons inducing thereto were weighty, which notwithstanding we find the attendance here extremely hazardous to the loss of towns (which is the loss of all) as appears by lamentable experience we have had at Springfield, as also what is obvious to the eye of each man's reason. The thought hereof put us to great straits; most willingly would we attend the express letter of your order, and yet cannot but tremble at the thought of exposing the towns to ruin. Be pleased, as seasonably as may be, to give us your resolves herein.

"As to the state of poor desolate Springfield, to whose relief we came (though with a march that had put all our men into a most violent sweat, and was more than they could well bear) too late, their condition is indeed most afflicted, there being about 33 houses and twenty-five barns burnt, and about fifteen houses left unburnt; the people are full of fear, and staggering in their thoughts as to their keeping or leaving of the place. They whose houses and provisions are consumed incline to leave the place, as thinking they can better labor for a living in places of less danger than where they now are; hence seem unwilling to stay, except they might freely share in the corn and provision which is remaining and preserved by the sword. I cannot but think it conducive to the public (and for aught I see to the private) interests that the place be kept, there being corn and provisions enough and to spare for the sustenance of the persons, whose number is considerable, and cannot be maintained elsewhere, without more than almost any plan can afford to their relief.

"The worth of the place is considerable, and the holding of it will give encouragement and help to others, and the quitting of it great discouragement, and hazard to our passage from one place to another, it being so vast a distance from Hadley to any other Town on this side of the River. I have, in regard of ye present distress of ye poor people, adventured to leave Capt. Sill there, to be ordered by the Hon. Major until further order be received.

"What hazard I run, I am not insensible, but do rather choose to adventure hazard to myself than to the public, and so throw myself on your worshipful mercy in so doing.

"We are at present in a broken posture, incapable of any great action, by reason of Major Treat's absence, who, upon a report of Indians lower down the river, about Hartford, was (while I was absent) recalled by the Council of Connecticut upon the eighth of this instant, and is not yet returned, nor do I know how it is with him, nor when is like to return. We have sent to the Council of Connecticut signifying that our Colony having been mindful to complete their numbers, we do earnestly expect and intreat his speedy return, and that the ammunition now at Hartford, and needed by us, may be brought up under their guard; hereto we have not yet received answer.

"In the account of Springfield houses, we only presented the number of them on the east side of the river, and that in the town platt; for in all on the west side and in the outskirts on the east side, there are about sixty houses standing, and much corn in and about them, which, coming into the Indians' hands, will yield great support to them. We have been considering the making of a boat or boats, and find it not desirable; first, because the river is not navigable, and so none made here can be had up; secondly, should we make above the falls, there must be an army to guard the workmen in the work; thirdly, we find exceeding hard, by any provision, to secure our men in the boats, by reason that the high banks of the river giving the enemy so great advantage of shooting downward upon us; and lastly, as we must follow the enemy where he will go, we must either leave a very strong guard upon our boats, or lose them, perhaps, as soon as made. There being now come in sixty men under Captain and Lieut. Upham, and we needing commanders, especially part of our men being now at Springfield, and we not daring to send all thither, we have retained Capt. Pool to command these sixty men until further orders be given.

"We are but this evening come up from Springfield, and are applying ourselves presently to the sending out scouts for the discovery of the enemy, so that so, the Lord assisting, we may, with these forces that we have, be making some onset upon him, to do something for the glory of God and release of his distressed people, the sense of which is so much upon my heart that I count not my life too dear to venture in any motion wherein I can persuade myself I may be in a way of his providence, and expect his gracious presence, without which all our endeavors are in vain.

"We confide we shall not, we cannot, fail of ye steady and continued lifting up the hands and hearts of all God's precious ones, that our Israel may in his time prevail against this cursed Amalek, against whom I believe the Lord will have war forever, until he have destroyed him. With Him I desire to leave ourselves and all the concern, and so doing, to remain

"Your servant obliged to duty,

"SAMUEL APPLETON.

"I communicated thoughts with Major Pynchon about the garrison placing at Brookfield. And although it would be some relief and comfort to our messengers going post, yet considering the great charge which must necessarily be expended upon it, and that they have no winter provision there for the keeping of horses, without much use of which we see not how they can subsist, we have not seen cause to order any garrison thither (nor for aught yet appears shall do, except we have some special direction from you for it). We also find that these three towns* being but small, and having sustained much loss in their crop by reason of the war, and had much expense of what hath been gathered here, both by the soldiers and by those coming to them from the places that are already deserted,† are like to find the weight of sustaining the army too hard for them; and therefore we apprehend it will be advisable and necessary to send to Connecticut to afford some help as may be needed from some of their plantations.

"Capt. Mosely makes present of his humble service to your worship, whereto the scribe also desires to subjoin the tender of his own.

"These for the Worshipful John Leverett, Esq., Governor of the Massachusetts, at Boston."

Again, on the 17th, the anxious Captain Appleton writes to the Governor. [The most of these letters have been copied from former publications in which the spelling had been modernized.]

CAPT. APPLETON TO GOV. LEVERETT.

"HADLEY, Oct. 17, 1675.

"RIGHT WORSHIPFUL,—I thought it convenient & necessary to give you a present account of our state and posture, that so you might thereby be the better capacitated both to send orders to us and to know how to act towards others, as the case doth require.

"On Tuesday, Oct. 12th, we left Springfield, and came that night to Hadley. On the 13th & 14th we used all diligence to make discovery of the enemy by scouts, but by reason of the distance from here to Squakeage, and the timorousness of the scouts, it turned to little account; thereupon I found it very difficult to know what to do. Major Treat was gone from us, and when like to return we know not; our orders were to leave no more in garrison, but keep all for a field army, which was to expose the towns to manifest hazard. To sit still & do nothing is to tire ourselves, and spoil our soldiers, and to ruin the country by the insupportable burden and charge. All things laid together, I thought it best to go forth after the enemy with our present forces. This once resolved, I sent forth warrants on the 14th instant, early in the morning, to Capt. Mosely and Capt. (as he is called) Seely, at Hatfield & Northampton, to repair forthwith to the headquarter, that we might be ready for service. Capt. Mosely was accordingly with us with his whole company very speedily. Capt. Seely,‡ after a considerable time, came without his company; excused their absence by his want of commission. This commission he produced, and, upon debate about it, seemed satisfied, expressing that his purpose was to attend any orders that should be given. I wrote another warrant and gave into his hand to appear with his company—which are about 50 men—the next morning, but in the night he sent a messenger to me with a note, about intelligence from Major Treat to stay till further orders, etc. I presently posted away letters to the Council at Hartford, declaring to them how the work was obstructed by absence of Major Treat (whose company, indeed, I much desired, he approving himself while with us a worthy gentleman, and a discreet and encouraging commander) and by absence (indeed) of Capt. Seely and those few that were with him.

"The copy of my letter to the Council and of my warrant to Capt. Seely, and his returns to me, I send you here, all of them enclosed. This morning, Oct. 16th, I received a letter sent first to Major Pynchon, and from Springfield thither, from the Council at Hartford, dated Oct. 12th, which I also send the copy of, whereby you will perceive that they seem to make some excuse, and stick at the want of forces here from Plymouth, wherein I not so fitted to return them an answer as perhaps I might be, for want of understanding the specialties of agreement between the Hon'd Commissioners of the United Colonies; only thus much seems evident, that they all agreed their number should be 500, the which is made up by our Colony and Connecticut, though there be none from Plymouth, so that we see the reality of the thing is done, though we know not the reason of Plymouth not bearing a share in it. By a letter from Major Pynchon we understand that the ammunition is come up to Springfield, which I am presently sending for. This likewise informs of an old Indian squaw, taken at Springfield, who tells that the Indians who burnt that town lodged about six miles off the town; some men went forth, found 24 fires and some plunder. She saith there came of the enemy 270. That the enemy in all are 600. The place where they keep is at Coassit (as is supposed), about 50 miles above Hadley.

"After the sending my letter to Hartford, I drew forth our own men, all but Capt. Sill's (who are near sixty), intending to march up to Squakeage; we had not marched above a mile or two ere we received intelligence by post, that the enemy was by his tracks discovered to be in great numbers on the west side of the river. We presently changed our course, and hasted over the river. It was sunset ere we got out of Hatfield. We marched some miles, and in the dark saw a gun fired, and heard its report; and our scouts saw and heard this gun. Some also said they heard a noise of Indians. My purpose was now to march to Deerfield, but upon what we discovered, our officers, especially Capt. Mosely, was very apprehensive of danger to the towns here, if we should march up. This being often pressed, and I alone for proceeding, none of Connecticut men with us, nor any left in the towns of Hadley & Hatfield, and night threatening rain and tempest, I yielded against my own inclinations to return to our quarters, which we did in the night.

"This morning, we understand by scouts, that there is certainly a great number of the enemy at Deerfield, and some of them much nearer. This evening, we have received a letter from the General Court at Hartford, whereby I perceive

* Hadley, Hatfield, and Northampton.

† Deerfield and Northfield.

‡ Capt. Seely was stationed at Northampton with a company of Connecticut troops.

it is very uncertain when we are like to have their forces again. In very truth, I am in straits on every side. To leave the Towns without any help is to leave them to their apparent ruin.

"To supply with any, except now in the absence of Connecticut, is hardly conceivable with the order of the Commissioners. This evening, late, I am assaulted with vehement and affectionate request from Northampton (who have already with them about 50 of Capt. Seely's men) that I would afford them a little more help, they fearing to be assaulted presently.

"And at the same time while these are speaking, Capt. Mosely informs, the enemy is this evening discovered within a mile of Hatfield; and that he verily expects to be assaulted there to-morrow, which I am so sensible of, that I account it my duty presently to repair thither, now at ten or eleven of the clock in the night, some of the forces having already passed the River.

"Nor are we without apprehensions of Hatfield and Hadley's danger at the same time, where, with respect to the wounded men and the town, I strive with myself to leave about twenty men, or but few more, though the Indians were yesterday discovered within 5 or 6 miles; and we are necessitated to send so many of them for posts (on which account six are at this present) and other occasions, as makes them less than their little selves. I desire in all to approve myself to the Lord, and faithfully to his people's interests, so as I persuade myself would most reach and take your hearts, were you present. I crave your candid acceptance of what comes from a heart devoted to your service; and your speedy, reasonable return to what I have written; which waiting for, I leave the whole matter with the wise ordering, and remain

"Your Worship's most humble servant,

"SAMUEL APPLETON.

"Hoping for the return of our post from you, and that our going forth last night might produce something of consequence, we delayed the sending away this letter one day. But Providence hath delayed our expectation and desire in both.

"Our post is not come in, and we have wearied ourselves with a tedious night and morning's march, without making any discovery of the enemy.

"Thus the Lord orders all things wisely, holily, well; may we but see, and close with the goodness of his will, and wait for the working of all things together, it shall be peace, in the latter end, to all that love God, that are perfect ones; for which praying and waiting, I am

"Your servant, as above,

"S. A.

"Oct. 17th, afternoon.

"These for the Worshipful John Leverett, Esq., Governor of the Massachusetts in Boston. Hast—Hast—Post hast."

Maj. Appleton's fears, so earnestly expressed in his last letter above copied, were soon realized. An attack was made on Hatfield on the 19th of October by seven or eight hundred Indians, but they were repulsed. It was a desperate and spirited fight. The garrison was under Capts. Mosely and Poole. Maj. Appleton, with the Hadley forces, was soon on the ground, and after a short engagement the enemy fled. A detailed account of this affair will be found in the history of Hatfield, farther on in this volume.

The attack on Hatfield was the last engagement of importance which occurred in the valley during the year 1675. After that affair the Indians seemed to disperse and go into their winter quarters. The Nashavays returned, and with the Quaboags settled down for the winter at Wenimisset.* The River Indians took up their winter-quarters at a point above Northfield, over the Vermont border.

MOVEMENTS OF PHILIP IN THE WINTER OF 1675-76.

In the month of November, 1675, King Philip, with his warriors, left the Connecticut Valley, and went over to the banks of the Hudson River, with the intention of passing the winter there. With him was a numerous band of the Pocomp-tucks. It must have been at the mouth of the Fish Creek, opposite Lake Saratoga, the scene of the Burgoyne surrender a hundred years later, in what is now Saratoga County, that Philip had his temporary abode during this winter. Governor Andross writes:

"NEW YORK, Jan. 6, 1676.

"This is to acquaint you that late last night I had intelligence that Philip and four or five hundred North Indians, fighting men, were come within forty or fifty miles of Albany northerly, where they talk of continuing this winter. That Philip is sick, and one Sahamaschaha† the commander-in-chief."

Says the Rev. J. F. Moors, in his historical address at Turner's Falls on the 31st of May, 1876:

"The winter of 1675-76 was a dark and sad one, both for natives and colonists. The advantage in the war, so far, had been on the side of the Indians. They had killed many of the settlers and broken up their settlements. But they could but feel that they were the weaker party, and that sooner or later they would be obliged to yield. They had drawn their foes, as yet unaccustomed to Indian warfare, into fatal ambuscades; they had fired at them with fatal effect from behind trees; they had lurked for them in leafy thickets. They had never met the English in open field, but in secret, as beasts of prey. Skillful marksmen, in part provided with firearms, conversant with all the paths of the forest, patient with fatigue, mad with a passion for rapine and vengeance, with only the mercy of savages, they were a foe to be especially feared and dreaded.

"To the feeble and scattered colonists the prospect was dark indeed. Their isolated position increased their danger and their sense of loneliness. The husband and father, going out to his labor in the field, must have felt that his own life was exposed every moment to the bullet of a dark and treacherous foe. The mother, left alone in the house with her children, must have passed the hours in mortal fear of an enemy that spared neither sex nor age. That winter occurred the 'Swamp-Fight,' as it has been called."

THE NARRAGANSETT SWAMP-FIGHT.

The white inhabitants of New England now began to consider that with them it had become a matter of life and death. It was evident to their minds that should the powerful Narragansetts unite with the other tribes in the war, the days of civilized New England would soon come to a tragic end. To prevent such a union of the tribes, no less a project was deemed necessary than to break at once and forever the power of the Narragansetts. The Narragansetts had already broken their treaty made but a few months before, and were already making hostile demonstrations.

The commissioners of the United Colonies met at Boston on the 2d of November. They accordingly made a formal declaration of war against the Narragansetts, ordered one thousand men to be raised from the several colonies, appointed Governor Winslow, of Plymouth, commander-in-chief, agreeing that the second in command should be appointed by the General Court or Council of Connecticut when the forces should be in that colony. The Commissioners further ordered that the Connecticut soldiers should rendezvous at Norwich, Stonington, and New London, and those of Massachusetts and Plymouth at Rehoboth, Providence, and Warwick, by the 10th of December. They also recommended to the several colonies to appoint the 2d of December following a day of humiliation and prayer for the success of the enterprise in which they were about to engage. We again quote from Mr. Moors:

"The Narragansetts were the most powerful of the New England tribes. The colonists regarded them as their most dangerous enemies, and a thousand men, levied in the colonies, invaded their territory, came stealthily upon their cluster of wigwams, which were speedily set on fire, and not only were the savage warriors slain, but their old men, their wives and little ones, perished by hundreds in the flames. Much blame has been attached to the English for this act of cruelty, equalling almost in barbarity the conduct of the savages themselves. It was a terrible thing to do, but we have learned, even in our day, that war in its very nature is full of cruelties, and we certainly can have a feeling of charity, if not of full forgiveness, for our fathers, who had reason to know that there was no safety for them or their families except as this savage element was rooted out of the land. It had become a war of extermination on both sides."

The "Swamp-Fight" occurred on the 19th of December. Winter had then already set in with great severity, travel was almost impossible, and both whites and Indians remained in close quarters till the last of January, 1676, when a sudden thaw took off the snow.

* Temple and Sheldon's Northfield, p. 83.

† Sau-cum-a-cha was a Non-o-tuck sachem.

IV.

THE CAMPAIGN OF 1676 IN THE VALLEY.

After the destruction of their fort, the Narragansetts determined to unite their fortunes with Philip against the English. So, when the January thaw had cleared the ground, a large part of this tribe set out, under the lead of their sachem Canonchet, for the Nipmuck headquarters at Quaboag, now Brookfield. They reached Brookfield about the middle of February, and remained there about two weeks.

But the English troops were also in motion, and the mounted men under Maj. Thomas Savage, and the Connecticut troops under Maj. Treat, reached Brookfield about the 2d of March.

THE GATHERING OF THE TRIBES AT SQUAK-HEAG IN THE SPRING OF 1676.

Upon learning of the near approach of the English the Indians left Quaboag and went northward. This band comprised the Narragansetts, the Nipmucks, and the Grafton Indians, a "miscellaneous crowd," numbering in all about two thousand souls. The English pursued, but the Indians by a feigned attack drew them off on a wrong trail, so that the whole body of the Indians was safely across Miller's River before the English came to the fording-place, on the 6th of March. The stream was swollen by the spring floods, and the English dare not cross in pursuit. The Indians reached Squak-heag on the 7th of March, and found Philip and his allies already there. In February, Philip had been attacked by the Mohawks, and driven back to the valley of the Connecticut. This gathering of the tribes at Northfield in the early spring of 1676 was one of the most notable events of the war. King Philip, chief sachem of the Pokanokets, was there with all the allied tribes. The Indians as well as the whites were conscious that the coming struggle was one of life or death. With Philip were his kinsman, Quinnapin, and Canonchet, the son of Miantonomo, the hereditary sachem of the powerful Narragansetts. With Philip were San-cum-a-cha, a sachem of Non-o-tuck, who was the leader of the Pa-comp-tuck and Agawams, and Mautamp, chief of the Nipmucks. With Philip also were large numbers of stragglers from the broken tribes, making in all, with the Squak-heags, a mixed multitude two thousand five hundred strong.

On the 27th of April a captured Indian told Samuel Marshfield that the Indians "had three forts this side Wassquack-heag; that the number of Indians at Deerfield and on the river was three thousand, of whom one thousand were men."*

Early in May the Indians separated into four parties. One remained at Squak-heag for planting and fishing; one went to the Pa-comp-tuck meadows to plant corn; one to Paquayug, now Athol, for the same purpose; and a large crowd gathered at Pas-quam-seut, now Turner's Falls, to fish. It was against those at Pas-quam-seut that evil was impending.

The Indians at Pa-comp-tuck began their corn-planting, as was their usual custom, on the 10th of May, and planted—it was estimated at the time differently—from one hundred to three hundred acres. Early in the spring of 1676 an order or request was made by the Court at Boston for the outlying towns in the valley all to remove to Springfield and Hadley. This movement was so stoutly opposed by Westfield and Northampton that on the 1st of April the order was rescinded and the plantations allowed to remain.†

THE FALLS FIGHT.

By far the most important action of the war in the year 1676 which occurred in the valley took place at Pas-quam- seut Falls, the great Indian fishing-ground, on the morning of the 19th of May, O. S., corresponding to our 31st.

In the opening of spring a large English force, consisting of four Massachusetts companies and four from Connecticut, were stationed in the towns of Northampton, Hadley, and Hatfield. From time to time small parties of Indians attacked their outposts, but gained no considerable advantage. Hearing of the large gathering of Indians at the Falls, an expedition was planned against them. We again quote from the Rev. Mr. Moors' historical address.

"It was resolved to make a night-attack upon the Indian camp at the Falls. A force of one hundred and sixty mounted men, under command of Capt. Turner, was dispatched from Hatfield for this purpose. Making their way by a night-march of twenty miles, they passed the ruins of Deerfield, forded the Deerfield River near the north end of Pine Hill, passed over Petty's Plain, and crossed the Green River near Nash's Mill. In crossing the Deerfield, the guide, by mistake, took them to the west of the customary fording-place. The mistake saved them from an attack. Some Indians encamped near Cheapside heard the crossing of the troops, and started to intercept them at the ford; but finding no one there, they hastily inferred it was some moose they had heard, and retired to their own quarters.

"Then, turning to the east, Turner's party made their way through the forest, following an Indian trail, upon the north edge of the swamp, till they reached the level ground north-west of Factory village. Dismounting here, and leaving their horses in charge of a small guard, they hastened noiselessly down into the 'Hollow,' forded Fall River just above the upper bridge, and scaled the abrupt bank on the opposite side, and there reached the summit north of Mr. Stoughton's house, and drew up in line on the gentle slope south of Mr. Stoughton's house. The Indian camp was now just before them.

"The day was just dawning. All was still and peaceful as a Christian Sabbath-day. The only sound to be heard was the morning song of the birds and the monotonous roar of the waters of the 'Great River,' as they dashed tumultuously over the rocks. The dusky warrior slept in unguarded, unsuspecting security. If he dreamed of war, it was of some distant scene where he carried death and destruction to some settlement of the hated foe. He did not dream how near the danger was to him. The silent signal was given, and the eager soldiers moved silently nearer their sleeping enemy, and, at the word of command, poured a volley of musketry into those unprotected cabins. The Indians, roused from profound sleep, sprung upon their feet in terror, some crying out 'Mohawks! Mohawks!' believing, in their sudden fright, that their furious enemy was upon them. They made but a feeble and useless resistance. Many were killed on the spot by shot and sword, others rushed madly into the river, and were swept away by its resistless torrent. Report says that one hundred and forty persons passed over the cataract that morning, and that all but one were drowned.

* * * * *

"The firing soon aroused the other camps across the river and at Smead's Island. A party soon crossed above the Falls to assist their companions in their need. Twenty of Turner's men were sent to attack them, while the main body started for the spot where their horses had been left. This little band proved not to be strong enough, and were forced to retire and with difficulty joined their comrades; and altogether, having recovered and mounted their horses, they started on their return to Hatfield. But by this time the Indians at Smead's Island had crossed to the west shore and assailed the left and the rear of the English.

"It seems to have been no part of Turner's plan to attack the other camps. The English had learned and adopted the Indian mode of warfare,—by sudden and unexpected night-attacks, and to retire as soon as there is danger that the assailed party may be reinforced. Up to the time of the order to return and commence their homeward march, it, in the ambiguous language of war, might have been styled a 'glorious victory.' But from that moment the fortunes of war seem to have changed.

* Temple and Sheldon's Northfield, p. 90.

† See Holland's Hist. of Western Mass., Vol. II., pp. 112-119.

"The assault upon their flank and rear by an unseen foe, firing from behind the covert of the trees, caused a sudden panic, heightened by a baseless rumor, which spread among the men, that King Philip had arrived with a thousand warriors. Order and discipline were lost; the force was broken up into little detached parties, each one intent only on self-preservation. The victory of the early morning, so complete, and attended with so little loss, became a stampede for personal safety,—a procedure most fatal to themselves and most favorable to their savage pursuers, who assailed each wandering squad and gained an easy victory over them. One party, getting lost in the woods and swamps, were taken prisoners, and the tradition is that they were put to death by burning."

The loss of the Indians was variously estimated. It may have been as high as two hundred, men, women, and children. In the disastrous retreat of the English forces from the scene of the morning's encounter the whole loss was about thirty men. Among the slain was Capt. Turner, who was killed in the Greenfield Meadows. Capt. Holyoke, the second in command, also died before the winter. Although but twenty-eight years old, the exertions of the day broke down his strength. The beautiful falls on the Connecticut long since lost their old Indian name, and now bear the name of the lamented commander of the fight, Capt. Turner. An account of Capt. Turner will be found in the history of Greenfield, farther on in this work.

After the Falls fight, the Indians, on the 30th of May, attacked Hatfield with a force of two hundred and fifty warriors, killed five men, burned many houses, and drove away a large number of horses and cattle.

Again, on the 12th of June, the same party attacked Hadley, and were repulsed. This ended the main incidents of the war in the valley. Upon the death of King Philip, on the 12th of August following, the savages left their homes in the valley never to return, except from time to time in a few revenging, predatory bands.

EXAMINATION OF ME-NOWN-IETTS.

In the month of August, 1676, an Indian named Me-nown-ietts was examined at Hartford, whose testimony we append as a matter of interest to the reader:

"Me-nown-ietts' Examination, August, 1676.

"Where have you been these 12 months? He answered, 'He was halfe a Mo-heug and halfe a Naragonett; he came last year to Norcottog, and hath spent most of his time in hunting.'

"Being askt wheth^r he had been in any engagements against the English? he said, 'Yes; he was in that fight that was above Northampton, where he saw 7 English slayn in one place; and others were slayn, but how many he knows not.'

"How many Indians were killed in the fight? He answered, 'Not one.'

"Where went you next? He says, 'They went to Paconylock and assaulted that, about 60 of them, and slue one Englishman.' Where had you the next engagement wth the English? He sayth, 'He was at N. Hampton when it was assaulted last spring, wh^r they lost an Indian and 4 wounded; one was mortally wounded. In ye Fall fight were slayn 40 Norcottog Quapang, 10 Naragonetts, and []'. He was at Hadley fight and shot in ye leg.' Whoe were those that kild the man between Middleton & Wethersfield? 'Minch, Cohas, Tossum, Carrohoage, We-na-ro-as.'

"Who killed G. Elmore at Podunk? 'He was one of them himselfe; there was 9 in company; 3 did the business, which were Weewoss, Johnnot, and Mashinott.'

"He also sayth Cohas and anothers Naragonett shot Wm. Hill.

"Who kild Henry Denslow? 'Wegush S., Weewosse, Molleg, Whowassamoh-Wer, Paraweneoire Spr., and Maecahwat Spr., Sanehuvoire, Que; and Wesonektacher, Nor; and these were those that burnt Simsbury.'

"Cohas burnt G. Coal's house; Sepawcutt was wth the Indians or enemies at Wadhosutt, and said he had kild 7 English of ye seaside.

"He sayth that the Norcottach, Springfield Indians, and others are gon to a place about Hudson's River called Paguyagay, and were encouraged to come there by a great man of those parts, whoe hath also encouraged them to engage against the English, and that they should not be weary of it.

"He did not see the man nor doth not know who it was. He was askt where they had ye ammunition to carry on the war; he said the Powquing Indians bought it of ye Dutch and sold it y^m.

"He was askt how many of the North Indians had gon that way? He sayth, 'About 90 men of them and Sucquance is wth them; he was vey sick, and as like to die as live.'

"Cohas, Weewassamock Spr., Moanmampoquack Spr., were in company wth him; in the woods were Timzes and 3 squas and 4 children; they had 2 horses, and pease and corn; they took from G. Coal's farms.

"He sayth y^e Indians hid a great many gunns about Paconylock; y^e place he described to Tota. He sayth he took an Englishman at the Longmeadow about Springfield captive, and carried him away, but he got away afterwards he thinks. W^t Indians be at Honsetamuck? 'None. They are all gon to Paupting, y^e west side of Hudson's River.'"

"Taken before JOHN ALLYN,
"Assist."

CHAPTER XVI.

THE FRENCH-AND-INDIAN WARS—1609 TO 1763.

I.

1609 TO 1642.

THE century and a half of warfare waged between the English and Dutch settlers and their Indian allies of the Atlantic Slope on the one part, and the French colonists and their Indian allies of the valley of the St. Lawrence and the great lakes on the other part, was a struggle for the mastery of the North American continent by peoples holding diametrically opposing ideas,—Roman Catholicism, fostered by despotic royalty, on the side of the French in Canada; Protestantism, upheld by constitutional liberty, on the side of New England, New York, Pennsylvania, and Virginia.

The story of these long wars waged in the depths of the old wilderness reads more like the wild romances of the savage border-wars of ancient and mediæval times than it does like the history of wars waged as they were between enlightened nations in comparatively modern times. But the Indian and the forest dragged down as it were the humane and civilizing tendencies of the white men engaged with them to their own wild and savage level. Hence the old French-and-Indian wars were marked by a thousand atrocities elsewhere unknown in modern times. Many of these atrocities occurred in the Connecticut Valley in Massachusetts, some account of which will be given farther on in this chapter, or in the town histories farther on in this volume. In order, however, properly to comprehend the subject, brief mention must be made of preceding events as well as of the closing scenes of the great drama.

CHAMPLAIN'S FIRST BATTLE WITH THE IROQUOIS.

In the year 1609, eleven years before the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth, two important events took place in America. One was the discovery and exploration by Samuel de Champlain of the lake in the early summer, and the other was the discovery and exploration of the river by Henry Hudson in the early autumn of that year, which lake and river each will bear the name of its immortal discoverer to the latest posterity.

Champlain, then the Governor of New France, had established his infant colony of Quebec only the year before, although Jacques Cartier, the discoverer and first explorer of the river St. Lawrence,—the old Indian Ho-cho-la-ga,—had first sailed upon its waters up as far as the rapids below Montreal, in the year 1535.

The Indians told Champlain of a wilderness-sea stretching many days' journey to the south of the St. Lawrence into the country of the Iroquois, and in the spring he determined to visit and explore it. He set out from Quebec as soon as the melting snows would permit, and proceeded first up the St. Lawrence and then up the Iroquois River—as then called; now known as the Richelieu or Sorel—into the lake that has since borne his name. Entering the broad waters of the lake, he continued on his way, traveling only in the night-time and lying on the shore by day, as his Algonquin attendants were in mortal fear of meeting the much-dreaded Iroquois on the war-path. Their fears were soon to be realized. On the evening of the 29th day of July, Champlain met a flotilla of Iroquois paddling down the lake. Both parties landed, and waited till the dawn of day. Then the Iroquois marched bravely up to Champlain and offered battle. Champlain discharged his firearms, and the Iroquois, terrified at the strange noise, fled, with the loss of two of their bravest war-chiefs. This encounter, fought on the soil of Northern New York, was the beginning of the long enmity between the French and the Iroquois, which, for more than a century and a half, often crimsoned the soil of the old wilderness-with blood.

II.

THE DISCOVERY OF LAKE GEORGE.

Champlain went up the lake which bears his name far enough to hear the chiming waters of the outlet of Lake George, but returned without seeing it, in the olden time the fairest of all the wilderness-waters.

The first white men who saw Lake George were the Jesuit Father Isaac Jogues and his companions, René Goupil and Guillaume Couture. They were taken over its waters as prisoners—tortured, maimed, and bleeding—by the Mohawks in the month of August, 1642. Since their encounter with Champlain in 1609 the Iroquois had ceased to make war upon their Algonquin enemies on the St. Lawrence, but they had not forgotten their humiliating defeat. At length the Dutch had supplied them with firearms, and their hour of sweet revenge had come. Among their first victims was Father Jogues. In a year or two Jogues escaped from the Mohawks and returned to Canada. In the year 1646 he returned to the Mohawk country to make a treaty with the Iroquois, and on his way again passed over Lake George. He entered the lake on the eve of Corpus Christi, and in honor of the day named it "The Lake of the Blessed Sacrament." It was known as Lake St. Sacrament until Sir William Johnson, in the summer of 1755, changed its name to Lake George, in honor of England's Hanoverian king.

III.

TRACY AND COURCELLE IN 1666.

Again, in 1666, there was war between the French and the Iroquois. The Iroquois took the war-path and committed many depredations in Canada. In retaliation, the Marquis de Tracy, Lieutenant-General of Canada, and Governor Courcelle, in the autumn of 1666, marched a large force through the wilderness to the Mohawk towns and destroyed them.

And so the war raged between the French and the Iroquois until the Revolution of 1688 in England raised a line of Calvinistic kings to the British throne, the effect of which was to bring about long wars with France.

IV.

KING WILLIAM'S WAR.

We now come to the first of the long series of French-and-Indian wars in which the English colonies were involved. The English Revolution of 1688—which dethroned the Stuart dynasty and elevated William of Orange and Mary of England to the British throne, and which was in many ways so beneficent in its effects upon England—involved serious consequences to the dependencies of the British crown. Although bloodless in England, it resulted in the battle of Boyne Water in the year 1689, the animosities of which, there engendered, still linger in the breasts of Irishmen, and brought about the sacking and burning of Schenectady in the depth of the winter of 1690, which was the beginning of seventy long years of colonial warfare.

During these seventy years of border warfare, from 1690 to 1760, many incidents occurred directly or remotely affecting the people of the valley of the Connecticut. During these seventy years the people of the valley were in constant fear of the savage invader, and many times suffered from the attacks of the French and Indians. Yet it will not be attempted in this chapter to do much more than to make mention of the more important incidents, leaving the details thereof, and the mention of the minor events, to the narrations of the town historians in the succeeding chapters of this work.

The Canadian Invasion of 1690.—The first attempt made to invade Canada by the province of New York, jointly with the New England colonies, was in the year 1690.

On the 1st day of May, 1690, the first American Congress met at the old fort in the city of New York. In pursuance of its resolutions, a joint undertaking of the colonies was planned and fitted out for the conquest of Canada. It was to consist of two expeditions,—one overland against Montreal, and another by sea against Quebec. The command of the overland expedition was given to Gen. Fitz-John Winthrop, of Connecticut. The province of Massachusetts had, two days before the meeting of this Congress, fitted out and sent by sea an expedition against Port Royal, under Sir William Phipps. The fleet consisted of eight small vessels, with seven or eight hundred men. The fort surrendered with little resistance, and Sir William took possession of the whole coast, from Port Royal to New England. This success by sea greatly encouraged the expedition by land undertaken by the United Colonies.

On the 14th day of July, Gen. Winthrop, with the New England troops, left Hartford, and passing through a virgin wilderness, whose shades were broken only by the little settlements at and near Albany, reached Stillwater, on the Hudson, on the 1st day of August. On the day after, he reached Sar-agh-to-ya, on the Hudson, where he found Maj. Peter Schuyler, with the New York troops, waiting his arrival. The expedition went still farther up the Hudson, and crossed the "Great Carrying-Place" to Wood Creek, the head-waters of Lake Champlain, but went no farther. Like one after another of the many expeditions which followed it during the long seventy years of forest warfare, this first one was an utter failure. The expedition by sea, under Sir William Phipps, consisting of thirty vessels, with two thousand men, reached Quebec late in the fall, but effected nothing.

French and Indians in the Connecticut Valley.—It was not long before Count de Frontenac adopted retaliatory measures. The first demonstration of the war made in Massachusetts was an attack by the French and Indians upon Brookfield about the 1st of August, 1692.

On the 6th of June, 1693, the Indians attacked Deerfield, and again in October, 1694, in August, 1695, and again in the fall of 1696.

In the summer of 1698 a party of Indians attacked Hatfield. The treaty of Ryswick, signed between England and France on the 20th of September, 1697, brought a short peace to the colonies. On the 4th day of May, 1702, war was declared between England and France.

V.

QUEEN ANNE'S WAR.

The accession of Queen Anne to the throne of England, like that of William and Mary, brought war between France and England, the consequences of which were a severe visitation upon the colonies. One of the first places to suffer in Massachusetts was Deerfield.

The Burning of Deerfield.—On the old Indian hunting-ground called Pa-comp-tuck was planted the town of Deerfield, the richest of all the valley-towns in heroic historic memories. Many a page of her eventful story speaks of the blood of fair women and brave men, of the burning dwelling and ruined home, and is filled with piteous tales of captive children marching through the frozen wilderness, with touching stories of self-sacrifice and deeds of daring valor.

In the winter of 1704, Hertel de Rouville, with four brothers, led a party of French and Indians from Montreal, numbering two hundred and fifty, to the valley of the Connecticut in Massachusetts. The blow fell upon devoted Deerfield, hardly yet recovered from the devastating effects of Philip's war. De Rouville and his band approached the sleeping hamlet in the night, killed sixty of the inhabitants, and carried off a hundred prisoners. Among the prisoners was the minister of the place, Mr. John Williams. A full account of this distressing affair will be found in the history of Deerfield, farther on in this work, contributed by George Sheldon.

The Deerfield Bell.—The little Indian village of Caughnawaga is situate on the south bank of the St. Lawrence River, opposite the village of Lachine, at the head of the Saut St. Louis, nine miles above Montreal.

In the little mission church in Caughnawaga, it is believed, still hangs the bell taken from Deerfield by the French and Indians on the 29th day of February, 1704.

This bell has been called the bell of St. Regis. It has been celebrated in song by Mrs. Sigourney, in her poem with that title:

“The red men came in their pride and wrath,
Deep vengeance fired their eye;
And the blood of the white was in their path,
And the flame from his roof rose high.

“Then down from the burning church they bore
The bell of trumpet sound,
And on with their captive train they bore
That wonderful thing toward their native shore,
The rude Canadian bound.”

But says Dr. Hough: “That the Deerfield bell could not have been taken directly to St. Regis is evident from the fact that fifty-six years elapsed between its capture and the founding of St. Regis.”*

In fact, St. Regis was settled by emigrants from Caughnawaga in 1760, the main part remaining behind and doubtless retaining the bell brought from Deerfield, as the mission of the Saut St. Louis continued with no interruption.

While on a visit to Caughnawaga, in October, 1852, Dr. Hough found a small bell that once had an inscription, but was then effaced. He also found a direct tradition in connection with the bell, and in the hands of the priest a manuscript in French, of which he gives the following translation, which is inserted here for what it is worth:

“LEGEND OF THE BELL OF SAUT ST. LOUIS (CAUGHNAWAGA), NEAR MONTREAL.

“Father Nicolas, having assembled a considerable number of Indians, who had been converted to the Catholic faith, had established them in the village which now bears the name of the Saut St. Louis, upon the River St. Lawrence. The situation of the village is one of the most magnificent which the banks of that noble river presents, and is among the most picturesque which the country contains.

“The church stands upon a point of land which juts into the river, and its bell sends its echoes over the waters with a clearness which forms a striking contrast with the iron bells which were formerly so common in Canada, while the tin-covered spire of the church, glittering in the sunlight, with the dense, gloomy forests which surround it, gives a character of romance to this little church and the legend of its celebrated bell.

“Father Nicolas, having, with the aid of the Indians, erected a church and a belfry, in one of his sermons explained to his humble auditors that a bell was as necessary to a belfry as a priest to a church, and exhorted them to lay aside a portion of the furs which they collected in hunting, until enough was accumulated to purchase a bell, which could only be procured by sending to France. The Indians exhibited an inconceivable ardor in performing this religious duty, and the packet of furs was promptly made out and forwarded to Havre, where an ecclesiastical personage was delegated to make the purchase. The bell was accordingly ordered, and in due time forwarded on board the ‘Grande Monarque,’ which was on the point of sailing for Quebec. It so happened that, after her departure, one of the wars which the French and English then so often waged sprung up, and in consequence the ‘Grande Monarque’ never attained her destined port, but was taken by a New England privateer, brought into the port of Salem, where she was condemned as a lawful prize, and sold for the benefit of her captors.

“The bell was purchased by the village of Deerfield, upon the Connecticut River, for a church then about being erected by the congregation of the celebrated Rev. John Williams.

“When Father Nicolas received news of the misfortune, he assembled his Indians, related to them the miserable condition of the bell retained in purgatory in the hands of heretics, and concluded by saying that it would be a most praiseworthy enterprise to go and recover it.

“This appeal had in it as it were a kind of inspiration, and fell upon its hearers with all the force of the eloquence of Peter the Hermit in preaching the Crusades.

“The Indians deplored together the misfortune of their bell, which had not hitherto received the rite of baptism. They had not the slightest idea of a bell, but it was enough for them that Father Nicolas, who preached and said mass for them in their church, said that it had some indispensable use in the service of the church.

“Their eagerness for the chase was in a moment suspended, and they assembled together in groups, and, seated on the banks of the river, conversed on the unhappy captivity of their bell, and each brought forward his plan, which he deemed most likely to succeed in effecting its recovery. Some of their number, who had heard a bell, said it could be heard beyond the murmur of the rapid, and that its voice was more harmonious than that of the sweetest songster of the grove heard in the quiet stillness of evening, when all nature was lulled in repose.

“All were melancholy and inspired with a holy enthusiasm; many fasted, and others performed severe penances to obtain the deliverance of the bell, or the palliation of its sufferings.

“At length the day of its deliverance approached. The Marquis de Vaudreuil, Governor of Canada, resolved to send an expedition against the British colonies of Massachusetts and New Hampshire. The command of this expedition was given to Major Hertel de Rouville, and one of the friends of the Jesuit college at Quebec was sent to procure the services of Father Nicolas to accompany the expedition.

“The Indians were immediately assembled in the church. The messenger was presented to the congregation, and Father Nicolas, in a solemn discourse, pointed to him as worthy of their veneration, from his being the bearer of glad tidings, who was about departing for his return to Quebec to join the war. At the end of the discourse the whole audience raised with one voice the cry of war, and demanded to be led to the place where their bell was detained by the heretics.

“The savages immediately began to paint themselves in the most hideous colors, and were animated with a wild enthusiasm to join the expedition.

“It was in the depth of winter when they departed to join the army of M. de Rouville, at Fort Chambly. Father Nicolas marched at their head with a large banner surmounted by a cross, and, as they departed from their village, their wives and little ones, in imitation of women of the crusades, who animated the warriors of Godfrey of Bouillon, they sang a sacred hymn which their venerated priest had selected for the occasion. They arrived at Chambly, after a march of great hardship, at the moment the French soldiers were preparing to start on their march up Lake Champlain.

“The Indians followed in their rear with that perseverance peculiar to their character. In this order the Indians remained, following in silence until they reached Lake Champlain, where all the army had been ordered to rendezvous. This lake was then frozen and less covered by snow than the shores, and was taken as a more convenient route for the army. With their thoughts wrapped up in the single contemplation of the unhappy captivity of their bell, the Indians remained taciturn during this pensive march, exhibiting no symptoms of fatigue or of fear; no regret for their families or homes; and they regarded with equal indifference on the one hand the interminable line of forest, sometimes black from dense evergreens and in others white with loads of snow, and on the other the black lines of rocks and deserts of snow and ice, which bordered their path. The French soldiers, who suffered dreadfully from fatigue and cold, regarded with admiration the agility and cheerfulness with which the Indians seemed to glide over the yielding surface of the snow on their snow-shoes. The great endurance of the proselytes of Father Nicolas formed a striking contrast with the excitability and impatience of the French soldiers.

“When they arrived at the point where now stands the city of Burlington, the order was given for a general halt to make more efficient arrangements for penetrating through the forests to Massachusetts. In leaving this point, De Rouville gave to Father Nicolas the command of his Indian warriors and took the lead of his own himself, with compass in hand, to make the most direct course for Deerfield. Nothing which the troops had thus far suffered could compare with what they now endured on this march through a wild country, in the midst of deep snow, and with no supplies beyond what they could carry.

“The French soldiers became impatient, and wasted their breath in curses and complaints at the hardships they suffered; but the Indians, animated by a zeal which sustained them above the sense of hardships, remained steadfast in the midst of fatigue which increased with the severity of their sufferings.

“Their custom of travelling in the forest had qualified them for these hardships, which elicited the curses and execrations of their not less brave but more irritable companions. Some time before the expedition arrived at its destination the priest, Nicolas, fell sick from over-exertion. His feet were worn by the labor of travelling, and his face torn by the branches which he neglected to watch in his eagerness to follow the troops.

“He felt that he was engaged in a holy expedition, and recalling to mind the martyrdom of the saints and the persecutions which they endured, he looked forward to the glory reserved for his reward for the sufferings which he might encounter in recovering the bell.

“On the evening of February 29th, 1704, the expedition arrived within two miles of Deerfield without being discovered.

“De Rouville here ordered his men to rest and refresh themselves a short time, and he here issued his orders for attacking the town.

“The surface of the snow was frozen and cracked under their feet, but De

* Hough's History of St. Lawrence and Franklin Counties, N. Y., page 115.

Rouville, with a remarkable sagacity, adopted a stratagem to deceive the inhabitants and the garrison.

"He gave orders that in advancing to the assault the troops should make frequent pauses and then rush forward with rapidity, thus imitating the noise made in the forest by the irregular blowing of the wind among branches laden with ice.

"The alarm was at length given, and a severe combat ensued, which resulted in the capture of the town and the slaughter or dispersion of the inhabitants and the garrison.

"This occurred in the night, and at daybreak the Indians, who had been exhausted by the labors of the night, presented themselves before Father Nicolas in a body and begged to be led to the bell, that they might by their homage prove their veneration for it. Their priest was greatly affected by this earnest request, and De Rouville and others of the French laughed immoderately at it; but the priest wished not to discourage them in their wishes, and he obtained of the French chief permission to send one of his soldiers to ring it in the hearing of the Indians.

"The sound of the bell in the stillness of the cold morning, and in the midst of the calmness of the forest, echoed clear and far, and fell upon the ears of the simple Indians like the voice of an oracle. They trembled, and were filled with fear and wonder.

"The bell was taken from the belfry, and attached to a pole in such a manner that four men could carry it, and in this way it was borne off with their plunder in triumph, the Indians glorying in the deliverance of this miraculous wonder.

"But they shortly perceived it was too heavy a burden for the rugged route they pursued and the yielding nature of the snows over which they traveled. Accordingly, upon arriving at the point on the lake where they had left it, they buried their cherished treasure, with many benedictions of Father Nicolas, until the period should arrive when they could transport it with more convenience.

"As soon as the ice had disappeared, and the bland air of spring had returned, giving foliage to the trees and the fragrance and beauty of flowers to the forest, Father Nicolas again assembled at the church his Indian converts to select a certain number of the tribe, who, with the assistance of a yoke of oxen, should go and bring in the dearly-prized bell.

"During the interval all the women and children of the Indian village, having been informed of the wonderful qualities of the bell, awaited its arrival with eagerness and impatience, and regarded its advent as one of those events which but rarely mark the progress of ages. As the time approached when the curious object should arrive, they were assembled on the bank of the river, and discoursing upon the subject, when far off in the stillness of the twilight there was heard from the depths of the forest a sound which, from being feeble and scarcely audible, became every moment louder. Every one listened, when presently the cry arose 'It is the bell! it is the bell!' and in a moment after the oxen were seen emerging from the wood surrounded by a group of Indians, and bearing the precious burden on a pole between them. They had hung upon the beam and around the bell clusters of wild-flowers and leaves, and the oxen were adorned with garlands of flowers. Thus marching in triumph, Father Nicolas entered his village more proud of his success and received with more heartfelt joy than a Roman general returning in triumph from the conquest of nations.

"From this triumphal march in the midst of the quiet of the evening, which was broken only by the murmur of the rapid softened by the distance, arose the shouts of rejoicing as the cortege entered the village and the idol bell was deposited in the church. Every one gratified his eager curiosity by examining the strange musical metal, and the crusade had been crowned with unqualified success.

"In due time it was raised to its place in the belfry, and has ever since, at the accustomed hours, sent its clear tones over the broad bosom of the St. Lawrence to announce the hour of prayer and lapse of time; and although its tones are shrill and feeble beside its modern companion, they possess a music and call up an association which will long give an interest to the church of the Saint St. Louis, at the Indian village of Cough-ne-ta-ga."

Further Depredations.—After the sacking of Deerfield, in the month of February, the Indians hung around the devoted settlement during all the spring months, killing several persons.

In July, 1706, Samuel Chapin, of Springfield, was shot by the Indians, and severely wounded.

During the same year Samuel and Joseph Parsons, of Northampton, sons of Captain John Parsons, were killed in the woods. On the 26th of July that year, seven or eight Indians attacked the house of Lieut. Wright, and killed "old Mr. Wright" and two soldiers named Aaron Parsons and Barijah Hubbard. They also knocked two children on the head, one of whom died, and took Henry Wright's wife captive.

Expeditions of 1709 and 1711.—In the year 1709 an undertaking on a large scale, for the capture of Canada, was planned by England.

A squadron of ships from England was to be sent to Boston with five regiments of regular troops, numbering in all three thousand men. Massachusetts and Rhode Island were to raise twelve hundred men, and Connecticut, New York, and New Jersey fifteen hundred men. This last-mentioned body of troops was to proceed up the Hudson to attack Montreal. The former, under Col. Vetch, were to join the fleet against it at Quebec.

The expedition against Montreal was intrusted to the command of Maj.-Gen. Nicholson. Like that under Gen. Fitz-John Winthrop, of nineteen years before, it took the route of the valley of the Hudson. On his way up the Hudson, Gen. Nicholson built Fort Ingoldsby at Stillwater, Fort Saratoga at the mouth of the Battenkill, Fort Nicholson at what is now Fort Edward, and Fort Anne on Wood Creek. Like that under Fitz-John Winthrop, it returned with nothing accomplished. In this expedition the troops suffered greatly from sickness,—notably at Fort Anne, on Wood Creek, near Lake Champlain, where many of them died. The English fleet sailed for Portugal instead of New England, and of course the expedition by sea against Quebec was abandoned.

In 1710 an expedition was dispatched against Port Royal. This met with better success. On the 29th of September the garrison capitulated.

In the year 1711 another attempt was made by England to conquer Canada. Again an expedition by land went up the valley of the Hudson as far as Fort Anne, on Wood Creek. This time the fleet sailed from England, but before reaching Quebec encountered a storm, and a thousand men perished. Hearing of the disaster by sea, the land-forces again retired from the valley of the Upper Hudson. While these movements were going on the Indians still lurked in the Connecticut Valley, killing persons at Northampton and other places. At length, on the 31st day of March, 1713, the peace of Utrecht was concluded between England and France, and French-and-Indian hostilities soon ceased in the colonies.

VI.

WAR WITH EASTERN INDIANS—1722-26.

Father Sebastian Rasle.—In the year 1722, while France and England were still at peace, war broke out between the people of Massachusetts and New Hampshire and the Aben-aquis, an important Indian tribe dwelling to the east and north of the Merrimack River, who were the allies of the French. The French had before this established a mission among the Aben-aquis at Norridgewock, on the upper waters of the Kennebeck River, which was at the beginning of the war in charge of the Jesuit Father Sebastian Rasle. Father Rasle had been in charge of this mission on the Kennebeck since the year 1695, and as Norridgewock was the principal station from whence war-parties were sent against the English, this has sometimes been called Father Rasle's War.

Gray-Lock, of Wo-ro-noak.—But the real leader of the Indians in this war was a sachem called Gray-Lock. Before King Philip's war Gray-Lock,—so called from the color of his hair,—had lived on the Agawam or Westfield River. After the death of King Philip, Gray-Lock fled to the Mohawk country. In the year 1723 he lived at his fort on Missisquoi Bay, at the northerly end of Lake Champlain. Here Gray-Lock had collected a band of trusty warriors, doubtless from among his own people, who had fled from the valley of the Agawam, whose squaws planted their corn on the meadows near his fort. From this secure retreat Gray-Lock made numerous hostile excursions against his old neighbors, the English settlers of the Connecticut Valley,—an account of which will appear in the history of the towns, farther on,—the most noted of which were his raids on Northfield on the 13th of August, 1723, and on the 18th of June, 1724.

Early in the year 1724, Fort Deummer was built at what is now Brattleboro', Vt., by Capt. Kellogg, and when completed garrisoned by Capt. Timothy Dwight and fifty-five men.*

The forts at Northfield and Deerfield were garrisoned, and the inhabitants were kept in continual alarm. In the summer of 1724 an expedition was fitted out by the English against the Aben-a-quis, consisting of two hundred and eight men under command of Capts. Moulton, Harmon, Bourne, and Bane! Ascending the Kennebeck River, the English reached Norridgewock on the 23d of August, and, taking the village by surprise, killed a large number of its inhabitants, among whom was Father Rasle.

*For a muster-roll of Capt. Dwight's company, see Temple and Sheldon's History of Northfield, p. 201.

After prowling around the English settlements all summer, Gray-Lock returned to his fort at Missisquoi in the autumn. Early in 1725, Capt. Benj. Wright raised a company of men, and marched from Northfield to attack Gray-Lock in his stronghold on Lake Champlain, but, failing to reach his destination, early abandoned the enterprise, and returned without accomplishing his object.*

Among the most notable events of the war was Capt. John Lovewell's expedition to the Indian country in the spring of 1725, and his battle with Paugas on the 8th of May at Fryeburg.

A treaty of peace was signed with the Eastern Indians at Boston, Dec. 15, 1725, which was ratified at Falmouth on the 5th of August, 1726.† The highest mountain in Massachusetts still bears the name of Gray-Lock, the last of the Wo-ro-noaks.

VII.

FRENCH-AND-INDIAN WAR OF 1744-48.

On the 20th of March, 1744, war again broke out between England and France.

At this time Louisburg, on Cape Breton, was the stronghold of the French in the east, and Governor Shirley planned an expedition, sent out by the province of Massachusetts, for its capture. The expedition was commanded by Sir William Pepperell, and he was joined by a British fleet under command of Sir Peter Warren, commodore. On the 16th of June Louisburg surrendered to the combined forces of Pepperell and Warren. Its capture "filled Europe with astonishment and America with joy." In this affair the Massachusetts troops won high honor.

Fort Massachusetts.—Upon the breaking out of this war the Massachusetts General Court resolved upon the erection of a line of forts to protect her northwestern frontier. Accordingly, in the year 1744, a fort was built at Hoosac, now Adams, and named Fort Massachusetts; one in the present town of Heath, called Fort Shirley; and another in the town of Rowe, which was named Fort Pelham. There was also a small fort erected at Blandford, in the eastern part of what is now Hampden County.

At this time, Col. John Stoddard, of Northampton, of the Hampshire County regiment, was chief in command of the provincial forces in Western Massachusetts, while Capt. Ephraim Williams had the immediate supervision of the western forts, with his headquarters at Fort Massachusetts.

No attacks of importance took place in Western Massachusetts until the month of August, in the year 1746. On the 26th of that month, Fort Massachusetts was invested by a French-and-Indian force numbering from eight to nine hundred, under command of the Marquis de Vaudreuil. There were but twenty-two men at the time in the fort, under command of Sergt. John Hawks. For twenty-eight hours the brave little garrison held out against the enemy, in hopes of succor. But no help came, and Sergt. Hawks surrendered.

On the 24th, fifty of Vaudreuil's Indians left the main body and paid another hostile visit to the scene of their old depredations in Deerfield. During this raid, Samuel Allen, Adonijah Gillet, and Oliver Amsden were killed, and a boy, Samuel Allen, Jr., taken prisoner.

* Capt. Wright's journal is given entire in Temple and Sheldon's History of Northfield, p. 210.

† For a full account of this war, see Temple and Sheldon's History of Northfield, pp. 188 to 215.

In May, 1748, Noah Pixley, of Southampton, was killed by the Indians. At this time Col. Stoddard died, while in attendance at the General Court at Boston, and Col. Israel Williams, of Hatfield, succeeded to the command in Western Massachusetts. On the 2d day of August a body of two hundred Indians made an attack upon Fort Massachusetts. At the time the fort was garrisoned by one hundred men, under Capt. (afterward Col.) Ephraim Williams. After a spirited assault of some two hours' duration, the Indians abandoned the attempt upon the fort, and retreated, carrying with them their dead and wounded.

The treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, signed on the 7th of October, 1748, put an end to the war.

VIII.

LAST FRENCH-AND-INDIAN WAR—1753-63.

We now come to the stirring events of the last French-and-Indian war. During the continuance of its active movements in the field, from 1755 to 1759, great armies marched through the old northern war-paths of the wilderness, dyeing its streams with blood and filling its wild meadows with thousands of nameless new-made graves. At its close the sceptre of the French kings over the valley of the St. Lawrence dropped from their hands forever.

The Hampshire County Regiment, under Col. Ephraim Williams, at Lake George in 1755.—In the summer of 1755 a regiment was raised in Hampshire County to accompany the expedition of that year against Crown Point commanded by Col. (afterward Sir) William Johnson. The command of this Hampshire County regiment was given by Governor Shirley to Col. Ephraim Williams, the hero of Fort Massachusetts. In the latter part of August the English forces under Col. Johnson had reached the foot of Lake George, and were encamped there awaiting the construction of boats to transport them to Crown Point, when, on the 8th day of September, they were unexpectedly attacked by the French. Baron Dieskau, in command of the French forces, had advanced the evening before, with a large force of French regulars; Canadians, and Indians, to within two miles of Fort Edward, on the Hudson,—then called Fort Lyman,—with the intention of attacking that place. But his Indians were afraid of the cannon of the fort, and he turned toward Lake George to attack Col. Johnson's forces in the rear. Col. Johnson, hearing of the movement of the French on Fort Edward, early on the morning of the 8th sent Col. Williams, at the head of a thousand men and two hundred Mohawks, led by their chief, King Hendrick, to the relief of its garrison, not knowing that Dieskau had changed his course. Dieskau, hearing of the approach of Col. Williams, formed his men into an ambuscade at the distance of three and a half miles from the English camp. Williams, at the head of his men, led by the Mohawks, marched unsuspectingly into the jaws of death. Upon entering the ambuscade the English received a terrible fire. Col. Williams was soon killed, and King Hendrick mortally wounded. Upon the death of their commander the English fled in confusion to the camp on Lake George. The French followed, and fiercely attacked the English camp. After a four hours' fight the French were repulsed with great loss, leaving their commander, the Baron Dieskau, wounded and a prisoner in the hands of the English.

The loss in both engagements was, on the English side, two hundred and sixteen killed and ninety-six wounded. The Hampshire County regiment suffered most severely of all. Forty-six were killed and twenty-four wounded.

Besides Col. Williams, the officers of this regiment killed were Maj. Noah Ashley; Capts. Moses Porter, Jonathan Ingersol, and Elisha Hawley; Lieuts. Daniel Pomeroy, Simon Cobb, and Nathaniel Burt; and Ensigns John Stratton and Reuben Wait.

The news of this victory was received with great joy by all the colonies, but it brought sorrow into many a home in the valley of the Connecticut in Massachusetts. One-fourth of the slain were from Hampshire County. The death of Col. Williams was especially lamented. A monument now marks the spot where he fell on the field of that "bloody morning scout," but his most enduring monument is the college he founded, which bears his name, and is situated near the site of his beloved Fort Massachusetts.

The war moved sullenly on for four years more, until Quebec fell into the hands of the victorious Wolfe. But to follow its long train of events would not be within the scope of this work. As late as the month of March, 1758, the Indians from time to time committed depredations in the valley of the Connecticut, but at length peace came to the inhabitants of the war-worn English colonies.

The war was virtually ended in 1759, but the peace of Paris was not concluded until the 7th day of February, 1763.

For one hundred and twenty years the people of the Connecticut Valley had sown in terror for the Indian to reap in blood.

CHAPTER XVII.

THE WAR OF THE REVOLUTION—THE HAMPSHIRE COUNTY MINUTE-MEN OF APRIL, 1775—COL. PORTER'S REGIMENT.

I.

THE war of the Revolution was the final result, the sure outcome, of the principles of liberty and equality held by the Pilgrim and Puritan Fathers from the beginning. Its seed germinated in the little Separatist congregation which met, in 1607, at Scrooby Manor, in Lincolnshire, England.

The tender plant was carried with weary feet to Holland, brought to America in the "Mayflower," and planted amid sacrifice and suffering in the rugged soil of New England. Our republic is the bright consummate flower.

From the beginning the New England people were restive under royal rule. Both the Massachusetts and Plymouth colonies, a hundred years before the Revolutionary war broke out, in their Fundamentals and Bills of Rights set forth in the clearest terms the principle of no taxation without representation.

This principle has always been one of the great bulwarks of English liberty, and its violation led to the English Revolution of 1688. Hardly were the long and bloody Indian wars over, hardly had the people of the colonies begun to settle down in safety in their no longer imperiled homes and to profit by the arts of peace, before a new danger menaced them. The blessings of peace had been bought at the expense of an enormous waste of treasure, and at the close of the war the mother-country found herself burdened with a debt which she could scarcely hope to pay. In her distress, she determined to tax the colonies, and in order to do this Parliament assumed to exercise the most arbitrary power over them.

From the year 1764—the very next year after the peace of Paris—to the year 1775, the British Parliament, in many offensive and arbitrary ways, directed its efforts to the end of depriving the provinces of their liberties, and of forcing them to contribute to the revenues of the British crown.

The men who at this time managed the political affairs of England seemed to lack both the wisdom and the moderation which could alone secure to her the benefit of her triumphs. They were ignorant of the geography of the country, as well as of the character of its residents. They were neither familiar with the history of the country, nor did they comprehend the opinions which prevailed there. On the other hand, the people of the colonies demanded, not as a favor, but as a right, equality with their fellow-subjects. As a consequence such offensive and arbitrary measures as those before mentioned met with a most spirited and determined resistance.

As early as April 5, 1764, what is known as the "Sugar Act" was passed by Parliament. This act laid a duty upon many articles that were imported into the colonies; among others, upon all sugars so imported. This was considered by the northern colonies as a sacrifice of their interests to the superior interest in Parliament of the West Indies.

But this was followed by a still more obnoxious measure. On the 22d day of March, 1765, the Stamp Act, having before received the assent of both houses of Parliament, received the royal signature. This measure laid the foundation of the American Revolution.

To detail the events which followed is hardly within the scope of this work.

"The events," says Dr. Holland, "which followed the arbitrary measures of Governor Bernard, the arrival of military force, the misrepresentation of the colonists abroad, the refusal to hear their petitions, the popular combinations against importing British goods, the struggle between patriotism and governmental policy in the British Parliament, the ever-memorable and ever-glorious protests against oppression by the General Assembly of the colony, the collisions of the soldiery with the people of Boston, the firm and persistent opposition to the usurpations of chartered rights, the traitorous conduct of the Governor in his capacity as the tool of the British ministry, the destruction of the tea in the harbor of Boston, the holding of county meetings and conventions, the institution of committees of safety and correspondence,—all these events, in which civil liberty and national glory were taking root, prepared the way for the first demonstration, which sealed in blood, on the soil of Massachusetts, the doom of British rule in the American colonies."*

In this great struggle the county of Hampshire was in no degree behind her sister counties in the eastern part of the State in manifesting her determination to defend the rights of the colonies to the last extremity. The records of nearly every town in the county tell of meetings held and of measures devised to assist and co-operate with their brethren of the east and of the other provinces. In the histories of the towns which follow, the reader will find copies of many of these records. The resolutions adopted by Northampton and Springfield only are given here, as well representing the general tenor of them all.

NORTHAMPTON TOWN RECORDS.

I.

"Dec. 26, 1774.—The inhabitants met in pursuance to adjournment, and chose a committee of twelve persons to receive, preserve, & convey such articles as shall be contributed by the Inhabitants of this town for the relief of their suffering brethren in the Towns of Boston and Charlestown."

II.

"March 4, 1776.—At this meeting a Committee of Correspondence, Inspection, and Safety was chosen, consisting of fifteen persons."

III.

"Oct. 3, 1776.—The question at this meeting was put, Whether the Town will give their Consent that the present House of Representatives of the State of the Massachusetts Bay in New England, together with the Council (if they consent), in one body with the House, and by equal voice, should consult, agree on, and enact such a Constitution & Form of Government for this State as the said House of Representatives and Council as aforesaid on the fullest and most mature Deliberation shall judge will most conduce to the Safety, peace, and Happiness of this State in all after succession and generations; and it passed in the affirmative.

"The Question was then put, Whether the Town would direct that the same be made Publick for the Inspection and perusal of the Inhabitants before the ratification thereof by the Assembly; and it passed in the affirmative."

IV.

"March 3, 1777.—The Town entered upon the consideration of the matter which had been debated, viz.: what methods they would take to encourage and facilitate the raising of this Town's proportion of men for the Continental Army, and passed the following votes thereon, viz.:

"That those persons that shall now engage in the service aforesaid, who belonged to Capt. Allin's and Capt. Chapin's Company the last year, both officers and privates, shall have full compensation for all losses by them sustained in Cloaths and other articles, when such losses were unavoidable, and not through the negligence of those who sustained them.

* Holland's History of Western Mass., Vol. I., p. 205.

"And as a further encouragement to them, or any other able-bodied men belonging to this town who will engage in the said service,

"The town Voted that they and each of them shall receive from the Inhabitants of the Town of Northampton the sum of fifteen pounds, which sum shall be paid to them several times, viz.: namely, five pounds before they shall march to join the said Army, and five pounds more shall be paid to them or to their Order in the month of April, 1778, and the other five pounds in the month of April, 1779.* And whereas, it was represented to the Town that some of the inhabitants have heretofore failed of doing their proportion in promoting the publick cause,

"The Town voted that a large Committee should be appointed to examine and consider what persons in the Town have been so delinquent, and that the said Committee make out a list of such persons, with the sums affixed to their respective names which they judge it will be necessary for them to advance, in order to their doing their full proportion with the other inhabitants of this town, and that those who are found delinquent as aforesaid, shall be required to pay the sum so affixed to their names, to such persons as the Town shall appoint to collect the same.

"The Town also voted that the sum of seventy pounds now in the hands of the Town Treasurer, being the Fines of Several persons who refused to march in the last Draughts of the Militia, be applied to the payment of the bounty aforesaid, and that what further sums shall be necessary to make up the losses and pay the Bounty as aforesaid, shall be Assessed upon the Polls and Estates of the Inhabitants of this Town at such time as the Town shall order.

"April 15, 1777, voted to increase the bounty to 30 ponnals."

SPRINGFIELD RECORDS.

I.

"June 27, 1774.—Voted to choose a Committee consisting of nine persons, and that Dea. Nathaniel Brewer, Capt. Geo. Pynchon, Doct. Charles Pynchon, Capt. Simon Colton, Moses Field, Jonathan Hale, Junr., Ensign Phineas Chapin, James Sikes, Daniel Harris, Be of this Committee, and that they take into consideration the two last articles contained in the Warrant,† and make report at ye adjournment of this meeting."

II.

"July 12, 1774.—The Report of the Committee appointed by the Town at the last meeting, to take into Consideration the two last Articles contained in the Warrant for calling the Meeting, was at this Meeting presented, read, and considered, and unanimously voted and accepted, which report is as follows, viz.:

"This Town, taking into serious and deliberate consideration the present dangerous situation of this Province, came into the following vote, viz.:

"1st. That by the Royal Charter of King William and Queen Mary, which we have possessed for near a Century, and which has from time to time been recognized both by Kings and Parliament, we are Intitled to and ought forever to enjoy all the Liberties and Immunities of any of his Majestic's subjects within any of his Dominions, Some of the most essential of which are, that they shall not be taxed, but with their own consent, given in Person or by their Representatives, nor Disseized of their Property, or Condemned to any Penalties but by Judgement of good and Lawfull men of the vicinage, &c.

"2ndly. That the Charters of the Colonies ought to be held sacred, and every Infraction upon them carefully avoided, as tending to Interrupt that Harmony between the Colonies and the Parent State which is so essential to the happiness of both.

"3dly. That though Great Deference & Respect is due to the wisdom of the British Parliament, yet we can't consider ourselves as enjoying the liberties and Immunities of natural, freeborn subjects of the King if we are lyable to be taxed without representation or to be disseized of our Property, or any way punished without the Judgement of our Peers. Nor do we apprehend that we have so much as a Virtual representation in a Legislature which is not itself Subject to those Laws which it imposes upon us.

"4thly. That the later Boston Port Act, which inflicts a most severe punishment upon that town (and in its operations upon almost the whole continent) for destruction made of the property of some British merchants by persons unknown,—and that before any demand of compensation was made or any citation sent to the town to answer for itself,—is a step that ought to alarm us and fill us with deep concern.

"5thly. That the proposed new System of Government, virtually annihilating our most essential Charter Rights, added to the Boston Port Act, gives us such apprehension of the designs of administration against our Liberties as we have never before allowed ourselves to entertain.

"6thly. Impressed with just concern for our privileges, and at the same time governed by sentiments of Loyalty to our Sovereign and with warm affection for our Mother Country, we ardently wish that all the Collonys and every Individual in them may unite in some prudent, peaceful, constitutional measure for the

* Voted, March 12, 1777, to pay the fifteen pounds before the soldier marched.

† The two last articles in the warrant were as follows:

"6th. To Desire the Clerk of said Town to Communicate to the Town all the letters he has Rec'd from the Town of Boston, that they may advise and act thereon.

"7thly. To pass any Resolves respecting the said letters or any matters therein contained, and choose any Committee for that purpose, and pass all proper vote thereon."

Redress of our Grievances, the Securities of our Liberties, & the Restoration of union and mutual Confidence between Great Britain & the Collonies.

"7thly. That it is the unquestionable Right, so we esteem it, the indispensable duty, of the several Collonies in this day to correspond together and act in Concert, and we wait with patience for the result of the approaching Continental Congress.

"Hoping that, Influenced by Wisdom from above, they will recommend those measures which shall be both unoffensive in their nature and salutary in their tendency, And as it appears to us that a discontinuance of Trade and Commerce with Great Britain might serve the Interest of the Country in divers Respects, so, should any well-digested, prudently-regulated, and practicable plan for this end be proposed, we shall readily accede to it, & afford our aid for the Relief of those who may thereby be deprived of ye means of substance as well as contribute to the Succour of our Brethren already Suffering in their Country's Cause.

"8thly. In the mean time we think it our duty to express our utter abhorrence of all such resolves and measures as are unnecessarily affrontive to the British Parliament, and carry an air of Insult upon that Respectable Body, as well as all Tumults and Riots among ourselves, Insults upon men's persons, and Injurations of their properties. We are unanimously resolved to discountenance every thing of this kind, and to yield and promote due obedience to his Majesty's Government in this Province, To treat his Majesty's Representatives with all due respect, To aid Inferior Magistrates in the Regular Constitutional Execution of the Good Laws we are under, and to support, as far as we are able, their Just Influence in their Respective offices. And we hope those Gentlemen unbiased by personal Interest, and gratefully remembering that the favor of the People first raised them to view, and recommended to them the Honours they sustain, will readily unite with us in all reasonable and Constitutional means of Redress. And though we will injure no man in his person or property for a diversity of opinion, Yet we shall not think ourselves bound to continue our favors to any Gentlemen who, lost to the sentiments of Gratitude & Humanity, can coolly sacrifice his Country's liberties to his own private emolument.

"The foregoing Votes were passed in a full Town-Meeting by a large Majority."

III.

"July 12, 1774.—This meeting adjourned to July 26, 1774, at which meeting it was Voted, That the Town Clerk be directed to Transmit a copy to the Town Clerk of Boston of the Resolves Passed at the meeting July 12, 1774."

IV.

"Sept. 20, 1774.—Voted, That Mr. James Sikes, L^r Luke Bliss, Jonathan Hale, Junr, Dan Burt (3d), Edward Chapin, Phineas Chapin, William Pynchon, Junr, be a Committee to prepare the form of an Association. Voted, as the opinion of this Town, that there be County Congress; in case there should be one, the following persons were chosen Delegates for that purpose, viz., Doct. Charles Pynchon, Luke Bliss, Jonathan Hale, Junr.

"Voted, That, as the sense of this town, that a Congress be held at Northampton on Thursday, 22d day of September, Inst., by the several towns and Districts in this County, if judged best, and that the Committee of Correspondence acquaint the said towns therewith.

"Voted, That Dr. Charles Pynchon, Luke Bliss, Thos. Stebbins, Williston, Seth Stover, Colburn, Samuel Colton, Phineas Chapin, Edward Chapin, and Jonathan Bliss be a Committee to procure the necessaries and Subsistence for the Industrious Poor in Boston.

"Voted, To Choose a Committee to Correspond with the Neighboring Towns in the County of Hampshire, and that this Committee consist of Nine Persons viz, Dr. Charles Pynchon, Capt. Geo. Pynchon, James Sikes, Nathaniel Brown, John Hale, & William Pynchon, Junr."

On the 22d and 23d days of September, 1774, a convention of committees from every town in Hampshire County, except Charlemont and Southwick, was held at Northampton. Timothy Danielson, of Brimfield, was Chairman, and Ebenezer Hunt, Jr., of Northampton, Clerk.

A series of resolutions was adopted, in substance similar to the town resolutions copied above.

II.

THE ROLLS OF THE HAMPSHIRE MINUTE-MEN—HER ROLLS OF HONOR.

As none of the leading events of the Revolutionary war occurred in Hampshire County, it is not within the scope of this work to notice them here. The limited space allotted to us in this chapter cannot be used to better purpose than to give the names of the "Minute-Men" of old Hampshire. These papers, filed away in the archives of the State, constitute her true rolls of honor. On them are recorded the names of the brave men who first nobly stepped forth at the call of their country:

"They left the plowshare in the mould,
Their flocks and hearths without a fold,
And mustered in their simple dress,
For wrongs to seek a stern redress."

For rolls of minute-men not given below, the reader is referred to the histories of the several towns in this volume.

I.—AMHERST, LEVERETT, AND SHUTESBURY.

"A Minute Roll of the Company under the Command of Capt. Reuben Dickinson, in Col. Woodbridge's Regt.:

"Captain, Reuben Dickinson.

"Lieutenant, Zacheus Crocker.

"Second Lieutenant, Joseph Dickinson.

"Sergeants, Daniel Shay, Abraham Cutter, Isaac Marshall, Ezra Wood.

"Corporals, Solomon Comings, Ebenezer Estman, Adam Rice, Jonathan Dickinson.

"Drummer, John Church.

"Privates, Clement Marshal, Ebenezer Kellogg, John Hodson, John Ingram, Reuben Dickinson, Thos. Norton, John Estman, Ebenezer Mattoon, John Dickinson, Luke Coffin, Stephen Smith, Waitstill Dickinson, Eldad Moody, Timothy Green, Azariah Dickinson, Ebenezer Dickinson, Elihu Dickinson, Martin Smith, Reuben Smith, Aaron Osgood, John Wetherbee, Saml. Ranger, John Witt, Abial Blanchard, Archelos Leonard, Benj. Barrows, Jonathan Parce, Saml. Totman, David Bangs, Abel Woods, George Bridge, Ephraim Barrows, Danil Bradley, Wm. Field, Jon'n Bartlett, Peter Stanton, Jonathan Gilbert, Uriah Montagues, Jonathan Graves, Phineas Clary, John Keet, Joseph Smith, Elijah Prout, Simeon Smith, William May, Ambrose Williams, Saml. Backman, Silas Ball.*"

II.—AMHERST.

"An Abstract of Ely Parker, first lieutenant of the Minute-Men who went to Cambridge on the Alarm of the 19th of April, 1775:

"First Lieutenant, Ely Parker.

"Sergeant, Thomas Bascom.

"Privates, Joel Billings, Thomas Hastings, Gideon Dickenson, John Ingram, Noah Smith, Elijah Hastings, Reubin Cowles, Enos Coleman, Elijah Elmore, John Lee."

III.—AMHERST.

"James Hendrick Roll and account of the men that marched under his command on April 20, 1775, to Cambridge, on the Alarm made at Lexington, on the 19th of said month, by the ministerial Buchers. Said James Hendrick was chosen 2nd Lieut. in Capt. Thomas Foster's company of Matrossers, in Col. Ruggles Woodbridge's Regt., belonging to Hampshire County:

"Privates, James Hendrick, Medad Dickinson, Ebenezer Petty, Simon Rood, John Brooks, Oliver Marsh.

"Lieut. Noah Dickerson Roll for the Militia of Amherst in the Co. of Hampshire, that went down to Cambridge in the time of the Alarm made on the 19th of Apl., 1775, & under his command:

"Lieutenant, Noah Dickerson.

"Sergeants, Henry Franklin, David Blodgett, Oliver Clapp, Elijah Dickinson, Amasa Allen, Lem. Moody.

"Corporal, Joel Moody.

"Privates, Stephen Cole, Ezekiel Smith, Noah Dickinson, Hezekiah Cole, Jacob Warner, Elihu Hubbard, Zach. Hawley."

IV.—ASHFIELD.

"A Muster-roll of Lieutenant Bartlett Company from the 22nd day of Apl. to the 26th, both days inclusive:

"Lieutenant, Saml. Bartlett.

"Ensign, Saml. Allen.

"Sergeants, Ephraim Jennings, Zebulon Bryant.

"Privates, Enoch Allen, Jam^s Bloodworth, Joseph Baker, Amos Crittenden, Elias Clarke, Anthony Jones, David Kaw, Nathan Lyon, Joseph Lillie, Thomas McIntier, Benjamin Phillips, Nath. Sprague, Roland Sears, Daniel Shaw, Jasher Taylor, Sam. Washburn, Isaiah Washburn, Jonathan Yeomons."

V.—BELCHERTOWN.†

"A Muster-rol of Capt. Jonathan Bardwell's Company of Minut-Men, in Col. Jonathan Warren's Regt. Men's names marched on ye 20th Apl., 1775, to Cambridge:

"Captain, Jonathan Bardwell.

"First Lieutenant, Aaron Phelps.

"Second Lieutenant, Sylvanus Howe.

"Sergeants, Moses Howe, Asa Shumway, Abner Eddy, Thomas Lawrence.

"Corporals, Elijah Thayer, Philip Bartlett, Simeon Bardwell, Joseph Billings.

"Drummer, Elijah Howe.

"Privates, Stephen Ayres, Solomon Bartlett, John Bardwell, Abner Coley, Calvin Chapin, Matthew Clark, Caleb Dagg, Abijah Gale, John Howard, Jefe Harward, Salmon Kentfield, Calvin Kinsley, James McGardner, David Pratt, Joseph Kernsdale, Solomon Shumway, Nathan Shumway, Jonathan Smith, Enoch Thair, Asa Sholbrooks, Joseph Williams, Obadiah Ward, Boardman Williams."

VI.—BELCHERTOWN AND GRANBY.

"Muster-roll of the Company that marched on the 20th of April, under the Command of Capt. John Cowles, in Col. Woodbridge's Regt.:

"Captain, John Cowles.

"First Lieutenant, Asahel Smith.

"Second Lieutenant, Eleazer Warner.

"Sergeants, James Walker, Joseph Law, Gideon Wannum, Elijah Kent.

"Corporals, David Town, John Preston, Elijah Chapin, Asa Smith.

"Privates, Dea. Joseph Smith, Elijah Dwight, Wm. Kenfield, Gideon Stebbins, Phineas Lee, Moses Cowles, Asa Newton, Micah Pratt, Thaddeus Fairfield, Matthew Moody, David Worthington, Elisha Root, Joseph Bardwell, Martin Bardwell, William Bliss, Solomon Hannum, Sam'l Clark, Amasa Town, Jon. Kenfield, David Kenfield, Calvin Chapin, David Bridges, Philip Carrier, Israel Cows, Joseph Hulit, Solomon Smith, Levi Shumway, Elisha Warner, Benj. Whitney, David Church, Eliphalet Green, Jno. Lane, Ivory Witt, Fenamor Taylor, Benj. Witt, Eben^r Taylor, Ezekl. Barthou, Abiather Vinton, Jesse Gilbert, David Patrick, James Gideon, James Preston, Sam'l Dickinson, Aaron Ayres, Rob't Owens, Luther Ranger, Eleazer Ayres, Aaron Bartlett, Plyny Dwight."

VII.—BLANDFORD AND MURRAYFIELD (CHESTER).

"Muster-roll of the Minute-men under Capt. John Ferguson in Col. Timothy Danielson's Regt., Apl. 20, 1775:

"Captain, John Ferguson.‡

"First Lieutenant, David Hamilton.‡

"Second Lieutenant, Silas Noble.‡

"Sergeants, James Wiett,‡ James Stewart.‡

"Privates, Moses Ker,‡ George Black,‡ Timothy Blair,‡ Ashable Black, Joseph Baird,‡ John Crook,‡ Cornelius Cochran,‡ Solomon Ferguson,‡ Samuel Hamilton,‡ Oliver Knox,‡ John Knox,‡ James Knox,‡ David Kennedy,‡ John Kennedy,‡ William Mitchell,‡ Alexander Morgan,‡ John Proven,‡ Matthew Proven,‡ Jehiel Stewart,‡ Spence Stewart,‡ John Savage,‡ Thomas Smith,‡ John Wheeler,‡ William More,‡ David Blair,‡ Jonathan Henry,‡ John Lucore,‡ Thomas Elder,‡ Reuben Boies,‡ Robert Blair,‡ Joel Boies.‡"

VIII.—BRIMFIELD.

"A Muster-roll made up by Capt. James Sherman in Col. Pynchon's Regt., who marched on the Alarm of the 19th Apl., 1775:

† Vol. II., page 207.

‡ Served one week and three days.

§ Served two weeks and six days.

" Captain, James Sherman.

" First Lieutenant, Phineas Sherman.

" Second Lieutenant, Jo^a Thomson.

" Sergeants, John Carpenter, James Thomson.

" Privates, Benjamin Trash, David Jones, Benj. Nelson, Tho^s McCluer, Aaron Lumbard, Judah Terry, Solomon Janes, Abel Burt, Josiah Hill, Isaac Draper, Jo^a Janes, Eben^r Wood, Josh Witham, Calvin Davidson, Nat. Collins, Gershom Whitney, Sam Andrews, Nat Danielson, Israel Janes, Abram Sherman, John Thomson, Jonas Haynes, Aaron Charles, Benj. Morgan, Eliph^t Janes, William Trash, Lemuel Sherman, Jo^a. Hubbard, Joseph Morgan, Eph Bond, Jo^a Brown, Barth^w Brown, George Shaw, George Sherman, John Blashfield, Abner Carpenter, Wm. Haynes, Abner Mishill, James Sheman, Jr., Oliver Mason, Zadock Nichols, Joseph Browning, Azarah Cooley."

IX.—CHESTER.

" A Muster-roll of the Minute-Men under the command of Capt. David Shephard in Col. Seth Pomeroy's Rgt., who marcht down to Cambridge in the Alarm, Apl., 1775 :

" Captain, David Shephard.

" Second Lieutenant, James Clark.

" Sergeants, Gershom Rust, John McIntire.

" Fifer, Russell Dewey.

" Privates, George Williams, Nathan Wright, Benj. Wright, Edwd. Wright, Jr., John Blair, Asa Gould, Benj. Edson, James Geers, Archelaus Anderson."

X.—CONWAY AND MONTAQUE.

" A Muster-roll of the Minnte Company commanded by Robert Oliver in ye Regt. Commanded by Saml. Williams, who marchd for the relief of the Country, April ye 22d, 1775 :

" Captain, Robert Oliver.

" Lieutenant, Asahel Gunn.

" Second Lieutenant, Saml. Weels.

" Clerk, Alexander Oliver.

" Sergeants, Abel Dunsmore, Jonathan Whitney, David Patterson.

" Corporals, Ezra Smead, Gersham Farnsworth, Aber Packard, Rufus Smith.

" Privates, John Goodcoit, Moloch Maynard, James Gilmore, Matthew Graves, Tho^s Nutting, Jonathan Dunham, Wm. Farnsworth, Eben^r Allen, Daniel Newhall, Jabez Newhall, Daniel Davison, Caleb Beals, Aaron How, Benj. Whitney, Eben^r Hart, John Herbert, Sherebiah Lee, Stephen Temple, Joseph Rice, Jesse Harrington, Moses Snow, Isaiah Harton, Lamberton Cooper, John Thwing, Oliver Whitmore, Robert Hamilton, Elijah Smith, Ebenezer Groves, Samuel Gunn, Samuel Taylor, Ebenezer Marsh, Caleb Benjamin, Elihu Clapp, Ira Leat, Nathan^l Taylor, Joshua Graves, Joel Adams, Samuel Larance, Sylvanus Lartel, Daniel Bakers, Simeon Cox."

XI.—GRANVILLE.

" A Muster-roll of the Minute-Men Company that marchd from Granville ye 29th Apl., 1775 :

" Captain, Stebbins Ball.*

" First Lieutenant, Lem^l Bancroft.*

" Second Lieutenant, Jesse Munson.†

" Sergeants, John Stiles,† Benjamin Stow,* Elijah Stiles,† Joel Bancroft.*

" Corporals, Ebenezer Smith,† Jacob Bates,* John Cornwell,* Jonathan Torbs.*

" Fifer, Mirrick Hitchcock.*

" Privates, John Wright,† Asher Granger,† Ebenezer Curtiss,† Linus Bates,† Lem^l Hanes,† David Rose,† Reuben Hickcox,† Ebenezer B. Gould,* Ebenezer Barlow,* Elijah Rose,* Gad Rose,* Peter Gibbons,* Amos Clark,* Jesse Miller,* Russel Rose,* Albert Black,* Fenner Foster,* Daniel Rose,* Israel Coe,* Seth Granger,* John Bancroft,* Daniel Cooley,* George Hubbard,* Abner Barlow,* Eber Spelman,* Richard Brown,* Jonathan Rose,* Ephraim Munson,* Jeremiah Griswold,* Stephen Wright,* Abner Rose.*"

XII.—GREENWICH.

" Muster-roll of Part of a Company of Militia in the Regt. whereof Elijah Porter, Esq., was Col., commandid by Thomas Weeks, 2nd Lieut., who marchd 21st Apl., 1775, In defence of the liberties of America :

" Second Lieutenant, Thomas Weeks.

" Sergeant, Jabez Upham.

" Corporals, Aaron Abbot, Peter Russel.

" Privates, Jabez Groos, William Fisk, William Paterson."

XIII.—GREENWICH.

" A Muster-roll of Capt. Joseph Hooker's Company of Minute-Men to the Regt. whereof Ruggles Woodbridge, Esq., was Col., who marchd on the 20th April, 1775 :

" Captain, Joseph Hooker.

" First Lieutenant, Isaac Gray.

" Second Lieutenant, Josiah Willison.

" Sergeants, John McCarn, Simon Stone, John McWhorter, Thomas McMiller.

" Corporals, Darius Price, Robert Field, Joseph Hinds, Moses Stone.

" Privates, William Baxter, Thomas Horth, Benj. Fields, Timothy Hinds, Nahum Powers, Thomas McCluer, Daniel Plumley, Joseph Field, Luke Hitchcock, James Felton, Joel Chase, Elijah Wares, Jabez Town, Ephraim Woodward, Thomas Tenant, Elisha Train, Thomas Montgomery, Isaac Hunter, Solomon Hinds, Ezekiel Lampson, William Shearer, William Hoskins, William Crossett, Thomas Thompson, William Gilinor, Alexander Conckey, Zenas Conckey, John Johnson, Alexander Conckey, Jr., Eliot Gray, John Crosset, Seth Muzza, John Thompson, Matthew Clark, John Donnally, Isaac Conckey, David Abercumbie, Eliphalet Town, James McCluer."

XIV.—HATFIELD.

" Muster-roll of Captain Chapin Minet Company that marchd the 20th of April to 26th, boath days Inclusive. Col. John Fellows' Regiment :‡

" Captain, Israel Chapin.

" Lieutenant, Beres Bardwell.

" Ensign, William Watson.

" Sergeants, Nathaniel Sartwell, Joseph Belding, Robert Weir, Nathaniel Sylvester.

" Corporals, Samuel Wails, Able Scott, James Pach, John Lewis.

" Drummer, Phineas Frary.

" Fifers, Ebenezer Frary, Lucus Graves.

" Privates, Moses Ellies, Timothy Alvord, Esea Fair, Ebenezer Burris, James Baskin, Isten Cole, Jonathan Dickinson, Zenas Field, Jotham Hitchcock, Elihu Hastings, David Morton."

XV.—HATFIELD.

" Capt. Perez Graves marchd with a company of thirty-five on the 21st of April, 1775, to Ware and returned home, being in service two days.

" Captain, Perez Graves.

" Lieutenants, Seth Murray, Silas Smith, Elijah Colman.

" Drummer, Nehemiah Waite.

" Privates, Silas Graves, John Makins, Sam Bodman, Wm. Bodman, Levi Makins, Thos. Potter, Moses Warner, Abia Billing, Ganiss Crofts, John Ballard, John Smith, Jo^a Edson, Salmon Morton, Daniel Dickinson, Josiah Otis, Benj. Wells, Elihu Smith, Joel Smith, Gideon Dickinson, Andrew Crawford, Elihu Morton, Elijah Mercy, Seth Tubs, Jacob

* Enlisted.

† Returned.

‡ This company enlisted for and served seven days.

Mosher, Joseph Ponas, Wm. Howard, Benj. Smith, Salmon Waite, Ira Waite."

XVI.—LONGMEADOW.

"A Muster-roll of a Militia Company of the town of Springfield that mustered, in order to assist our Brethren at Lexington, on the 21st day of April, A.D. 1775, under the command of Lieut. David Burt and Lieut. Jonathan Hole; said Company marched to Brookfield, and there rec'd orders to return.

"First Lieutenant, David Burt.

"Second Lieutenant, J. Hole.

"Sergeants, Ebenezer Colton, Samuel Keepe.

"Corporals, Nathaniel Ely, Josiah Cooley.

"Privates, Abner Cotton, John Cotton, Ebenezer Bliss (2d), Aaron Bliss, Saml. Smith, David White, John Ackley, Elijah Burt, Richard Woodworth, Oliver King, Nehemiah Rumrill, Thomas Stebbins, Saml. Morgan, James Parker, Gad Lamb, Ebenezer Stebbins, Saml. Burt."

XVII.—MONTAGUE.

"A Muster-roll of Capt. Thomas Grover Company, as Minnet-Men, Commanded by Col. Williams, of a Minnet Regt. forces of America alarmed Ap'l 19th, 1775:

"Captain, Thomas Grover.

"Lieutenants, John Adams, Josiah Adams.

"Sergeants, Philip Ballard, Simeon King, Asa Fuller, Josiah Burnham.

"Drummer, Elisha Phillips.

"Privates, Elisha Wright, David Sprague, Til Barthrick, Henry Ewers, Elias Sawyer, William Allis, Asa Smith, Joel Perkins, Jonathan Harvey, Moses Brooks, Uriah Weeks, John Brooks, Samuel Smith, Samuel Bardwell, Thomas Whiting, David Burnham, Nathaniel Nichols, Reuben Granby, Joshua Combs, Joseph Combs, Elisha Trizel, Joshua Searls, Zedodiah Allis, John Ewers, Moses Harvey."

XVIII.—NORTHAMPTON.

"A Muster-roll of the Minute Company of Capt. Jo^h Allen in Genl. Pomeroy's Regt., April 20, 1775:

"Captain, Jonathan Allen.*

"First Lieutenant, Oliver Lyman.*

"Second Lieutenant, James Shephard.†

"Sergeants, Jonathan Stearns,* Asahel Clapp,* Abner Lyman,* Josiah Dickinson.†

"Drummer, John Strong.†

"Fifer, John Bibbins.†

"Corporals, Elihu Root,* Ithamar Strong,* Spencer Phelps,* Elizur Wright.*

"Privates, Seth Hunt,* Jedediah Smith,* Eleazur Strong,* Jonathan Pomeroy,* Richard Clarke,* Chester Kellogg,* William Colder,* Jonas Clark,* Joseph Parsons,* Noah Cook,* Eliab Alvord,* John Bullard,* Alvord Edwards,* James Taylor,* Nathan Strong,* Noah Parsons,* John Brown,* William Willis,* Elisha Allen,* Simeon Pomeroy,* Timothy Dady,* Lyman Clark,* Elias Thayer,* Daniel Strong,* Nathaniel Phelps,* Paul Clapp,* Joseph Arvin,* Daniel Burt, Elihu Bellows,* Simeon Judd,* Russell Clark,* Michael McDonnell,* Oliver Edwards,* Cyrus Fanning,* Joseph Coots,* Ezekiah Hutchins,* Pliny Pomeroy,* Luther Pomeroy,† Solomon Allen,† Warham Warner.†"

XIX.—PALMER.

"Capt. David Speer's Muster-roll in Col. Pynchon Regiment of Militia, who marched from Palmer In the Alarm, on the 19th of Ap'l, 1775:

"Captain, David Speer.

"First Lieutenant, Robert Hunter.

"Second Lieutenant, David King.

"Sergeants, Samuel McLannothan, Samuel Buel, Stephen Blackman, John Allen McElwane.

* Enlisted.

† Returned.

"Corporals, Eiram Shaw, Daniel King, Joseph Shaw, Luke Hitchcock.

"Privates, John King, John Sherer, Tho^s McLanethan, David Bratters, Joshua McMarter, Jonas Tylaer, Daniel Dodge, Joseph McNall, Andrew Brown, Simeon Graves, Eleazer Bishop, Seth Bishop, David Shaw, Robert Burns, Gideon King, Wm. Shearer, Josiah Denny, Wm. Sloan, Asher Cooley, Simon Burroughs, Henry Thompson, Moses Lammon, Obadiah Brown, Jno. Allen Smith, Jno. Gardner, Nathan'l Roger, Gideon Graves, Uriah Ward, Rufus Thompson, Jno. Morse, Jno. Gibson, Adonijah Jones, Solomon Cummings."

XX.—SPRINGFIELD.

"A Muster-roll of the Company of Minute-Men that marched from Springfield for the defence of the United Colonies, Apl. 20, 1775, under the command of Maj. Andrew Colton:

"Major, Andrew Colton.

"Privates, Sol. Brewer, Jno. Cotton, Thos. Bates, Matthew Keep, Benj. Colton, Jun., Abijah Edson, Jno. Burt, Jun., Jacob Kellogg, Moses Harris, Joseph Kellogg, Jun., Oliver Burt, Robt. Stevens, Jacob Chapin, Oliver Field, Eleazer Chapin, Medad Stebbins, Jonah Cooley, Simeon More, Thos. Hale, Jun., Seth Storer Coburn."

XXI.—SOUTHWICK.

"A Muster-roll of the Minute Company that came from Southwick, Apl. 20, 1775:

"Privates, Silas Fowler,† George Grainger,† John Reent,† Jesse Dunham,† Elijah Hough,† Jonathan Haies,† John Campbell,† Roger Rost,† Zenas Graves,† Saml. Olds,† Israel Loomis,† Stephen Russell,† Moses Campbell,† Thomas Campbell,† Ezekiel Graves,‡ Levi Bradley,‡ John Stephenson,‡ Israel Haies,‡ Amos Loomis,‡ Noah Loomis,‡ Silas Stephens,‡ Elijah Harmon,‡ Wm. Campbell,‡ James Nelson,‡ Amos Ives.‡"

XXII.—SOUTHWICK.

"SOUTHWICK, Apl. 20, 1775.—A Muster-roll of the Minet Company of Southwick, commanded by Capt. Silas Fowler, whose names are hereunto subscribed, who were all able, effective men, and were all marched on the 21st day of Apl., 1775, for Roxbury, and arrived at Roxbury the 29th day of April aforesaid, and joined the Regt. commanded by Col. Danielson and Col. Wm. Shepherd, his Let., and Bordered and Beeded and Vitted our selves During the march, which is one hundred and ten miles upon our own Coast:

"Captain, Silas Fowler.

"Lieutenant, George Granger.

"Ensign, John Keent.

"Sergeants, Levi Dunham, Elijah Hough, Jonathan Houis.

"Corporals, John Campbell, Amos Ives, Wm. Campbell.

"Fifer, Zenas Graves.

"Privates, Israel Loomis, John Stephenson, Noah Loomis, Silas Stephens, Elijah Harmon, Ezekiel Graves, Moses Campbell, Israel Haies, Amos Loomis, Roger Root, Thomas Campbell, Sam'l Olds, Levi Bradley, James Nelson, Stephen Russell.

"14 men were in service 21 days; 11 men were in service 11 days."

XXIII.—SOUTH HAMPTON AND NORWICH.

"Muster-roll of Capt. Pomeroy men that marched Apl. 21st, 1775:

"Captain, Lemuel Pomeroy.

"Lieutenant, David Scott.

"Second Lieutenant, Abner Pomeroy.

"Sergeants, Tim^o Clapp, Dan'l Kortland, Elihu Strong, Lemuel Burt.

"Corporals, James Tearman, Aaron Clapp, Solomon Blair, Paul Sheldon.

† Served two weeks and two days.

‡ Served one week and one day.

"Drummer, Dan Luddington.

"Fifer, Abner Clark.

"Privates, Noah Lyman, Nath'l Dodd, Israel Sheldon, Roger Miller, Solomon Strong, Eber Eglestone, Tim Clark, Sam'l Edwards, Eli Danks, Nathan'l Searls, Asael Harman, Stephen Clapp, Jacob Pomeroy, Moses Clark, Ezekiel Wood, Gershom Pomeroy, Ebenezer Gee, David Crow, Thos. Crow, Jon. Frost, Sam'l Fobes, Wm. Fobes, Chas. Williams, Isaac Williams, John Tiffany, Asa Cook, George How, Jehiel Egglestone, John Crossett, Jesse Joy."

XXIV.—SOUTH HADLEY.

"A Roll of Capt. Noah Goodman Company of Southadley who marched in defense of American liberty on the Alarm last April, occasioned by Lexington fight:

"Captain, Noah Goodman.

"Privates, Joseph Swan, Sen., Peter Pendergrass, Eliphalet Galord, Dan Comstock,* Joseph Smith,* Nathaniel Ingraham,* Timothy Hilord,* Oliver Taylor,* David Nash,* Toby White,* Selor Sword,* Jon. Hoßard,* Wm. Waite,* Jon. Mashel,* Oliver Galord."*

XXV.—WEST SPRINGFIELD.

"A Minute-roll of the Company under the Command of Capt. Enoch Chapin, marched Apl. 20th, 1775:

"Captain, Enoch Chapin,

"First Lieutenant, Samuel Flower.

"Second Lieutenant, Luke Day.

"Sergeants, Abiathar Robinson, Joseph White, Joel Leonard, William Kendall, Jacob Day.

"Corporals, Sam'l Dumbleton, Timothy Leonard, Daniel White, John Killum, Pelatiah Bliss.

"Fifers, Jared Smith, Andrew Goss.

"Privates, Joshua Guile, Thos. Francis, Oliver Dewey, Abel Chapin, Thos. Green, John Inglesbee, Joshua Chapman, Thomas Trescott, Yinton Leonard, Mishoek Remington, Edw'd Ely, Ebenezer Inglesbee, Enoch Ely, Gideon Jones, Chancy Taylor, Roger Miller, David Roggers, Joseph Young, Gideon Morgan, Oliver Bagg, John Rockwell, John Burger, Abel Cooley, Dan Taylor, Lewis Ely, Timothy Day, Sam'l Cooper, Benj. Stebbins, Judah Bagg, Dariek Vanhorne, David Merick, Nathaniel King, Simeon Smith, Jesse Morgan, Joseph Copley, Joel Day, Jon'n Smith, Benj. Loomis."

XXVI.—WEST SPRINGFIELD.

"A Muster-roll of the Company of Minnet-Men that marched from Springfield for the defence of the United Colonies Apl. 20th, 1775, under the command of Maj. Andrew Cotton:

"First Lieutenant, Gideon Burt.

"Second Lieutenant, Walter Pynchon.

"Sergeants, Aaron Steel, William White.

"Corporals, Ambrose Collins, Luther Hitchcock.

"Fifers, William Cotton (3^d), David Justus Chapin.

"Drummer, Lewis Chapin.

"Centinels, Jeduthan Sanderson, Israel Chapin, Sam'l Gridley, Alexander Bliss, Aaron Parsons, Jun., Aaron Ferry, Gad Horton, Sam'l Bliss, James Nash, Abel Hancock, Jun., Geo. Wright, Jun., Matthew Langdon, Jun., Peter Coulton, John Stedman.

"Privates, Abner Russell, Asahel Cooley, John Warner, Jun., Justin Smith, Sam'l Edson, Patrick Nugent, Benj. Parsons, Jon. Ingersoll, Calvin Bliss, Henry Stiles, Luther Cotton, Abner Cooley, Samuel Parsons, Noah Bliss, Joseph King, Caleb Cooley, Jun., Zadoc Bliss, Ebenezer Romerill, James Taylor, Spencer Merrick, Sylvanus Hall, Moses Bliss, Joseph Parsons."†

* Served three days.

† This company was in service one month and three days.

XXVII.—WESTFIELD.

"A Muster-roll of the Minute Company that came from Westfield:

"Lieutenant, John Shepherd.

"Second Lieutenant, Zachariah Bush.

"Sergeants, Benj. Dewey, Moses Dewey, Gideon Shepherd, Asa Noble.

"Corporals, Israel Sackett, Roger Noble, Benj. Winchel, James Ninocks.

"Drummer, Ruggles Winchel.

"Fifer, Jedediah Taylor.

"Privates, William Welch, James Colverson, Jas. Derrick, Jared Plumb, Stephen Dewey, David Taylor, Wm. Robinson, Martin Root, Eliab Dewey, Ashbel Noble, Abijah Dewey, Aaron Chapman, David Ross, Jonⁿ Smith."

XXVIII.—WORTHINGTON.

"Muster-roll of Capt. Webber's company that marched from Worthington the 20th day of April, 1775:

"Captain, Eben^r Webber.

"Sergeants, Jere Kinne, Joⁿ Prentice, Joshua Morse, Gershom Randall.

"Drummer, Anthony Morse.

"Fifer, Ezek'l Gardner.

"Privates, Abner Dwelle, Tho^s Cleveland, Stephen Clap, Eben Leonard, Eph^m Wheeler, Reuben Gardner, Moses Buck, David Curtis, Nehim Gates, Jonas Pettingall, Elisha Kinne, Lem'l Clap, Stephen Fitch, Constant Wilber, Sam. Crosby, John Watt, Hez^b Mahuram, Daniel Morse, W^m Barn, Nat. Daniels, Jr., John Anson, Nath Daniels, Elias Gilbert, John Skiff."

XXIX.—WILLIAMSBURG.

"A Muster-roll of Captain Abel Thayer Company that marched the 21st Apl., 1775:

"Lieutenant, William Bodman.

"Privates, Isaiah Dwite, Isaac Warren, Daniel Ball, Ephraim Fisher, Aaron Hemingway, William Reed, Jonathan Warner, James Hunt, Jonathan Munrow."

XXX.—WHATELY AND HATFIELD.

"Muster-roll of the Minnet-Men of Captain Chapin's Company that Marched the 20th Apl., 1775, and returned Home:

"Privates, John Dickinson, Gad Wait, Thomas Potter, Seba Scott, Ebenezer Fitch, Ezekiel Mieldis, Isaac Miller, Line Meetings, William Young."

XXXI.—CAPT. JOSEPH THOMPSON'S COMPANY.

"A Muster-roll of a Minet Company Commanded by Capt. Joseph Thompson In Col. Timothy Danielson's Regt.:

"Captain, Joseph Thompson.

"Sergeants, Aaron Mighill, Joseph Hoar, Joseph Morgan, Thomas Lambert, Thomas Bliss, Jonathan Brown, David Morgan.

"Corporals, John Harris, Joseph Hitchcock, Judah Stibens.

"Privates, Zedadiah Abbot, Jonathan Charles, Aaron Lumbard, Elijah Hitchcock, Eldad Hitchcock, Jacob Hitchcock, Aaron Morgan, Solomon Charles, Hanniah Ebinrod, John Stebbens, Samuel Sharmar, Samuel Bond, Daniel Livermore, William Blashfield, John Bliss, Bryan Sherman, Daniel Moffat, Henry Abbot, Edward Bond, Stoddard Cadey, Elijah Jay, Medad Hitchcock, Hebi Hitchcock, Reuben Lilley, Thos. Lumbard, Joseph Lilley, Nathaniel Miller, Adam Townley, Gad Townley, Joseph Tucker, Jesse Bement, William Davis, Thomas Shearman, Ozer Blashfield, Nath'l Chickering, Jonⁿ Morgan."

XXXII.—GREENFIELD.

"Capt. Agrippa Wells' Muster-roll in Col. Sam'l Williams' Regt. of Minute-Men who marched from Greenfield on the Alarm, Apl. ye 19, 1775:

"Captain, Agrippa Wells.

"Lieutenant, Ezekiel Foster.

"Sergeants, Oliver Atherton, Elijah Kingsley, Dan. Cors.

"Corporals, Asaph Allen, John Wells, Eben^r Scott.

"Privates, Samuel Turner, Sam^l Shattuck, Daniel Chapin, Thomas Hunt, David Davis, Wm. Chadwick, Eliphaz Childs, Sam^l Nichols, Sam^l Dean, John Dewey, Leanus Dewey.

"Lieutenant, Joseph State.

"Sergeants, Joel Chapin, Ariel Hindsdell.

"Corporal, Caleb Chapin.

"Privates, Wm. Kempland, Sam^l Hastings, Sam^l Cunnabel, Elijah Michel, Hezekiah Chapin, Jonathan Atherton, Amasa Smead, Tubal Nash, Simeon Allen, Daniel Picket, Hophni Rider, Daniel Edwards, Daniel Wells, Farmin Wood, Michael Frizzle, John Severance, Moses Ames."

III.

ACTION OF SPRINGFIELD AND NORTHAMPTON ON THE ADOPTION OF THE ARTICLES OF CONFEDERATION AND THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

To the above rolls of the Minute-Men we append the following papers transcribed from the town books of Springfield and Northampton, which show how such important matters were considered by each separate town :

SPRINGFIELD RECORDS.

I.

"Jan. 7th, 1778.—To take into consideration articles of Confederation and perpetual union proposed to be entered into by the United American States, with the address of Congress respecting the same, and the address of the General Court of the State of Massachusetts Bay, or pass any vote or give any instruction respecting the same The Town shall think proper.

"The articles of Confederation, &c., being Read, voted, To choose a Committee of five persons to take the same into consideration and prepare Instructions for the Representation of said Town."

II.

"Jan'y 26th, 1778.—The Instruction prepared to be given to the Representatives of said Town was, by the Committee appointed for that purpose at the former meetings, presented, read, and considered, and voted that the same be accepted, the report of which here follows :

"To the Representatives of the Town of Springfield :

"GENTLEMEN,—You are soon to act upon the most interesting matter that ever was, or, perhaps, ever will be, referred to your Deliberation, and to give your suffrages for the ratification or rejection of a plan proposed for the perpetual Union of the thirteen United States of America. Impressed with a deep sense of the vast importance of the object for which we are contending,—The establishment of Liberty for ourselves and posterity,—and remembering that the plan of union laid before you is not to be temporary, but perpetual, and is so framed that being once ratified it is no more to be altered without universal consent, You will, with the greatest care, examine and discuss every article, paragraph, and sentence, compare part with part, that the tendency of the whole to the security or subversion of publick Liberty may be ascertained as far as human foresight can extend. You will consider what were the grievances we complained of under the Dominion of Britain, and from what causes they were brought upon us, and be watchful that nothing be admitted in our own Constitution which may probably produce the same Evils.

"An inquiry by what unhappy defect or error in the inherent Constitution most of the nations of Europe (not excepting those who have Bled in the Defence of Liberty) are now fallen under so despotic and Arbitrary Government might aid you in forming a judgment of the good or ill tendency of the proposed Confederation; however necessary a speedy establishment of a Continental Constitution may be, yet it is a matter of too vast concern to be hurried into effect. Let the foundation be well laid, that the building may be strong and durable. It cannot be expected that we, the Inhabitants of this Town, many of whom have little leisure for Political Speculation, should be so capable of judging in a matter of this intricate nature as you are whom we have chosen to represent us. We must confide much in you and your Associates; our liberties are in your hands, and at your hands they will be required. Therefore, proceed with Caution, Judge Calmly; if you discover any thing in the Confederation dangerous to Liberty give not your Voice for its Ratification till the necessary amendments. Act not with implicit confidence in any; see for yourselves. We shall, as we think our duty, suggest some things to you which deserve your particular attention. The representation in Congress appears to us too unequal. Why may it not be proportioned to the Taxation? To the unequal representation in parliament have been imputed most of our late oppressions. Let us guard against a Danger so fresh in our experience. The mode of taxation is liable to exception; all charges of War &c. are to be born in the several States in proportion to the value of Land with the Buildings and Improvements thereon in each State. Will not the Commercial States be unduly eased, and the Landed ones overburthened by such a mode? Why ought not the Tax to be proportioned to the real ability and Value of each state, in what so ever that ability consists? We apprehend the powers Delegated to Congress too unlimited. You will observe that the Congress is to be a Single House, not several Distinct Chambers which may have an Inspection over and check upon each other; their powers, therefore, need to be the more circumscribed. By the Confederacy they are not only to order the Quotas of men to be raised in each state for a Continental Army, To Direct the operation of the army when raised, to appoint the General Officers, and Commissionate officers of whatever rank, but also to have the absolute Command of the purse, without being accountable; and, consequently, the Army will be entirely under their influence. They may borrow or emit what sums they please, and appropriate them at Discretion, only transmitting the several States an account of the sums borrowed or emitted; but we find not that they are accountable for the expenditure or appropriations. We wish you to Deliberate whether the Army and the purse can safely lodged in the same hands; Whether it be not Dangerous that a single House chosen by the representatives should have so large and uncontrollable a power. A Constitution, Gentlemen, should be formed upon a supposition that it may in some future period be administered by designing men.

"What has happened in Europe may happen in America. How easy it is for those who have the forces and money of the people in their own hands to subvert a Constitution & establish themselves in Power! We rather choose that the Congress should only ascertain and proportion the sum necessary for the Publick service, and lay the estimate before the several legislatures, and that the Legislatures make the grants for the supply of the Continental Treasury; we should also Desire that the Congress keep not only a Journal of their proceedings, with an entry of the yeas and nays upon every question, But also an exact amount of all the expenditures, and that this Journal and amount be open to the Inspection of a Committee of any Legislature. The Committee being sworn not to Divulge any matter which the Publick safety may require to be kept secret till the necessity of Secrecy shall cease. We should choose that the Congress should be restrained from keeping up an army in time of peace without the Consent of the several Legislatures, and from marching any Troops into any State in time of peace without the express permission of the Legislature of that State. We take notice that, by the Confederation, no two or more states shall enter into any treaty with each other without the consent of Congress; we would this exception were added: Unless it be for the purpose of obtaining redress of grievance; it ought to be Declared Lawfull for any person or persons to petition Congress, and for any Legislature to desire the Concurrence of the other Legislature for obtaining redress in case of oppression; under our oppression from Great Britain we have found the advantage of Circular Letters and Joint Consultations; it is at least possible there may be some future occasion for similar measures. Use your Influence that the House of Representatives be Less in number, as we imagine the present House to be too Large to transact busines, and that the whole State be justly and equally represented. In the next place we direct you that you use your influence [in case] the Militia should be called for upon any future emergency they may not be drafted as heretofore, believing such drafts have a tendency to establish Military government, and are dangerous to the Liberty for which we are contending, But that the men may be encouraged by bounty to enter into the service. This Town, taking into their most serious consideration the present high price of merchandize, and even of the very necessary's of life, cannot believe it is principally owing to monopoly, but that the present circulating paper currency is not sufficiently valued; are under great apprehension that it is a vast deal to plenty; believe that the money is not a proper encouragement to Industry, and are under fearful apprehensions that the Farmer will not be properly induced to raise grain and meat for the subsistence of the armies and Inhabitants; earnestly recommend that the quantity be reduced, and that every other possible method be taken to support its credit; and as Civil government is necessary not only to the well-being, but to the very being of society, we recommend to you the Immediate Establishment of it in all the Countys, that the Civil Magistrate be properly encouraged and protected in executing the good and wholesome laws of the Land, and that due care be taken that the Military be kept in due subordination to the Civil Authority, without which our Liberties will Irretrievably be Annihilated."

NORTHAMPTON RECORDS.

I.

"Jan'y 15, 1778.—The Town proceeded to consider the articles of Confederation and Perpetual Union proposed by the Hon^{ble} Continental Congress, and voted that they approve of the same, and direct their Representation at the General Court to act accordingly."

II.

"May 18, 1778.—At this meeting the Constitution and Form of Government recommended by the General Assembly of this State should be taken up and read. And it being read and considered The Question was put, Whether the Town did approve of the said Constitution and Form of Government; and upon a Division of the House, appeared that thirty-six were for it and seventeen against it."

III.

"Nov. 22, 1787.—At a meeting of the inhabitants of the Town of Northampton qualified to vote in the choice of Representatives, being legally warned and assembled at the Court-house in said Town, on Thursday, the 22d day of November, 1787.

"The Question being put, whether the Town would send any Delegates to the State Convention proposed to be held at Boston, on the second Wednesday in January next, and it passed in the affirmative.

"The Town then voted to send two Delegates to the said Convention, and accordingly chose the Hon^{ble} Caleb Strong and Mr. Benj. Sheldon for that purpose.

"The Town then voted to Choose a Committee to prepare an address to the Delegates expressive of the sentiments of the Town touching the important business for which they were appointed, and accordingly chose Samuel Henshaw, Esq., Robert Breech, Esq., Dea. Elijah Clark, Elijah Wright, Doct. Shepherd, and Mr. Jonathan Clap for that purpose, and the said Committee soon after reported the following, which, being repeatedly read and considered, was unanimously approved by the Town (excepting one dissenting vote).

“To the Hon. Caleb Strong & Mr. Benj. Sheldon:

“GENTLEMEN,—In conformity to a resolution of the Gen’l Court of the 25th of October last, We have Delegated you to meet in State Convention on the second Wednesday of January next, for the purpose of adopting or rejecting the Reported Constitution for the United States of America. The object of your Mission, Gentlemen, is of the highest magnitude in human affairs; much time and unwearied application are requisite in order thoroughly to investigate it.

“The Civil Dignity of this State, of the United States, and, perhaps, of Humanity, are suspended upon this momentous Question. We wish you, Gentlemen, patiently to hear and attentively to examine every argument that shall be offered for or against its adoption. Be not unduly influenced by Local Considerations. Let your mind be impressed with the necessity of having an Equal, Energetic, Federal Government. ‘Tis the welfare of the Union as well as of Massachusetts that you are to consult. And while you are tenacious of the rights and privileges of the People, be not afraid to delegate to the federal Government such powers as are absolutely necessary for advancing and maintaining our National Honor and happiness.

“But, Gentlemen, we mean not to give you positive instructions relative to your voting for or against the reported Constitution. When in convention you will have the collected wisdom of the State before you, Will hear all that can be said on the subject, and will consequently be able to form a judicious opinion; and having the fullest confidence in your political wisdom, Integrity, and Patriotism, We cheerfully (on our part) submit the all-important question to your decision. And we beseech the all-wise Governor of the world to take the Convention under his holy influence, that so the result may be the best good of the United States of America.

“NORTHAMPTON, Nov. 22, 1787.

“By order of the Committee.

“SAM’L HENSHAW, Chairman.”

IV.

COL. ELIHU PORTER’S REGIMENT.

To the ill-fated expedition against Canada of the winter of 1775-76, in which the lamented Montgomery lost his life, the county of Hampshire contributed a regiment, the command of which was intrusted to Col. Elihu Porter, of Hadley. To follow the fortunes of this regiment in its wearisome marches would hardly be within the scope of this work, did our limited space allow. We make room, however, for the following interesting documents relating to the subject, which we have been permitted to copy from the originals now in the possession of Col. Porter’s descendants:

I.

WASHINGTON’S LETTER.

“CAMBRIDGE, 10th February, 1776.

“The Continental Congress having confirmed my application to this Government to raise a Regiment for the service of the United Colonies, which is now complied with, and you are appointed to the command thereof. I have to desire, that you will use the utmost diligence and dispatch possible to complete the said Regiment, and march it into Canada by the shortest and best way that, from your own knowledge of the Country and the best information you can get, you think will be the most expeditions.

“I have to acquaint you that if you take your rout by number four and Onion River there will be a supply of Provisions ready for you, laid in by order of General Schuyler.

“As this Regiment is to be upon the Contioental Establishment, agreeable to the terms and Requisitions of Congress transmitted to the Legislative power of this Province, and the necessity of Reinforcing our troops posted and forming the Blockade of Quebec is too apparent to need dwelling on, I would order each Company to march as fast as they are raised,—the whole putting themselves under the Command of the General or Commanding Officer in Canada as fast as they arrive there.

“Such necessaries as ye will think really proper, and that you cannot do without, will be provided for you by the Commissary-General & Quarter-Master General, and I shall depend upon you that the strictest economy is used consistent with the dispatch necessary upon this occasion.

“These, Sir, are my instructions to you, and, from the character you bear, I doubt not you will pay due attention to them. I must again recommend your making all possible dispatch; and that ye may share in the glory of expelling the Instruments of Ministerial Tyranny from that fair Province is the sincere wish of “Sir, your most H. St.,

“G^o WASHINGTON.

“COLONEL ELISHA PORTER.”

II.

GEN. SCHUYLER’S LETTER.*

“ALBANY, February 5, 1776.

“SIR,—Colo. Fellows has represented to me the Improbability of completing the Regiment ordered to be raised by the Honorable Assembly of the Massachusetts Bay to go into Canada, unless part of the Troops already marched from Berkshire, under the command of Major Cady, be considered as part of the Regiment. These under Major Cady are only engaged to the 15th April; hence, considering them as part of your Regiment would not, I suppose, fulfil the views of the Assembly. It would, however, be (a Continental saving of two or three companies if those gone under Major Cady could be induced to engage for an equal Term with those you are now enlisting. If there was a prospect that they would do this, I think it would be a prudent step not to engage the full Regiment in the Colony; but this is a matter the Assembly must determine, as I cannot presume to interfere with or counteract their Regulations. I am, sir,

* Addressed, “To Colo. Williams, at Stockbridge. To be by him forwarded to Colonel Porter, at Hadley,” and endorsed, “Rec^d Feb. 13, 1776. Seal^d & forwarded by Colo. Porter’s Humbl Serv’t, T. Williams.”

“Your humble servant,

“PH. SCHUYLER.

“TO COLO. PORTER.”

III.

GEN. ARNOLD’S ORDERS.

“TO COLO. PORTER, at Chamblee.

“SIR,—I am this minute Informed of your arrival at St. John’s, with part of your Regt. You will please on receipt (?) of this to Draw Ten Days’ Provisions at Chamblee, & proceed In your Battoes Down the Sorrell to the Army before Quebec and join Gen’l Wooster. You will please to take as many men in the Battoes as they will Carry, with Two Chests of Medicine (at Chamblee). I wish you success.

“I am, Sir, Your Hbl. Servt.,

“B. ARNOLD, B. Genl.

“MONTREAL, Apl. 20, 1776.”

IV.

BARON DE WOELDTKE’S LETTER.†

“SORRELL, May 23, 1776.

“SIR,—I have sent with my Servants, my Baggage, &c., to St. John’s, and as their baggage must be forwarded from your place by land some distance, on account of the Rapids, would be extremely oblige to you if you would have some carriages procured to forward them, directly if possible. Your compliance will much oblige your huml. Servt.,

“BARON DE WOELDTKE.

“If my men shall want any provisions you will please to order them some.”

V.

GEN. WOOSTER’S LETTER AND ORDER.‡

“MONTREAL, May 26, 1776.

“SIR,—You will send a Comp^y of Men to La Chine to Garrison that place; and the remainder of Col. Reed’s Regt., if there is any, you will order to this place. Genl. Arnold is gone with the Troops for La Chine, in pursuit of the Enemy. I am, Sir, your h’bl Serv’t, “DAV’D WOOSTER, Bri^g-General.”

VI.

COL. THOS. WILLIAMS TO COL. ELISHA PORTER.

“STOCKBRIDGE, Jan. 27, 1776,

“Our men are some of those already marched; others are going to March tomorrow. We are directed by Genl. Schuyler to march by the way of Albany.”

VII.

MR. GERRY’S LETTER.§

“PHILADELPHIA, June 18, 1776.

“DEAR SIR,—I rec^d your favour of ye 31st May, p^r Mr. Chase, but I have heard nothing of ye other letter which ye mentioned therein. I am sorry to find ye Affairs of Canada in such a situation, but they will be soon assisted if in ye power of Congress to effect it. General Gates is ordered to ye Command in Canada; 6000 Militia for Connecticut, Massachusetts, and New Hampshire are soon to join. Coin, 21,000 Dollars in Specie, and part of 500,000 in bills, were sent from this city ye 16th for Albany, and ye Commissary-General is to undertake supplying ye Army; a Committee is appointed to provide Medicine & Clothing, & a strict Scrutiny will be made into ye causes of Miscarriages in that Department. I am grieved at ye loss of General Thomas, and think he was a brave officer, and could wish to have rec^d a better account of another officer of which you mention.

“The persons which you mention at our old lodgings were well a short time since, and your desire of being remembered to them shall be complied with.

“Things are going on well in ye Colonies with respect to Independency, Confederation, &c., &c., and ye question relative to ye former is to be agitated in Congress ye 1st July next.

“General Washington is to be reinforced with 15,000 men at New York, which will augment his army to 25,000, & a flying camp is to be posted in ye Jerseys consisting of 10,000 men more. You have undoubtedly heard of the prize lately taken and carried into Boston, out of which were landed seventy-five tons of powder, 1000 arms, &c., &c., &c. Saltpetre is manufactured in abundance in ye Massachusetts, and by Mr. Divon’s account they have already delivered into ye magazines fifty tons, and have thirty tons of sulphur imported and left in Boston. Three mills are built there, two of which turn out upward of 1000 each p^r week.

“I hope the disposition that has appeared in some officers to ensure others will cease, & that in Lieu thereof a laudable Emulation will take place to excell in Discipline & Valor, without which an army must be disgraced. I sincerely wish ye success and happiness, and remain your friend &

“Hum. ser.,

“ELBRIDGE GERRY.

“P.S.—Pray continue to give me ye state of things in Canada.

“COLO. PORTER.”

† Addressed “To The Commanding Officer at Fort Chambly.”

‡ “To The Commanding Officer on Public Service at St. John’s.”

§ Addressed, “Col. Elisha Porter, in Canada.”

VIII.

GEN. SCHUYLER'S LETTER TO COL. FELLOWS.

"ALBANY, January 20, 1776.

"Half after ten A.M.

"SIR,—Your favor of yesterd'ys date was this moment delivered to me.

"I thank you for the information it contains, and am happy to learn that you have already enlisted so considerable a number of men. As the Assembly of the Massachusetts Bay have ordered a Regiment to be raised, and the men to be enlisted for a year, it will supersede the necessity of raising any more in consequence of my directions to you; but I do not wish that those already enlisted (who I suppose will serve beyond the 15th of April next) should be considered as part of the regiment to be raised by virtue of the act or order of your Assembly, unless they would also engage for a year. I therefore hope they will march without delay, and the whole to be under the command of Major Cady, as Maj. Commandant of the Corps, unless you should think proper to take command of them. It is with infinite satisfaction that I learn the alacrity with which my countrymen step forth on this occasion; it will at once redound much to the honor of the persons who engage in this service, & of those who have been active in promoting it, and also evince to our enemies that no obstacle can deter Americans from prosecuting their righteous cause.

"Your zeal, sir, on this occasion merits the Thanks of your Country; if mine are worth the accepting you have them most sincerely, & I shall not fail of doing myself the pleasure to mention you and the respectable Committee of Berkshire to Congress in Honorable terms.

"I am, sir, with much respect,

"Your most humble servant,

"PH. SCHUYLER.

"COLL. JOHN FELLOWS."

CHAPTER XVIII.

THE SHAYS REBELLION.

I.

CAUSES OF THE MOVEMENT.

THE great uprising among the discontented people of New England, commonly called the Shays Rebellion, which occurred at the close of the war of the Revolution, has scarcely yet been given its proper place in history.

In the great contest for independence, New England, in common with the other parts of the country, strained every nerve to its utmost tension, and in behalf of the cause exhausted her resources to the point of depletion. At its close she was free, but was utterly prostrate and bleeding at every pore. While the excitement lasted the fever in her blood sustained her activities, but the occasion over the excitement waned and the reaction came. This reaction was the first great trial, and by all odds the severest strain, save, perhaps, the great Rebellion, to which our republican form of government has yet been subjected. The history of this insurrectionary movement, written at all in detail, would of itself fill a large volume. Our limited space will allow us, therefore, to attempt nothing more than a brief summary of its most important incidents.

That this sedition did not more seriously obstruct, if not quite overturn, the new government was owing mostly to the incapacity of its leaders. The spirit of rebellion was rife among the people, but from among the ruling classes no competent man stepped forth to lead it, and it spent its force in boisterous, disorganized, and therefore fruitless, revolt against the authority of law and order. Had some bold, ambitious man, competent to lead; had some brave Stark or unscrupulous Arnold or sagacious Schuyler; had some Davis, Lee, or Stonewall Jackson at the critical moment headed the insurgents in Western Massachusetts, or commanded at the attack on the United States arsenal at Springfield,—there is strong reason to believe that England would soon have regained her lost power and our republic would have never been. But Daniel Shays and Luke Day were not the men for the hour or place.

But it should be said, in justice to those engaged in it as well as to the authorities they sought to subvert, that this rebellious spirit was after all rather of the nature of the querulous discontent of children smarting under imaginary wrongs than of any deliberately treasonable intentions against the new government.

Of a truth, the new order of things had hardly begun. The natural chaos and disorder attendant on a period of revolution had hardly subsided. The people had not forgotten the old order, nor yet learned to love and respect the new. That they suffered from some cause or other they were sure of, and it was natural enough that they should attribute their troubles to the new order of things, and rise in rebellion against it.

When we look at the condition of things in Massachusetts at the close of the war of the Revolution it is easy to discover, in the light of our country's subsequent experience, the causes of this discontent and sedition.

Among the several causes which brought about the "hard times" that resulted in the Shays Rebellion may be enumerated the following:

1st. The State was heavily in debt. The private State debt was £1,300,000. The State's proportion of the Federal debt was not less than £1,500,000. This, contrasted with the whole State indebtedness before the war,—which did not exceed £100,000,—was, for the times, an enormous sum.

2d. The financial embarrassments of the several towns. Every town was heavily embarrassed by advances which they had made to the often-repeated requisitions for men and supplies to support the army, and which had been done upon their own particular credit.*

3d. The inexperience, if not the incapacity, of public men in the management of financial affairs.

4th. The lingering distinctions of caste, which the Revolution had not quite done away with.

5th. The depreciation of paper-money.

6th. The vast amount of private debts which had accumulated during the war, and the hard, if not unjust, laws in force in favor of creditors.

"The insurrection," says William L. Smith, in a paper read by him before the Connecticut Valley Historical Society, at Springfield, Oct. 1, 1877, "was the result of a condition of things now popularly described as 'hard times.' It did not originate so much in disaffection toward the State government as in an uncontrollable impulse of a distressed people to seek relief in some way, or any way. The long and burdensome war of the Revolution had just been brought to a close. The country was impoverished. The Continental paper-money had become worthless, and no substitute for it had been provided. There was no trade, no demand for labor, no way in which the value of property of any kind could be measured. Under the barbarous laws then in force the jails were becoming filled with prisoners, whose only offense was their inability to pay their debts. Men who had nothing to do but to talk about their grievances and distresses were easily excited to turbulence, and local disturbances were frequent and serious. The authorities were too often in sympathy with the offenders against the law, and guilty parties went unpunished. The State constitution, adopted in 1780, was viewed with disfavor by a large minority of the people, and was not regarded as securely established. The Constitution of the United States had not then been framed, and all existing government was merely experimental.

"There was at that time no law for the equitable distribution of a debtor's property among his creditors. The executions of the creditors were levied in the order in which their attachments were made, and each creditor was satisfied in his turn until all were paid or the debtor's estate was exhausted. A man whose credit was suspected found his property covered by attachments at once, and in the condition of things then existing a very slight circumstance excited suspicion. Litigation became general. The State was showered with executions, and large amounts of property were sold for almost nothing to satisfy them. In the unreasoning excitement of the time the courts, lawyers, and sheriffs were denounced in the wildest terms as the promoters of the suffering that men were inflicting upon each other. A cry arose that the courts ought to be abolished. Threats were made that the courts should not be allowed to sit, that no more suits should be entered and no more executions issued. It was such wild clamor as this that led to the first overt act in resistance to the lawful authority."

* Minot's Hist. of Insurrection in Mass., p. 6.

II.

CONVENTIONS.

Agitations began in Western Massachusetts as early as in the year 1781. The prime-mover in these first efforts to subvert the authority of the government was Samuel Ely. He had been for some years an irregular minister of the gospel at Somers, Conn. He was now suspended from his ministry and a resident of Hampshire Co., Mass. In the year 1781 conventions began to be held, principally upon the instigation of Ely, in Western Massachusetts, to consult upon the subject of grievances. These conventions were made up of delegates from several towns, and their action tended greatly to excite the spirit of rebellion.

III.

MOBS.

In the month of April, 1782, Ely succeeded in raising a mob at Northampton of sufficient force to disturb the holding of the Supreme Judicial Court and the Court of Common Pleas there. For his complicity in this disturbance Ely was arrested, indicted, and, pleading guilty upon trial, was sentenced to imprisonment at Springfield. Soon after, at a time when the people of the town were mostly absent, a mob assembled and set him at liberty. Capt. Densmore, Lieut. Paul King, and Lieut. P. Bardwell were arrested as ringleaders of the rescue, and put in jail at Northampton. Another mob of three hundred men gathered in Hatfield for the release of the ringleaders. The sheriff of the county, Gen. Elisha Porter, called out twelve hundred militia to protect the jail. The rioters sent a committee to Gen. Porter with a demand for the release of the three prisoners. Gen. Porter so far complied with their demand as to release the three men on parole, conditioned for the delivery of their bodies or that of Samuel Ely on demand of the General Court.

The General Court treated this matter with a leniency that seemed to intensify rather than pacify the excited feelings of the populace.

The next overt act of rebellion of much importance occurred the year following, at Springfield.

In the month of May, on the last day of the session of the Court of Common Pleas and the Court of the General Sessions of the Peace, in Springfield, a mob of sixty persons assembled from different parts of the county to prevent the session.

The Massachusetts Gazette or General Advertiser, of Springfield, of the date of May 27, gives the following account of this affair:

"On Tuesday last, being the day on which the General Sessions of the Peace and the Court of Common Pleas opened in this town, a banditti, collected from the obscure corners of the county, composed of men of the most infamous character, to the amount of about sixty in number, met in this town to prevent the sitting of the court. . . . They showed no disposition to attack the courts in the forenoon; at two o'clock they met at a public-house in the town, and resolved themselves to be a convention of the county, met together for the purpose of redressing grievances; after having passed several important resolves they adjourned their convention to the elm-tree near the court-house; when the bell rang for the court, they, in hostile parade, armed with white bludgeons, cut for that purpose, marched before the door of the court-house, and when the court, headed by the sheriff, came to the door, with insolence opposed their entrance; the sheriff, in the mild terms of persuasion, addressing them as gentlemen, desired them to make way. His civility was repaid with outrage, and an action soon commenced; happily, there was a collection of people friendly to the government present, and the mob was repulsed with broken heads. A number of them were instantly taken and committed to prison; after which, by a regular procedure, they were brought before the Court of Sessions for examination, and were bound to appear before the Supreme Court."

IV.

THE TENDER ACT.

On the 3d day of July, 1782, the "Tender Act" was passed for the benefit of private debtors. By this act it was provided that executions issued for private demands might be satisfied by neat cattle and other articles enumerated therein, at an appraisement of impartial men under oath. By its retrospective action it tended to suspend lawsuits, and this increased the very evils it was intended to remedy. Its action was limited to one year, at the end of which it was suffered to expire. But its consequences were more lasting. It was the first signal for hostilities between creditors and debtors,—the rich and the poor, the few and the many. From opposing and defying creditors, the discontented were fast led, under the evil influences of this law, to opposing and defying the courts themselves.

And so matters went on from bad to worse through the weary years, with now a convention and then a mob. "Between the conventions and the mobs everything," says Dr. Holland, "became a grievance. Lawyers assisted in the administration of justice; therefore lawyers were never excluded by the popular voice from the Senate and House of Representatives. Money was scarce; therefore there was a loud call for the issue of paper currency. The Legislature refused; a cry then arose against the Legislature.

"The Legislature of 1786 was elected," says William L. Smith,* "at a time of great excitement. Demagogism was in its glory, and the distresses of the people were used for the accomplishment of personal and political ends. Many of the men who had been intrusted with the responsibilities of legislation, and were prominent in the service of the State, were superseded by inexperienced, and in many cases by utterly unfit, persons. Patriots of the Revolution, whose elegant appeals had aroused the spirit that carried the country triumphantly through the war of independence, were defeated as candidates merely because they happened to be lawyers. When the Legislature assembled various visionary schemes were brought forward, among them a proposition that the State should go into the business of manufacturing paper-money. The 'Greenback' party of the day was active and noisy. The very men who had lived through a period of great inflation and consequent depreciation wanted to travel over the same wretched road again. We should wonder at this if we had not seen recently history repeating itself in this particular. After reading the discussions of that time one is brought to the conclusion that the advocates of rag-money have not materially strengthened their arguments during the last ninety years. The Legislature proceeded deliberately, influenced no doubt by the conservative sentiment of Boston, and finally rejected the proposition; and the Senate stood firmly in the way of other dangerous schemes. Thereupon there arose a new clamor. It was declared that the Senate should be abolished, and that the Legislature should not continue to hold its sessions at Boston; and the agitators proceeded to supplement their boisterous declamations by a formal organization."

The Legislature adjourned on the 8th day of July, and the excitement increased. It spent its violence again in conventions and mobs.

V.

MORE CONVENTIONS.

Conventions and mobs seem to have constituted the machinery by which the discontented sought to relieve their distresses. The conventions were at first respectable, but soon became the abettors of violence. The first object of the mobs seems to have been the stoppage of the inferior courts, so that debts could not be collected, and the next object was the destruction of the superior courts, so that themselves might not be in danger of trial for their crimes.*

* Address before Conn. Val. Hist. Society at Springfield.

Convention at Worcester.—On the 15th of August, 1786, a convention was held at Worcester, composed of delegates from thirty-seven towns of Worcester County. It first voted that it was "a lawful and constitutional body." It then voted that the following were the causes of discontent among the people, to wit :

- "1st. The sitting of the General Court in Boston.
- "2d. The want of a circulating medium.
- "3d. The abuses in the practice of the law, and the exorbitance of the fee-table.
- "4th. The existence of the Courts of Common Pleas in their present mode of administration.
- "5th. The appropriating the revenues arising from the impost and excise duties to the payment of the State securities.
- "6th. The unreasonable and unnecessary grants made by our General Court to the attorney-general and others.
- "7th. The servants of the government being too numerous, and having too great salaries.
- "8th. This Commonwealth granting aid or paying moneys to Congress while our public accounts remain unsettled. But this convention proposed that relief should be sought only by lawful and constitutional means, and deprecated all riots and mob violence."†

It should be stated that the war, like all others, had engendered luxury and expensive living. It greatly stimulated the importation, and consequently the consumption, of foreign goods. This, of course, added in the end to the other burdens. The public prints of the day were full of comments, suggested by the confusion of the times. One says, "How much soever we may be oppressed, yet this much is certain : we cannot be oppressed without justice. Why, then, should we wish to stop its execution? If we have honestly involved ourselves in public or private debts, let us honestly discharge the obligations we have contracted. We have nobly bled for our liberty, and finally obtained the victory. But at the rate we are about to use it, God knows it cannot be much preferable to slavery."‡

Convention at Hatfield.—On the 22d day of August, 1786, a convention met at Hatfield, in Hampshire County. This convention was called at the recommendation of a minor convention previously held at Pelham.

This convention was constituted of delegates from fifty towns in Hampshire County. After a deliberation of three days, it decided upon and put forth the following body of grievances, to wit :

"At a meeting of delegates from fifty towns in the county of Hampshire, in convention held at Hatfield, in said county, on Tuesday, the 22d day of August instant, and continued by adjournments until the twenty-fifth ult., voted that this meeting is constitutional.

"The convention, from a thorough conviction of great uneasiness subsisting among the people of this county and Commonwealth, then went into an inquiry for the cause ; and, upon mature consideration, deliberation, and debate, were of opinion that many grievances and unnecessary burdens now lying upon the people are the sources of that discontent so evidently discoverable throughout this Commonwealth. Among which the following articles were voted as such, viz. :

- "1st. The existence of the Senate.
- "2d. The present mode of representation.
- "3d. The officers of government not being annually dependent on the representatives of the people, in General Court assembled, for their salaries.
- "4th. All the civil officers of government not being annually elected by the Representatives of the people in General Court assembled.
- "5th. The existence of the Courts of Common Pleas and General Sessions of the Peace.
- "6th. The Fee-Table, as it now stands.
- "7th. The present mode of appropriating the impost and excise.
- "8th. The unreasonable grants made to some of the officers of government.
- "9th. The supplementary aid.

* Holland's Hist. of Western Mass., Vol. I., p. 235.

† Ibid., p. 236.

‡ Ibid., p. 237.

- "10th. The present mode of paying the governmental securities.
- "11th. The present mode adopted for the payment and collection of the last tax.
- "12th. The present mode of taxation, as it operates unequally between the polls and estates, and between landed and mercantile interests.
- "13th. The present method of practice of the attorneys-at-law.
- "14th. The want of a sufficient medium of trade to remedy the mischiefs arising from a scarcity of money.
- "15th. The General Court sitting in the town of Boston.
- "16th. The present embarrassments on the press.
- "17th. The neglect of the settlement of important matters depending between the Commonwealth and Congress relating to monies and averages.
- "18th. Voted, This convention recommend to the several towns in this county that they instruct their representatives to use their influence in the next General Court to have emitted a bank of paper-money, subject to a depreciation ; making it a tender in all payments, equal to silver and gold, to be issued in order to call in the Commonwealth's securities.
- "19th. Voted, That whereas several of the above articles of grievances arise from defects in the constitution, therefore a revision of the same ought to take place.
- "20th. Voted, That it be recommended by this convention to the several towns in this county that they petition the Governor to call the General Court together, in order that the other grievances complained of may, by the Legislature, be redressed.
- "21st. Voted, That this convention recommend it to the inhabitants of this county that they abstain from all mobs and unlawful assemblies until a constitutional method of redress can be obtained.
- "22d. Voted, That Mr. Caleb West be desired to transmit a copy of the proceedings of this convention to the convention of the county of Worcester.
- "23d. Voted, That the chairman of this convention be desired to transmit a copy of the proceedings of this convention to the county of Berkshire.
- "24th. Voted, That the chairman of this convention be directed to notify a county convention, upon any motion made to him for that purpose, if he judge the reasons offered be sufficient, giving such notice, together with the reasons therefor, in the publick papers of the county.
- "25th. Voted, That a copy of the proceedings of this convention be sent to the press in Springfield for publication."

As the natural result of such deliberations mob violence was again the order of the day.

On the last Tuesday of August following, a mob numbering fifteen hundred persons assembled under arms at Northampton.‡ It was on the day appointed by law for the sitting of the Court of Common Pleas and the General Sessions of the Peace. The mob took possession of the ground adjoining the court-house. The result was that no court was held. Mob violence was again triumphant. Those who did not wish to pay their debts accomplished their object.

The clerk of the court at Northampton made the following minute in his records, to wit :

"Early on the morning of this day there was collected a considerable number of persons under arms, who paraded near the court-house, with a proposed design to prevent this court from sitting ; a committee from whom presented a petition, requesting the court would not proceed to any business. The court having considered thereof, thought proper to open the same at the house of Capt. Samuel Clark, innholder, in Northampton ; and having continued all matters now pending in said court to the term of this court next to be holden in Springfield, in and for the county of Hampshire, on the second Tuesday of November next, adjourned without day."

But no November term of the court was held. The court was continued by legislative action till the May following.

After being informed of the action of the Northampton mob, Governor Bowdoin at once issued his proclamation calling upon all "judges, justices, sheriffs, grand jurors, constables, and other officers, civil and military, to suppress all such riotous proceedings." The proclamation, after appealing to the State pride, personal honor, and patriotism of the people, enjoined upon the attorney-general the duty of prosecuting and bringing to condign punishment not only the ringleaders and abettors of the Northampton mob, but also all subsequent offenders against law and order.

On the week succeeding the Northampton demonstration the sittings of the courts were also stopped at Worcester, and on the 11th of September a mob at Concord stopped the sittings of the courts of Middlesex County. But the mob of Berkshire County seemed so far to be the most violent of any. They assembled, at the opening of the Court of Common Pleas at Great Barrington, to the number of eight hundred, and not only stopped the sitting of the court, but broke open the jail and liberated the prisoners.

UNIVERSAL DISORDER.

The whole State was now aflame with excitement; from one end of it to the other rebellion and anarchy stared the people in the face.

VI.

DANIEL SHAYS.

And now appear upon the scene two strong and turbulent spirits who soon brought the rebellion to a head, but not until they had stirred the troubled waters to their profoundest depths,—Daniel Shays and Luke Day.

Daniel Shays, who about this time came to the front as the acknowledged leader of the insurrection, seems to have been a soldier of fortune. His parents had been extremely poor, and his early education was neglected. Yet he was a man of good address and not displeasing manner. He was courageous, ambitious, strong-minded, and sagacious, but unscrupulous in accomplishing his ends. He was born in Hopkinton in the year 1747. When young he worked some time on a farm in Framingham. He removed to Great Barrington before the Revolutionary war, and at the breaking out of the violent phase of the rebellion resided at Pellham. At the age of twenty-eight he entered into the service of his country, with the rank of ensign, and was conspicuous for his bravery at Bunker Hill. In the year 1776 he was appointed a lieutenant in Col. Varnum's regiment, and was soon detached on recruiting-service. He enlisted a company, which he took to West Point, whose engagement to serve was on the condition of his being the captain. This condition was not fulfilled, and the men were apportioned to different corps. He was at the surrender of Burgoyne, and at the storming of Stony Point. In 1779 he received a captain's commission, and was with Col. Putnam's regiment at Newark, N. J., in October, 1780, when he resigned and left the service. He possessed few qualifications for a high command. After the suppression of the insurrection he removed to Sparta, N. Y., where he lived in utter poverty, dying in the year 1825.

VII.

LUKE DAY

was born at West Springfield, July 25, 1743. His father was a wealthy land-owner, but the land, for some reason, fell to a younger brother. At the opening of the war of the Revolution he was commissioned as a captain. He served honorably in the Continental army for several years, and at the close of the war returned home poor and a major by brevet. He seems to have been a somewhat rough, boisterous man, but brave, and influential among his fellows. Of the two, he was perhaps stronger-minded and more sagacious than Shays, but less plausible and gentlemanly. He raised his own men, drilled, and commanded them. He was a most inveterate speech-maker, and often met the turbulent spirits of his neighborhood at the old Stebbins tavern in West Springfield, and harangued them for hours together. A few days before the attack of Shays upon the arsenal at Springfield, Day, in talking to his men, said, "My boys, you are going to fight for liberty. If you wish to know what liberty is, I will tell you. It is for every man to do what he pleases, to make other folks do as you please to have them, and to keep folks from serving the devil." After the defeat of Shays, Day fled to New York. He afterward returned, under the conditions of a general pardon, to his native town, and died there, miserably poor, at an advanced age. While drilling his men on West Springfield Common, they wore in their hats a sprig of hemlock, which afterward became the symbol of the insurgents.

Such were the two men who, on the breaking out of the more violent phase of the rebellion, assumed its leadership.

VIII.

THE ATTACK UPON THE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT AT SPRINGFIELD.

Thus far, as the reader has seen, the attacks of the mob had been made upon the inferior courts,—the Courts of Common Pleas and of General Sessions of the Peace. But the grand jury met also with the Supreme Judicial Court, and unless the sittings of that court could also be prevented, the rioters could all be indicted and punished.

The next sitting of the Supreme Judicial Court was to be held in Springfield, on the 26th day of September. The insurgents resolved to prevent its sitting. But the friends of law and order were also at this time profoundly conscious of the impending danger, and made up their minds that the court should be held at whatever cost.

The rebellion had now reached its height. Outrages had been committed in Middlesex and Bristol, as well as in the western counties of the State. Even the city of Boston was threatened, and the movement spread into the adjoining States. It is probable that at this time neither the insurgents nor the State authorities knew its extent. After it was over, the Legislature passed a law disqualifying persons engaged in the rebellion from holding office. It was then found that in some towns there were not enough men untainted to fill the offices, and it became necessary to pass an enabling act. This was the state of things when the Supreme Court was first attacked at Springfield.

But it would seem that this high-handed outrage was the culmination of the insurrectionary movement.

The determined stand here taken by the friends of law and order opened the eyes of the thinking ones, and one after another they returned to their homes, leaving it to the more unscrupulous rabble to follow Shays in his mad attempt upon the arsenal in the following winter.

On the 27th day of September, the Governor issued his proclamation convening the Legislature. The command of the governmental forces at Springfield was intrusted to Gen. Williams. We cannot do better here than to copy the account of this affair given in the able paper of William L. Smith, above referred to. Mr. Smith says:

"Gen. Shepard succeeded in collecting about six hundred militia and volunteers, and anticipated the plans of the insurgents by taking possession of the court-house. On the appointed day the court was opened, Chief-Justice Cushing and Justices Sargeant, Sewall, and Sumner being present, and Shays appeared at the head of a force largely superior in numbers to Gen. Shepard's, but his men were not as well armed as were the militia. The insurgent leaders were disconcerted at finding the militia in possession of the court-house; their followers were enraged, and insisted upon making an immediate attack. But the leaders were more prudent. They knew that the government troops were well armed, they had no artillery, and they were especially disgusted with the bark of a small cannon, which they styled the 'government's puppy.' They offered to withdraw if the judges would agree that no other than the ordinary criminal business of the term should be taken up. The judges replied in substance that they had a public duty to discharge, and would attend to such business as should properly come before them. But by the time this answer was received the insurgent leaders were indifferent as to the action of the court, for they were satisfied the grand jury could not be got together, and that there would be no trials. They saw their main purpose would be accomplished without fighting. Shays had his headquarters on or near Ferry Lane (now Cypress Street), and a tavern that stood on the southerly corner of the present Main and Sargeant Streets was a favorite rendezvous of the insurgents.

"The inhabitants of Springfield were beginning to feel some relief from their anxiety, when a new commotion was seen in the camp of the insurgents. It was rumored among them that the militia had determined that they should not be permitted to march past the court-house. It is not likely that any person in authority on the government side threw down the gauntlet in that way. It is more probable that the rumor originated with some of the Shays men, who wanted a pretext for a fight and consequent pillage. But the rumor, however it originated, aroused the fighting-qualities of the insurgents. Old soldiers were not to be told that they must not march over the highway. They notified Gen. Shepard that they would march past the court-house forthwith, and they did so in military order and with loaded muskets, and they countermarched and again passed under the windows of the court-house. But no one came forward to knock the chip from their leader's shoulder. The experiment of the insurgents proved a failure. The militia could not be tempted to accept a mere challenge or invite a battle. A taunt or a careless word would have occasioned a collision, but the word was not spoken. But some of the militia were so impressed by the numbers and bearing of the insurgents that they deserted their colors and enlisted under Shays.

"The court was kept open three days, but the proceedings amounted to a mere ceremony. The grand jury did not assemble. Parties to causes, jurors, and witnesses were under arms, either on one side or the other. One defendant, who was out on bail, was defaulted, and that was the only business transacted at the term. The adjournment of the court under such circumstances was a victory for the insurgents, and their triumph was made complete when they learned that the judges had determined not to hold the October term at Great Barrington. The judges had been informed of the preparations made for their reception at that place, and knew it would be useless to attempt to hold the term.

"The rebels had accomplished all they intended, and more, but success had erased them. The rank and file were clamorous for a fight, and Shays sent a message to Gen. Shepard demanding a surrender of the court-house. Gen. Shepard did not deem the possession of the court-house worth fighting for, the court having adjourned, and moved his forces to the Federal arsenal, where there was valuable property that required protection. The insurgents, finding no satisfaction in standing guard over an empty building, and not yet being ready to make war against the Federal authority, soon dispersed."

On the 27th day of September the Legislature assembled, according to the proclamation, and the Governor, in an able speech from the chair, presented to the members the alarming state of affairs. The Senate appeared to be decided in their opinion that stringent measures were necessary to be taken, but the lower house, more or less in sympathy with the objects, if not with the acts, of the insurgents, wavered, and favored conciliation.

Various disturbances occurred in different parts of the State, and the military was called out to protect the courts. Upon hearing this, Shays issued the following order to the insurgents:

"PELHAM, Oct. 23, 1786.

"GENTLEMEN,—By information from the General Court, they are determined to call all those who appeared to stop the court to condign punishment. Therefore I request you to assemble your men together, to see that they are well armed and equipped with sixty rounds each man, and to be ready to turn out at a minute's warning; likewise to be properly organized with officers.

"DANIEL SHAYS."

Further disturbances occurred in various parts of the State, and again, early in December, the insurgents were preparing to renew their opposition to the laws in the county of Hampshire, as the following address issued at the time will show:

"AN ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE SEVERAL TOWNS IN THE COUNTY OF HAMPSHIRE, NOW AT ARMS.

"GENTLEMEN,—We have thought proper to inform you of some of the principal causes of the late risings of the people, and also of their present movements, viz.:

"1st. The present expensive mode of collecting debts, which, by reason of the great scarcity of cash, will of necessity fill our goals with unhappy debtors, and thereby a reputable body of people rendered incapable of being serviceable either to themselves or the community.

"2d. The moneys raised by impost and excise being appropriated to discharge the interest of governmental securities, and not the foreign debt, when these securities are not subject to taxation.

"3d. A suspension of the writ of Habeas Corpus, by which those persons who have stepped forth to assert and maintain the rights of the people are liable to be taken and conveyed even to the most distant part of the commonwealth, and thereby subjected to an unjust punishment.

"4th. The unlimited power granted to Justices of the Peace and Sheriffs, Deputy Sheriffs and Constables, by the Riot Act, indemnifying them to the prosecution thereof, when, perhaps, wholly actuated from a principle of revenge, hatred, and envy.

"Furthermore, Be assured that this body, now at arms, despise the idea of being instigated by British emissaries, which is so strenuously propagated by the enemies of our liberties, and also wish the most proper and speedy measures may be taken to discharge both our foreign and domestic debt.

"Per Order,

"DANIEL GRAY,

"Chairman of the Committee for the above purpose."

At the same time another publication appeared in the Hampshire Herald, published in Springfield, of similar tenor:

"To the Printer of the Hampshire Herald:

"SIR,—It has somehow or other fallen to my lot to be employed in a more conspicuous manner than some others of my fellow-citizens in stepping forth in defence of the rights and privileges of the people, more especially of the county of Hampshire.

"Therefore, upon the desire of the people now at arms, I take this method to publish to the world of mankind in general, particularly the people of this commonwealth, some of the principal grievances we complain of, and of which we are now seeking redress, and mean to contend for until a redress can be obtained, which we hope will soon take place; and if so, our brethren in this commonwealth, that do not see with us as yet, shall find we shall be as peaceable as they be.

"In the first place, I must refer you to a draught of grievances drawn up by a committee of the people now at arms, under the signature of Daniel Gray, chairman, which is heartily approved of; some other also are here added, viz.:

"1st. The General Court, for certain obvious reasons, must be removed out of the town of Boston.

"2nd. A revision of the constitution is absolutely necessary.

"3rd. All kinds of governmental securities, now on interest, that have been bought of the original owners for two shillings, three shillings, four shillings, and the highest for six shillings and eight pence on the pound, and have received more interest than the principal cost of the speculator who purchased them, that if justice was done, we verily believe, nay, positively know, it would save this commonwealth thousands of pounds.

"4th. Let the lands belonging to this commonwealth, at the eastward, be sold at the best advantage, to pay the remainder of our domestick debt.

"5th. Let the monies arising from impost and excise be appropriated to discharge the foreign debt.

"6th. Let that act passed by the General Court last June, by a small majority of only seven, called the Supplementary Aid, for twenty-five years to come be repealed.

"7th. The total abolition of the Inferior Court of Common Pleas and General Sessions of the Peace.

"8th. Deputy Sheriffs totally set aside, as a useless set of officers in the community, and Constables, who are really necessary, be empowered to do the duty, by which means a large swarm of lawyers will be banished from their wonted haunts, who have been more damage to the people at large, especially the common farmers, than the savage beasts of prey.

"To this I boldly sign my proper name, as a hearty well-wisher to the rights of the people.

"THOMAS GROVER.

"WORCESTER, Dec. 7, 1786."

At length, on the 26th day of December, Shays, at the head of an armed mob of three hundred men, marched into the court-house at Springfield, and forcibly prevented the sitting of the court appointed to be held there.

A letter from Springfield to the Boston Chronicle, under date of the 27th of December, gives an account of this outrage, committed there the day before:

"There is a stagnation of almost every kind of business among us by reason of the tumults which are so prevalent here. Yesterday we had another visit from the mobility: about 350 men marched in hostile array, with drums beating, and took possession of the court-house, commanded by Shays, Day, and Grover, in order to prevent the sitting of the Court of Common Pleas, which by law was to have been held here at that time. This they effected, as there was no opposition on the part of the government. It was not possible for the court (as they were surrounded by an armed force and a guard placed at the door of the room in which the judges were met) to proceed to do business. They therefore informed a committee who were chosen by the insurgents to wait on them that they would not attempt to open the court. After which, about dark, the insurgents left the town."

IX.

THE ATTACK ON THE ARSENAL AT SPRINGFIELD.

This and other outrages incited the Governor and his council, in the absence of the Legislature, to adopt the most energetic measures for the restoration of order and the suppression of the rebellion, now continuing so formidable.

Says Mr. William L. Smith: "The Governor and the members of the Executive Council were capable and resolute men, and were faithful to their great trusts, but they were powerless. They did not have at their command the means of sustaining even a single regiment in the field. The emergency was finally met by some of the capitalists and business-men of Boston, who realized the danger to which their interests would be exposed by a revolution, and came forward with an offer of a loan to the State, trusting to future legislation for their reimbursement. Their offer was accepted, and there was at once a change in the condition of affairs. There was a new and wholesome activity in the executive departments. Orders were issued for the raising and equipment of four thousand five hundred men, a considerable army in that day. Public sentiment at once exhibited a more healthy tone. The wavering and doubting began to get off the fence and range themselves on the side that had troops and money, and the lukewarm and more thoughtful among the insurgents began to think of their allegiance. Shays and his council had been in deliberation over two distinct plans of operation. The more reckless of the leaders advised an attack upon Boston, for the purpose of releasing two of their number who had been arrested and were held in jail. Others advised that the attack on Boston be delayed until after the seizure of the Continental arsenal at Springfield, with its store of war material; and this last plan was the one adopted.

"The Hampshire County quota of twelve hundred men were ordered to assemble at Springfield, and Gen. Shepard was placed in command. The Eastern militia were to meet at Roxbury, whence they were to march to Worcester, and there be joined with the force raised in Worcester County. The chief command was given to Gen. Benjamin Lincoln, an accomplished officer of the Revolutionary war. Gov. Bowdoin's orders to Gen. Lincoln required him to protect the Court of Common Pleas at the January term at Worcester, and left his further movements against the insurgents to his own discretion."

The orders of the Governor to Gen. Lincoln were as follows:

BOSTON, July 19, 1787.

"SIR,—You will take command of The Militia detached in obedience to my orders of the 4th instant. The great objects to be effected are to protect the Judicial Courts, particularly those next to be holden in the County of Worcester, if the justices of the said courts should request your aid; to assist the civil magistrates in executing the laws, and in repelling or apprehending all and every such person and persons as shall, in a hostile manner, attempt or enterprise the destruction, detriment, or annoyance of this Commonwealth; and also to aid them in apprehending the disturbers of the public peace, as well as all such persons as may be named in the State warrants, that have been, or shall be, committed to any civil officer or officers, or to any other person, to execute.

"If, to these important ends, the militia already ordered out should, in your opinion, be incompetent, you will call on the Major-Generals for further and effectual aid; And, if you can rely on their attachment to government, you will, in the first instance, call on the militia in the neighborhood of your camp. I cannot minutely point out to you the particular line you shall pursue in executing these orders: But would observe in general, that if, to answer the aforesaid valuable purposes, you should judge it necessary to march a respectable force through the western counties, you will in that case do it. This would give confidence to the well affected; would aid and protect the civil officers in executing their duty, & would convince the misguided of the abilities of government, and its determination to pursue every legal and constitutional measure for restoring peace and order to the Commonwealth.

"You are to consider yourself, in all your military offensive operations, constantly as under the direction of the civil officers, saving when any armed force appears, and oppose your marching to execute these orders.

"That I may be fully acquainted with all the proceedings of the armed force under your command, and with all matters that respect the great objects to be effected, you will give me regular information by every post. And for intermediate and necessary intelligence you will order the Quartermaster-Gen'l to provide the necessary expresses.

"On these attempts to restore system and order, I wish the smiles of heaven, and that you may have an agreeable command, the most perfect success, and a speedy and safe return, and am with much esteem,

"Sir, your most obedient servant,

"JAMES BOWDOIN.

"HON. MAJOR-GENERAL LINCOLN."

We again quote from Mr. Smith:

"Gen. Shepard again anticipated the movements of Shays. Acting under the authority of the secretary of war, he took possession of the arsenal. Gen. Lincoln reached Worcester on the 22d of January, after a three days' march from Roxbury through the deep snow of midwinter. The court was opened, and proceeded with the business of the term. Order was restored at Worcester, and substantially at all points in the State east of that place. The insurgents were concentrating their strength in the western counties, and it was understood on all hands that the issue was to be tried and determined at Springfield.

"The positions of the several armed forces on the evening of January 24 were as follows: Gen. Shepard was posted at the arsenal with about one thousand men. Shays had just reached Wilbraham on his march from Rutland. A part of Lincoln's command was less than two days' march in the rear of Shays. Luke Day, an insurgent leader, was at West Springfield with about four hundred men and boys, well armed and well drilled. There was a good ice-bridge at the time, so that he was within easy reach of the arsenal. Eli Parsons, a Berkshire leader, was in the north parish of Springfield (now Chicopee) with about four hundred men. The total insurgent force was about double that of Gen. Shepard.

"The inhabitants of Springfield, except such as were within the immediate protection of Gen. Shepard, were kept in constant alarm. Respectable citizens were seized in their own houses and taken to Day's camp in West Springfield, where they were kept under guard as hostages and for purposes of retaliation. Men were not sure whether their near neighbors were friends or foes, and unprotected homes were exposed to outrage and plunder. Upon the receipt of the news that Shays had reached Wilbraham, most of the women and children who had means of conveyance fled from the town, the greater part of them going to Longmeadow.

"On his arrival at Wilbraham, Shays sent a message to Day informing him that he intended to attack the arsenal on the 25th. Day replied by letter that he could not move on that day, but would join in the attack on the 26th. Day's messenger was arrested, and his letter, instead of going to Shays, went to Gen. Shepard. On the 25th, Shays moved upon Springfield, expecting, of course, the co-operation of Day and Parsons. Even if he had received Day's letter, he could not have delayed his attack. His only chance of success was in seizing the arsenal before Gen. Lincoln could come up.

"At that time none of the buildings now standing on the arsenal grounds had been erected. There were two wooden buildings, built for barracks and for storage, on the brow of the hill looking to the north, on or near the site of the present storehouse. There was a private dwelling-house on the site of the present middle arsenal (opposite the Olivet Church). It was to this house that the dead and wounded insurgents were carried. East of that point there were no buildings except the powder-magazine, that stood in a then remote spot in the woods. Magazine Street has since been located over its site. The present main Armory square was the public training-field. There were not then any gun-shops on the arsenal grounds. If there was one in the town at the time, it was in Ferry Lane, where government gun-work was originally done in Springfield.

"When Shays left Wilbraham, on the morning of the 25th, Asaph King, a deputy-sheriff, started on horseback to give information to Gen. Shepard. He was obliged to avoid the highways, and made his way across the fields, through snow-drifts and over fences, and is said to have accomplished the distance in forty-five minutes. This was the first exact information received by Gen. Shepard of the approach of Shays, and he proceeded to make ready for his fitting reception. His men were stationed near the barracks, and his cannon were planted on the brow of the hill commanding the approach by the Boston road. A part of his force was posted in Main Street, at the point now crossed by the Boston and Albany Railroad, for the purpose of holding Day in check in case he should attempt to come to the aid of Shays. A considerable mob collected at that point, but did not attempt an attack upon the militia.

"It was toward the close of the short winter day that the insurgents were seen from the arsenal making their toilsome march through the snow on the Boston road. They were in the best of spirits. Every attempt they had hitherto made had succeeded, but it was not an unprotected court-house they were now intending to occupy. Some of them were to be dead within the next few minutes. Shays was entirely confident. Some of his old army comrades went out to meet him, and advised him to keep out of the range of Gen. Shepard's guns and abandon his treason. He received them pleasantly, told them he was sure of success, and was inclined to be jocose. He did not know his own men.

"There is a good deal of loose tradition about the affair of the 25th of January, which is entirely omitted here for the reason that it does not seem to be supported by any trustworthy contemporary evidence. There was not any battle. The only firing was on the government side, and there was but little of that. Only one shot seems to have been fired in genuine earnest, and that was followed by a panic among the insurgents and a flight. The official report of the firm but kind-hearted Gen. Shepard to the government gives us reliable history. It is as follows:

"SPRINGFIELD, January 26, 1787.

"Sir,—The unhappy time has come in which we have been obliged to shed blood. Shays, who was at the head of about twelve hundred men, marched yesterday afternoon about 4 o'clock toward the public buildings, in battle array. He marched his men in an open column by platoons. I sent several times, by one of my aids, and two other gentlemen, Capts. Baffington and Woodbridge, to him to know what he was after, or what he wanted. His reply was, He wanted barracks; barracks he would have, and stores. The answer was, He must purchase them dear, if he had them. He still proceeded on his march until he approached within two hundred and fifty yards of the arsenal. He then made a halt. I immediately sent Maj. Lyman, one of my aids, and Capt. Baffington, to inform him not to march his troops any nearer the arsenal on his peril, as I was stationed here by order of your Excellency and the secretary at war, for the defense of the public property; in case he did, I should surely fire on him and his men. A Mr. Wheeler, who appeared to be one of Shays' aids, met Mr. Lyman after he had delivered my orders in the most peremptory manner, and made answer, that that was all he wanted. Shays immediately put his troops in motion, and marched on rapidly near one hundred yards. I then ordered Maj. Stephens, who commanded the artillery, to fire upon them; he accordingly did. The two first shots he endeavored to overshoot them, in hope that they would have taken warning without firing among them, but it had no effect on them. Maj. Stephens then directed his shot through the centre of his column. The fourth or fifth shot put the whole column into the utmost confusion. Shays made an attempt to display his column, but in vain. We had one hewit, which was loaded with grape-shot, which, when fired, gave them great uneasiness. Had I been disposed to destroy them, I might have charged upon their rear and flanks with my infantry and the two field-pieces, and could have killed the greater part of his whole army within twenty-five minutes. There was not a single musket fired on either side.

"I found three men dead on the spot, and one wounded, who is since dead. One of our artillerymen, by inattention, was badly wounded. Three muskets were taken up with the dead, which were all deeply loaded. I enclose to your excellency a copy of a paper sent to me last evening. I have received no reinforcements yet, and expect to be attacked this day by their whole force combined. I am, sir, with great respect,

"WILLIAM SHEPARD.

"On the back,—By Col. Eli Parsons."

"His Excellency, JAMES BOWDWIN, Esq."

"The following is a copy of the paper inclosed in the above letter:

"HEADQUARTERS, WEST SPRINGFIELD, January 25, 1787.

"The body of the people assembled in arms, adhering to the first principles in nature, self-preservation, do, in the most peremptory manner, demand

"1. That the troops in Springfield lay down their arms.

"2. That their arms be deposited in the publick stores, under the care of the proper officers, to be returned to the owners at the termination of the present contest.

"3. That the troops return to their homes upon parole.

"Your Excellency's most obedient, humble servant,

"LUKE DAY.

"Captain Commandant of this division.

"To the commanding officer at Springfield, Jan. 25, 1787."*

With the affair at the arsenal at Springfield ended everything of importance which occurred during this uprising in the valley of the Connecticut.

On the night of the 25th, Shays retreated to "Chapin's Tavern," five miles east of Springfield. The next day he marched to Chicopee, and joined the force of Parsons, two hundred of his men deserting by the way.

On the 27th, Gen. Lincoln's army, consisting of three regiments of infantry, a body of cavalry, and three companies of artillery, entered Springfield. After an hour's rest, Lincoln's infantry and artillery crossed the river to the west side in quest of Day and his party. At the same time Gen. Shepard with his force moved up the east bank, and the cavalry went up the river on the ice to prevent the junction of Day and Shays. The insurgents manifested no further disposition to fight. The pursuit was kept up with vigor until the insurgents were all dispersed and their leaders captured or driven from the State.

We again quote from Mr. Smith's paper:

"John Hancock, who was the first Governor under the State constitution, was again elected in 1787. It is no unfavorable criticism of the administration that immediately preceded him to say that his election was generally received as a promise of the removal of the prevailing discontent. The armed insurrection had been suppressed, but the work of bringing the people of the State to a cordial and unanimous support of the constitution and laws remained to be performed. The new Governor assumed this difficult undertaking, and accomplished it. John Hancock did not believe in the religion of hate. Nine of the leading insurgents, who were convicted of treason and sentenced to death, were pardoned, some of them at the foot of the gallows, the only condition being that they should never hold any office, civil or military, within the commonwealth. A large number of persons convicted of seditious offenses were pardoned unconditionally. A member of the Legislature, who was convicted of treasonable practices, was sentenced to stand for an hour on the gallows, with a rope around his neck, and to pay a fine of fifty pounds. This seems to have been the only sentence carried into execution. It would be a good plan, perhaps, to revive this mode of dealing with recreant legislators. Conciliatory measures were adopted by the Legislature. The sullen mutterings of the defeated insurgents gradually subsided. Commerce soon settled commercial difficulties in its own way, as it always does if unfettered by meddling legislation, and a season of prosperity ensued. The rebellion was ended at last in accordance with the grand precepts of the gospel of forgiveness and of peace. And all history tells us that rebellion is never completely conquered in any other way."

The following is a list of the men whose names will go down in history as leaders in this movement: Daniel Shays, Luke Day, Eli Parsons, Perez Hamlin, Elisha Manning, Daniel Dunham, Ebenezer Crittenden, Jacob Fox.

CHAPTER XIX.

THE WAR OF 1812-15—THE WASHINGTON BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.

I.

THE WAR OF 1812-15.

It is generally well known that the people of New England were, as a rule, opposed to the war with England of 1812-15.

* This paper, read by Mr. William L. Smith, before the Connecticut Valley Historical Society, was published in the Springfield Republican of Oct. 2, 1877.

The declaration of hostilities by the United States occurred on the 18th of June, 1812, and the feeling was so intense among the people of the three river counties that preliminary meetings were held and delegates chosen, within a few days succeeding the declaration, to attend a convention to be held at Northampton on the 14th day of July following.

On the day appointed eighty-eight delegates from fifty-seven towns of the three counties assembled at the court-house in Northampton. Upon calling the roll the following-named delegates answered to their names and took their seats in the convention:

Springfield.—John Hooker, Chauncey Brewer, Justin Lombard, Joseph Pease.

Northampton.—Joseph Lyman, Isaac Clark, Elijah H. Mills, Lewis Strong.

Hadley.—Charles Phelps, Samuel Porter.

Hatfield.—Isaac Maltby, Israel Billings.

Deerfield.—Ephraim Williams, Epaphras Hoyt, Pliny Arms.

Sunderland.—Simeon Ballard.

Blandford.—Jedediah Smith, Alanson Knox.

Pelham.—Isaac Abercrombie.

Pulmer.—Amos Hamilton, Alpheus Converse.

Southampton.—Luther Edwards, John Lyman.

South Hadley.—Mark Doolittle, Bezaleel Alvord.

Greenfield.—Richard E. Newcomb, Samuel Wells.

New Salem.—Samuel C. Allen.

Montague.—Henry Wells.

Granville.—David Curtis.

Greenwich.—Robert Field, Joseph Williams.

Amherst.—Ebenezer Mattoon, Samuel F. Dickinson, Simeon Strong.

Monson.—Deodatus Dutton.

Belchertown.—Joseph Bridgman, Justus Forward, Phineas Blair.

Colerain.—John Drury.

Shutesbury.—William Ward.

Ware.—William Paige.

Chesterfield.—Asa White, Spencer Phelps.

South Brimfield.—Darius Munger.

Warwick.—Caleb Mayo.

Wilbraham.—Robert Sessions, Aaron Woodward.

Ashfield.—Henry Bassett.

Charlemont.—Stephen Bafes.

Chester.—Asahel Wright.

Conway.—Elisha Billings, John Bannister.

Granby.—Eli Dickinson, Levi Smith.

Shelburne.—William Wells.

Worthington.—Ezra Starkweather, Jonathan Brewster.

Whately.—Phineas Frary.

Williamsburg.—William Bodman, John Wells.

Norwich.—William Fobes, Jesse Joy.

Westhampton.—Sylvester Judd, Aaron Fisher, Jonathan Clarke.

Buckland.—Levi White.

Cummington.—Peter Bryant.

Montgomery.—Edward Taylor.

Wendell.—Joshua Green.

Goshen.—Oliver Taylor.

Middlefield.—Erastus Ingham.

Rome.—John Wells.

Heath.—Roger Leavitt.

Hawley.—Thomas Longley.

Gill.—Gilbert Stacey.

Plainfield.—Nehemiah Joy.

Easthampton.—Thaddeus Clapp.

Holland.—John Polley.

Tolland.—Eleazer Slocomb.

The irregular delegates were Rufus Stratton, from Northfield; Hezekiah Newcomb and Caleb Chapin, from Bernardston; Pelatiah Bliss and Timothy Burbank, from West Springfield; and Rufus Graves, from Leverett.

The convention was organized by choosing John Hooker, of Springfield, President, and Isaac C. Bates, of Northampton, Secretary.

An executive committee was appointed, which drew up a memorial to be presented to the President of the United States praying that commissioners might be appointed for the speedy negotiation of terms of peace with Great Britain, which was unanimously adopted. The committee also reported in favor of a State convention, and recommended that four delegates be appointed from each county to attend the same, provided other portions of the Commonwealth coincided with them in the call; and also, that committees of correspondence and safety be appointed in each county and town throughout the State; which recommendations were adopted.

But notwithstanding their determined opposition to the war on general principles, the people of Connecticut Valley were not found wanting in ardor or patriotism when their services were required to defend the country. Caleb Strong was at that time Governor of the State.

Upon the first overthrow of Napoleon I. and his banishment to the island of Elba, Great Britain concentrated her powerful navy against the American States, and blockaded, at least theoretically, the whole coast of the Atlantic, from the Bay of Fundy to the southern cape of Florida. Occasionally troops were landed, and on the 1st of September, 1814, a body of them took possession of Castine, a port on the Penobscot River, without opposition. The region erected into the State of Maine in 1820 was then a province under the jurisdiction of Massachusetts, and this aggressive proceeding ended at once all political discussions and opposition to the war, and united the people unanimously against the common enemy.

Governor Strong, apprehensive of a descent upon the coast of Massachusetts, immediately issued a proclamation calling out the militia, who were ordered to assemble forthwith at Boston. Western Massachusetts responded nobly. A regiment of infantry was raised in the northern part of old Hampshire County, and marched under command of Col. Thomas Longley, of Hawley; another was recruited in the southern portion of the county, and placed under the command of Col. Enos Foote, of Southwick; and a regiment of artillery was made up in the Connecticut Valley, under the command of Col. William Edwards.

In those days there were no telegraphic lines or railways, and all information was conveyed by post-riders, or the slower method of the old-time stage-coach; and the troops, when raised and prepared for the field, were compelled to march over the hundred miles which intervened between the Connecticut River and the sea-board, instead of being whirled in the space of three or four hours on board a flying train to their destination.

Most of these troops were probably drafted or volunteer members of the State militia, and hurried to Boston in the ordinary dress of citizens,—the infantry armed with old "flint-lock" muskets, many of which had done good service against this self-same enemy nearly forty years before at Bunker Hill. One company of the artillery regiment was from Springfield, commanded by Capt. Quartus Stebbins; one from Northampton, under Capt. Asahel Strong; one from Belchertown, under Capt. Bridgman; and one from Northfield and vicinity, under Capt. Mattoon. An entire regiment of infantry was also raised in Berkshire County.

The commander-in-chief of this force was Maj.-Gen. Whiton, of New Marlborough. Among the staff-officers were Col. Henry Dwight, of Stockbridge, and Col. Sloane, of Lanesborough. Jacob Bliss, of Springfield, commanded a brigade. The force commenced its march for Boston about the middle of October. The Springfield artillery company left on Sunday morning, after a prayer and benediction by Rev. Dr. Osgood.

On their arrival at Boston, the troops from the Connecticut Valley were cantoned at Dorchester, and the Berkshire regiment at Cambridgeport.

After a sojourn of nearly six weeks in camp, during which time they had a very pleasant experience and were reviewed by the Governor, apprehensions of a descent by the British troops having ceased, they were discharged from further duty, and returned to their homes without having the satisfaction of firing a gun at the enemy. This little episode in the military history of Massachusetts was subsequently known as "Governor Strong's War."

The Hartford Convention met on the 15th of the following December, and consisted of twenty-six delegates from the New England States, of whom twelve were from Massachusetts. Two of these were from Western Massachusetts,—George Bliss, of Springfield, and Joseph Lyman, of Northampton.

The definitive treaty of peace concluded in the early part of the following year (1815) was hailed with the utmost satisfaction by the people of New England, and from henceforth her development in every branch of human knowledge and industry was rapid and permanent.

The Mexican war of 1846-47 was generally opposed by the better classes of New England; but notwithstanding this feeling a regiment was raised and forwarded to the seat of war, where many of its officers and men laid down their lives, among whom was the gallant Col. Truman B. Ransom, of Vermont, who fell in the attack upon the castle of Chapultepec.*

II.

THE WASHINGTON BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.

The Washington Benevolent Society was a secret political organization, which, early in the present century, spread itself over the Northern and Eastern States. This society was formed to further the interests of the Federal party. It sought to bring back by this means the country to what the Federalists thought were sounder views on the questions of a strong central government as opposed to State sovereignty. In a word, it advocated the views of Hamilton and Adams in opposition to Jefferson and the Democratic party. The ostensible object of the society was benevolence. But the candidate, upon his initiation into its secret workings, soon discovered that it really had more to do with politics than with charity.

There was a society at Northampton, and probably societies at other places in Hampshire and Franklin Counties.

We copy the following papers from the book of records of the county society at Springfield. From these papers the reader will be able to gather the objects and aims of the society:

"WASHINGTON BENEVOLENT SOCIETY OF THE COUNTY OF HAMPDEN & COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

"Many persons being desirous that the Washington Benevolent Society should be instituted at Springfield, in the county of Hampshire, by the name of the Washington Benevolent Society of the County of Hampden, the following persons, viz., John Hooker, Esq., Thomas Dwight, Esq., Jonathan Dwight, Jr., Esq., Edward Pynchon, Esq., Moses Bliss, Jr., James Wells, and Edward Bliss, members of the said Society established at Northampton in the County of Hampshire, having obtained the constitution of said society at Northampton, adopted the same as the constitution of said Society in the County of Hampden; and having met at the Dwelling-House of Eleazar Williams in Springfield, on the twenty-seventh day of April, in the year of our Lord Eighteen Hundred and Twelve, and having chosen John Hooker, Esq., President pro tempore, the following persons were proposed for admission, viz., Doct. William Sheldon, Oliver B. Morris, Esq., Daniel Bontecou, Edmund Dwight, Doct. Samuel Kingsberry, Samuel Orne, Amasa Parsons, Jonathan Packard, Henry Bates, and John Howard, and being balloted for, were elected members, and were then admitted and initiated into said Society according to the Constitution.

* This officer was the father of Gen. T. E. G. Ransom, who died at Rome, Ga., in October, 1864, while in command of the 17th Army Corps.

"CONSTITUTION OF THE WASHINGTON BENEVOLENT SOCIETY OF THE COUNTY OF HAMPDEN.

"Considering that the wisdom and experience of ages have sanctioned the fact that public virtue, founded in the integrity, discernment, magnanimity, and good faith of the individuals composing the community, is the only sure basis of national honor, prosperity, and glory;

"Considering how deeply we are interested for ourselves and for our posterity in the welfare of our country, and, consequently, in the permanence and prosperity of our Government;

"Considering that a foundation for national glory laid deep and secured in the affections and virtuous principles of the people most certainly insures the performance of those offices of charity, kindness, and brotherly affection which so well become members of one great family in a state necessarily exposed to the infirmities and sufferings of humanity and all the vicissitudes of mortal life; being convinced that associations founded on humane and benevolent principles, proposing the highest model of human excellence for their imitation,—yet inimitable because human,—embracing the inexperience of youth and the wisdom of gray hairs, and inviting to a free interchange of opinion, but carefully guarding against the influence of passion, prejudice, or vice,—cannot fail of affording one of the surest methods of inculcating pure and correct doctrines, of promoting good morals and social affection, of essentially advancing the good of the community, and guarding against the evils which threaten it, especially in times of public danger and distress,—

"We, whose names are here underwritten, do associate together for the purpose above expressed, and we adopt the following articles as the Constitution by which we will be regulated and governed:

"FIRST.—The Society shall be denominated the Washington Benevolent Society of the County of Hampden.

"SECOND.—The officers of the Society shall consist of a President, three Vice-Presidents, a Secretary, Treasurer, four Stewards, a Standing Committee of ten persons, a Doorkeeper, and an Assistant Doorkeeper, all which officers (when the Society shall be permanently organized) shall hold their offices during the period of one year, and shall be elected annually, at such times as the Society shall appoint. If a vacancy happen it may be filled at the next regular meeting of the Society.

"THIRD.—The Society shall hold regular meetings on the first Tuesday of every month, and may adjourn from time to time at the discretion of every meeting.

"The President, or in his absence the oldest Vice-President, or in the absence of the Vice-Presidents a President elected for the purpose, shall preside.

"FOURTH.—The Secretary shall keep the books and papers, and shall record such proceedings as the President shall direct.

"FIFTH.—The Stewards shall provide a place of meeting for the Society, procure necessary accommodations, distribute and collect ballots, assist in keeping order, and be the acting officers of the Society under the direction of the Acting President, and their accounts of disbursement shall be paid by the Treasurer.

"SIXTH.—The Standing Committee shall distribute the benevolent donations of the Society, recommend persons proposed as members, and attend to such other duties as the Society shall direct. No benevolent donations shall exceed the sum of five dollars to any one person in one month without the consent of the Society first obtained. Report shall be made to the Society every three months what donations have been made, and to what persons; and the Committee shall have power to draw on the Treasurer for such sums as they shall have expended.

"SEVENTH.—The Treasurer shall hold the funds of the Society, collect initiation fees and dues of the members, and report every three months the state of the Funds.

"EIGHTH.—Every member of this Society shall, on his being initiated, pay the sum of one dollar, and then afterward he shall pay every three months twenty-five cents so long as he shall continue a member of the Society.

"NINTH.—Honorary members may be admitted on such terms as the Society shall direct.

"TENTH.—Persons proposed as members must be recommended by three or more of the Standing Committee at a regular meeting of the Society, and balloted for, at the same or next meeting of the Society, by black and white balls. The President shall examine the ballots and declare whether the candidate is admitted. Two-thirds of the members present voting in favor of the candidate, he shall be admitted, otherwise he shall not be admitted. No person shall be balloted for unless fifteen members are present.

"ELEVENTH.—The President shall address the Candidate when initiated, particularly recommending the necessity of morality, benevolence, sociability, and brotherly love. The forms of initiation shall be signed by the President and certified by the Secretary. The President shall keep a copy for his own use, and deliver the same to his successor in office for the use of the Acting President.

"TWELFTH.—The Society shall have power to make such By-Laws as they shall think necessary, but no part of this Constitution or the By-Laws shall be altered without the consent of the majority of the members of the Society.

"SPRINGFIELD, April 27th, 1812."

INITIATION SERVICE.

After being balloted for and admitted the president addressed the candidates as follows:

"GENTLEMEN: You have been balloted for and admitted members of the Washington Benevolent Society, established in this place; but before you can be entitled to all the privileges of membership it is my duty to explain to you more particularly the principles upon which this Society is founded. We believe that it is better, by inculcating sound principles of morality, sobriety, and integrity, to endeavor to guard our fellow-citizens against the distress consequent upon immorality and ignorance than to trust to alleviating them by donations in money when too late to prevent the pernicious consequences to the public. We believe that the best method of preventing distress among the citizens of any country is the institution of a government for themselves which makes provision for the security and free exercise of their inalienable rights. And such government we verily believe to be sacredly guaranteed to us by the Constitution of the United States. No system of government, however, can be so perfect but it may, if perverted and mal-administered, become ruinous and destructive to the liberties of the people. While the illustrious Washington was at the head of the administration of the Federal government, our unparalleled prosperity proved that our national affairs were conducted with purity and wisdom. Then the Constitution was strictly and sacredly regarded, and the rights and privileges of the people not only acknowledged, but constantly cherished and promoted. But during the disastrous administration of Thomas Jefferson and his successors in office our Constitution has been openly violated, public sentiment has been corrupted, virtue and talents have been proscribed, and the rights and interests of the people have been made the sport of unprincipled ambition. A government like ours cannot well be administered when individual distress becomes general. It is therefore the duty of every good citizen to use all exertions to prevent corruption, whatever specious mask it may assume, from destroying our Constitution. Having, with deep regret, observed the baneful effects produced by combinations against the morals and politics of our fellow-citizens, having marked the dangerous influence of ambitious and designing men, uniting to obtain by means of popular deception every honorable and profitable office under the government, and being convinced that very many of those who are loudest in their professions of love of the people, love of liberty and equality, have no other object than the attainment of power and the building of fortunes upon the ruin of their country, we have adopted as our motto, 'By their fruits ye shall know them.' When bad men combine good men must unite. The members of this Society have thought it necessary to associate themselves for the purpose of inculcating and maintaining the true principles of our government, and of more effectually promoting and cherishing among ourselves and our fellow-citizens friendship, benevolence, mutual confidence, and union of sentiment; to relieve the unfortunate, and to diffuse such useful information as will tend to promote the general welfare and fundamental principles of this Society.

"Gentlemen, are you willing to join a society avowing and solemnly pledged to support these principles? You will then, on your sacred honor, answer me to such questions as I shall put to you. Are you firmly attached to the Constitution of the United States? Are you willing to use your exertions to preserve and defend it against the inroads and contaminations of aristocracy, monarchy, despotism, and democracy? Will you endeavor to divest yourself of all partialities for foreign nations, more especially when such partiality will interfere with the interest of the United States? Will you use your endeavors to have the government administered upon the principles of our beloved Washington? Do you pledge your word that you will exercise your privilege as a citizen, and vote at all elections for such men as you conscientiously believe will be faithful to the Constitution and as are attached to the political principles which distinguished the glorious administration of Washington? Will you endeavor to aid and assist the members of this Society in their several lawful callings, when it will not interfere with your interest or your duty to others? Do you promise never to communicate anything said or done in this Society unless it be to a member of the same, or when compelled to do so by due process of law? To the support and practice of all these principles and things you pledge your sacred honor, in presence of all these witnesses, whom I now call on to notice the transaction."

The last meeting of this society was held on the 22d day of February, 1813. The constitution above copied was followed by the signatures of seven hundred and nineteen members.

CHAPTER XX.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS—EARLY ROADS—TURNPIKES AND TOLL-BRIDGES—FERRIES.

BY SAMUEL W. DURANT.*

I.

THE earliest roads traveled by human beings in Massachusetts—at least, since the advent of the Indian race—were no doubt simple paths or "trails," which threaded the mazes of the unbroken wilderness from one settlement to another. The savages always traveled in a single line, one behind the other, and their trails were well defined, and in places so worn down into the soil as to have remained for many years after their dusky travelers had passed away.

These highways of the red man were no doubt made use of by the early English settlers for "bridle-paths," and when wheeled vehicles began to appear they were widened and cleared up to accommodate the new mode of travel.

It is well known that many of the old war-trails of the Indians were adopted by the whites, in various parts of the Union; among them the great Iroquois trail from the Hudson River to Lake Erie, and the celebrated "Nemacolin's trail" through Maryland and Pennsylvania, and, no doubt, the "Bay Path," which was one of the first important roads laid out in the province of Massachusetts Bay, followed substantially a great trail of the savages which ran from the neighborhood of Boston—or "Shawmut," as it was called by the Indians—to the Long River, and thence over the mountains to the valley of the Hudson.

This famous route followed substantially the present line of the Boston and Albany Railway, striking the Quaboag River probably in Brookfield, and thence following that stream and the Chicopee River to the vicinity of Indian Orchard, when it bore away from the river and entered Springfield by what is still called the "Old Bay Road" and Bay and State Streets, passing near, and perhaps partly over, the ground now occupied by the United States armory and arsenal.

II.

TURNPIKES.

Turnpikes began to multiply quite rapidly in the years following the close of the Revolutionary war and the Shays rebellion. From the close of the latter business began to revive, and improved means of travel and communication were demanded. Macadamized and plank-roads had not been introduced into America at that date, and an improved common road, built by a chartered corporation with ample capital, was for many years considered the ne plus ultra of highways.

"The Second Massachusetts Turnpike Corporation" was chartered by the General Court on the 8th of March, 1797, for the purpose of constructing an improved road from the west line of Charlemont, then in Hampshire County, to the west foot of Hoosac Mountain, in the town of Adams, in Berkshire County. The charter was granted to Asaph White, Jesse King, and their associates.

On the 9th of March, 1797, the Third Massachusetts Turnpike Corporation was chartered to build a turnpike from the east side of Roberts' Hill, in Northampton, to the east line of Pittsfield, and passing through Westhampton, Chesterfield, Worthington, Peru (then Partridgefield), and Dalton. The principal members of this company were Jonah Brewster, Elisha Brewster, Jonathan Brewster, Samuel Buffington, and Tristram Browning.

According to Dr. Holland, there was no Fourth Massachusetts Turnpike Company chartered; but the Williamstown Turnpike Company properly occupied its place. This was organized on the 1st of March, 1799, for the purpose of building and keeping in repair a road from the west side of Hoosac Mountain, commencing at the termination of the road of the Second corporation, in Adams, and thence running through the towns of Adams and Williamstown to the line of Petersburg, Rensselaer Co., N. Y.

The Fifth corporation was chartered on the 1st of March, 1799, for the building of a road from Northfield, through Warwick and Orange, to Athol, in Worcester County, and also from Greenfield, through Montague and the unimproved lands, to Athol, where the two roads were to be united and proceed through Templeton, Gardner, Westminster, and Fitchburg to Leominster.

The Sixth Massachusetts Turnpike Corporation was chartered the 22d of June, 1799, for the construction of a road from the east line of Amherst to Worcester, passing through the towns of Pelham, Greenwich, Hardwick, New Braintree, Oakham, Rutland, Holden, and Worcester, and uniting with the "great road in Shrewsbury," leading from New York to Boston. This road was to be not less than four rods in width, and the track not less than eighteen feet in the narrowest place.

* This chapter, and to the end of the General History of the Connecticut Valley, edited by Samuel W. Durant.

The Eighth Massachusetts Turnpike Corporation was chartered on the 24th of February, 1800, the principal names being those of Joseph Stebbins, James S. Dwight, and George Bliss. Their road commenced on the line between the towns of Westfield and Russell, near the Agawam River, and followed the river through portions of Blandford and Russell to a point known as Falley's Store; thence by the west branch of the river, through portions of Blandford and Chester, to the Government road, which it followed to Becket, and thence by the usual road to the Pittsfield line.

The Tenth Turnpike Corporation was chartered on the 16th of June, 1800, for the construction of a road from a point where the Farmington River crosses the line between Massachusetts and Connecticut; thence, by the side of the river, through Sandisfield, Bethlehem (now part of Otis), Becket, and Lee, to Lenox Court-House; thence over the mountain, through Richmond and Hancock, to the New York State line.

The Eleventh Turnpike Company was chartered on the 19th of June, 1801, with Ezra Marvin, Elihu Stow, and one hundred others, as incorporators, to build a road from the Connecticut line through the east parish of Granville to Blandford meeting-house, and thence, through the town street in Blandford, to Becket, in Berkshire County.

The Thirteenth corporation was chartered, June 19, 1801, to construct a road from Connecticut State line, in Granville, through that town to the northwestern part of Loudon, now included in the town of Otis.

"The Fourteenth corporation was chartered on the 11th of March, 1802, to construct a road from the west end of the Fifth turnpike, in Greenfield, through that town, Shelburne, Buckland, and Charlemont, to the eastern terminus of the Second turnpike, leading over Hoosac Mountain."

The Sixteenth corporation was chartered, Feb. 14, 1803, to construct a road from the west line of West Springfield (the portion now forming the town of Agawam), through Southwick, Granville, Tolland, and Sandisfield, to the turnpike passing through Sheffield from Hartford, Conn., to Hudson, N. Y.

The Petersham and Monson Company was chartered on the 29th of February, 1804, to build a turnpike from the Fifth turnpike, in Athol, through that town, Petersham, Dana, Greenwich, Ware, Palmer, and Monson, to connect in the latter with the road leading to Stafford, Conn.

The Springfield and Longmeadow Company was established March 7, 1804, to construct a road from the south end of Main Street, in Springfield, through Longmeadow, by a direct route, to the State line of Connecticut.

The Williamsburg and Windsor Corporation was chartered on the 16th of March, 1805, to build a road from Williamsburg, through the towns of Goshen, Cummington, and Windsor, to the east line of Cheshire, in Berkshire County.

In addition to those mentioned in the foregoing list, there were the Belchertown and Greenwich, the Blandford and Russell, the Chester, and perhaps a few other minor corporations within old Hampshire County.

These toll-roads were as great favorites as were plank-roads in the West at a later date, though they continued much longer.

They were deservedly popular, for they afforded the best system of intercommunication and transportation then in use in the country.

They were most of them continued by their several corporations until about the year 1850, when they were transferred to the custody of the public, and have since been kept in repair by a tax.

III.

BRIDGES.

Bridges were constructed by various means,—among others by a lottery system, which was quite popular for many purposes during the latter part of the last and the beginning of the present century. On the 6th of March, 1782, a lottery was granted by the General Court to aid in building a bridge over the "Chikabee" River, on the road leading from Springfield to Hadley; and on the 1st of November of the same year another was granted, for the purpose of repairing and supporting one over the Agawam River, in West Springfield; and still another, for the benefit of a bridge over the same stream, near a place called Weller's Mills, in Westfield.

Many of the bridges over the smaller streams were built by incorporated companies and supported by a system of tolls. Occasionally small sums were granted by the county authorities to aid in their construction. In 1816 the towns of Palmer and Westfield petitioned the Court of Common Pleas (then the official county body) for assistance to construct bridges over the larger streams in those towns, and three hundred and fifty dollars was granted for a bridge over the Agawam in Westfield.

A remonstrance was presented against the petition from Palmer, but the court, after a careful hearing, granted the sum of one hundred dollars for a bridge over the Chicopee River in that town.

The task of bridging the Connecticut, or "Great River," was long considered an impossible one. The earliest bridges were built by chartered companies, and maintained by tolls fixed by law.

The earliest legislation which we find touching bridges over the larger rivers was on July 7, 1786, when Jonathan Hoit and John Williams were associated together, and authorized to construct a bridge over the Deerfield River at a place known as "Rocky Mountain."

On the 6th of March, 1792, a company, consisting of David Sexton, David Smead, Lyman Taft, Elisha Mack, and associates, was incorporated for the purpose of building a bridge over the Connecticut River between Greenfield and Montague, at Great Falls.

On the 18th of June, 1795, another company, consisting of Jonathan Leavett, Eliel Gilbert, and their associates, was chartered for the purpose of building a bridge between Montague and Greenfield.

On the 22d of June, 1797, Jonathan Hoit and David Smead were incorporated as the proprietors of the Deerfield River bridge, in the town of Deerfield, at the point known as Williams' Ferry.

On the 17th of June, 1800, the town of Westfield was authorized to build a toll-bridge over "Westfield Great River," near Park's Mills.

On the 10th of February, 1803, David Morley was authorized to erect a toll-bridge over the Agawam River, "near the late dwelling-house of Stephen Noble, deceased."

On the 22d of February in the same year a company, consisting of John Hooker, George Bliss, Joseph Williams, Samuel Fowler, Jonathan Dwight, Thomas Dwight, Justin Ely, and associates, was incorporated as proprietors of the bridge over the Connecticut between Springfield and West Springfield. The rates of toll to be charged, upon the completion of this bridge, which was the first one erected at this point, were fixed as follows:

For each foot-passenger.....	3 cents.
" " horse and rider.....	7 "
" " horse and chaise, chair, or sulky.....	16 "
" " chariot, phaeton, or other four-wheeled carriage for passengers.....	33 "
" " curicle.....	25 "
" " horse and sleigh.....	10 "
" " head neat-cattle.....	3 "
" " " sheep and swine.....	1 "

This bridge was twelve hundred and thirty-four feet long, forty feet above low water, and cost thirty-six thousand two hundred and seventy dollars. It consisted of six arches, supported by two abutments and five piers, each twenty-one feet wide and sixty-two feet long. Thirty rods above the bridge two guard-piers, to break the ice, were built. The curve of each arch was one hundred and eighty-seven feet, and the chord one hundred and eighty feet.*

It was erected in the two following years, and opened to the public on the 30th day of October, 1805, upon which occasion Rev. Joseph Lathrop preached a famous sermon from Isaiah 45: 18. A procession was formed, and a salute of seventeen guns was thrice repeated from each end of the bridge.

The following paragraph is from the Federal Spy, a newspaper of the time:

"The bridge is so constructed, with frames upon piers connected by long timbers with the arches, that the traveler passes over nearly the whole extent of it on an elevated plane, affording a view of extensive landscapes, in which are blended well-cultivated fields, plains and villages, river and meadows, lofty (?) mountains, and, indeed, a variety in the beauties of nature which is highly gratifying to the eye."

It would appear that this bridge was painted red and was a famous structure for a time; but the old men who said that a bridge "could not be built that would stand" were right, for it is recorded that the old red bridge "gave way, and fell into the water," July 19, 1814, after standing less than nine years. The fall is said to have been brought about by the passage of heavy United States army-wagons, probably loaded with ammunition.

A new bridge was constructed in the same place, and opened Oct. 1, 1816.†

This second structure was carried away by the flood of March, 1818. Five of the seven piers and abutments were demolished with the bridge, two on the west end being left.

The present covered bridge succeeded the one destroyed in 1818, but whether built the same season or at a later period we are not informed, though most probably it was finished as soon as possible.‡ It is said that the last two bridges were constructed in part by the aid of a lottery, which a prominent divine characterized as "aid from the evil one." It would not be very strange, surely, if the company, in the face of such a rapid destruction of their bridges, had resorted to all legitimate means of obtaining the necessary funds wherewith to rebuild. The present sidewalk on the south side of the bridge was added in 1878.

In 1872 commissioners were appointed by the Supreme Court to appraise the value of this bridge and fix the amount of damages which should be paid to the bridge company. The value fixed was $30,000, which sum was paid by the county, and the towns of Springfield, West Springfield, and Agawam, in the following proportions:

County of Hampden.....	$15,000
Springfield.....	10,000
West Springfield.....	4,000
Agawam.....	1,000
	$30,000

The property was then transferred to the custody of the county commissioners, and made a free bridge.

A bridge was built at Chicopee, over the Connecticut, in 1848-49, forty-three years after the erection of the Springfield bridge, and this was transferred to the county commissioners after appraisal, in 1870, at a valuation of $36,000, divided as below: County of Hampden, $18,000; Chicopee, $12,000; West Springfield, $6,000.§ All the bridges in the county are now free.

A wooden trestle-bridge was built at Sunderland about the year 1815. It was an open bridge, and was soon superseded by a covered bridge resting on stone piers and abutments, which seems not to have been very strong, for it was replaced in 1832 by a covered bridge built after what was then called the X-work style. In 1840 a portion of this was carried away, and immediately rebuilt. In 1857 two spans were again carried away, together with one of the piers, and it was rebuilt somewhat narrower than before.

In 1868 a great flood took off all but one span, and it was again rebuilt in 1870. On the 9th of December, 1876, a strong wind completely demolished it.

In 1877 the present elegant and substantial iron structure was erected by the Iron Bridge Company, of Massillon, Ohio. This bridge is eight hundred and thirty-eight feet in length, thirty-eight feet above low water-mark, with a roadway of eighteen feet, and a total height of twenty-five feet above the floor. The completion of this structure was celebrated on the 23d of November, 1877. The river is spanned at Turner's Falls by two suspension-bridges, recently erected. Altogether there are five railway-bridges over the Connecticut within the State,—one in Northfield, two between Deerfield and Montague, one at Holyoke, and one at Springfield,—mostly wooden structures.

IV.

NEW BRIDGES.

The act establishing the south end bridge, in Springfield, was passed April 15, 1873. The contracts for its construction were awarded Nov. 8, 1877. The contract for the substructure was made with John Beattie, of Leet's Island, Conn., at an aggregate cost of $48,950. The rip-rapping was done by O. S. Douglass, of Suffield, Conn., at $2.25 per yard. The contract price for the iron superstructure was $45,700, which was subsequently increased on account of additional work. This bridge is twelve hundred feet in length, having eight spans, and is twenty feet wide in the clear, and twenty-four feet high. It is of the wrought-iron truss style, with vertical ends. The total cost will not be far from $100,000, to be paid for largely by the towns of Springfield, Agawam, and Longmeadow.

The north end bridge is a noble structure, of the "open Warren girder" or riveted lattice style. It is eleven hundred and thirty-four feet long, twenty-five feet three inches high, and thirty feet wide, not including a substantial sidewalk on the south side. It has seven spans, and is twenty-two feet above the mean water-level. Work was commenced upon it in July, 1876, and it was completed Sept. 1, 1877. The filling of the east side approach cost $10,500, the substructure $68,000, and the superstructure $71,500, making the total expense $150,000. The builders consider it one of their best structures, and the finest highway-bridge in the United States.

The first bridge of the Boston and Albany Railway Company over the Connecticut was a wooden structure with a single track, erected in 1835.¶ The present fine iron structure was erected in 1872, at a total cost of $262,000. It is twelve hundred and sixty feet in length, and carries a double track. The iron-work of these three last-mentioned bridges was constructed by the Leighton Bridge and Iron Company, of Rochester, N. Y.

There is some talk of demolishing the old covered structure on Bridge Street, and erecting another iron one in its stead; but the heavy expense entailed by those already built will probably postpone this project for some time, unless some unforeseen calamity shall make it necessary. The old bridge is good for ten years, if not destroyed by fire or flood.

On the 2d of March, 1803, a company, consisting of Ebenezer Hunt, Levi Shepard, Joseph Lyman, Jr., Asabel Pomeroy, John Taylor, and others, was incorporated for the purpose of constructing a bridge over the Connecticut between Northampton and Hadley.¶

On the 8th of March, 1803, Lemuel Dickinson and seventy-four others were incorporated for the purpose of constructing a bridge over the Connecticut between Hatfield and Hadley. This bridge has not been maintained for many years.

* From the Springfield Republican of Feb. 2, 1879.

† The second bridge cost about $22,000, and the third, built in 1820, $25,000.

‡ This bridge is 1287 feet long, 28 feet above low water, and 18 feet wide.

§ This bridge has a length of 1237 feet between the abutments.

¶ The cost of this bridge was $131,612.12.

¶ See History of Northampton.

V.

FERRIES.

Ferries were the primitive means of crossing the Connecticut and all the larger streams from the first settlement down to the close of the eighteenth century, when the first important bridges were erected. There may possibly have been a few points between New Hampshire and Connecticut where the "Great River" was fordable at low water.

The smaller streams were crossed by means of fords at the shallow places, and it was many years before they were all substantially bridged.

The earliest legislation which we find touching the matter of ferries on the Connecticut at Springfield was in February, 1683, when the following appears of record:

"At the General Town-Meeting, Feby. 5, 1683, it was further voted and concluded that the Selectmen should discourse with any person for the keeping a ferry over the Great River, and, having found such a one, to make a report thereof to the Town; as also, they are to consider the most meet place where it shall be kept, and signify accordingly."

"At a town-meeting, March 14, 1683-84, The Honorable Corte having appointed this Town to consider and state a place for a country Ferry and to procure a person to attend it, and make report thereof to the Honored Corte, The Town did vote and conclude that the place should be at John Dorchester's; and he declaring himself willing to attend the Ferry, provided he may have liberty to sell drink and be freed from military training; and, to encourage him, the Town did vote and conclude him to have liberty to take nine pence per horse and man of our own Inhabitants a time; and the said John Dorchester declaring himself contented that any of the Inhabitants use any other way or man or means to transport on the river."

The following items are also from the early town records:

"May 7, 1718.—It was also Voted, that their be levied on the Inhabitants of the Town Nine pounds for the Procuring of a free ferry for this present year, & twenty-five pounds for the year ensuing, & that the Nine pounds be raised this year. And it was also voted, that if their be notification for so much as the whole sum, that the Remainder be paid into the Town Treasury. And it is also voted, that John Worthington, & Joseph Williston, & Jos. Merrick be a Committee to see ye affair Respecting the ferry effected; & it is voted, also, that the ferry be kept at the upper wharfe.

"Jan. 31, 1727.—Voted, that the Ferry at the upper wharfe be let out for five years on the Desire of Mr. John Huggins, Dated Jan'y 31, 1727, viz., that the Town would grant him the Ferry and the whole Privilege thereof at the place called the upper Wharfe, at the great River, being the common place for the Ferry in Springfield, for the space of five years, and he will give them sixty shillings for the same yearly, every year, for the whole time, and give sufficient Bond for keeping said Ferry well the whole Time, and to begio within Twenty Days from this date or Time, and to give Bond within Twenty Days to the Town Treasurer and his Suckcessor, the which Bond is to be of the sum of one hundred pounds. At this meeting the said Desire of the said John Huggins was granted.

"March 12, 1728.—Also to consider and settle the Ferry at Agawam, & with reference to the said ferry, The following vote was voted, viz., that there be a Ferry settled at the mouth of Agawam River, to cross bothe the great River and said Agawam River, and that the present Selectmen be appointed to agree and settle a ferryman for that purpose.

"A Town Ferry was established at the middle wharfe by Vote, May 15, 1749. Voted, that Josiah Dwight, Daniel Parsons, George Pynchon, Jacob White may have the liberty to set up a Vessell at the middle wharfe in said town."*

At the August term of 1814, Amasa Parsons was licensed to keep the "upper ferry," which was probably located at the point where the upper bridge now crosses. The following were the rates of toll fixed by the court for all the ferries on the Connecticut River within the county of Hampden:

Foot-passenger.....	3	cents.
Man and horse.....	6	"
Horse and chaise or sulky.....	12½	"
One-horse wagon and passengers.....	12½	"
Coachee, coach, or phaeton.....	25	"
Four-horse carriage with passengers.....	30	"
One-horse wagon or cart.....	10	"
Two-horse wagon or cart.....	16	"
The same with more than two beasts.....	20	"
The same with more than five beasts.....	30	"
Six-horse carriage.....	35	"

* See histories of the river-towns for interesting items in this connection.

Neat cattle, each.....	3	cents.
Horse or mule without rider.....	3	"
Sheep and swine, each.....	1	"

In the same year Ruel Warriner was licensed to keep the lower ferry. In 1831, Hiram Jones was licensed to keep a ferry over the Connecticut River at Chicopee for two years.

Benjamin Ashley is said to have been the first to put a steam ferry in operation on the Connecticut River. When the bridge was erected at Cabotville (now Chicopee), he sold to the company boat and franchise for thirteen hundred and fifty dollars. The ferry between Springfield and Agawam was run by steam.

CHAPTER XXI.

INTERNAL NAVIGATION—IMPROVEMENT OF CONNECTICUT RIVER.

I.

CANALS.

FROM the first settlement of the valley down to the close of the Shays rebellion the means of transportation in Western Massachusetts had been very limited, and the necessity of better facilities began to be apparent as the country, which had been exhausted by the long period of war and disturbance, slowly emerged from its lethargic condition and took a new departure on the road to prosperity.

One of the earliest and most important enterprises in the country was the improvement of the navigation of the Connecticut River. The first movement in this direction was the construction of a canal around the falls at South Hadley and at Turner's Falls, in the town of Montague.

Petitions were drawn up and presented to the Legislature, and on the 23d of February, 1792, that body passed "An Act incorporating the Hon. John Worthington, Esquire, and others therein named,—for the purpose of rendering Connecticut River passable for boats and other things from the mouth of Chicopee River northward through this Commonwealth,—by the name of the Proprietors of the Locks and Canals on Connecticut River." The individuals named in this act were John Worthington, Samuel Lyman, Jonathan Dwight, John Hooker, and William Smith, of Springfield; Caleb Strong, Robert Breck, Samuel Henshaw, Ebenezer Lane, Ebenezer Hunt, Benjamin Prescott, and Levi Shepard, of Northampton; Theodore Sedgwick, of Stockbridge; David Sexton and John Williams, of Deerfield; Samuel Fowler, of Westfield; Justin Ely, of West Springfield; Dwight Foster, of Brookfield; Simeon Strong, of Amherst; and William Moore.

Work was commenced at South Hadley as soon as practicable after the act of incorporation, under the superintendence of Benjamin Prescott, of Northampton, as engineer. Mr. Prescott was subsequently superintendent of the United States armory at Springfield.

This is believed to have been the first work of the kind attempted in the United States, though the "Western Inland Lock Navigation Company" was incorporated on the 30th of March, 1792, for the improvement of the Mohawk River and Wood Creek, in the State of New York, and the Middlesex Canal Company, in Eastern Massachusetts, was incorporated in 1793. At all events, Mr. Prescott had no precedent in this country as a guide to his operations.

On the 25th of February, 1793, the company, by an act of the Legislature, was empowered to assess the proprietors in such amounts as were necessary for the work, and in case such assessments were not paid to sell the shares of delinquents. The shares were also made transferable, and established as personal estate.

The enterprise had not progressed very far before it was found that the cost had been greatly underestimated, and, money being very scarce, the aspect of the company's affairs wore anything but a pleasant look. The necessary funds were not forthcoming, and, as a last resort, an agent was dispatched to Holland—then, perhaps, the foremost money-power in Christendom—to enlist the capitalists in the enterprise. He succeeded in disposing of considerable stock, and returned with the means thus obtained.

The capacity of the locks, as required by the act of incorporation, was to be equal to the passage of boats or rafts twenty feet wide and sixty feet long. This it was soon found would involve a heavier outlay than was deemed advisable, and accordingly a supplementary act was obtained at the session of June, 1793, permitting the company to reduce their capacity to the accommodation of boats of forty feet in length and twenty in width.

Even with this modification of the work, it was soon found that the works at South Hadley would be all that a single corporation could manage successfully, and accordingly, on the 27th of February, 1794, another act was passed for the purpose of dividing the interests in the upper and lower canals. It was enacted that the Proprietors of the latter should remain a corporation, and that Samuel Henshaw and Benjamin Prescott, of Northampton, and Jonathan Dwight, of Springfield, and their associates, should be a distinct corporation, by the name of "The Proprietors of the Upper Locks and Canals on Connecticut River," vested with all the powers pertaining to corporations. The number of shares in this new enterprise was 504.

The lower canal and locks were the first completed. The canal was two and a half miles in length, and was sunk for a good portion of the distance in the red-sand rock. When finished, its bed was not low enough to take the water from the river, and this circumstance rendered the construction of a dam necessary. It was pushed from the head of the canal in an oblique line up the river to a point in the stream, and thence, at right angles to the current, to the eastern shore. But the work was not permitted to remain. The overflow caused by it flooded a considerable extent of the meadows above, and the people of Northampton were wrought to a wonderful pitch of excitement; and the difficulty finally culminated in the indictment of the company for the maintenance of a nuisance. The case was decided against the corporation, and all the dam, except its oblique portion near the right bank, was ordered removed by the court.

A number of Dutch capitalists who had been interested in the work, alarmed by these proceedings, sold their shares and abandoned the enterprise, and the stock soon fell into the hands of comparatively a few individuals.

The knowledge of constructing locks and machinery for the passage of boats and rafts was exceedingly crude at that date, and, though the system has long been abandoned, a brief description of it may be worthy of preservation. The following account is from Dr. Holland's "History of Western Massachusetts," and is no doubt substantially correct:

"At the point where boats were to be lowered and elevated was a long inclined plane, traversed by an immense car of the width of the canal, and of sufficient length to take in a boat or a section of a raft. At the top of this inclined plane were two large water-wheels, one on either side of the canal, which furnished, by the aid of the water of the canal, the power for elevating the car, and for balancing and controlling it in its descent. At the foot of the inclined plane the car descended into the water of the canal, becoming entirely submerged. A boat ascending the river, and passing into the canal, would be floated directly over and into the car, the brim of the latter being gauged to a water-level by its elevation aft in proportion to the inclination of the angle of the traverse-way. The boat being secure in the car, the water was let upon the water-wheels, which, by their common shaft, were attached to the car through two immense cables, and thus, winding the cables, the car was drawn up to a proper point, when the boat passed out into the canal above. The reverse of this operation, readily comprehended by the reader, transferred a boat or the section of a raft from above downward."

As business on the river increased, it became obvious that the volume of water afforded by the wing-dam was insufficient for the demand, and it was finally resolved to petition the Legislature for relief, in the shape of a lottery for the purpose of raising twenty thousand dollars, to enable the company to increase the volume of water by deepening the canal-bed four feet through its whole extent. On the 25th of February, 1802, the Legislature granted the petition, and Thomas Dwight, Justin Ely, Jonathan Dwight, Joseph Lyman, Jr., and John Williams were appointed managers of the scheme; each being bound in the sum of five thousand dollars for the faithful discharge of the trust. The grant extended to a period of four years.

The matter was duly advertised in the papers, the plan succeeded, and about the close of the year 1804 the work was completed. The engineer of this improvement was one Ariel Cooley, a man of great ingenuity and energy. Under his direction the old plan of inclined planes, water-wheels, and elevating apparatus was laid aside, and the simple lock system substituted.

Upon the completion of the improvements Mr. Cooley offered to take charge of the canal and locks, keep them in repair, survey the craft passing through, and collect the tolls for a period of fifty years, for one-fourth the amount of tolls. A contract was accordingly drawn and signed, and he entered upon his duties at once; thus relieving the corporation from nearly all care in the premises.

In 1814 he deemed it necessary, for the more perfect working of the canal, to build another dam, and the work was partially completed when the spring flood of 1815 swept it away; but during the same year he completed a new one, which stood until 1824, when it was swept away. In the mean time Mr. Cooley had died, and his administrators rebuilt the dam, which was still standing when the great dam of the Hadley Falls Company was built, about 1849; a slight ripple marking its location. These dams were indicted as nuisances at the instance of those engaged in the shad fishery, but the indictment of the first was stopped by the agreement of Mr. Cooley to build a fish-way, by which the shad could pass the obstruction.

He accomplished this work in a unique and ingenious manner, through his thorough knowledge of the habits of the fish.

Below and near the dam, on the eastern side, he constructed an oblique wing-dam, extending for some distance into the stream. This arrested the water from the main dam, producing an eddy, in which the fish could find a quiet stopping-place after passing the rapids below.

Opposite this wing-dam he cut down the main dam for the width of a few planks, making a passage through which, notwithstanding the velocity of the gushing water, the fish could dart into the pond above.

The second indictment brought on an extensive lawsuit, which employed nearly all the attorneys then living in the county on one side or the other, and resulted in the rebuilding of the fish-way. The contract entered into by the company and Mr. Cooley was eventually surrendered by his administrators, and the canal was utilized, more or less, for manufacturing purposes, until it was purchased by the Hadley Falls Company, who were empowered to build the present dam, "subject to an equitable indemnification of the fishing rights above."

The construction of the dam at Montagne was originally attempted at a point some two miles below the falls at Smead's Island, under the supervision of Capt. Elisha Mack, of Montagne, who, according to Dr. Holland, operated either as engineer for the corporation or as a contractor for the work. But the project proved impracticable, chiefly on account of the depth of water, and was abandoned after considerable labor and expense.

In connection with the experiments at this place, Dr. Holland relates an interesting incident illustrating the saying of Solomon that "there is nothing new under the sun."

"While Capt. Mack was operating at Smead's Island, an itinerant Scotchman made his appearance, who undertook to construct a sort of leathern case for the body, with a long tube attached for the purpose of respiration, and glass about the face for the use of vision.

"He succeeded in worming his way into the captain's favor, worked steadily at the curious armor, and, on a Saturday night, pronounced it complete, and appointed Monday (following) for an experimental test. After closing work he obtained the loan of Capt. Mack's gray mare, a valuable animal, for the purpose of visiting a lady, a somewhat attractive fair (one) of the times and locality. Capt. Mack conferred the favor gladly, and would have been rejoiced to see the ingenious Scotchman again; but he never did, both mare and rider mysteriously disappearing."

Capt. Mack finally succeeded in constructing a dam at Turner's Falls in 1793, which was allowed to stand one year on trial, and, contrary to many doubts, it stood the test of the spring flood. The canal was commenced in 1794, but was not completed until 1796 or 1797. It was three miles in length.

II.

SHAD AND SALMON FISHERIES.

In the early days before the construction of dams on the Connecticut, shad and salmon were exceedingly plenty, and the fisheries formed for many years a most important industry, and it is not astonishing that the people who derived so large a share of their sustenance and means of livelihood from this source should have jealously guarded their rights, and persistently fought against all attempts to obstruct the river by artificial means.

Turner's Falls, and those at South Hadley, were famous resorts for the Indians, and for ages before the advent of the English they must have sought annually these prolific sources of their food supplies.

The salmon remained in the river until some time after the construction of the dam at Montague. The first season after its construction they were very plenty at Turner's Falls, and were taken in immense numbers, as they could not pass the obstructions at that place; but their numbers declined rapidly from year to year, until about the last seen of them were a few stragglers at South Hadley Falls, about the year 1800. The following description of the mode of capturing this magnificent fish, furnished by an eye-witness, is from Dr. Holland:

"In hauling in a seine in the shad fishery they not unfrequently formed a portion of the prey, and manifested their presence by commotions well understood by the fishermen. The common seine could not withstand their powerful struggles, and the fishermen were obliged to wade out and get behind the net, and, by kicking it and striking upon the water, drive them into the shallow water near shore, where they were grasped by the skillful, and rendered powerless by sending deftly-delivered raps upon the head.

"At that time as many as two thousand shad were frequently taken at a haul.

"The shad fishery has gradually declined since, owing partly, doubtless, to the actual diminution of the number of shad entering the river, and partly to the increase in the number of gill-nets in the lower part of the river, which have become so prevalent as to operate almost as an absolute bar to their progress up the stream.

"The shad fisheries at Hadley Falls were formerly considered common property, and were participated in by all who had a taste for the business. But when the fish became scarce, and consequently enhanced in value, the owners of the lands bordering the river availed themselves of the law giving them the exclusive right of fishing thereon, and drove away the old fishermen and carried on the business themselves, thereby reaping all the benefits accruing therefrom. In the year 1853 they took out from forty thousand to fifty thousand shad, which were all disposed of at remunerative prices."

The business has, however, gradually diminished, principally in consequence of the net or "pound" fisheries at the mouth of the river, which occupy the entire channel during the season, not even being removed over Sunday,—the only chance the fish have of passing them being while a net is on shore for a few hours.

Small fisheries are at present maintained at Longmeadow, Agawam, Springfield, and South Hadley, and considerable numbers of this fine fish are still taken in their season. The entire catch is disposed of in the cities and villages of the valley, a large share being sold in the Springfield markets.

Within the past fifteen years arrangements have been made for restocking the Connecticut with several varieties of fish, among them the salmon and the delicious black bass of the Western lakes and rivers, and the latter are now taken in considerable numbers.

It is a question, however, whether the salmon can ever again be persuaded to inhabit their former home. In addition to the dams on the Connecticut and the immense amount of chemical refuse of various kinds which finds its way into the stream from the great manufacturing establishments, all the smaller streams, where they formerly swarmed in thousands, are entirely debarred from them by innumerable dams, constructed without provision for their passage.

III.

THE CONNECTICUT RIVER.

The following interesting reminiscences of the Connecticut River were furnished to the Connecticut Valley Historical Society in a series of articles by T. M. Dewey, Esq., and published in the Springfield Republican in 1872. Mr. Dewey has obligingly furnished copies for this work:

"Early Navigation of the Connecticut River.—The Connecticut River has its sources in New Hampshire and the mountainous tracts of Lower Canada or Canada East.* Its general course is south. It is navigable for vessels of considerable burden for a distance of fifty miles, to Hartford, Conn., and to Middletown, about thirty miles from the Sound, for vessels of twelve feet draft. It is the Quoncktacut of the Indians, said to signify 'Long River,' or, as it is rendered by others, the 'River of Pines.' Its western branch forms the boundary line between the United States and Canada, and the main river, dividing Vermont and New Hampshire, crosses the western part of Massachusetts, passes through the central part of Connecticut, and, after a fall of about sixteen hundred feet in its whole length of four hundred and ten miles, enters Long Island Sound in about 41° north latitude. At Middletown, Conn., it bears off considerably to the east. In its course it passes through a beautiful country and by many flourishing towns, among which may be mentioned Haverhill, Orford (particularly beautiful to me), Hanover, Walpole, and Charlestown, in New Hampshire; Windsor, Newbury, and Brattleboro', in Vermont; Greenfield, Hadley, Northampton, and Springfield, in Massachusetts; and Hartford, Middletown, and the Haddams, in Connecticut. Its width varies from one hundred and fifty feet at its entrance between Vermont and New Hampshire to four hundred feet at Orford and twelve hundred feet at Springfield. The navigation of its upper course was improved by means of locks and canals, which secure boat-navigation to the mouth of Wells River in Vermont, a distance of two hundred and fifty miles above Hartford. The falls of most celebrity are Bellows Falls, Queechee, and White River Falls, in New Hampshire and Vermont, Turner's and South Hadley Falls in Massachusetts, and Enfield Falls in Connecticut. The descent of the river between White River Falls and the foot of Enfield Falls, where it meets tide-water, is above three hundred and seventy feet.

* Now Province of Quebec.

"Since the clearing up of the forests along its banks and adjoining country the channel of the river has materially changed, and notably at the 'Ox-Bow,' at Newbury, Vt., at Old Hadley, and at Hockanum. At this last place it has within a few years cut its way directly across the neck of the bow, which shortens the distance three and one-half or four miles. At Hadley, where it takes a bend of six miles to gain only one, it has worn its way into those beautiful meadows at the 'upper side' more than its whole width, so that a well which once stood in Hadley, on the east side, is now quite a distance from the river-bank, in Hatfield, on the west side of the river!

"The canal at South Hadley Falls was made by the Hollanders, probably as early as 1790, or thereabout, and the boats were passed up and down upon an inclined plane. The locks at this place were built by Ariel Cooley about the year 1796. This inclined plane is very much of a tradition at this time, as I can find no one living who can describe it in anything like detail. The opinion of the oldest men at South Hadley Falls is that a triangular box was sunk under the boat, and, as the whole was drawn forward out of the water, the boat itself would rest level on the box as it ascended. It is supposed that the power, fixed at the upper end of the plane, was a windlass with sweeps and carried around by horses, thus winding up the rope or chain. How the boat was again launched into the canal above I have not learned.*

"In the early part of the present century, and before the locks and canals at Enfield were built, the boats used for the transportation of freight were quite small. A ten-ton boat was considered a large one at that time. These boats, bound for Springfield or above, were propelled, unless the wind was favorable for sailing, by the laborious process of poling,—a process which, with other details of river navigation, will be described in another chapter. A number of men called fallsmen kept themselves in readiness at the foot of the falls—that is, at Warehouse Point—to assist in 'poling over the falls' the boats carrying six or eight tons. The article of rum constituted quite a large proportion of the freight in those days.

"Capt. Flower, of Feeding Hills, who was master of a vessel for many years running between Hartford and Boston, would take a miscellaneous cargo to Boston in the fall of the year, and, remaining there through the winter, would return in the spring, as soon as the river opened, with a cargo of rum and mackerel! But the rum was better than it is now. Various methods were employed by the boatmen above Hartford to obtain their daily rations of rum on their trips up the river. Among others, the following was the most novel and successful: A common junk-bottle would be filled with water, and then its nozzle inserted in the bung-hole of a full barrel or hogshead of rum, whereupon the water, being of heavier specific gravity than the rum, would descend into the barrel, and the rum would consequently be forced up into the bottle. This operation was liable to be repeated until the reduced strength of the rum rendered it not only impracticable, but undesirable. The abrasion of the skin on the front of the shoulder caused by the work of 'poling' was in many cases very severe, especially in the early part of the season, and a frequent application of rum was necessary, which operated as a toughener as well as a cure; and it was generally supposed to be a judicious plan to take a little inwardly, to keep it from striking to the stomach.

"During these years of boating over Enfield Falls the 'John Cooley Boating Company' was formed, consisting of John Cooley, Hosea Day, Roderick Palmer, Henry Palmer, James Brewer, and the Messrs. Dwight of Springfield. A few years after (in 1820), Edmund and Frederick Palmer and Roderick Ashley joined the company, afterward Sylvester Day and the Messrs. Stebbins.

"In 1809, Springfield bridge was carried away by a freshet. Mr. Dwight, a large owner, fearing it would go, made it fast by means of a cable to a tree; 'but', said my informant, Mr. Adin Allen, 'I guess that didn't stop it a great while.' This was in Allen's boyhood, and, living a mile or so above the falls and seeing the bridge coming, he and his brother ventured out through the floating ice with a skiff, mounted the bridge, and busied themselves in saving the iron bolts until the roar of the falls and the screams of the people ashore admonished them that they had better be getting to land, which they did by drawing their skiff across the large pieces of floating ice just in time to escape going over the falls.

"The locks and canal at Enfield were built in 1826, and thereafter the freight-boats began to increase in size, as they were not obliged to climb the falls, till at last the capacity of some of the Springfield boats reached sixty or seventy tons. But before this time a trial of steamboating was made. A company was formed for the purpose of the navigation of the river above Hartford, and bore the name of 'The Connecticut River Valley Steamboat Company.' Its members chiefly resided in Hartford, although a few were scattered along the line of the river. Mr. Charles Stearns, of Springfield, was a member, I think; also Gen. David Culver, of Lyme, N. H., who afterward became an active partner in the boating company of 'Stockbridge, Culver & Co.,' and the inventor of a number of improvements in boating machinery. This (Connecticut River Valley Steamboat Company) was a short-lived company, operating only one season, if I am correctly informed. There is no record of its incorporation, but I learn from Col. C. H. Northam, of Hartford, that Philip Ripley, of that city, was its agent, and for one year only. They built a small-sized steamboat, which was run up the Connecticut about the year 1829, and was afterward named the 'Barnet.' The 'Barnet,' Capt. Nutt master, made its first trip up the river as far as Barnet, Vt., after which it was named. It drew a crowd of spectators from all along the river-bank. The farmer left his team, the merchant his store, the hired man shouldered his hoe and took to his heels, and even the girls and some of the mothers left their spinning-wheels and dish-pans, and cut for the river to see the first steamboat. It was a 'side-wheeler,' high pressure, with two engines of twenty-horse power each, and could make about six miles an hour up stream. I learn also that in July, 1830, Col. Clinton, son of De Witt Clinton, ran a steamboat up the Connecticut, and that on the 4th of July, 1832, Dr. Dean, of Bath, N. H., was drowned from on board the steamboat 'Adam Duncan;' also that in July, 1831, the 'John Ledyard' ran up, probably to Wells River. These boats were stern-wheelers. Upon the advent of the first-named 'Barnet,' Capt. Nutt master, a rollicking poem was written by a resident of Haverkill, commencing thus:

"This is the day that Capt. Nutt Sailed up the fair Connecticut."

But I have not been able to find the rest of the poetry.

"This was about the time that Allen began to pilot boats over Enfield Falls, and he was employed to run the 'Barnet.' One day a boat was seen coming down the river having three sails,—main and topsails and a sail above them. Its name was not known. But it seems it was only an experiment, and probably never was tried again.

"The act incorporating the 'Proprietors of the Upper Locks and Canal' (Turner's Falls) was passed in the winter of 1792. The first dam at the falls was built in 1793 by Capt. Mack, and in the course of the year following the canal was commenced. The locks were built by my grandfather, Capt. Hophni King, of Northfield, Mass. They are of sufficient size to pass boats and boxes thirteen feet wide and sixty-eight or seventy feet long. Capt. King was the first builder to 'lay out' the frame of a building by the 'square rule.' Mr. Timothy Billings, of South Deerfield, who was his apprentice, informed me that people came from great distances to see a building framed in that way. The manner of framing had, up to this time, been by the 'scribe rule.'

* See ante.

"There was in operation at this time a line of small steamers running between Springfield and Hartford, first started by James Blanchard, of this city. The first was the 'Springfield,' a side-wheel steamer; then the 'Vermont,' a stern-wheeler, built by Blanchard; then the 'Massachusetts,' 'Agawam,' and the 'Phoenix.' The captains of the boats were Peck, Mosely, and Hoyt. Capt. Peck was not exactly the same on all occasions,—at times pleasant, bland, and courteous to his passengers, then again crusty and sarcastic. Capt. Mosely was jovial, social, and gentlemanly, and the best tenor singer then in the whole valley. Capt. Hoyt was the prince of story-tellers, and always drew a crowd. Mr. Adin Allen was the pilot, and stood at his post through wind and calm, storm and shine.

"The Connecticut River has borne on its bosom so many pilgrims during the earliest settlements of this country in search of a permanent home, from Windsor, Hebron, and other towns in the State of Connecticut to the upper counties in Vermont and New Hampshire, and has become so incorporated and interwoven into our history and progress, that any incident in which it bears a prominent part should not be passed over unnoticed in our historical researches. In the spirit of this sentiment, therefore, I claim for it the honor of bearing upon its waters the first steamboat ever built in America. The justice of this claim is established by the following article, which was written by Rev. Cyrus Mann, after careful investigation of the subject, and was printed in the Boston Recorder in 1858:

"Who was the original inventor of the steamboat? The credit of the original invention of the steamboat is commonly awarded to Robert Fulton; but it is believed that it belongs primarily and chiefly to a far more obscure individual. So far as is known, the first steamboat ever seen on the waters of America was invented by Capt. Samuel Morey, of Orford, N. H. The astonishing sight of this man ascending the Connecticut River, between that place and Fairlee, in a little boat just large enough to contain himself and the rude machinery connected with the steam-boiler and a handful of wood for a fire, was witnessed by the writer in his boyhood and by others who yet survive. This was as early as 1793 or earlier, and before Fulton's name had been mentioned in connection with steam navigation. Morey had his mind set upon the steamboat, and had actually brought it into operation, although in a rude and imperfect state, at that period. He had corresponded with Prof. Silliman, of New Haven, and been encouraged by that distinguished patron of the arts and sciences. Many of the writings of this correspondence are still extant. Soon after a few successful trips in his boat on the river, Morey went with the model of it to New York, where he had frequent interviews with Messrs. Fulton and Livingston, to whom he exhibited and explained his invention. They advised to have the engine in the side or centre of the boat, instead of the bow or forepart, to which it had been assigned by Morey. That they were highly pleased with what he had exhibited is manifest from the offer made of one hundred thousand dollars if he would return home and make the alteration suggested, so as to operate favorably. They treated him with great respect and attention. Taking a friendly leave, he returned to his distant residence to make the alteration.

"Having completed the work at considerable expense of time and study, and with the help of his brother, Maj. Israel Morey, who aided in making the machinery, he repaired to New York, expecting the same cordiality which he had before experienced. But, to his surprise, he was treated with great coldness and neglect, and no further intercourse with him was desired. The secret of his invention had been fully acquired, and from subsequent developments it appeared that Fulton, in the interval of Morey's absence, had planned and formed a boat according to the model shown him, and he now desired no further communication with the originator. He even went to Orford, during the period in which the alteration was being made, to examine its progress and the prospect of success.

"In 1798, several years after Morey's boat had ascended the Connecticut River, the Legislature of New York passed an act investing Mr. Livingston with the exclusive right and privilege of navigating all kinds of boats which might be propelled by the force of fire or steam on all the waters within the territory or jurisdiction of the State of New York.

"Subsequently, Mr. Livingston entered into a contract with Fulton, by which, among other things, it was agreed that a patent should be taken in the United States in Fulton's name. In 1802 or 1803, Fulton came forward with an "experimental boat," for which he obtained a patent with the usual exclusive privileges. Thus it appears that there was ample time after his interviews with Morey for him to complete his schemes previous to their consummation. He now claimed to be the inventor of the steamboat. The patent could not be obtained without Mr. Fulton's taking an oath that the improvement was wholly his.

"Does not this look like great unfairness toward Mr. Morey? Does it not almost irresistibly convey the idea that the patentee surreptitiously seized upon the invention and turned it to his own account, taking advantage of the quiet disposition and retired position of the real inventor? In this light Morey ever after, to the day of his death, viewed the whole transaction. Living witnesses testify that he repeatedly complained of Fulton for superseding him in obtaining a patent and stealing the honor and emolument of the invention. A gentleman of unimpeachable veracity, who was with Morey some of the last years and days of his life, asserts that he most bitterly erminated Fulton for his ill-treatment in secretly depriving him of his sacred rights and privileges. Why should the dying man have done this, and persisted in it amidst the solemnities of his situation and the approaching realities of eternity, unless he knew that the truth was on his side? He was a man of veracity, in whom his friends and acquaintances had entire confidence."

"Very much of interesting detail of the early navigation of our river has passed out of remembrance of those living at the present time. Had such a society as this been formed one hundred or fifty years ago, we should doubtless have secured this detail, perfectly familiar to the men of that day, but now beyond our reach. Hence I regard the present work of this society, in resuscitating whatever incidents we can of our early history, by interviewing the aged who are yet left to us, and by examination of records and memoranda wherever they may be found, as worthy the special attention of us all.

"Boating on the Connecticut Forty Years ago.—The 'Connecticut River Valley Steamboat Company' was in full operation in 1833, when I first became acquainted with the freighting business on this river. They owned a line of boats called 'luggers,' running from Hartford to the head of navigation at Wells River, Vt., and also several stern-wheel steamboats used for towing the same. As the steamers were too large to pass through the locks and canals, the first steamer would take them, sometimes four and even six at a time, as far as Willimansett. They were then drawn over 'Willimansett' (I use the river parlance) by a strong team of oxen led by a span of horses, operated through the South Hadley locks and canal, and were taken by the next steamer above to Montague Canal; then by the next from Miller's River to the foot of Swift Water, at Hinsdale, N. H., and, I believe, in a good pitch of water, as far as Bellows Falls; and so on. Other boating companies were engaged at the same time, and carrying large amounts of goods of almost every description used in country stores from Hartford to all the principal towns in the valley, freighting down with wood, brooms, hops, staves, shingles, woodenware, and sometimes fine lumber. These companies used more convenient and serviceable boats, well rigged, with main and topsails, running-boards and cabin, with rudder and helm instead of the steering-oar.

“Commencing at the lower section, there were the ‘John Cooley Company,’ consisting of Edmund Palmer, Roderick Ashley, Sylvester Day, J. B. M. and ‘Kit’ Stebbins; and the ‘Parker-Douglass Company,’ of Stoddard Parker, George Douglass and brother, Albert Gowdy, and Horace Harmon. These two companies did the freighting for the merchants of Hampden County, each owning and running a steamer for towing their boats, and sometimes the boats of other companies, and having their headquarters at Springfield. Next above was Bardwell, Ely & Co., consisting of Josiah Bardwell, Hiram Smith, Peletiah and Joseph Ely, Broughton Alvord, Whiting Street, and David Strong; they carried for South Hadley, Northampton, and adjoining towns. Capt. Nash, who ran one boat only, for the business of Hadley and Amherst, was a veteran in the business when I commenced, and continued until boats and boating were superseded by the rail-car. On the Greenfield reach were Stockbridge, Culver & Co.,—David Stockbridge, David Culver, J. D. Crawford, and T. M. Dewey. This company struck hands with the ‘Greenfield Boating Company’ in 1837, and took the name of Stockbridge, Allen, Root & Co., Messrs. Allen and Root taking the place of Gen. Culver. They owned the steamer ‘Ariel Cooley,’ which took their boats from the head of South Hadley Canal, and winding around the smiling Hockanum and Old Hadley bends, and through the sinuosities of School-Meadow flats, landed them at the foot of Montague Canal. This run (forty miles) was generally made in twelve hours, with four boats in tow, and through the night as well as daytime, unless it was very cloudy. The steamer was a ‘stern-wheeler,’ ninety feet long and eighteen feet wide, with two high-pressure engines of twenty-horse power each. She was overhauled in 1830, her name changed to ‘Greenfield,’ and in the spring of 1840, just above Smith’s Ferry, she burst her boiler, killing Capt. Crawford, Mr. Lancy, of this city, the maker of her machinery, and Mr. Wood, the engineer.

“Above Turner’s Falls, after the collapse of the Connecticut River Valley Steamboat Company, all steamboating was given up,—the freight-boats, smaller than those at the lower sections of the river, relying on the south wind and the ‘white-ash breeze.’ J. G. Capron and Alexander ran one or two boats in connection with their store at Winchester, N. H.; Hall & Townsley, of Brattleboro’, ran two or more, and supplied the merchants of that place and vicinity, and Wentworth & Bingham those of Bellows Falls. Other individuals and companies, whose names I cannot recall, were engaged in this enterprise, and the merry boatmen’s song was heard far up the valley. Some of the ups and downs incidental to this laborious work may interest the reader.

“No department of the business of this country offered so wide scope of incident, and called into action so great a number of jolly, hard-working, determined, and unselfish men, as that of Connecticut River boating in its palmiest days. They were the stoutest, heartiest, and merriest in all the valley, and there were few towns from Hartford, Conn., to Northumberland, N. H., unrepresented. If there arose any disturbance in city or town, it was a common thing to send for a few Connecticut River boatmen, and it was soon quelled. I was engaged to teach a common district school of seventy scholars in one of the river-towns, in the winter of 1834, where the previous winter the ‘big boys’ had turned out four teachers,—some out of the door and some out of the window; and as soon as it was known that the committee had hired a boatman to teach their school, the ‘boys,’ like Captain Martin Scott’s

coon, decided that I ‘needn’t fire,—they’d come down. I had no trouble with the school. One of the young men we used to call Lee, who rejoiced in the height of six feet seven inches in his stockings, made the boys believe I had killed several ‘ugly boys’ up in Upper Cohoes! These river-men might indeed be called ‘sons of Anak,’ as they were of prodigious strength. The names of Sam Granger, Tim Richardson, Charles Thomas, Bart Douglass, Mart Coy, Sol Caswell, Cole Smith, and, last and stoutest of them all, Bill Cummins, would strike terror to all loafers, beats, or bruisers in the city of Hartford, or wherever they were known. Cummins would lift a barrel of salt with one hand by putting two fingers in the bung-hole, and set it from the bottom timbers on top of the mast-board: I have seen him do it. While in Hartford and belonging to one of the Wells River boats, he was told that a gang of twenty Irishmen had laid a plan to meet on the next night and give him a ‘mauling.’ He found Cole Smith and told him to look on, and if he thought it necessary he might lend a hand. When the gang made their appearance near Knox’s Slip, Cummins went for them, and in twenty minutes there wasn’t an Irishman in sight except five or six who were lying around loose on the ground with bloody noses and broken ribs. Smith’s services were not needed, but he never liked it in ‘Bill’ because he did all the pounding himself.

“Very few persons of the present day know anything about the method of propelling a boat of from thirty to sixty tons up the river by means of the white-ash breeze aforesaid, and it may be worth an explanation. In our river vernacular the term given to this kind of propulsion is ‘poling a boat.’ The poles used are made of the best white-ash timber, and are from twelve to twenty feet in length, according to the depth of water, and two inches or more in diameter, with a socket-spike in the lower end, and a head on the upper end for the shoulder. The bowsman selects the pole he needs,—this is, if he is an inside bowsman, a short pole, if an outside a longer one,—sets it firmly over the side near the bow of the boat, and, placing the head of the pole against his shoulder, straightens himself out along the wale of the boat, with his feet on the bow-piece, and walks along down on the timbers to the mast-board, shoving the boat ahead. If there are two or more men on each side, No. 2 takes a ‘set’ in the same way, the first one lifting his pole over No. 2, and walking back to the bow to take another ‘set,’ and so on. Sometimes, in hard water or over bars, there are five or six men on each side. This is probably the hardest work ever known to men. Men have sometimes been obliged to pole a boat from Hartford to Wells River without any aid from wind or steam, and for several days before they got toughened their bloody shoulders bore testimony to the severity of their labor. The water from Hartford to Windsor locks is what is called ‘hard water,’ as well as many other places farther up; and rest assured that a south wind or a steamboat was welcome to a boat’s crew bound up-river.

“One Sabbath morning, in the spring of 1837 or 1838, the boat of one of our oldest river-men, whose destination was Old Hadley, lay at the foot of Ferry Street, Hartford, loaded and ready for starting. The men were variously employed. Some were smoking, some washing their clothing, and some reading; but all of them were trying to ‘woo the southern breeze,’ which gave signs of immediate action. At this point the old captain came down to the river, eyeing the mare-tails in the southern sky, and told his men not to start if the wind did blow, as he was opposed to Sabbath work entirely. But as he was leaving he called ‘Moses’ aside and handed him fifty dollars, saying, ‘You may want it for toll and other expenses.’ Probably Moses knew what that meant when translated into Connecticut River English. The captain then returned to Bartlett’s Hotel, took a glass of ‘peppermint,’ called for his horse and carriage, and drove twelve miles to Windsor locks, where he found his boat and men trying to persuade Mr. Wood, the toll-gatherer, to let them through. The men were not dismissed for disobeying orders, for they had 'a glorious south wind.'

"Now go with me from Hartford up the river on one of our best cabin-boats, in a good south wind or by steam. First get under Hartford bridge; then up mast, hoist sail, and we leave Pumpkin Harbor gushingly. On Windsor flats and Scantic we stir up the sand, but the wind increases and away we go. Steady there! Windsor locks! Let off that brace; round with 'em; down sail. 'Jo, run along and get a horse ready while we operate through the locks.' And so we pass through Enfield Canal, six miles, by horse-power; operate through the guard-lock; up sail again, and, leaving behind the roar of the falls, and the still louder roar of 'Old Country' Allen, our boat goes through 'Longmeadow Reach' kiting with a 'bone in her mouth.' We pass Springfield on a close-haul, and soon reach the foot of Willimansett. Here Capt. Ingraham hitches on his big team of six oxen and two horses, with a chain one hundred feet long, and draws us through the swift canal, called 'drawing over Willimansett.' We then cross over to the foot of South Hadley Canal (now no longer a canal), operate through the locks, after paying toll to 'Uncle Si,' then through the canal, two miles, and, if the wind is strong enough, sail 'out at the head,' and on up the winding river.

"The operation of 'getting out at the head' should be described. On account of the rocky shore, the canal was begun a half-mile below the commencement of quick-water. Of course the current is swift, and in high water it sometimes used to require from fifteen to twenty men to get a boat out. This was done mainly by 'tracking.' A number of men go ashore with a long track-line hitched to the mast, and, with yokes or collars over the shoulders, trudge and clamber along, and 'haul her over,' with inside polesmen to aid. These extra men were put on at the expense of the canal corporation. In later years this hand work was avoided. A machine was invented by Harry Robinson, one of our first-class pilots, for drawing boats 'out at the head' of this canal, which did the work successfully. The boatmen called it a 'fandango.' Upon a good staunch boat were placed two upright timbers, firmly braced fore and aft, one on each side of the boat. Across these rolled the axle, with a drum for the rigging to wind upon, with floats and buckets at each end and outside of the boat. By means of timbers reaching from this axle to the stern these floats could be lowered into or raised out of the water. An inch-and-a-quarter rigging was made fast at the head of this shute, and, reeling to the fandango (some two thousand feet), was attached to the drum. Now cast off and let the floats down into the water, and the current will carry them around, winding the rigging around the drum. So away goes the majestic fandango up the stream, taking along a boat made fast to its stern, and the faster the water runs the faster will go the flotilla against it.

"But while I have been describing this machine our boat has sailed on around Hoekanum, and, with a little aid from 'white ash,' around 'Old Hadley turn,' and now, after running the gauntlet of School Meadow flats, which would puzzle an eel to do, has made the foot of Montague Canal. And so on through the canal and through Miller's upper locks, and thence plain sailing to the 'foot of swift water' at Hinsdale. Here, if the wind is not very strong, we take in a few 'swift-water-men' for twelve miles, then on to Bellows Falls, and the same over and over to Queechee and White River locks up to Wells River. This is a good week's work, but it has been done in less time. A day's work with the poles, however, would be from Hartford to Windsor locks,—with a good south wind, from Hartford to Montague Canal. Between the last-named places but little poling has been done in the latter years of boating, as steam or wind was more available.

"The down trips of these boats were a different thing. A boat loaded with wood, brooms, wooden-ware, hops, and other bulky articles was not an easy thing to handle in a wind. Pilots were necessary over the falls at Enfield and Willimansett. At the latter place Harry Robinson held this responsible position many years, and Joseph Ely was his successor. At Enfield the signal strain of 'Pilot ahoy!' was heard at short intervals through each boating season, either for boats or rafts. This call brought out Jack Burbank, Alv Allen, 'Old Country' Allen, and Capt. Burbank, Sr., who would come aboard and draw cuts for the chance. The boat was then put into trim for 'going over,' oars and poles all handy, rigging properly coiled, and every man ready for any emergency. The channel is as difficult to run as that in the St. Lawrence from Montreal to Laprairie, but the aforementioned pilots seldom touched a rock. This run of six miles was quickly made, when the pilot would sometimes get a chance to ride, but generally walked or ran back for the next boat. His fee was one dollar and a half each trip, and his was a laborious life. But they have all gone 'over the river' for the last time, except Adna Allen, formerly for twenty-one years pilot of the passenger-boats running between this city and Hartford, and who now resides in this city.

"It was a custom to 'break in' the raw hand on the passage of the freight-boats over Enfield Falls by showing him the silver mine at 'Mad Tom.' The initiate must get down close on the bow-piece to look for the silver, and when the boat pitched into 'Mad Tom,' and the water rushed over him a foot deep, he would generally retire aft and say he'd 'seen enough,' and it would require quite a number of gin-cocktails at Hartford to dry him!

"Some of the pleasantest days of my life were spent at the helm of the old steamer 'Ariel Cooley' in passing up and down between South Hadley and Greenfield,—sometimes with four or six boats in tow, sometimes with only two, the down trip being usually made without any,—as we wound around the plaicid Hoekanum of former days, before the impatient river, like many a would-be reformer of the present day, concluded to straighten things, and so cut a channel through its narrow neck,—that is, cut its throat,—with Mount Holyoke on our right, looking majestically down upon our boys who were quietly enjoying the scene, as if saying to them, 'Come up higher,' while the carpeted meadows of Northampton seemed as urgently to invite their attention to their own realm of beauty.

"This towing process was of great benefit to the men, as it gave them the leisure they so much needed to wash, to mend, and to refresh themselves, and prepare for the hard work to come, when the steamer had taken them through. In this, as in other vocations, some will be remembered by their eccentricities, some by their reticence, and others by their loquacity. I have listened till 'beyond the twal' to the anecdotes of Edmund Palmer and Bob Abbe. I have known John Sanborn to go the whole round trip from White River, Vt., without speaking, and Dick Thorpe would talk enough to make it up! Other notables were Capt. Peck, who presided with so much dignity over the passenger-steamers from this city to Hartford, and who was said to have been arrested for smuggling! This was a line of small steamers first put on by James Blanchard, then of this city. The first was the 'Springfield,' a side-wheel steamer; then the 'Vermont,' a stern-wheeler, built by Blanchard, the 'Massachusetts,' the 'Agawam,' and the 'Phenix.' The 'Massachusetts' only could come up over Enfield Falls, and many of this day can remember the sturdy form of the faithful pilot, Ad Allen, who so long guided these boats through storm and shine. Capt. Increase Mosely, too, commanded one of these boats awhile,—the best singer on Connecticut River; Capt. David Hoyt another,—the complete story-teller.

"Capt. Jonathan Kentfield was also one of the early workers on this river, and ran a line of boats on his own account for a number of years. His distinguishing characteristic was pomposity, but he was a considered a trusty and competent boatman. While he was in his best days, the body of a deceased member of Congress from Vermont was sent forward from Washington, and came from New York to Hartford by steamboat, directed to his friends in Vermont, to go by first boat up the Connecticut River. None of the up-river companies were willing to take it. Finally, one who knew the captain's weak spot (he was called 'Capt. Don't') told him that the remains of a Vermont member of Congress had been forwarded to his special care to go up by his boat. 'Very well,' said Capt. Don't. 'Boys, do you hear that? Drop down the boat to the steamboat, and take the body aboard! How the people of the city of Washington knew that I was an old and experienced boatman, God only knows. I don't!' The boatmen took it aboard, taking a frequent sniff of something warm the while, and when fairly under way by the side of the up-river steamboat, Capt. Don't called his men and said to them, 'Come aft, men, come aft, and take something to drink; dead bodies aboard,—ten or fifteen, p'haps, one sartain,—and who knows but what they died of some d—n spontaneous disease? Drink behind that hog'shead, and don't, for God's sake, let Gen. Culver see you!'

"Mr. Blanchard sold out his interest in these boats, after running them two or three years, to Sargent & Chapin, who used them in connection with their line of stages. It was a very pleasant mode of travel unless the water was low, but many a time have the passengers been obliged to jump into the water and lift the 'Phoenix' and 'Agawam' over 'Scantie.' In the new scheme for improving Connecticut River navigation, Gen. Ellis, the government engineer, is confident of securing a channel of three or three and a half feet of water over these sand-flats, by means of wing-dams running diagonally from each side of the river, bringing the water into a narrow channel, which is expected in this way to keep itself clear by forcing the continually moving sand down through this channel. I find, however, that most of the old experienced boatmen now living have little faith in it. The rest of the enterprise looks feasible, and no doubt will succeed if Congress will make the needed appropriation.

"Before closing these reminiscences I should also speak of Messrs. Abbe and Ensign, who boated so many years to Warehouse Point; King Hiram Smith, of South Hadley; Capt. Sam Nutt, of White River; Tom Dunham, of Bellows Falls; and Rufus Robinson, the most consummate waterman of the Connecticut River Valley, who performed the feat of sailing a boat loaded with a valuable cargo through to Wells River, Vt., the first time he ever went up the river beyond Turner's Falls. He also ran the 'Adam Duncan,' minus her machinery, over South Hadley Falls, and came safe ashore below. Yet, with all his skill, his life was closed by his being carried over Holyoke dam, a few years since. Capt. Granger, who had no superior on the river, recently died at the age of sixty-five. His old comrades will hold him in affectionate remembrance. We have now left among us, of the men who formerly took part in the scenes I have described, Roderick Ashley, Stoddard Parker, Albert Gowdy, Adna Allen, and Sylvester Day, who, with others I have named, are and were good and substantial men.

"Rafting on the Connecticut a Generation Ago.—The late rush of logs down the 'dark rolling Connecticut' calls to mind the various attempts, in years long gone by, to transfer lumber from the forests of Northern New Hampshire and Vermont to Hartford and Middletown, Conn. Many a lawsuit during the old boating-times has grown out of this river-driving business. Like the case of 'Bullum versus Boatum,' the lumberman would sue the farmer for stopping his logs, and the farmer would sue the lumberman for damage done to his meadows by the said logs. So they wrangled and strove, and the courts were well patronized. But this river-driving, or running logs loose, was found to be a losing business, and the most available method of transporting lumber down the Connecticut—logs, boards, clap-boards, and shingles—was by rafting, an account of which may be of interest. The rafting terms used on this river are, division, raft, box, steerage, beams, snubbers, flyers, ties, oars, lock-downs, catch-pins, cross-ties, and scull-boards. The box, being the unit, is a collection of masts or logs, made thirteen feet wide and sixty or seventy feet long. If it is made up of long timber, the box is the length of the timber, more or less, provided it is not too long to go through the locks. If of short timber, it is made by piecing out, so as to be of the requisite length. These logs are fastened by oak or ash pins, driven through the steerage-beam at each end of the box, and in case of short logs they are held by cross-ties, using lock-downs or catch-pins. Two inch-and-a-half or two-inch holes are bored in the middle of each steerage-beam and through into the logs, for oar-pins; then some smart flexible sticks or flyers are bent in to raise the oar to a proper position, and we have a 'box' of round timber. Six of these boxes, fastened together—three in width and two in length—by ties, make a division. Any number of boxes, or divisions even, fastened together in running order, is a raft. Fifty years ago this river was full of rafts during the spring run, as well as of salmon and shad. A lumber company would generally run six or eight divisions at one trip, having shanties built on some of them, wherein to cook, eat, and sleep. In my boyhood I used to listen with delight to the creak of the ponderous oar, as it swung back for its oft-recurring dip, and echoed through the quiet valley. It was the welcome precursor of a coming jubilee for the boys, who were ever ready to rush to the river-bank to see the stalwart men and hear their jolly songs; and the girls too, and men, women, and children, would watch with pleasure the grand flotilla of rafts, as, emerging into view around the bend of Sawyer's Mountain, they came along down one after another in all the grandeur of an army corps.

"One of the three or four men assigned to each division acts as pilot,—that is, he runs the division. His position is forward,—one of great responsibility; and such was the scope of the pride of the majority of these pilots that they would as soon forfeit their hard-earned summer's wages as to run a raft upon a rock or a flat. The rafts were often loaded with boards, shingles, and clap-boards. This was called 'top-loading.' Then we had 'board-rafts,' the boards being rafted into the water, and of the same length and width, and with as many courses as the nature of the water and locks would permit, drawing from one to two feet of water. When a sale was made of a box of boards, the next and most disagreeable task was to 'draw' them. One man would stand with a broom and swash them off, while the rest would carry them ashore,—about the hardest work a mortal man was ever called upon to do; and, I must add, it requires very nearly as much new rum to draw a box of boards handsomely as would float the box! On reaching the vicinity of the locks the second divisions are 'snubbed,'—i.e., made fast ashore. The process of snubbing a raft is laborious, difficult, and dangerous. The rigging, which is heavy, must be handled in a hurry, and just right. The strength and velocity of movement of the ponderous body of lumber admits of no false motions. If it is brought up too suddenly, the rigging parts or the raft is torn to pieces; if not soon enough, the rigging runs out, and away goes the raft; another trial is to be made at the next available tree. A man who can snub a raft handsomely in high water must have a head exactly level, and a body made up mainly of steel springs and india-rubber. Now, to operate through the locks, cast off the ties and shove in one box at a time, stationing one man below to re-arrange and tie the boxes together as they come through. This is the process over and over at White River, Quechee, Bellows Falls, Miller's River, Turner's Falls, South Hadley, and at Enfield Falls and Swift Water, although at the two last named a whole division could go over in high water. Generally, however, at Enfield only one or two boxes could be run at a time, and this, with the freight-boats, gave the Allens and the Burbanks, the pilots, all they could do during the rafting season.

"I call to mind a few of the laughable, and peradventure startling, incidents which served in those days to give humanity a jog and beguile some of the tedious hours. There was a little man, by the name of Jarve Adams, who had risen to the dignity of ferryman at Thompsonville,—that is, the head of Enfield Falls. One pleasant day Jarve found the rafts encroaching upon his ferry-rights,—that is to say, as they lay along-shore waiting the action of the pilots, they had been allowed to drop down a little too far, in the estimation of the doughty ferryman; and he, being a man of immense consequence according to his own reckoning, uttered many large words, accompanied with a number of quite respectable physical demonstrations. One of the big Vermonters,—I think it was Steve Ames,—having listened to his fulminations till he was tired of it, told him that he ran something of a risk in coming on board the rafts; that he (Ames) 'sometimes had fits,' and when he did he clutched hold of anything within his reach, and would as likely as not walk right into the river, so he must look out. This squelched him for a day or so, but he soon got his 'dander up' again, and, forgetting about the fits, came aboard and began to call down vengeance on all the raftsmen between there and 'Fifteen-Mile Falls.' Whereupon Ames, a six-foot-and-four-incher, telling Jarve his fit was coming on, grabbed him and walked straight into the river, wading out beyond his struggling victim's depth, and sousing him vigorously, only letting him up to breathe, and telling him all the while he couldn't help it, and 'I told you so,' till poor Jarve was nearly exhausted and begged piteously to be let off. After punishing him as much as he thought was right he allowed him to go ashore, cautioning him next time to look out for 'them fits.' The roars of laughter raised at Jarve's expense could be heard above the roar of the falls. Ad Allen was there and saw the fun, and from him and Mr. Elwell, our artist, I got the story.

"One day Capron and Alexander had a lot of boxes lying at the head. Capron and 'Old Country' took a couple of them and started over the falls. Just as they entered on the upper falls the forward tie broke, and away they went, spreading and swinging around, taking off the other tie in less time than I am writing it; and the two were thenceforth separate, each man going over the surging waters on his own hook.

"Old Country.—'Point her ashore, Capron!'

"Capron.—'Go to thunder! I can run her over.'

"Country.—'Can ye? Well, you've got to go about right or you'll fetch up on Leonard.'

"Capron.—'Tell 'em I'm a-coming.'

"It was said by a boatman who was coming up through the canal that he saw some one running a box of lumber through all manner of channels, and he was not sure but he made the attempt once, at least, to scull it over the falls, but that was not generally believed. It might have been, however, that he ran around the island once or twice; and it was said he was last seen pointing her diagonally with the stream, with a view of giving her sufficient headway to put over into the canal, but I never believed it. At any rate, he landed his box safe and sound at the foot of the falls, which was considered in those days 'right smart.' Whether it was with him as with many others we read about, that the — (old gentleman) 'always keeps his own,' I shall not venture to say.

"It is impossible for me to recall the names of those ancient lumbermen, nor is it necessary for the purposes of this paper. But I desire to note here and now those I do remember, in honor of the days of Auld Lang Syne, all of whom were owners or captains.

"Up Country.—Ebenezer L. Carlton, James Hutchins, Sullivan Hutchins, Deacon Gilchrist, Samuel Hutchins, Josiah Wilson, Nahum Wilson, Jonathan Wilson, Abiel Deming, Daniel Holt, Moses Chase, Timothy Morse, Wyrarn Morse, Stephen Morse, Jacob Morse, Charles Scott, Cyrus Scott, Jared Wells, Horace Wells, Hiram Wells, Windsor Cobleigh, and William Abbott.

"Down Country.—Stratton, Solomon Spencer, Silas Burnham and sons, S. F. Dudley, William Dudley, George W. Potter, B. F. Savage, and Daniel Burnham.

"Stephen Morse,—or rather 'Steve,' as he was better known,—was one of those queer compounds of music, mirth, and metaphysics, of logic, labor, language, and loquacity, intermixed with a goodly proportion of the social as well as the vocal element, which is sure to fix itself permanently in one's memory. Those who have heard him ring out the old song of 'The Sea, the Sea, the Open Sea,' on the soft evening air, as they floated by, while every man sat upon his oar, and not a ripple on the stream, while gentle Luna looked down with approval, will never forget how it echoed and re-echoed among the grand old mountains and through the groves and vales. And now I think of it, and apropos to this rush of logs down the river, Morse had a number of divisions of logs lying in the pond above Montague Canal. On inquiry he found it would cost him eight hundred dollars to run them through the canal. This he thought was a gouge game, and gave out word that within the next twenty-four hours every stick of that lumber would be turned loose over Turner's Falls. Hearing of this, and knowing the sort of a man he had to deal with, the agent went to see him, and, fearing he should lose the toll on that lumber, softened down to five hundred dollars. Morse said, 'Mr. Thayer, I'll give you just two hundred dollars to put that lumber through. Not one cent more.' The lumber went through the canal on the eve of the Sabbath-day. While this lot of lumber lay in the canal, near the lower locks, the men of these and other rafts lying around loose and idle and enjoying a quiet time, Morse, according to a notice which had been given out, took the family Bible from the hotel upon his shoulder and, followed by all these men and also by the citizens of the place, wended his way to the school-house, and after the usual preliminaries took his text and delivered an acceptable Baptist sermon, every way proper and appropriate, and none the worse for coming from inside of a blue frock. A generous contribution was taken up on the spot, which the preacher declined, but requested that it be given to the poor. Mr. Henry, the hotel-keeper at that place, not to be outdone by 'Steve,' opened his book and squared the account against him and his men. The next night was 'flip night.'

"It will never do in these reminiscences to omit the name of 'Uncle Bill Russell,' the long-time toll-gatherer of the Montague Locks and Canal Company; yet I will not attempt to describe him, save by these four adjectives,—rough, honest, eccentric, faithful. One incident will show. Capt. Spencer had gone through the locks with a lot of lumber, and went back to settle his toll. 'Uncle Bill' handed him his duplicate receipt, as was usual. Now, the captain, although a good man, had a habit of using one profane term, to wit: 'by h—l.' This was the extent of his swearing, but this came in pretty often. On looking at the duplicate he thought Uncle Bill had rated him too high. 'By h—l! Uncle Bill,' said he, 'that's too bad; that's altogether too high.' Russell paid but little attention to him, until after Spencer had followed him all over the canal grounds and had teased him most persistently to change it, when he, taking the paper, went in and added about one hundred dollars more to the toll, and, handing him back the paper, said, in Spencer's own language, 'There, by h—l! see if you're satisfied now.' One of the Wells River raftmen was a little too many for Uncle Bill at one time, when he sold him a couple of young owls, at a very tall price, for parrots. Dictionaries were no account when he discovered the cheat. Capt. Silas Burnham had just finished rafting a lot of down-country lumber, and was ready to start down the river, but he had one man he wanted to discharge. So he bethought him that his man, 'Uncle Ira,' could not read; he therefore took a shingle and wrote upon it, 'Mr. Cheney, dismiss Uncle Ira and pay him off.' He then sent him down with the shingle, telling him it was 'money-business.' Uncle Ira marched into the store, well filled with customers, and, with quite an air of authority, said, 'Mr. Ginery, bore buddy watted' (more money wanted), at the same time producing the shingle. Mr. Cheney looked at the shingle and saw the joke. 'Why, Uncle Ira,' said he, 'this is for your discharge!' Uncle Ira looked all sorts of surprise, and at last, turning to leave the store, said, 'Dab that Silas Burdab!' Capt. Burnham was well known on the river, and I could note a great variety of anecdotes, but they'll tell better than they can be written. It was always an insult to a raftman to ask him which way he was going, 'up or down?' One kind old lady, who had just served breakfast for the captain and his men, innocently asked him this tabooed question just as he was leaving for his raft. Hearing it from her, he turned and soberly answered, 'Yes, ma'am!'

"In 1849 I bought for Kimball & Clark, the contractors, eight hundred thousand feet of hemlock timber, near the head of navigation, for the present Holyoke dam. This was rafted and run to the South Hadley Canal that season, and was one of the most unwieldy jobs that a raftman ever knew. It was manufactured mainly at the head of the canal, and passed through to the dam. The contractors sunk money in proportion as the soggy hemlocks sank in the water, but the dam stands.

"How the valley rang with the songs of these boatmen and raftmen of thirty or forty years ago! Good singers they were, too, some of them; and even after these long years have intervened, with their ever-increasing rush of business, attended by the scream of the whistle and the thundering of the car, it requires but a slight effort of the imagination to recall the mellow songs of Cutler, of Guildhall, Vt., Chamberlain, of Newbury, Morse, of Haverhill, N. H., Humes, of Montague, and many more whose names have not in my memory survived their voices. Capt. Jonathan Smith, of South Hadley, the pilot for many years over Williamsett, and the father of the superintendent of our street-railway, was one of the jolly singers of that day, and always ready to contribute his share for the gratification of the company. But farewell to the river-men of old and the incidents of their time until we 'gather at the river!'

IV.

STEAM NAVIGATION.

The first attempt to navigate the Connecticut above Hartford by steam was in 1826, when a company was formed in that city for the purpose. An agent was sent West to examine boats on the Western rivers and make a report. On his return the "Barnet," of the wheelbarrow pattern, was built in New York, and made her first trip to Springfield in November, 1826, arriving on the 28th of the month. She ascended the river at the rate of five miles an hour, under the pilotage of Roderick Palmer, of West Springfield, and went as far as Bellows Falls, Vt., and passed Springfield on her way down on the 18th of December.

It was apparent that she could not be depended upon to ascend the rapids at Enfield, Conn., and the project of building a canal was agitated, and work was finally commenced on it in 1827, but it was not completed for about two years.

In the mean time an ingenious mechanic, long an employé at the United States armory,—Mr. Thomas Blanchard,—built a side-wheel boat at Hartford, put in the machinery, and named it the "Blanchard." He made a trial trip to South Hadley on the 30th of July, 1828. On the 11th of September he made an excursion to Hartford and return with about sixty passengers, making the downward trip in a little over two hours, but taking much longer to return over the rapids at Enfield. On the 30th of the same month she made an eight-mile trip with a large number of school-children on board.

But the "Blanchard" was found to be but little better adapted to overcome the Enfield obstructions than the "Barnet," and Blanchard constructed a new boat upon an improved plan, which was named the "Vermont." She was a stern-wheeler, seventy-five feet in length and fifteen feet wide, and only drew one foot of water.

This boat was built on wheels, east of Main Street, nearly opposite the present Wilcox Street. This was probably the first steamboat built in Massachusetts with engine complete.* It was launched on the 8th day of May, 1829, being drawn to the river by the men who had gathered to "see the sight." This boat made six miles an hour up-stream, and in July made several trips to Hartford with one hundred passengers, returning the same day, and ascending the falls, a distance of five miles, in an hour and twenty minutes. In August she went up to Brattleboro', and was at Windsor, Vt., in October. This first trip of a regular steamer was the occasion of great excitement along the river, where the people assembled from many miles, and celebrated the occasion by the ringing of bells and the firing of guns.

The secret of the success of the "Vermont" lay in the fact that her wheel was placed far enough astern to work in the dead water.

The "Enfield Canal" was finished Nov. 11, 1829, and the "Vermont" took down a party from Springfield and returned, passing the canal both ways. The "Blanchard" also brought up a party from Hartford to the lower end of the canal.

In April, 1830, the schooner "Eagle," which had been running between New York and Warehouse Point, came around from Albany and up through the canal with a load of rye for Springfield. The steamers "Vermont" and "Blanchard" also laid at the wharves at that time. The latter was advertised on the 15th of May, 1830, to make regular trips to Hartford.

Mr. Blanchard had then recently returned from Pittsburgh, Pa., where he had built the "Allegheny," on the model of the "Vermont," which pattern was universally adopted on the Western rivers. On the first of June the "Vermont" commenced running regularly between Springfield and Hartford, and there was a lively competition during the season between the boats and the stage-lines, which latter ran on each side of the river, under the management of Messrs. Sargent & Chapin.

A new steamer, called the "Massachusetts," was built by Mr. Blanchard in the winter of 1830-31, calculated for the better accommodation of passengers, but too long for the low stages of water in the river. It was much the largest and most complete boat which had yet been seen in Springfield, having a cabin upon deck and a double engine. It commenced running in the spring of 1831, but could not go through the locks or run in low water.

It was said that Mr. Blanchard had invested eight thousand dollars in his boats. He had at first been greatly accommodated by the canal company, but now they threatened him with heavy tolls unless he would do towing, which would interfere with passenger travel.

The season of 1831 opened with the "Hampden" in March, which then commenced running for John Cooley & Co., as a freight-towing boat. In April the "Vermont" commenced the passenger business, under an arrangement between Mr. Blanchard and Messrs. Sargent & Chapin by which the stages running in competition with the boat were withdrawn.

The "Springfield" (probably the "Blanchard" under another name) also commenced towing in April for the Connecticut River Valley Company. This company had just launched the "Ledyard" at Springfield, for the use of the towing trade above the town. In July the "Wm. Hall" was put on as a tow-boat, to run between Hartford and South Hadley Falls, while the "Ledyard" was placed above, between the Falls and Greenfield.

* See article of Mr. T. M. Dewey, preceding this.

The "Massachusetts" commenced her trips in June, and in the course of the following month Messrs. Sargent & Chapin purchased Mr. Blanchard's interest in the steamers "Vermont" and "Massachusetts;" and his connection with the boating business ceased from that time, though he remained in Springfield a year or two afterward.

Another steamer, called the "James Dwight," was also put on the line between Hartford and Springfield for the accommodation of passengers coming up in the morning and returning in the evening.

The "Massachusetts," immediately after her transfer, was thoroughly overhauled, and supplied with new and heavier boilers and furnaces. The superintendent of that work was afterward the engineer of the ill-fated ocean steamer "Arctic," lost off Cape Race; and is said to have put off from the sinking ship, and was never afterward heard of.

The "Massachusetts" was in service some twelve years, and was finally burned at her wharf in Hartford.

Contemporary with the "Massachusetts," the "Agawam" was put on the line and run in connection with her; and two other boats, the "Phoenix" and "Franklin," were built and launched for the passenger traffic, but saw very little service, as the boats were all withdrawn upon the opening of the railway from Springfield to Hartford, in 1844. The "Franklin" was sold and taken to Philadelphia, and the other two were taken to Maine, where they were engaged in the trade of the Kennebeck River.

In 1842, Charles Dickens made his first visit to this country, and in the beginning of February went from Springfield to Hartford on the "Massachusetts." It was the first trip of the season, and the second, he says, "as early in February, within the memory of man." Though the boat was the largest and most capacious of all that had been built or used on the river in Massachusetts, yet he treated it as a small affair, and described it as of about one-half pony-power. The grand cabin he compared to the parlor of a Lilliputian public-house which had got afloat in a flood and was drifting no one knew where, but it contained the inevitable rocking-chair, which it is impossible to get away from in America.

"The boat," says he, "was so short and narrow we all kept the middle of the deck, lest it should unexpectedly tip over; the machinery, by some surprising process of condensation, worked between it and the keel; the whole forming a warm sandwich about three feet thick."

It was raining hard the whole day, the river was full of floating ice, and the boat was obliged to work in the shallow water to avoid the huge blocks.

He thought the Connecticut a fine stream, and the banks beautiful in summer.

"After two hours and a half of this odd traveling (including a stoppage at a small town, where we were saluted by a gun considerably bigger than our own chimney), we reached Hartford."

During the fifteen years in which boats were running on the river there was only one serious accident: the steamer "Greenfield" exploded her boilers at South Hadley in May, 1840, by which three lives were lost and property to the value of ten thousand dollars was destroyed.

V.

CANALS.

The first attempt to connect the western part of the State with Boston and tide-water was as early as 1791, when Gen.

Henry Knox took active measures to determine the physical feasibility of the work by causing a series of surveys to be made by an eminent engineer, John Hills, Esq., upon two routes,—a southern one via Worcester, and a more northern one.

Gen. Knox and his associates were finally incorporated by the Legislature on the 10th of March, 1792, with the title of "The Proprietors of the Massachusetts Canal," with authority to construct a canal from Boston to the Connecticut River. There is no evidence that anything of importance was attempted under this charter. Maps and estimates were made, which were preserved and subsequently placed in the hands of the State Commissioners for Canal Surveys in 1825.

On the 25th of February, 1825, upon the recommendation of Governor Eustis, three commissioners were appointed to ascertain the practicability of constructing a canal from Boston Harbor to the Connecticut River, and of extending the same to some point on the Hudson River in the vicinity of the junction of the Erie Canal with that river. Nathan Willis, of Pittsfield, Elihu Hoyt, of Deerfield, and Gen. Henry A. S. Dearborn, of Boston, were appointed commissioners, and Col. Laommi Baldwin engineer.

At the June session of the Legislature, in the same year, Governor Lincoln devoted a portion of his message to the subject, and urged the favorable consideration of the Legislature. He also made mention of the then new subject of railways.

A report of the above commission was made at the session of January, 1826, recommending a route for a canal through the north part of Worcester County to the mouth of Deerfield River, and thence up that stream through the Hoosac Mountain, by means of a four-mile tunnel, and through to the Hudson River, near Troy.

The district west of the mountains was surveyed and mapped by George Tibbits, Esq., of Troy, N. Y., and on the east side, from the summit of the mountains to the mouth of Deerfield River, by General Epaphras Hoyt, of Deerfield. The length of the proposed canal was given at 178 miles, 100 of which was between the Connecticut River and Boston, and 78 between the river and the Hudson. The total lockage—rise and fall—was 3281 $\frac{3}{10}$ feet.

The estimated cost, exclusive of the tunnel, was.....	$5,103,240
Tunnel, 20 by 13 $\frac{1}{2}$ feet, 4 miles, 211,200 cubic yards, at \$4.36..	920,832
Total cost.....	$6,024,072

The Governor in his message spoke favorably of the work, and recommended the continuance of the commission, with enlarged powers, and a resolution was introduced in the Legislature for further surveys, which was not only laid on the table, but the former resolve, under which the survey had been made, was repealed. This virtually put an end to the canal project.

HAMPSHIRE AND HAMPDEN CANAL.

By an act passed Feb. 4, 1823, Samuel Hinckley and others were incorporated as "The Hampshire and Hampden Canal Company," to construct a canal from the Connecticut River, in Northampton, through Easthampton and Southampton, in Hampshire County, and Westfield and Southwick, in Hampden County, to connect with one to be constructed in Connecticut from New Haven to the Massachusetts line, in Southwick. The capital of the Massachusetts company was fixed at three hundred thousand dollars.

The work was completed from New Haven to Westfield in 1830, and finished to Northampton in 1834, at a total cost of two million dollars.*

In 1836 a new company, called "The New Haven and Northampton Canal Company," was chartered by the Legislatures of Massachusetts and Connecticut, which purchased the whole line for three hundred thousand dollars, and kept up the business until about 1847, when railway competition compelled the abandonment of the work. The present New Haven and Northampton Railway follows substantially the line of this canal.

* Another account says the total cost was about one million dollars.

CHAPTER XXII.

RAILWAYS.

THE WESTERN RAILROAD—THE BOSTON AND ALBANY RAILROAD.*

IN 1826 petitions were presented by Thomas H. Perkins and others of Boston, and A. J. Allen and others, that a survey for a railway be made between Boston and the Hudson River, and the committee on roads and canals was "instructed to inquire whether any practicable and useful improvements have been made in the construction of railways and of steam-carriages used thereon, so as to admit of their being successfully introduced into this commonwealth; and if so, whether it is expedient to extend thereto the aid and encouragement of this Legislature."

This committee reported a resolution authorizing the Governor to appoint three commissioners and an engineer upon the subject of railways, which passed the Senate, but was indefinitely postponed in the House.

At the June session of 1826 a select committee of the House was appointed, consisting of Messrs. Abner Phelps and George W. Adams, of Boston, and Emory Washburn, of Worcester, with instructions to consider the practicability and expediency of constructing a railway from Boston on the most eligible route to the western line of the county of Berkshire, in order that, if leave can be obtained from the government of New York, it may be extended to the Hudson River, at or near Albany; and that the committee be instructed to report information and estimates of expense as they deem proper." This is believed to have been the first concerted movement looking to the construction of a railway in the State.†

The above-named commissioners, who were authorized to sit during the recess of the Legislature, sent circulars throughout the State, and employed all available means to obtain information. They made a report on the 19th of January, 1827. The report entered somewhat at length into a discussion of plans for a road, and cited the experience of the people of Great Britain. It would seem that the idea of using steam locomotive-carriages as a motive-power had been only hinted at, for the plans for single- and double-track roads were invariably coupled with arrangements for employing only horse-power, and provision was made for a horse-path, and paths for the drivers and attendants, on each side of the road. Some mention was made of locomotives, and it was stated that "an engine of two eight-inch cylinders, weighing about five tons, will move forty tons at the rate of nine or ten miles an hour, and is said to have moved ninety tons at the rate of four miles an hour."

The committee reported unanimously in favor of the project, and "that a railway would be far more useful to the

* The article upon the Western and Boston and Albany Railways has been mostly compiled from a history of the former road, written by Hon. George Bliss, and published in 1863, and data furnished by the officers of the Boston and Albany road.

As this was the pioneer among the important long lines of New England, and during its construction met with many difficulties and embarrassments, we have given its history much more in detail than that of the other roads passing through or connecting with the Connecticut Valley in Massachusetts.

The history of these companies best illustrates the difficulties encountered by the early railway corporations in New England, and in a prominent manner conveys to the mind of the reader the various stages in the growth of this important interest throughout the country.

† The first railway constructed in the United States was the short line from the Quincy granite quarries to the sea, in 1826. It was three miles in length, and was used solely for the transportation of stone, and employed horse-power only.

public than a canal." They recommended the appointment of three commissioners and an engineer to ascertain the practicability of such a road, and to make surveys, plans, and estimates, and were in favor of an appropriation for the purpose, not exceeding $5000.

These recommendations were not followed, but the Legislature, on the 22d of February, 1827, passed a resolution authorizing the appointment of "three commissioners, to constitute a Board of Internal Improvements," to attend to all matters concerning canals and railways. This board consisted of Messrs. J. J. Fiske, Willard Phelps, and James Hayward, at a compensation of four dollars per day. This committee appeared to have performed very little work, and none with reference to the proposed line of railway.

At the June session of 1827, upon a petition of James Whiton and others, of Berkshire, and Josiah Quincy and others, of Boston, the Legislature authorized the appointment of two commissioners and an engineer to make the necessary surveys, plans, and estimates for a road from Boston to the New York line, and, with leave obtained from the authorities of the latter State, to the Hudson River. Ten thousand dollars was appropriated for the purpose. Nahum Mitchell, of Boston, and Samuel McKay, of Pittsfield, were accordingly appointed such commission, with James F. Baldwin as engineer.

Two entire routes were examined,—one, called the southern, through Framingham, Worcester, Springfield, Chester, Washington, Pittsfield, and West Stockbridge, to the State line at Canaan; thence, through Chatham and Kinderhook, to the Hudson at Albany. The northern route was from Troy, N. Y., by Hoosac Four Corners, Williamstown, and Adams, to the Connecticut River at Northampton; thence, by Belchertown, Rutland, Boylston, Watertown, and Cambridge, to Boston.

Lateral examinations were also made from Chester, by Walker Brook, Becket, and Stockbridge, to the State line at Canaan, and others.

Accurate instrumental surveys were made only upon the southern route, and upon this only for twelve miles west of Boston, and from Connecticut River to Albany. These surveys and examinations were conducted exclusively with reference to the use of animal power, as "better adapted to the transportation of that endless variety of loading which a dense and industrious population requires." The length of the proposed road was given at 180 miles and 212 rods. No special estimate of cost was made, but the commissioners reported a probable outlay not exceeding one-half the cost of English railways per mile.

In transmitting the report to the Legislature, Governor Lincoln in his message said: "The results to which the commission have already arrived may be considered as fully establishing the practicability, within the reasonable application of means, of the construction of the road."

In the Legislature the Committee on Roads and Railways reported on the 15th of February, 1828, that "after mature examination of the facts and statements contained in said Report, they are of opinion that the railroad, as applicable to Massachusetts and to New England generally, has, since the making of said report, assumed a new and greater importance; that it will prove a new creation of wealth, power, and superiority to the State. That a railroad can be constructed at far less expense than a canal, and be productive of still greater advantages."

On the 11th of March, 1828, an act was passed providing for a Board of Directors of Internal Improvements, to serve without compensation, except the payment of expenses when on duty. They were clothed with powers to transact all necessary business, and were required to report to the Legislature. This board consisted of nine persons, as follows: Levi Lincoln, Nathan Hale, Stephen White, David Henshaw, Thomas W. Ward, Royal Makepeace, George Bond, William Foster, and E. H. Robbins, Jr. James F. Baldwin was appointed engineer.

Nearly simultaneously with these proceedings, the Legislature of New York (April 15, 1828) passed "an act to facilitate the construction of a railroad from the city of Boston to the Hudson River;" and under it Ebenezer Baldwin, of Albany, Oliver Wiswall, of Hudson, and George Tibbits, of Troy, were appointed commissioners, and William C. Young, engineer. This act "pledged the Legislature that if the State of Massachusetts shall construct a railroad from Boston to the boundary of this State, either directly or through the medium of an incorporated company, the Legislature of this State will construct it from thence to the Hudson River, or grant to the State of Massachusetts, or some authorized company, the right of so doing, and taking tolls thereon, under proper restrictions as to jurisdiction."

Explorations and surveys were in progress under the commissioners of New York and Massachusetts, on every part of the line from Boston to the Hudson River, during the year 1828.

Reports by the commissioners of the two States were made early in 1829,—by those of Massachusetts on the 16th of January, and by those of New York on the 25th of February. The latter reported upon two routes between the Hudson River and the State line, which had been minutely surveyed, viz.: one from Troy, through Pownal, Vt., to Adams, and one from Albany and Hudson to West Stockbridge, the lines from Albany and Hudson to unite at Chatham.

The Massachusetts commissioners reported a number of surveys. The principal one was substantially the same as afterward adopted by the Boston and Worcester and the Western Railroads as far as the State line in West Stockbridge; among the others were two lines from the last-named point to Albany. From the State line to Chatham Four Corners both pursued substantially the same line, not varying greatly from where the road now runs. From thence one line bore more to the west, striking the Hudson near Schodack Landing, thirteen miles below Albany, and thence by the valley to Greenbush. The other struck the river at Castleton, eight miles from Greenbush. The road, as finally located, kept upon higher land, and reached the river directly at Greenbush.

By these surveys the distance from Boston to the Connecticut River was 94 miles and 64 chains, and to the State line 160 miles and 44 chains, and, by the shortest survey, 198 miles and 6 chains to Albany. By the other route, the distance from Boston to Albany was 200½ miles.

The cost of the New York section was estimated by Engineer Young at $658,601, or at the average of $16,162 per mile.

A second route was examined, farther north, crossing the Connecticut River at Northampton; and a third, still farther north, passing through the valleys of Miller's, Deerfield, and Hoosac Rivers to Troy. The distance by the northern route from Boston to Troy was 190 miles, and by the Northampton route 210 miles.

The passage of the Green Mountains was largely in favor of the southern route through Springfield, and thence up the valley of the Agawam River.

Several local surveys were made on some portions of the line west of the Connecticut River, with a view to taking every possible advantage in the topography of the country; but the various results only the more thoroughly established the southern route, and mainly as the road now runs.

A long discussion upon the relative merits of horse- and steam-power finally resulted in the adoption of the locomotive.

The road which is now known as the Boston and Albany Railroad was constructed by a number of distinct corporations, first of which was The Boston and Worcester Railroad Corporation, which was chartered on the 23d of June, 1831, to construct a road from Boston to Worcester.

The proposed capital stock of this company was 10,000 shares of $100 each, or a total of $1,000,000, which was subscribed, and the company organized on the 1st of May, 1832. Surveys were made by John M. Fessenden, in 1831, and the total distance found to be 43½ miles. The terminus in Worcester was found to be 456 feet above Western Avenue, in Boston. The original estimated cost of the road and equipment, with the bed graded for a double track, was $883,000. This road was opened from Boston to Worcester, July 4, 1835.

On the 15th of March, 1833, the directors of the Boston and Worcester Railroad Company were individually incorporated as The Western Railroad Corporation, with authority to construct a railroad from Worcester to the Connecticut River, at Springfield, and thence to the western boundary of the State. The capital stock was to consist of not less than 10,000 nor more than 20,000 shares of $100 each. The Boston and Worcester company had exclusive control of the charter of the Western road, and of all proceedings under it. The charter conferred the authority of building branch roads in any or all towns immediately adjoining those through which the road passed.

On the 5th of May, 1834, the Legislature of New York chartered The Castleton and West Stockbridge Railroad Company, with authority to construct a road from Castleton to the State line at West Stockbridge. The name of this corporation was changed by act of the same body on the 5th of May, 1836, to The Albany and West Stockbridge Railroad Company, with authority to construct a road from the Hudson River, at Greenbush, to the line of Massachusetts, at West Stockbridge. The capital stock was $300,000. In this charter the State reserved the right to purchase the road after ten years, and within fifteen years of the completion of it, paying ten per cent. interest.

The stock of this company was duly subscribed, and the company organized about the 23d of May, 1835. Samuel Cheever was appointed superintendent, and Wm. H. Talcott engineer.

At the same date a charter was also granted for a railroad from the city of Hudson to the Massachusetts line at West Stockbridge. The stock of this company was principally taken in New York City, and the road was located via Chatham Four Corners.

The company's books were not opened for subscriptions to the stock of the Western Railroad until late in the fall of 1834, after the Boston and Worcester road had been completed to Westboro', and the effort was then confined to Springfield and the towns between there and Worcester. People were very loath to invest their money in what was to a great extent considered a chimerical undertaking, and matters progressed very slowly. At one time an informal offer was made by New York parties to subscribe the whole required capital, provided they could have the control of the company and stock. But this was looked upon as a stock-exchange scheme to control the road in the interests of the city of New York, and the offer was declined.

On the 2d of January, 1835, at a meeting held at Springfield, a committee of correspondence and inquiry was appointed, and on the 16th of February of the same year a meeting was held at the town-hall in Springfield, when Mr. George Bliss, of the above-named committee, laid what information had been obtained before the meeting, and, after discussion, the committee was instructed to call a convention at Worcester, on the 5th of March ensuing, for the purpose of devising means for making an immediate survey of the route.

The convention at Worcester was numerously attended, and a committee of one from each town was appointed on resolutions, who reported as follows:

"1. That a railroad from Worcester to Springfield was greatly to be desired, was feasible, and ought to be entered upon without delay.

"2. That an accurate survey and estimate be made the present season; and that a committee of three in each town interested be appointed to solicit subscriptions therefor.

"3. That an executive committee of five be appointed, to procure surveys and estimates, and obtain information in regard to the construction and probable income of the proposed road, with power to appoint a treasurer.

"4. That the directors of the Boston and Worcester company be requested to organize the Western Railroad corporation as early as in their opinion the stock can be taken up, and on the terms on which the Boston and Worcester corporation was first organized."

Following these resolutions an executive committee, consisting of George Bliss, Caleb Rice, and W. H. Bowdoin, of Springfield; Joel Norcross, of Monson; and N. P. Dewey (or Denny), of Leicester, was appointed "to procure accurate surveys, a location, and estimates for the road, as far as from Worcester to Springfield."

Town committees were appointed, and instructed to report to the executive committee.

The first thing was to procure funds for a survey, and the sum of $7000 or $8000 was soon raised in the towns along the line, and by consent of the Boston and Worcester company, their engineer, John M. Fessenden, was employed to make the survey, which was commenced in May, 1835. This survey included an examination of the proposed route between Springfield and Hartford.

The engineer reported the distance between Worcester and Springfield at 53½ miles, and between Springfield and Hartford at 23 miles. His estimates included

Grading, masonry, and engineering.....	$589,000
Superstructure, including turnouts.....	428,000
Damages, fencing, engines, cars, and depot grounds.....	183,000
	<hr/>
Springfield and Hartford Line, 36½ miles with heaviest edge rail.....	$1,200,000
	400,000
	<hr/>
	$1,600,000

An estimate of probable business was made by the committee as follows:

55,510 passengers at $1.75.....	$97,142
42,004 tons merchandise at $4.00.....	168,016
	<hr/>
	$265,158
Less Mr. Fessenden's estimate of annual expenses.....	85,000
	<hr/>
Net income.....	$180,158

The people of Connecticut, and particularly of Hartford, were in the mean time not idle. Efforts were made in various directions to establish railways. Routes were discussed, and some of them surveyed, from Worcester to Hartford, and thence to New York; from Worcester to Albany, via Hartford; from Worcester, via Norwich, to New York; from Hartford to West Stockbridge, etc.

The directors of the Boston and Worcester company were urged to open the books for subscriptions to the stock of the Western company, which request was complied with on the 3d day of August, 1835, at Boston, New York, Springfield, Worcester, Albany, Hudson, Pittsfield, and Lee, the books to remain open for ten days.

One of the conditions of subscription was that the company should not be organized until stock to the amount of $2,000,000 had been taken. Every possible exertion was made to reach this amount, but when the books were closed, on the 13th of August, the total amount subscribed was found to be only 13,000 shares, or $1,300,000. Of this amount 8500 shares were taken in Boston and vicinity.

Determined to succeed, it was resolved by the directors to call a mass-meeting at Faneuil Hall, Boston, which was accordingly done, and a large number of people assembled on the evening of Oct. 7, 1835. Delegations were present from Albany and Hudson, and all the interior towns on the route. Hon. Abbott Lawrence was chairman of the meeting. Addresses and reports were made and resolutions adopted, and the meeting was enthusiastic in favor of raising the required sum. Committees were appointed to solicit subscriptions, but when the result was known it was found that only 18,300 shares had been subscribed, leaving a deficiency of 1700.

On the 20th of November another meeting was held in the Supreme Court-room, Boston, which was addressed in a spirited manner by a number of gentlemen, and the following resolution, offered by Isaac Parker, Esq., was adopted: "In the opinion of this meeting, the construction of the Western Railroad is of vital importance to this community, and the project should not be abandoned while any just and proper measures are left untried for its accomplishment."

By persevering efforts the required amount was obtained by the 5th of December, 1835, and the corporation was organized on the 4th of January, 1836, at the court-house in Boston. The following gentlemen were chosen directors: Thomas B. Wales, William Lawrence, Edmund Dwight, Henry Rice, John Henshaw, Francis Jackson, and Josiah Quincy, Jr., of Boston, and Justice Willard and George Bliss, of Springfield. At the first meeting of the directors, Thomas B. Wales was chosen President; Ellis Gray Loring, Clerk; and Josiah Quincy, Jr., Treasurer.

Maj. William G. McNeil was secured as chief engineer and captain; William H. Swift as assistant engineer; the latter to devote his whole time to the work.* George Bliss was appointed general agent of the corporation, March 16, 1836.

At the meeting of the stockholders for organization, they instructed the directors to apply to the Legislature for aid in the construction of the road. On the 16th of January, 1836, a petition was presented by George Ashmun, asking for an act of incorporation for a bank, to be called "The Western Railroad Bank," to be located in Boston, with a capital of $5,000,000.

Among other reasons urged for the establishment of this bank was the fact that several millions of capital had been withdrawn from the State by the expiration of the charter of the United States Bank.

At the same session a memorial of sixty pages, signed by prominent citizens of Boston to the number of 1736 individuals, was presented, praying for the establishment of a bank with a capital of $10,000,000. Thirty-two petitions from various portions of the State supported this memorial. These petitions succeeded so far that a Bank Bill was passed to a third reading, but was finally indefinitely postponed in consequence of the passage of another bill directing the State Treasurer to subscribe $1,000,000 to the stock of the railroad corporation, providing three of the nine directors should be chosen by the Legislature. This bill was signed by Governor Everett on the 29th of March, 1836.

Under this act the Legislature chose Messrs. Isaac C. Bates, William Jackson, and Robert Rantoul, Jr., as directors on behalf of the State, and at the next annual meeting the members of the old board were re-elected, with the exception of Messrs. Lawrence, Rice, and Willard.

An attempt was made, while these proceedings were pending, to get a company incorporated for the purpose of constructing a road from Worcester to Hartford, and thence to Stockbridge, and a careful survey and estimates were made and a report presented to the Legislature, which was accepted; but a motion to report a bill in favor of the project was voted down, as it was considered a project which would embarrass the Western company and impair its credit.

Surveys were begun on the Western road in April, 1836, by two parties, and were prosecuted with diligence, under the supervision of the resident engineer, during the year; and in June of the same year three parties were put in the field west of the Connecticut River.

A great amount of preliminary surveying was done on the line between Worcester and Springfield, but the line as now located was finally adopted and put under contract. The first grading was commenced at the crossing of the Worcester and Hartford Turnpike in Charlton, about the 1st of January, 1837.

* Capt. Swift died in New York City, about the 7th of April, 1879.

Between Brookfield and the Connecticut River four separate lines were surveyed, to wit:

1. The Cabotville, or extreme north line, passing a little south of Chicopee Falls, through Cabotville (Chicopee), crossing the Connecticut a little south of the mouth of the Chicopee River, and running thence to Bush's Notch, in the Trap Range, or to the Garden Brook line at Ashley's Mills, in West Springfield (now Holyoke).

2. The End Brook route, crossing the Connecticut about midway between the mouth of the Chicopee and Springfield, and thence to Bush's Notch, or to the Garden Brook line at Ashley's Mills.

3. The Garden Brook line, nearly on the route finally adopted, which was to cross the river between the old bridge and Ferry Street, in Springfield, and thence by a route (undetermined) on the north or south side of the Agawam River, near Westfield village.

4. The Mill River line, following that stream to the south part of the village of Springfield, and thence, through the east part west of Maple and Chestnut Streets, to the Garden Brook line. The first two lines were favored by parties interested in manufactures on the Chicopee River.

The Garden Brook line was recommended by the engineers as being the shortest and most direct, having the least maximum grade, and involving the least expense for grading and bridging.

The certainty of the road being built caused considerable speculation in lands at Springfield, and the location of the depot grounds was the subject of a stirring controversy, even involving serious charges against certain parties, which were, however, subsequently cleared up.

In January, 1837, a reconnaissance of the route around the north end of Mount Tom, and thence up the Mauhan River, through Easthampton and Southampton to Westfield, was made by the engineers; but as the route was six miles longer than by way of Springfield, and as the charter required the crossing of the Connecticut at the latter point, this line was abandoned.

The line from East Brookfield to the Connecticut River, as since constructed, was approved by the directors in the spring of 1837, and it was definitely located, and, with the exception of two miles next the river in Springfield, put under contract in June of that year.

At first it was intended to grade the road and build bridges for a single track only, but subsequently this plan was changed, and the deep cuts, heavy embankments, culverts, and bridges were generally made for a double-track road.

Extensive surveys and examinations were made in finding the best route from the Connecticut River to the State line. The Green Mountain range was thoroughly examined for a distance of 22 miles, north and south, including a careful survey of every important depression and the valley of every considerable stream. The northern route, as surveyed by Mr. Baldwin in 1828, was from the first considered the most favorable; but there was a strong feeling also in favor of a route via Lee and Stockbridge, and it was accordingly surveyed by R. P. Morgan, beginning at the village of Westfield and passing by the valley of the Little River, ascending the slope of Sodom Mountain to Loomis' Gap, Mount Pisgah, and Cobble Mountain, with a tunnel of 600 feet; and thence to the Blandford line, and, by Bush Hill, to Spruce Swamp Summit, 1470 feet above the beach mark on Connecticut River, and about 30 miles from it; thence down the western slope through East Otis, by Great Pond, Nichols' Pond, and Greenwater Pond, to the valley of Hop Brook, through the corner of Tyringham to Stockbridge Plain and West Stockbridge to the State line, a distance of 62.38 miles from Connecticut River at Springfield, and with no grade exceeding 80 feet per mile.

The difference between the northern and southern routes, west of the river, was only $\frac{66}{100}$ of a mile by the measurement, but the equated distances gave about five miles in favor of the north route. There were five summits on the south line, and four on the north. The estimated cost of grading and bridging the north line was \$1,259,100.87, and of the south line \$1,232,905.45, showing a difference in favor of the south line of \$26,195.42. The engineers had reported in favor of the north line, probably because the average of grades was the best; but before this was known to the parties the Board of Directors, at their request, gave the friends of each route a hearing at Springfield, June 25, 1837.

After an examination of both routes by members of the board, and a full consideration, on the 10th of August in the last-mentioned year, they decided in favor of the northern route through Pittsfield, and ordered it to be definitely located, reserving, however, a few points for further examination.

But during these proceedings very little had been done toward completing that portion of the road between Albany and the State line.

The Hudson and Berkshire Railroad, from Hudson to the State line, at the Canaan Gap at West Stockbridge, 33 miles, had been graded during the year 1837, and the track laid with flat- or strap-iron, and the road opened for use in 1838.

The city of Albany had also, on the 3d of October, 1836, through Erastus Corning, Esq., its mayor, subscribed $250,000 to the stock of the Albany and West Stockbridge Railroad Company, but thus far nothing had been paid upon it. Extensive surveys and estimates had also been made upon the last-named road by several routes in 1836, but nothing had been done toward constructing it up to the close of the year 1838.

The financial revulsion of 1836-37 had a serious effect upon the building of the Western road; and at the close of 1837, out of six assessments, amounting in the aggregate to $900,000, only a little over $600,000 had been collected. The estimates of the engineers for the whole line in Massachusetts were $4,000,000, exclusive of engineering, depots, and general expenses. The funds provided for, if the stock was all paid up, would be only $3,000,000.

At this stage of affairs a general meeting of the stockholders was held on the 23d of November, 1837, when it was decided to call on the Legislature for assistance, to the amount of eighty per cent. of the whole stock, in State scrip, having thirty years to run at five per cent., payable in London, England, with warrants for the interest.

Accordingly, a petition was presented, Jan. 13, 1838, by Emory Washburn, of Worcester, and the same was referred to a joint select committee of both Houses. After a careful examination by the committee, a detailed report was made, and a bill drawn up granting the credit of the State to the amount of $2,100,000 in scrip, payable in thirty years, at five per cent. interest, interest and principal payable in London. This bill, after an exhaustive discussion and several proposed amendments, was finally passed and approved on the 21st of February, 1838.

This legislation immediately gave a fresh impetus to the work, and during the year six miles of track were laid, depots established, engines and cars purchased, etc. West of the river the line was definitely located (except through the village of Westfield), the road from Chester to the State boundary was put under contract, and work commenced.

But up to the close of 1838 nothing had been done upon the New York portion of the road. The authorized capital of the Albany company was $650,000. In May, 1839, the New York Legislature passed an act authorizing the city of Albany to borrow $400,000 to be used upon the road, in the purchase of or subscription to its stock. The engineer of this part of the line had estimated the expense (in July, 1836) of constructing the road from Albany to the State line at $586,280.73, including half the expense of a double track on the Hudson road.

During 1838 work on the Western road progressed so favorably that reliable estimates could be made upon the cost of the whole work, and in December of that year a detailed statement and report upon the finances was made, containing 36 pages.

From this report the following statements are compiled. Expenses to date, with estimates for completion by the resident engineer:

East of the Connecticut River:
Grading, masonry, bridges, and engineering.....	$1,117,569.93
Superstructure.....	496,318.37
Engines and cars.....	87,150.00
Buildings, etc.....	38,125.00
Miscellaneous expenses.....	34,652.72
Land damages, fencing, and depot-grounds.....	90,913.10
Total east of the river.....	$1,864,729.12
West of the river:
Grading, masonry, bridges, engineering, superstructure, engines, cars, and buildings.....	$2,213,493.47
Miscellaneous expenses.....	$28,497.12
Land damages, fencing, and depots.....	84,452.02
	112,949.14
Total west of the river.....	$2,326,442.61
Total cost 116 6-10 miles.....	$4,191,171.73

The funds provided were:

Six assessments at $5 each on 30,000 shares and interest.....	$910,643.30
Proceeds of State scrip at par.....	2,100,000.00
	$3,010,643.30

Deducting this from total expenses shows a deficiency of $1,180,528.43.

In this condition of affairs it was resolved to again petition the Legislature for additional aid in the shape of State scrip for $1,500,000, which was done; and on the 23d of March, 1839, a bill for the purpose of loaning the credit of the State to the amount of $1,200,000 was passed, and approved by the Governor.

Under this fresh impetus, the work was prosecuted with vigor, and the road was opened on the 1st of October, 1839, for passenger-trains to Springfield, and for freight on the 23d of the same month. The distance from Worcester to Springfield was $54\frac{6\frac{2}{3}}{1000}$ miles.

West of the Connecticut the work was also well advanced during the year, and the directors reported in January, 1840, that the funds provided would be sufficient to complete the whole line within the limits of Massachusetts.

In the mean time nothing had been done toward constructing the portion between Albany and the State line; and in view of the discouraging condition of that portion of the work, at a meeting of the stockholders of the Western road, held on the 12th of February, 1840, a committee was appointed to investigate the affairs of the corporation, which was done, and a report made to another meeting held March 12th following. Upon the committee's report a body of delegates, consisting of E. H. Derby, George Bliss, A. Walker, P. P. F. Degrand, J. Henshaw, A. T. Lowe, E. H. Robbins, Lemuel Pomeroy, and Charles Stearns, was appointed to proceed to Albany and Troy, and advocate the speedy construction of that portion of the road.

A large meeting of the citizens of Albany was convened, and upon the arrival of the Massachusetts delegation they were introduced by Samuel Stevens, Esq., and addresses were made to the meeting by Messrs. Bliss, Derby, Degrand, and Walker. The meeting was very enthusiastic, and strong resolutions were passed unanimously pledging a vigorous prosecution of the work.

Subsequently a proposition was submitted by the Albany directors that the Western company should construct and manage the road, and on the 23d of April, 1840, a contract was executed in three parts by the city of Albany and the two railroad companies, by which the city agreed to subscribe $650,000 to the stock of the Albany company, and the said company agreed to intrust the construction and control of the road to the Western company under certain restrictions and regulations. The Western company, on their part, agreed to construct and open the road as soon as it could be conveniently done.*

Upon the consummation of this desirable arrangement the Western company appointed John Childe as resident and George W. Whistler as consulting engineer, and immediately proceeded to make a careful examination and survey of various routes from the State line to Albany, which resulted in the recommendation of the engineers for an entirely new line, the Hudson and Berkshire line being considered as wholly inadequate to accommodate the anticipated business of the road.

The route recommended was $38\frac{22\frac{4}{5}}{1000}$ miles in length, and involved the construction of a tunnel at Canaan of 600 feet. The estimated cost of the line was \$1,412,804, and the maximum grades were from 40 to $44\frac{8\frac{8}{10}}{1000}$ feet for nine miles.

The Hudson and Berkshire road was subsequently purchased by the Western company upon its sale by the State of New York, which held a mortgage of $250,000 upon it for assistance rendered in its construction.

During the year 1840 the road was pushed rapidly forward. The unfinished portions east of the Connecticut River were completed, and the foundations for the bridge over the river were laid. West of the river 53 miles were graded, 35 miles of rail laid, and work on the mountain division well advanced. 22 miles of the Albany road—from Greenbush to Chatham Four Corners—were under contract, and work was progressing upon 12 miles of it.

As work progressed the company learned many things which had not been anticipated, and for which the country furnished no precedent as a guide.

In 1839 there occurred severe floods, which necessitated the raising of the track for many miles along the valley of the Agawam River, together with the enlargement of bridges and culverts, and it was found that the work on excavations, rock-cuts, and embankments would be largely in excess of estimates. Upon making up the accounts in December, 1840, it was found that the excess of expenditures over the original estimates was,—

On the Eastern division.....	$152,240.78
And on the Western.....	891,614.17
Making a total of.....	$1,043,854.95

The operations of the company were considerably embarrassed by investigations set on foot in the Legislature touching its management, salaries of officers, rates of fare, etc.

A statement of the condition of the company in January, 1840, showed,—

Cost.—East of the river.....	$2,016,969.90
West of the river.....	3,218,056.78
Albany road.....	1,412,804.00
	$6,647,830.68

To meet this the following means were provided to Dec. 31, 1840:

Two grants of State scrip.....	{	$2,100,000
City of Albany scrip, nett.....		1,200,000
Eight assessments on $3,000,000 of stock.....		900,000
		1,200,000
		$5,400,000

leaving a deficiency of about $1,250,000 to be provided for.

Another application to the Legislature became necessary, and was accordingly made on the 4th of February, 1841.

The subject was carefully considered by the Legislature in all its bearings, and, after much debate and many different propositions and amendments, a bill was finally passed on the 12th of March, 1841, granting the credit of the State to the amount of $700,000 in further aid of the road.

* For the particulars of this contract see Historical Memoir of the Western Railroad, by Hon. George Bliss, 1863.

This last legislation virtually assured the completion of the road, and during the year 1841 it was rapidly forwarded. Twenty-eight miles of the line west of the river were opened to Chester on the 24th of May, and the whole line from the river to the State line was finished on the 4th of October. The bridge over the Connecticut River was completed on the 4th of July of the same year,* and thus early in October the entire road from Worcester to the New York line was ready for use.

That part of the Albany road between Albany and the junction of the Hudson and Berkshire roads, at Chatham Four Corners, was opened for use on the 21st of December, 1841, and trains commenced running between Boston and Albany on that day.

In commemoration of the completion of this important road, then the longest line in the Union, the municipal authorities of Albany and Boston arranged for an interchange of visits; and, on the 27th of December, the authorities of Boston, together with many gentlemen from other cities and towns to the number of 125, took the train for Albany, resting between two and three hours at Springfield, and arriving at Albany at 7.30 P.M., where they were received by the authorities and citizens, and escorted by the military to their lodgings.

On the next morning the Eastern delegation was received at the City Hall, and subsequently visited the Common Council rooms, where the members were formally welcomed by the mayor. In the evening dinner was served at Stanwix Hall to about 300 guests, the mayor presiding, who delivered a congratulatory address, which was responded to by Mr. Chapman, mayor of Boston. Addresses were also made by other gentlemen.

On the 29th of December, in response to an invitation from the Massachusetts people, a train bearing about 250 gentlemen from Albany and vicinity visited Boston, arriving about 7.30 P.M. They were welcomed by a large concourse of people, and escorted to the United States Hotel.

On the next day they visited various places of interest, and at 5.30 P.M. sat down to a sumptuous repast at the United States Hotel, presided over by Mayor Chapman. Speeches were made by the mayors of the two cities and sundry other gentlemen, including Governor Davis, of Massachusetts, and the occasion was among the memorable ones of the Puritan city. The Albany delegation returned home on the 31st.

Upon the completion of the entire road, in December, 1841, Mr. Thomas B. Wales resigned the presidency of the company, which position he had held since 1836. Mr. George Bliss also resigned his office as agent of the company, and on the 1st of March, 1842, was chosen president, John Howard, Esq., having acted as president pro tem. since the resignation of Mr. Wales.

On the 4th of March, 1842, the respective executive officers and Legislatures of the States of New York and Massachusetts, upon invitation of the board of directors, met at Springfield to exchange congratulations and reciprocate courtesies on the occasion of the permanent union of the two States by the iron rail. On the day named the Boston party arrived at Springfield at 12.30 P.M., and the Albany party at 1.30 P.M., and both bodies were escorted to the Masonic Hall, where Governors Davis and Seward were introduced by the Hon. Josiah Quincy, Jr., president of the Massachusetts Senate, who presided, when Governor Davis welcomed the delegation from New York to the State of Massachusetts in an appropriate address, to which Governor Seward responded in his usual happy manner.

An hour or more was spent in introductions and social intercourse, when the assemblage repaired to the town-hall, where the members partook of a grand dinner.

President Quincy, presiding at the banquet, gave as a toast, "The Western Railroad Corporation," which was responded to by Mr. Bliss, president of the company, who closed with a sentiment to the State of New York, which was responded to by Mr. Paige, acting president of the New York Senate.

Speeches were also made by Mr. Walley, speaker of the House of Representatives of Massachusetts, Dr. Taylor, speaker of the New York Assembly, and Gen. Root, the father of the New York Senate, who gave, "The happy union of the sturgeon and the codfish; may their joyous nuptials efface the melancholy recollections of the departure of the Connecticut River salmon!"

The independent road of the Albany and West Stockbridge company, between Chatham Four Corners and the State line, was completed on the 12th of September, 1842.

The following data are from the report of Jan. 4, 1843:

The length of the Western road, from its junction with the Boston and Worcester road, at Worcester, to the east abutment of the Connecticut River bridge, 54 miles, 3680 feet; thence to the State line, 63 miles, 568 feet; making a total of 117 miles, 4248 feet. The Albany and West Stockbridge road, from the State line to the face of the Greenbush dock, 38 miles, 1180 feet. Total, 156 miles, 148 feet.

Total from the passenger depot in Boston to the Hudson River, 200 miles, 468 feet.

Total from passenger depot in Boston to Albany Shore, 200 miles, 883 feet.

Elevations above base-line of Worcester road on the mill-dam: Boston: † Western depot, at Worcester, 474 feet; Charleton summit, 909 feet; depot at Springfield, 71 feet; Washington summit, 1456 feet; track at State line, 916 feet; summit at Canaan, 955 feet; depot at Greenbush, N. Y., 26 feet.

The heaviest grades include about 13 miles, varying from 74 to 83 feet. The highest grades on the Albany and West Stockbridge road are 40 to 44 $\frac{8}{10}$ feet for about 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles.

Length of straight line on the Western road, about 63 miles; on the Albany, about 18 miles.

The entire cost of the Western road to Jan. 1, 1843, paid out and estimated or contracted for, was $5,814,807.52; of the Albany and West Stockbridge road, $1,751,984.05. Total for both roads, $7,566,791.57.

The mountain division of 13 $\frac{8}{10}$ miles cost \$980,000, or over \$70,000 per mile; and a single mile cost \$219,929.87.

The summit section, in Washington, 1 $\frac{8}{10}$ miles, cost \$241,-311.39, or per mile, \$134,000.

A curious phenomenon (which has since become quite common, especially on the Michigan Central and Baltimore and Ohio roads, in Michigan and Indiana) was the sinking of about 1100 feet of the road-bed in the Richmond swamp to the depth of from 75 to 90 feet below the natural surface.

The first locomotives used on the road were seven of the Winans (Baltimore) manufacture, purchased upon the recommendation of Maj. Whistler, at a cost of $11,000 each. ‡

Maj. Whistler entered the service of the Russian government in June, 1842, as superintendent of the great St. Petersburg and Moscow Railway, 420 miles in length.

The Winans engines caused a considerable controversy to arise respecting the merits of various manufactures of locomotives, and they were gradually superseded by others, so that the last one disappeared from the road before 1850.

The total earnings of the road for a series of years were as follows: 1842, $512,688.28; 1843, $573,882.51; 1844, $753,-752.72; 1845, $813,480.15.

† These elevations are given in round numbers, leaving off fractions of feet, or adding when over one-half.

‡ During the construction of the road the company had used some of the engines of the Lowell Locks and Canal Company.

* The first bridge cost $131,612.12. The new iron structure, erected in 1872 cost $262,000. The bridge over the Hudson at Albany, built about 1868, cost $227,606.83.

Between 1843 and 1850 the value of the stock of the company fluctuated between 40 $\frac{3}{4}$ and 114 $\frac{3}{4}$.

Up to the time when Maj. Whistler resigned his position, in 1842, he had filled the offices of engineer and superintendent. Upon his resignation the directors ordered that the duties of engineer and superintendent should devolve upon the president, thereby concentrating in one individual the duties of president, agent, engineer, and superintendent.

In September, 1842, upon the urgent request of the president, the board of directors appointed James Barnes, acting master of transportation, as engineer, with authority to assume certain duties as superintendent.

On the 21st of March, 1843, Edmund Dwight was elected president, and his salary fixed at $500 per annum. On the 7th of April following, James Barnes was elected superintendent and engineer, the president having been relieved of the duties of those offices. In 1844, George Bliss was again chosen president, and by a vote of the board was also made general agent of the company. He was also re-elected in 1845.

The Hartford and Springfield road was opened in the latter part of the year 1844, and the road between Springfield and Northampton in the following year. These roads added considerably to the traffic of the Western road.

In 1845 two dividends of three per cent. each were made, besides paying into the sinking fund \$50,000, and the stock of the company advanced in the same year from 90 $\frac{1}{2}$ to 104 $\frac{1}{2}$.

The Pittsfield and North Adams Railroad Company was chartered in March, 1842, revised in 1845, the capital subscribed and the road built in 1845-46. The work was done by the Western company, which took a lease of the new line for thirty years, agreeing to pay an annual rental of 6 per cent. upon the cost. This road was not a paying one, but has since been connected with the Vermont system at Bennington.

On the 3d of January, 1846, after a service of ten years, President Bliss notified the company of his intention to withdraw as a candidate for re-election, on account of the state of his health. Mr. Addison Gilmore was chosen in his stead in February following.

Upon the organization of the new board in February, 1846, an old controversy with the Worcester company was amicably adjusted, and satisfactory arrangements were made by the two companies by the signing of a contract to run three years.

The affairs of the Western company were in a flourishing condition at the close of 1846. The total earnings of the road for that year were $954,417.89, and the expenses $412,679.80. Net earnings, $541,738.09.

By an act of the Legislature passed April 24, 1847, the company was authorized to increase its capital stock to an amount not exceeding $1,600,000. This step was taken with a view to enable the company to increase its facilities in the way of an additional track, new engines, cars, etc. The increase, under this act, brought the capital up to $4,000,000.

The total receipts for 1847 were $1,325,336.06, and the expenses $676,689.75, leaving net earnings $648,646.31. The dividends amounted to $302,000.

During 1847, 20 ten-ton engines and 100 freight-cars were added to the equipment, and 28 twenty-ton engines and 400 freight-cars were ordered, and about 12 miles of second track were constructed. The market price of the stock had ruled during the year at from 99 to 114 $\frac{3}{4}$.

At the beginning of 1848, Hon. Josiah Quiney retired from the treasurership after a service of twelve years, and Stephen Fairbanks, Esq., of Boston, was chosen to succeed him. Ansel Phelps, Jr., of Springfield, was appointed solicitor.

By an act of the Legislature passed May 9, 1848, the company was further authorized to increase its capital stock to the amount of $1,000,000, to be appropriated to construction and for the purchase of engines and cars.

During the year 1848, 32 miles of second track were laid with seventy-pound rail, and 400 freight-cars and 25 engines of twenty-three tons each were added to the equipment, making a complement of 70 engines. A large freight-building was also erected at Greenbush, costing, with land, tracks, etc., $115,000.

The gross earnings of the road for 1848 were $1,332,068.29, and the expenses $652,357.11, leaving the net earnings $679,711.18. The heaviest receipts of the road from the time of its opening, in 1841, to 1862, were in the year 1856, when they reached a total of $2,115,820.05. The receipts of 1862 were $2,095,922.50.

On the 5th of July, 1861, a serious fire at East Albany destroyed all the station-buildings, one of the bridges leading to the island, and 67 freight-cars, involving a loss, exclusive of freight-cars, of $113,143.76. The buildings were immediately rebuilt.

At the close of 1862 there remained about 40 miles of the second track to be laid between Boston and Albany. The double track was completed through in 1868.

The long-continued difficulties between the Western and the Boston and Worcester Railroad companies, regarding passenger and freight rates and the pro rata division of the earnings of the two roads, operated to diminish the business of the lines, and was the subject of various arrangements and compromises, and many attempts were made to adjust and settle the questions arising; but no permanent or satisfactory solution was reached until Dec. 1, 1867, when the two lines were consolidated under a new corporation, which from that date took the name of the Boston and Albany Railroad Company.

In addition to the main line the company operate the following roads and branches: Grand Junction Railroad, Newton Lower Falls Branch, Brookline Branch, Saxonville Branch, Milford Branch, Milbury Branch, North Brookfield Branch, Spencer Branch, Ware River Road,* Pittsfield and North Adams Road, and the Chatham and Hudson Road. The Ware River Road is operated under a lease for 999 years.

The present capital of the company is \$20,000,000. The equipment of the road consists of 243 locomotives, averaging 29 $\frac{16}{100}$ tons each, 184 passenger cars, 55 baggage and postal, 4907 merchandise, 517 other, and 11 snow-plows.

The following table shows the cost of the road to Sept. 30, 1878:

Graduation, masonry, and bridging.....	$7,516,075.08
Superstructure, including iron.....	5,795,293.04
Land, land damages, and fencing.....	5,173,713.61
Passenger and freight stations, wood-sheds, and water-stations.....	2,947,617.89
Engine-houses, car-sheds, and turn-tables.....	516,442.53
Machine-shops, machinery, and tools.....	777,276.23
Engineering, interest, agencies, salaries, etc.....	1,642,298.12
Locomotives and snow-plows.....	1,215,000.00
Passenger, mail, and baggage cars.....	488,000.00
Merchandise cars.....	1,442,400.00
Total.....	$27,514,116.50

TRIAL BALANCE, SEPTEMBER 30, 1878.

Cost of road and equipment.....	$27,514,116.50	Capital stock.....	$20,000,000.00
Cost of South Boston property.....	505,098.22	Seven per cent. bonds.....	5,000,000.00
Hudson River bridges..	475,485.00	Six per cent. bonds.....	2,000,000.00
Materials.....	1,130,944.07	Unclaimed dividends and interest.....	33,685.50
Real estate and land.....	119,678.96	Dividend No. 20, due Nov. 15, 1877.....	800,000.00
Ledger balances due from individuals and corporations.....	495,483.83	Dividend No. 2, P. & N. A. R. R., due Jan. 1, 1878.....	11,250.00
West Stockbridge R. R. stock.....	13,000.00	Dividend No. 8, Ware R. R., due Jan. 1, 1878.....	26,250.00
Cash.....	549,874.99	Notes payable.....	507,434.75
	$30,803,680.67	Profit and loss.....	2,425,060.42
		Total.....	$30,803,680.67

The gross earnings of the road for the year ending Sept. 30, 1878, were $6,633,533.41; expenses for same period, $4,413,997.27; net balance, $2,219,536.14.

The following statement shows the rapid increase in the quantity of grain of all kinds received into the East Boston elevator during the last five years: 1873-74, 1,508,083 bushels; 1874-75, 2,588,227 bushels; 1875-76, 4,406,785 bushels; 1876-77, 4,240,501 bushels; 1877-78, 9,763,280 bushels.

* This line runs from Palmer up the Ware River, and through Worcester County. It was incorporated May 24, 1851, to build a road from Palmer to Templeton, in Worcester County. The road connects with the Fitchburg Railway at Baldwinville.

A severe storm and flood on the 10th of December, 1878, caused considerable damage to the road in the valley of the Agawam River, the total loss to track, bridges, etc., being estimated at $20,000. There was also serious interruption to travel and traffic for a number of days.

The presidents of the Western Railroad company, and of the Boston and Albany, since the consolidation with the Boston and Worcester company, have been as below: Thomas B. Wales, of Boston, from January, 1836, to February, 1842. John Howard, pro tem., two months, 1842. George Bliss, from March, 1842, to 1843. Edmund Dwight, 1843-44, one year. George Bliss, one year, 1844-45. Addison Gilmore, 1846 to latter part of 1850, when he died. John Gardner, pro tem., 1850-51. Captain Wm. H. Swift, 1851 to 1854. Chester W. Chapin, of Springfield, 1854 to 1877. D. Waldo Lincoln, of Worcester, the present incumbent.

Present Officers of the Corporation.—Directors, D. W. Lincoln, C. W. Chapin, Ignatius Sargent, Moses Kimball, John Cummings, Henry Colt, Geo. O. Crocker, Edward B. Gillett, J. H. Chadwick, Charles L. Wood, J. N. Dunham, D. N. Skillings, Francis B. Hayes. D. Waldo Lincoln, President, Boston; William Bliss, General Manager, Springfield; C. O. Russell, General Superintendent, Springfield; Walter H. Barnes, Assistant Superintendent, Boston; J. B. Chapin, Assistant Superintendent Albany; C. E. Stevens, Treasurer, Boston; J. A. Rumrill, Secretary and Clerk, Springfield; M. E. Barber, Auditor, Springfield; H. J. Hayden, General Freight Agent, Boston; J. M. Griggs, General Ticket Agent, Springfield; A. S. Bryant, Cashier, Springfield; Albert Holt, Paymaster, Springfield.

THE CONNECTICUT RIVER RAILROAD.

The first link in this line was that portion between Springfield and Northampton. A company known as "The Northampton and Springfield Railroad Corporation" was chartered on the 1st of March, 1842. The leading corporators were John Clarke, Sam'l L. Hinckley, Stephen Brewer, Jonathan H. Butler, and Winthrop Hillyer. The capital stock was limited to $400,000, but this was increased by an act of the Legislature, Feb. 23, 1844, to $500,000.

On the 25th of February, 1845, Henry W. Clapp, Ralph Williams, Henry W. Cushman, and associates were incorporated as "The Greenfield and Northampton Railroad Company," with authority to construct a road between the above-mentioned towns. The capital stock was limited to $500,000. These two corporations were consolidated on equal terms in July, 1845, and took the name of "The Connecticut River Railroad Company." An act of the Legislature passed March 21, 1845, authorized "The Northampton and Springfield Company" to change its route to the one where the road now runs. "The Connecticut River Company" was authorized on the 16th of April, 1846, to extend its road northward from Greenfield to the Vermont State line, and to increase its stock by an amount not exceeding $500,000.

The road was opened from Springfield to Cabotville (now Chicopee) on the 28th of February, 1845, and to Northampton on the 13th of December of the same year. On the 17th of August, 1846, it was opened to South Deerfield, and on the 23d of November following to Greenfield. The branch from Chicopee to Chicopee Falls was completed September 8 of the same year.

The earnings of the road from the first opening to January 1, 1846, were $13,521; expenditures same time, $5519. The receipts for 1846 were $58,246.99; expenses, $21,752.43. Receipts for 1847, $123,951.61. Receipts for 1848, $165,242.13; and the number of passengers carried was 299,865; tons of merchandise, 101,314.

The road was completed to the south line of Vermont on the 1st of January, 1849, a distance of 52 miles from Springfield. The total cost of the road to that date was $1,798,825.

On the 7th of December, 1849, the company entered into an agreement with the Ashuelot Railroad Company, of New Hampshire, chartered to construct a line from the Cheshire Railroad, in Keene, N. H., to the west shore of the Connecticut River, in South Vernon, Vt., by which the Connecticut River company should operate the Ashuelot road for a period of ten years, paying 7 per cent. per annum on the cost of the road. The annual rental was subsequently fixed at $30,000. The Connecticut company commenced running cars over this road Jan. 27, 1851. The company is still running this line under a special contract, and is also operating the Vermont Valley road from Brattleboro' to Bellows Falls, as agent. The company also has a branch of 3½ miles from Mount Tom Station to Easthampton.

The total cost of the road and equipments has been $2,637,976.52, the present capital stock is $2,100,000, and the funded debt $250,000; surplus, $578,886.75.

The following table shows the annual receipts and expenses of the road from 1848 to 1878:

Receipts.		Expenses.		Receipts.		Expenses.
1849.....	$192,072.49	$95,090.93	1865.....	$533,108.96	$364,403.89
1850.....	191,587.12	104,149.18	1866.....	617,112.88	439,821.75
1851.....	199,894.83	102,185.45	1867.....	629,165.01	460,001.39
1852.....	229,004.98	113,154.02	1868.....	619,348.69	425,389.98
1853.....	258,220.89	126,122.68	1869.....	649,196.49	446,354.29
1854.....	277,770.71	144,828.57	1870.....	571,972.32	374,797.81
1855.....	286,562.55	166,067.07	1871.....	725,391.83	526,234.43
1856.....	288,663.71	163,045.72	1872.....	733,368.37	517,886.95
1857.....	267,710.57	156,667.50	1873.....	751,303.74	527,321.10
1858.....	238,390.37	125,293.06	1874.....	706,405.45	491,208.97
1859.....	271,592.15	133,367.00	1875.....	649,249.26	419,679.65
1860.....	306,264.68	143,637.78	1876.....	589,536.86	382,269.44
1861.....	250,836.00	127,880.39	1877.....	573,302.63	376,983.92
1862.....	268,152.15	134,297.86	1878.....	584,070.50	399,750.44
1863.....	344,194.19	176,185.72
1864.....	472,320.85	306,389.07
			Total*.....	$6,534,397.45	$4,462,487.00

TABLE SHOWING BUSINESS OF STATIONS FOR YEAR ENDING SEPT. 30, 1878.

STATIONS.	Tons of Freight.		Number of Passengers.
	Forwarded.	Received.	Forwarded.	Received.
Springfield.....	139,758	96,225	287,092	332,147
Brightwood.....			23,216	24,076
Chicopee.....	8,062	22,661	138,463	115,521
Chicopee Falls.....	4,316	10,305	57,743	44,548
Williamsett.....	97	473	27,304	24,851
Holyoke.....	20,890	74,115	159,269	149,653
Smith's Ferry.....	2,931	456	4,989	5,394
Mount Tom.....	13,936	354	9,001	9,195
Easthampton.....	1,682	7,402	19,806	19,838
Northampton.....	5,186	17,689	71,269	72,597
Hatfield.....	1,218	817	6,214	7,261
North Hatfield.....	1,255	1,135	2,388	1,785
Whately.....	547	521	2,139	2,033
South Deerfield.....	2,252	3,904	9,171	9,231
Deerfield.....	1,892	1,976	4,635	4,393
Greenfield.....	12,947	24,535	32,837	33,794
Bernardston.....	1,072	1,118	6,045	6,915
South Vernon.....	87,928	32,028	34,516	33,224
Hinsdale.....	1,454	6,454	8,517	8,007
Ashuelot.....	3,565	1,793	5,316	5,272
Winchester.....	2,351	1,757	8,322	8,167
Westport.....	874	125	2,819	2,936
Swanzy.....	1,139	861	5,315	6,078
Keene.....	7,548	16,196	20,523	19,984
Total.....	322,900	322,900	946,900	946,900

The presidents of the company since its organization, in their order, have been Erastus Hopkins, of Northampton; Henry W. Clapp, of Greenfield; Chester W. Chapin, of Springfield; Henry W. Clapp, again; Erastus Hopkins, again; Daniel L. Harris, of Springfield.

Present Officers.—Directors: Daniel L. Harris, Springfield; I. M. Spelman, Edward A. Dana, Boston; Charles S. Sargent, Brookline; Chester W. Chapin, Springfield; Oscar Edwards, Northampton; W. B. Washburn, Greenfield; Roland Mather, Hartford, Conn.; S. M. Waite, Brattleboro', Vt. Daniel L. Harris, President, Springfield; John Mulligan, Superintendent, Springfield; Seth Hunt, Clerk and Treasurer, Springfield; John Whittelsey, Auditor, Northampton; Wm. H. Stearns, Master Mechanic, Springfield; H. E. Howard, General Freight Agent, Springfield; F. D. Heywood, General Ticket Agent, Springfield; Geo. E. Frink, Cashier and Paymaster, Springfield; C. H. Cram, General Freight Clerk, Springfield; Wm. E. Hill, Lost Freight and Baggage Agent, Springfield.

* These sums include the earnings of the Ashuelot road for about 11 years.

THE NEW YORK, NEW HAVEN AND HARTFORD RAILWAY.

This line extends from Springfield, via Hartford and New Haven, to New York City, and is made up of a consolidation of several lines, among which were the Springfield and Hartford and the Hartford and New Haven roads. The Springfield and Hartford road was opened in 1844, and passengers took steamer at New Haven, on the Long Island Sound boats, for New York. The completion of the New York and New Haven line opened a through route from Boston to New York via Springfield, and it now constitutes one of the most important lines in the State of Connecticut.

THE NEW LONDON NORTHERN RAILROAD.

This line was originally chartered by the Connecticut Legislature in May, 1847, as "The New London, Willimantic and Springfield Railroad Company." The northern terminus was subsequently changed to Palmer. The Massachusetts Legislature in 1848 authorized the company to extend its line from the State line, a distance of nine miles, to the line of the Western Railroad at Palmer depot.

The road was opened from New London to Willimantic, a distance of 30 miles, in November, 1849; to Stafford Springs, in March, 1850; and to Palmer, on the 20th of September, 1850; a total distance of 66 miles. The original cost of the road was $1,524,329.66, and of the portion in Massachusetts, $207,201.53.

THE AMHERST AND BELCHERTOWN RAILROAD COMPANY was incorporated in 1851, with authority to construct a line from Palmer, through the towns of Belchertown, Amherst, Leverett, Sunderland, and Montague, to the Vermont and Massachusetts Railroad, at or near Montague. The company was organized June 30, 1851. Luke Sweetser was chosen President, and John S. Adams Clerk and Treasurer.

The road was opened from Palmer to Amherst, May 9, 1853, and was leased to the New London, Willimantic and Palmer company for ten years, but, the arrangement proving unsatisfactory, the contract was dissolved Nov. 5, 1853, and the road was from that date to 1864 operated by the Amherst and Belchertown company. The cost of this road between Palmer and Amherst was $280,000.

In 1860 the name of the New London, Willimantic and Palmer company was changed to the present one, and in 1864 the latter bought out the Amherst and Belchertown road, and extended the line to a connection with the Vermont and Massachusetts road, at Grout's Corners, in 1866.

The principal stations on this line in Massachusetts are Monson, Palmer, Belchertown, Amherst, Montague, and Miller's Falls. The road forms an important route, and furnishes valuable facilities to the eastern portions of the three river-counties.

The consolidated line, extending from New London, Conn., to South Vernon, Vt., is operated under lease by the Vermont Central Railway Company.

THE NEW HAVEN AND NORTHAMPTON RAILROAD.

This corporation is the result of a consolidation of several independent companies in Massachusetts and Connecticut.

THE HAMPDEN RAILROAD COMPANY was chartered in 1852, with a capital of $175,000, with authority to build a road from Westfield to the State line in Granby, Conn.

THE NORTHAMPTON AND WESTFIELD COMPANY was chartered in the same year with a capital of $200,000, for the purpose of continuing the first-named road from Westfield to Northampton. The two roads were united under the name of in 1853. The line was put in operation to Northampton in 1856, and extended to its present northern terminus in 1868. The New Haven and Northampton Canal Company was authorized in 1853 to dispose of corporate property to the Hampshire and Hampden Railroad Company.

THE HAMPSHIRE AND HAMPDEN RAILROAD COMPANY

The Holyoke and Westfield road was built, under the Massachusetts laws, to accommodate the manufacturing interests of the former place, in 1871. The capital was mostly subscribed in that city. It is operated by the New Haven and Northampton company, which furnishes ten extra freight-trains daily. It forms a valuable competing line with the New York, New Haven and Hartford road.

THE CONNECTICUT CENTRAL RAILROAD.

This line is made up of the Springfield and New London Railroad, which was organized under a general law of Massachusetts, in 1874, ostensibly with the view of connecting the points mentioned, and the first-named road was chartered in 1868, and obtained a supplementary charter in 1869. The road extends from Hartford, Conn., to Springfield, Mass., and has a branch in Connecticut from Melrose to Rockville, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles.

The road was built in 1875, and put in operation in January, 1876. The length of the road is 30 miles. The whole line is operated by the Connecticut Central. It connects at Hartford with the Valley Railway, to Saybrook, at the mouth of the Connecticut, and at Springfield with the Athol Railroad.

The presidents of the Connecticut Central company have been J. W. Phelps, from organization to 1876, and D. D. Warren, the present incumbent. Gardon Bill has officiated as president of the Springfield and New London road since its organization.

THE SPRINGFIELD, ATHOL AND NORTHEASTERN RAILROAD.

This road was originally the Athol and Enfield Railroad, chartered about 1864-65. The first portion was constructed from Athol to a connection with the New London Northern road at Barrett's, from whence the company's trains ran to Palmer, four miles, over the New London Northern track.

In 1872 the company obtained a supplementary charter, changing the name of the corporation to the present one, and authorizing them to build a line from Barrett's to Springfield, about 17 miles, which was constructed in 1873. The city of Springfield holds about $300,000 of this company's stock.

The officers of this company are: President, Willis Phelps; Superintendent, H. W. Phelps; Treasurer, T. H. Goodspeed; General Freight and Ticket Agent, E. M. Bartlett.

THE HOOSAC TUNNEL LINE.

This is the most important line of railway passing through the northern part of the State. The component lines which make the complete road from Boston to the Hudson River at Troy are the Fitchburg Railroad, from Boston to Greenfield, a distance of 106 miles; the Troy and Greenfield road, from Greenfield to North Adams, 37 miles, including the tunnel, which is the property of the State; and the Troy and Boston road, from North Adams to the Hudson River, 48 miles; making a total distance of 191 miles from tide-water to tide-water again.

The height of the centre of the tunnel above tide-water is something over 800 feet.

These lines, or those portions traversing Franklin County, follow very closely the valleys of Miller's and the Deerfield, or Pocomtuck, Rivers, nearly from the eastern to the western extremity of the county; passing through or near the towns of Orange, Wendell, Erving, Montague, Deerfield, Greenfield, Shelburne, Conway, Buckland, Charlemont, and Rowe; and giving about 50 miles of continuous track within the county. There are sections of heavy and expensive work on this road in many places, but the advantages possessed by the tunnel route over every other will be best understood by the statement that the highest point in the Hoosac tunnel is 612 feet nearer the sea-level than the summit on the Boston and Albany route.

The line, as originally surveyed and located, crossed Green River in the town of Deerfield, three-fourths of a mile from the business centre of Greenfield village, which place was accommodated until about 1876 by backing up the trains. At the latter date the track was changed and laid through the southern portion of the village, describing a grand curve, and crossing the former track a mile and a half southwest of the village, and over a mile west of the old bridge over Green River. The distance is somewhat increased, but the village is much better accommodated, and the grade reduced from about 70 feet to 26 feet per mile.

The Troy and Greenfield road was chartered in 1848, and organized in 1849. Ground was broken on the 8th of January, 1851, under an appropriation of $25,000 made for "experiments on the tunnel." Application was also made in that year for aid from the State, but without success, and again in 1853 with a similar result.

In 1854 a third application was successful, and State aid was granted to the extent of $2,000,000. The actual commencement of work on the tunnel proper was in the summer of 1856, when Herman Haupt, an eminent engineer, offered to undertake the job; and on the 30th of July of that year a contract was entered into with Messrs. H. Haupt & Co.

From that date until 1861 work was vigorously pushed so long as the funds held out, but in the summer of that year they became exhausted, and work was suspended. In September, 1862, the tunnel was transferred to the State, the work at that time having progressed to the extent of half a mile into the mountain.

The State entered upon the work vigorously, and continued it until 1868, when the expense had become so enormous that the people became alarmed, and the State finally abandoned it.

On the 24th of December, 1868, the Messrs. Shanley, of Montreal, Canada, contracted for the completion of the tunnel for the sum of $4,594,368, and whatever interest might accrue under the contract. Under their management the work steadily progressed to completion early in the year 1874.

The headings east of the central shaft met on the 12th of December, 1872, and the western headings on the 27th of November, 1873, amid great rejoicings.

First and last the labor was continued through a period of about eighteen years, at a total cost, including interest, of about $17,000,000.* The total length of the tunnel which passes under the Hoosac Mountain—a portion of the Green Mountain range—is 25,586 feet, or 4 miles and 3666 feet. The tunnel is 26 feet in width and the same in height. The highest point of the mountain above the tunnel in the western part is 1718 feet, and of the summit east of the centre, 1429 feet. The central shaft, running from the top of the mountain to the tunnel below, is 1037 feet in vertical depth. The grade of the track within the tunnel is 26.4 feet per mile, and the summit is near the centre, with an equal grade on either side. The drainage is perfect.

The character of the various rock-formations encountered in the prosecution of the work, commencing at the eastern entrance and going west, reads as follows, according to a diagram of the work: "Talcose slate, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile; mica-schist, about $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile; mica-schist with quartz veins, about one mile; mica-schist and gneiss, about $\frac{2}{3}$ of a mile; granite and conglomerate, about $\frac{1}{4}$ of a mile; mica-schist, $\frac{2}{3}$ of a mile; gneiss, $\frac{1}{4}$ of a mile; and mica-schist, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile."

The road was opened from Greenfield to the tunnel, Aug.

17, 1868; the first construction-train passed through the tunnel Feb. 9, 1875, and the first passenger-train, April 9th of the same year.

This great line possesses uncommon and remarkable facilities for the handling of heavy freight at its termini in Boston and Troy. Its arrangements for transferring grain, stock, and merchandise to and from cars, vessels, and canal-boats are unsurpassed, while its dockage-fronts and storage accommodations on tide-water are of the best possible description.

The expense of moving heavy trains over that great natural barrier, the Green Mountain range, is reduced to a minimum by the completion, after years of labor and many millions of expense, of the great Hoosac tunnel, which is in some respects the most remarkable and important tunnel in the world.† It is on the line of the greatest commercial activity on the continent, as well as lying in the exact track between the grain-producing region of the Northwest and the grain-consuming millions of New England and Europe. The amount of its business is very large, and, in the line of freights, rapidly increasing, and its importance is probably only beginning to be comprehended.

THE VERMONT AND MASSACHUSETTS RAILROAD.

This road, which extends from Fitchburg to Greenfield and Brattleboro', Vt., was chartered in 1844, and opened from Fitchburg to Athol, Jan. 1, 1848; to Brattleboro' via Northfield and South Vernon, in February, 1849; and to Greenfield via Deerfield, in 1850. It is now known as the Fitchburg line.

The portion of this line lying between Grout's Corners and the Vermont line is operated under a lease by the Vermont Central Railroad Company, in connection with the New London Northern road. Its termini, Brattleboro', Vt., and Greenfield, Mass., are thriving and important towns; and the connections of the road at these points and others with the great tunnel line and the Vermont and New Hampshire systems are very important factors in its general business.

This company operates the short line, or branch, from Greenfield to Turner's Falls, or, more properly speaking, from the switch on the Deerfield River to the Falls. There is a probability of a line being eventually constructed from Turner's Falls to Miller's Falls.

CHAPTER XXIII.

POPULATION—INDUSTRY AND WEALTH—EDUCATIONAL.

THE population of Massachusetts from 1776 to 1875, according to the colonial, State, and United States censuses, has been as follows: 1776, 295,080; 1790, 378,787; 1800, 422,845; 1810, 472,040; 1820, 523,287; 1830, 610,408; 1840, 737,700; 1850, 994,514; 1855, 1,132,369; 1860, 1,231,066; 1865, 1,267,030; 1870, 1,457,351; 1875, 1,651,912.

The number of inhabitants per square mile by the last census is shown to be 212, being the greatest of any State in the Union.

The population of Massachusetts cities in 1875 was as follows: Boston, 341,919; Lowell, 49,688; Worcester, 49,317; Cambridge, 47,838; Fall River, 45,340; Lawrence, 34,916; Lynn, 32,600; Springfield, 31,053; Salem, 25,958; New Bedford, 25,895; Somerville, 21,868; Chelsea, 20,737; Taunton, 20,445; Gloucester, 16,754; Holyoke, 16,260; Newton, 16,105; Haverhill, 14,628; Newburyport, 13,323; Fitchburg, 12,289.

The following tables show the population of the three river-counties by towns since 1776:

* An estimate of the cost of a tunnel at this point for the passage of a canal, made in 1826, was $920,832.

† This tunnel lies wholly within the town of Florida, Berkshire Co., but its eastern portal opens on the west bank of the Deerfield River, which divides the counties of Berkshire and Franklin.

COMPARATIVE CENSUS RETURNS FOR ONE HUNDRED YEARS.

HAMPSHIRE COUNTY, MASS.

Towns.	Date of Organization.	Colonial Census.	United States Census.										State Census.	U. S. Census.	State Census.	U. S. Census.	State Census.
			1790.	1800.	1810.	1820.	1830.	1840.	1850.	1855.	1860.	1865.
Amherst	1759	915	1,233	1,358	1,469	1,917	2,031	2,550	3,057	2,937	3,206	3,415	4,035	3,937
Belebertown	1761	972	1,485	1,878	2,270	2,426	2,491	2,554	2,680	2,698	2,709	2,636	2,428	2,315
Chesterfield	1762	1,092	1,183	1,323	1,408	1,447	1,416	1,132	1,014	950	897	801	811	746
Cumington	1779	873	985	1,009	1,060	1,261	1,237	1,172	1,004	1,085	980	1,037	916
Easthampton	1785	457	586	660	712	745	717	1,342	1,386	1,916	2,869	3,620	3,972
Enfield	1816	873	1,056	976	1,036	1,036	1,025	997	1,023	1,065
Goshen	1781	681	724	652	632	617	556	512	471	439	411	368	349
Granby	1768	491	596	786	850	1,066	1,064	971	1,104	1,001	907	908	863	812
Greenwich	1754	890	1,045	1,460	1,225	778	813	824	838	803	699	648	665	606
Hadley	1661	681	882	1,073	1,217	1,461	1,686	1,814	1,986	1,928	2,165	2,240	2,301	2,125
Hatfield	1670	582	703	809	805	823	893	933	1,073	1,162	1,337	1,405	1,594	1,600
Huntington	1773	742	742	959	968	849	795	750	756	1,172	1,216	1,163	1,156	1,095
Middlefield	1783	608	877	822	755	720	1,717	737	677	748	727	728	603
Northampton	1654	1,790	1,628	2,190	2,631	2,854	3,613	3,750	5,278	5,819	6,788	7,925	10,160	11,108
Pelham	1742	729	1,040	1,144	1,185	1,278	904	956	983	789	748	737	673	633
Plainfield	1785	458	797	977	936	984	910	814	632	639	579	521	481
Prescott	1822	758	780	737	643	611	596	541	493
South Hadley	1753	584	759	891	902	1,047	1,185	1,458	2,495	2,051	2,277	2,099	2,840	3,370
Southampton	1753	740	829	983	1,171	1,160	1,244	1,157	1,060	1,195	1,130	1,216	1,159	1,050
Ware	1761	773	773	997	996	1,154	2,045	1,890	3,785	3,498	3,597	3,374	4,259	4,142
Westhampton	1778	683	756	793	896	918	759	602	670	608	636	587	556
Williamsburg	1771	534	1,049	1,176	1,122	1,087	1,236	1,309	1,537	1,831	2,095	1,976	2,159	2,029
Worthington	1768	639	1,116	1,223	1,391	1,276	1,179	1,197	1,134	1,112	1,041	925	860	818
Totals	12,154	18,823	22,885	24,553	26,487	30,254	30,897	35,732	35,485	37,823	39,269	44,388	44,821

FRANKLIN COUNTY, MASS.

Towns.	Date of Incorporation.	Colonial Census.	United States Census.										State Census.	U. S. Census.	State Census.	U. S. Census.	State Census.
			1790.	1800.	1810.	1820.	1830.	1840.	1850.	1855.	1860.	1865.
Ashfield	1765	628	1,459	1,741	1,809	1,748	1,732	1,610	1,394	1,342	1,302	1,221	1,180	1,190
Bernardstown	1762	607	691	780	811	912	918	992	937	908	968	902	961	991
Buckland	1779	718	1,041	1,097	1,037	1,039	1,084	1,056	1,614	1,702	1,922	1,946	1,921
Charlemont	1765	665	665	875	987	1,081	1,065	1,127	1,173	1,113	1,075	994	1,095	1,029
Coleraine	1761	566	1,417	2,014	2,016	1,961	1,877	1,971	1,785	1,604	1,798	1,726	1,742	1,699
Conway	1767	897	2,092	2,013	1,784	1,705	1,563	1,409	1,831	1,784	1,689	1,538	1,460	1,452
Deerfield	1682	836	1,330	1,531	1,570	1,868	2,003	1,912	2,421	2,766	3,073	3,038	3,632	3,414
Erving	1838	160	331	488	309	449	471	527	576	579	794
Gill	1793	700	762	800	804	798	754	732	683	635	653	673
Greenfield	1753	735	1,498	1,254	1,165	1,361	1,540	1,756	2,580	2,945	3,193	3,211	3,589	3,540
Hawley	1792	244	539	878	1,031	1,089	1,037	977	881	774	671	687	672	588
Heath	1785	379	604	917	1,122	1,199	895	803	741	661	642	613	545
Leverett	1774	293	524	711	769	857	939	875	948	982	964	914	877	831
Leyden	1809	989	1,095	1,009	974	796	632	716	653	606	592	518	524
Mooroe	1822	265	282	254	217	236	191	201	190
Montague	1753	575	906	1,222	934	1,074	1,152	1,255	1,518	4,509	1,593	1,574	2,224	3,380
New Salem	1753	910	1,543	1,949	2,107	2,146	1,889	1,305	1,253	1,221	957	1,116	987	923
Northfield	1713	580	868	1,047	1,218	1,584	1,757	1,673	1,772	1,951	1,712	1,660	1,720	1,641
Orange	1810	784	766	764	829	880	1,501	1,701	1,753	1,622	1,909	2,091	2,497
Rowe	1785	443	575	839	851	716	703	659	601	619	563	581	661
Shelburne	1768	575	1,183	1,079	961	1,022	995	1,022	1,239	1,401	1,448	1,564	1,582	1,590
Shutesbury	1761	598	674	930	939	1,029	986	987	912	939	798	788	614	588
Sunderland	1714	409	462	537	551	597	666	719	792	839	839	861	832	860
Warwick	1763	766	1,246	1,233	1,227	1,256	1,150	1,071	1,021	1,002	932	901	769	744
Wendell	1781	519	737	933	958	874	875	920	738	704	693	539	593
Whately	1771	410	736	773	891	1,076	1,111	1,072	1,101	1,052	1,057	1,012	1,068	958
Totals	10,294	21,743	26,300	27,421	29,418	29,630	28,812	30,870	31,652	31,434	31,340	32,635	33,696

HAMPDEN COUNTY, MASS.

TOWNS.	Date of Incorporation.	Colonial Census.	United States Census.										State Census.	U. S. Census.	State Census.	U. S. Census.	State Census.
			1812.	1776.	1790.	1800.	1810.	1820.	1830.	1840.	1850.	1855.						1860.
Agawam	1855	1,543	1,698	1,664	2,001	2,248
Blandford	1741	772	1,416	1,778	1,613	1,515	1,590	1,427	1,418	1,271	1,256	1,087	1,026	964	964	964	964	964
Brimfield	1731	1,064	1,211	1,384	1,325	1,612	1,599	1,419	1,420	1,343	1,363	1,316	1,288	1,201	1,201	1,201	1,201	1,201
Chester	1765	405	1,119	1,542	1,534	1,526	1,407	1,632	1,521	1,255	1,314	1,266	1,253	1,396	1,396	1,396	1,396	1,396
Chicopee	1848	8,291	7,576	7,261	7,577	9,607	10,335	10,335	10,335	10,335
Granville	1754	1,126	1,979	2,309	1,504	1,643	1,649	1,414	1,305	1,316	1,385	1,367	1,293	1,240	1,240	1,240	1,240	1,240
Holland	1785	428	445	420	453	453	423	449	392	419	368	344	334	334	334	334	334
Holyoke	1850	3,245	4,639	4,997	5,648	10,733	16,260	16,260	16,260	16,260
Hampden*	1878
Longmeadow	1783	744	973	1,036	1,171	1,257	1,270	1,252	1,348	1,376	1,480	1,342	1,467	1,467	1,467	1,467	1,467
Ludlow	1774	413	560	650	730	1,246	1,327	1,268	1,186	1,191	1,174	1,232	1,136	1,222	1,222	1,222	1,222	1,222
Monson	1760	813	1,331	1,635	1,674	2,126	2,263	2,151	2,831	2,942	3,164	3,272	3,204	3,733	3,733	3,733	3,733	3,733
Montgomery	1780	449	560	595	604	579	740	393	413	371	353	318	304	304	304	304	304
Palmer	1752	727	809	1,039	1,114	1,197	1,237	2,139	3,974	4,012	4,082	3,080	3,631	4,572	4,572	4,572	4,572	4,572
Russell	1792	431	422	491	507	955	521	677	605	618	635	643	643	643	643	643
Southwick	1770	841	841	867	1,229	1,255	1,355	1,214	1,120	1,130	1,188	1,155	1,100	1,114	1,114	1,114	1,114	1,114
Springfield	1636	1,974	1,574	2,312	2,767	3,914	6,784	10,985	11,766	13,788	15,199	22,935	26,703	31,053	31,053	31,053	31,053	31,053
Tolland	1810	798	692	723	627	594	603	596	511	509	452	452	452	452	452
Wales	1762	850	606	774	645	683	665	686	711	713	677	696	831	1,020	1,020	1,020	1,020	1,020
Westfield	1669	1,488	2,204	2,185	2,130	2,668	2,940	3,526	4,180	4,575	5,055	5,634	6,519	8,431	8,431	8,431	8,431	8,431
West Springfield	1774	1,744	2,367	2,835	3,109	3,246	3,270	3,626	2,979	2,090	2,105	2,100	2,606	3,739	3,739	3,739	3,739	3,739
Wilbraham	1763	1,057	1,555	1,743	1,776	1,979	2,034	1,864	2,127	2,032	2,081	2,111	2,330	2,576	2,576	2,576	2,576	2,576
Totals		13,274	19,193	23,462	24,421	28,021	31,639	37,366	51,283	54,849	57,366	64,570	78,409	94,304	94,304	94,304	94,304	94,304

The amount of foreign-born population in each of the counties, by the census of 1875, was as follows: Hampshire County, 8585; per cent., 19.15. Franklin County, 3990; per cent., 11.84. Hampden County, 26,235; per cent., 27.82.

The total number of voters in each of the three counties was as follows: Hampshire, 9253; Franklin, 8516; Hampden, 18,912. The military population of these counties is about 25,000, reckoning those of military age at two-thirds the total number of voters.

Of aged people, there were in Hampshire County 42 over 90 years; in Franklin, 28; and in Hampden, 82; and of these several were above 100.

Of families and dwellings there were as follows: Hampshire County—families, 9596; dwellings, 8254. Franklin County—families, 7856; dwellings, 6877. Hampden County—families, 19,990; dwellings, 13,628. Of unoccupied dwellings, Hampshire had 306; Franklin, 268; and Hampden, 502.

The number of dwellings in the larger towns was as follows: Springfield, 4977; Holyoke, 1479; Westfield, 1468; Chicopee, 632; Northampton, 2197; Amherst, 833; Greenfield, 696; Deerfield, 639.

The number of colored people other than white, and including Chinese, Japanese, and Indians, is shown below: Hampshire—black, 209; mulatto, 95; Chinese, 13; Japanese, 1. Franklin—black, 64; mulatto, 10; Chinese, 9. Hampden—black, 828; mulatto, 213; Chinese, 33; Japanese, 1; Indians, 15.

AGRICULTURAL. †

The total number of farms in the State was 44,549, with a total acreage of 3,402,369, valued at $182,663,140; being an average value for each farm of $4100, and of each acre $53.69, nearly.

The number of farms in Franklin County was 3956, with a total acreage of 350,443; average number of acres for each farm, 88 acres; average value of farms, $2870; total value of farms (including buildings), $11,352,503.

The number of acres in market-gardens was 214½, of the value of $12,448.

* Formed since census was taken. Included in Wilbraham. See town history.

† By the census report, Chicopee had 632 dwellings and 2049 families.

‡ Compiled from the census of 1875.

The number of acres of cultivated land was 79,871; of unimproved land, 175,218; of unimprovable land, 20,517; and of woodland, 74,837.

The number of farms in Hampden County was 3736, with a total acreage of 316,015; average number of acres per farm, 85; average value of farms, $3880; total valuation of lands and buildings, $14,496,445.

The number of acres in market-gardens was 464, valued at $54,325.

The number of acres of cultivated land was 79,726; of unimproved land, 147,359; of unimprovable land, 15,262; and of woodland, 73,668.

The number of farms in Hampshire County was 3666, with a total acreage of 316,931; average number of acres per farm, 86; average value of farms, $3344; total value of lands and buildings, $12,260,330; number of acres in market-gardens, 89, valued at $18,220; number of acres of cultivated land, 98,311; of unimproved land, 145,894; of unimprovable land, 10,342; of woodland, 62,444.

The total domestic and agricultural products of the three counties was as follows: Franklin County—domestic, $810,792; agricultural, $82,593,738. Hampden County—domestic, $618,356; agricultural, $2,774,297. Hampshire County—domestic, $745,046; agricultural, $3,066,883.

The production and value of butter in the three counties was as follows: Franklin County—1,285,048 pounds; value, $414,977. Hampden County—783,879 pounds; value, $272,749. Hampshire County—1,149,077 pounds; value, $392,423.

Of cheese: Franklin County—63,711 pounds; value, $9065. Hampden County—105,761 pounds; value, $13,157. Hampshire County—87,856 pounds; value, $12,178.

Of maple-sugar: Franklin County—372,439 pounds; value, $42,271. Hampden County—149,297 pounds; value, $16,114. Hampshire County—291,084 pounds; value, $34,000.

Apples: Franklin County—192,117 bushels; value, $79,417. Hampden—247,672 bushels; value, $93,213. Hampshire—191,857 bushels; value, $80,397. The apple crop of 1878 was very large, aggregating for the three valley-counties probably 1,500,000 bushels.

Milk: Franklin County—value, $169,819. Hampden County—value, $459,103. Hampshire County—value, $396,203.

Hay.—The amount and value of all kinds of hay produced was as follows:

	Tons.	Value.
Franklin County.....	61,656	$93,863
Hampden County.....	48,646	778,513
Hampshire County.....	58,398	890,817

Corn.—The three river-counties are the largest corn-producing counties in the State, excepting Worcester, the amount grown in each being respectively as follows:

	Bushels.	Value.
Franklin County.....	154,310	$145,996
Hampden County.....	130,504	127,458
Hampshire County.....	156,193	150,121
Total.....	441,007	$423,575

The total amount raised in the State was 1,040,290 bushels, valued at $1,006,384. Worcester County, the only one which exceeded either of them, produced 195,963 bushels.

Potatoes.—Franklin County, 254,528 bushels; Hampden County, 317,653 bushels; Hampshire County, 298,396 bushels.

Tobacco.—Of this product nearly the whole amount produced in the State was grown in the river-counties, as follows:

	Acres.	Pounds.	Value.
Franklin County.....	1216 1/2	1,997,091	$321,815
Hampden County.....	808 1/2	1,224,070	230,475
Hampshire County.....	1652 1/4	2,655,561	462,956

The total grown in all other parts of the State was about 115,000 pounds, valued at about $17,000.

*Wheat.—Franklin County, 7456 bushels; Hampden County, 182 bushels; Hampshire County, 2946 bushels. Franklin and Hampshire Counties produced three-fourths of the total amount grown in the State.

The total value of farm property, including lands, buildings, fruit-trees and vines, domestic animals, and agricultural implements thereon, was as follows: Franklin County, $13,511,984; Hampden County, $16,500,860; Hampshire County, $14,379,-386.

The total number of hired persons employed in agricultural operations in each of the counties was as follows: Franklin County—3086; total wages paid, $324,490. Hampden County—3049; total wages paid, $445,226. Hampshire County—2985; total wages paid, $385,551.

VALUATION AND PRODUCTS OF HAMPSHIRE CO., MASS., FOR THE YEAR ENDING MAY 1, 1875.

Towns.	Personal Property.	Real Estate.	Total Valuation.	Manufactures and Fisheries.	Agriculture and Mining.	Total Products.
Amherst.....	$740,745	$1,896,705	$2,637,450	$497,526	$263,925	$761,451
Belchertown.....	151,820	848,228	1,000,048	138,152	303,662	441,814
Chesterfield.....	87,453	220,170	307,623	19,904	84,626	104,530
Cummington.....	143,025	297,817	440,842	109,496	111,755	221,251
Easthampton.....	834,654	1,570,879	2,405,533	1,968,155	140,127	2,108,282
Enfield.....	291,510	375,390	666,900	372,361	111,353	483,714
Goshen.....	29,794	108,028	137,822	4,750	52,344	57,094
Granby.....	103,242	399,009	502,251	26,988	191,816	218,804
Greenwich.....	85,760	205,360	291,120	43,794	73,569	117,363
Hadley.....	275,117	1,121,987	1,397,104	207,345	492,551	699,896
Hatfield.....	398,929	820,085	1,219,014	65,200	413,426	478,626
Huntington.....	137,640	375,585	513,225	114,112	83,418	197,530
Middlefield.....	156,250	216,410	372,660	97,089	64,855	161,944
Northampton.....	2,242,989	5,627,900	7,870,889	3,673,063	317,408	3,990,471
Pelham.....	26,096	150,494	176,590	9,225	58,553	67,778
Plainfield.....	47,350	133,460	180,810	16,685	74,395	91,080
Prescott.....	30,648	172,110	202,758	9,260	60,403	69,663
South Hadley.....	361,312	1,407,285	1,768,597	1,056,428	164,173	1,220,601
Southampton.....	77,687	417,637	495,324	66,669	184,796	251,465
Ware.....	482,770	1,239,470	1,722,240	1,957,611	200,863	2,158,474
Westhampton.....	42,910	260,259	303,169	16,698	114,797	131,495
Williamsburg.....	424,511	756,855	1,181,366	299,935	108,741	408,676
Worthington.....	88,837	267,453	356,290	27,110	161,928	189,038
Totals.....	$7,261,049	$18,888,576	$26,149,625	$10,797,556	$3,833,484	$14,631,040

VALUATION AND PRODUCTS OF FRANKLIN CO., MASS., FOR THE YEAR ENDING MAY 1, 1875.

Towns.	Personal Property.	Real Estate.	Total Valuation.	Manufactures and Fisheries.	Agriculture and Mining.	Total Products.
Ashfield.....	$142,173	$387,744	$529,917	$12,860	$142,806	$155,666
Bernardston.....	87,094	314,044	401,138	103,700	114,490	218,190
Buckland.....	100,536	505,874	606,410	433,765	117,265	551,030
Charlemont.....	69,249	285,125	354,374	38,750	118,347	157,097
Coleraine.....	192,888	491,570	684,458	390,622	183,900	574,522
Cornwall.....	254,049	564,244	818,293	333,430	235,296	568,726
Deerfield.....	295,276	1,044,766	1,340,042	312,720	410,166	722,886
Erving.....	75,767	242,292	318,059	272,145	34,210	306,355
Gill.....	78,815	391,691	470,506	18,500	148,348	166,848
Greenfield.....	853,321	1,969,665	2,822,986	479,621	170,840	650,461
Hawley.....	33,535	123,685	157,220	7,070	71,299	78,369
Heath.....	38,112	153,210	191,322	9,630	86,714	96,344
Leverett.....	62,105	255,405	317,510	32,004	84,200	116,204
Leyden.....	36,089	171,042	207,131	2,454	95,260	97,714
Monroe.....	8,062	39,715	47,777	1,700	23,071	24,771
Montague.....	450,200	1,598,600	2,048,800	1,478,446	175,186	1,653,632
New Salem.....	69,960	257,270	327,230	44,550	89,016	134,466
Northfield.....	107,255	596,819	704,074	79,455	267,021	346,476
Orange.....	302,675	1,093,125	1,395,800	807,242	84,990	892,232
Rowe.....	38,174	141,445	179,619	15,202	70,761	85,963
Shelburne.....	215,417	651,424	866,841	193,306	164,943	358,249
Shutesbury.....	21,025	164,525	185,550	11,357	54,942	66,299
Sunderland.....	61,865	378,428	440,293	800	184,520	185,320
Warwick.....	44,804	221,232	266,036	86,810	72,026	158,836
Wendell.....	21,228	157,460	178,688	68,035	46,005	114,040
Whately.....	190,121	529,240	719,361	67,700	172,473	240,173
Totals.....	$3,849,795	$12,729,640	$16,579,435	$5,301,874	$3,418,995	$8,720,869

* According to State census 1875.

VALUATION AND PRODUCTS OF HAMPDEN COUNTY, MASS., FOR THE YEAR ENDING MAY 1, 1875.

CITIES AND TOWNS.	Personal Property.	Real Estate.	Total Valuation	Manufactures and Fisheries.	Agriculture and Mining.	Total Products.
Agawam	$274,961	$897,950	$1,172,911	$177,000	$314,094	$491,094
Blandford	112,400	294,915	407,315	44,375	163,856	208,231
Brimfield	129,440	436,050	565,490	103,438	169,302	272,740
Chester	94,025	435,047	529,072	184,496	104,271	288,767
Chicopee	1,833,975	3,641,860	5,475,835	4,035,600	214,799	4,250,399
Granville	89,364	315,808	505,172	68,280	122,860	191,140
Holland	16,957	120,190	137,147	2,059	33,056	35,115
Holyoke	2,889,882	6,791,245	9,681,127	8,788,306	63,340	8,851,646
Longmeadow	182,340	849,595	1,031,935	159,040	261,935	420,975
Ludlow	121,311	445,267	566,578	253,800	149,776	403,576
Monson	320,925	1,017,386	1,338,311	1,270,000	312,370	1,582,370
Montgomery	28,919	112,807	141,726	3,643	54,331	57,974
Palmer	636,187	1,237,475	1,873,662	1,855,218	163,472	2,018,690
Russell	107,139	316,446	423,585	181,500	34,848	216,348
Southwick	121,885	458,097	579,982	63,058	227,956	291,014
Springfield	8,398,912	31,125,660	39,524,572	12,483,010	248,903	12,731,913
Tolland	68,464	198,866	267,330	82,540	62,818	145,358
Wales	163,535	284,415	447,950	904,603	48,998	953,601
Westfield	1,945,085	5,354,590	7,299,675	3,446,358	362,900	3,809,258
West Springfield	319,153	2,487,159	2,806,312	621,698	141,299	762,997
Wilbraham	202,343	756,012	958,355	964,802	290,999	1,255,801
Totals	$18,057,202	$57,576,840	$75,634,042	$35,692,824	$3,546,183	$39,239,007

Manufactures of Hampshire County. †

Towns.	Number of Establishments.	Capital Invested.	Value of Goods Produced.
Amherst	40	$24,335	$407,404
Belchertown	25	58,275	130,952
Chesterfield	10	31,500	19,154
Cummington	20	95,250	104,271
Easthampton	17	1,620,375	1,883,095
Enfield	11	240,000	367,981
Goshen	5	3,800	4,350
Granby	3	7,800	13,450
Greenwich	6	15,800	34,894
Hadley	13	71,000	201,295
Hatfield	4	32,100	62,700
Huntington	5	80,500	108,300
Middlefield	4	89,100	96,789
Northampton	36	1,696,300	3,179,199
Pelham	2	8,000	9,225
Plainfield	7	9,000	9,150
Prescott	2	4,000	9,260
South Hadley	15	909,972	1,028,353
Southampton	13	15,100	61,775
Ware	31	1,253,750	1,930,160
Westhampton	7	24,940	14,173
Williamsburg	8	223,500	295,100
Worthington	13	23,550	22,277
Totals	297	$6,718,547	$9,993,217

Manufactures of Franklin County. †

Towns.	Number of Establishments.	Capital Invested.	Value of Goods Produced.
Ashfield	4	$13,500	$9,094
Barnardston	4	40,000	87,000
Backland	8	317,600	428,165
Charlemont	13	14,975	32,750
Coleraine	8	356,000	390,622
Conway	7	227,700	284,150
Deerfield	12	75,100	297,700
Erving	9	291,200	266,925
Gill	1	78,300	17,000
Greenfield	46	354,800	308,434
Hawley	10	5,425	6,670
Heath	4	3,900	9,630
Leverett	14	22,050	32,004
Leyden	3	2,900	2,454
Monroe	6	2,200	1,700
Montague	24	1,504,589	1,364,736
New Salem	8	10,400	40,550
Northfield	18	28,080	59,855
Orange	23	569,100	782,149
Rowe	7	7,780	12,087
Shelburne	18	113,641	178,790
Shutesbury	8	7,975	10,057
Sunderland	1	900	800
Warwick	14	38,400	86,810
Wendell	6	28,500	67,785
Whately	6	14,700	67,000
Totals	282	$4,127,715	$4,843,117

Manufactures of Hampden County. †

Towns.	Number of Establishments.	Capital Invested.	Value of Goods Produced.
Agawam	3	$171,478	$177,000
Blandford	11	18,100	33,525
Brimfield	10	46,550	102,888
Chester	19	185,330	174,541
Chicopee	71	1,965,146	3,781,963
Granville	13	47,575	65,680
Holland	4	1,850	1,459
Holyoke	28	6,802,000	8,737,806

Towns.	Number of Establishments.	Capital Invested.	Value of Goods Produced.
Longmeadow	9	$151,300	$149,306
Ludlow	4	201,500	253,600
Monson	10	279,300	1,179,275
Montgomery	2	1,700	3,643
Palmer	22	947,200	1,751,151
Russell	4	150,000	176,000
Southwick	13	13,338	49,308
Springfield	251	5,395,213	10,089,842
Tolland	6	16,100	82,540
Wales	12	247,750	895,475
West Springfield	6	685,000	609,905
Westfield	121	1,662,938	3,246,276
Wilbraham	14	709,550	942,752
Totals	633	$19,765,118	$32,504,175

The number of steam-engines in use in Franklin County was 28, with actual horse-power of 1406; the number of water-wheels was 267, with 8586 horse-power. The number of steam-engines in Hampden County was 137, of 5989 actual horse-power; water-wheels, 285, with 14,472 horse-power. Number of steam-engines in Hampshire County, 56, of 3716 horse-power; of water-wheels, 246, representing 6416 horse-power.

The total number of persons employed in Franklin County was 3115; total annual wages, $1,346,125; in Hampden County, 19,496; wages, $8,844,270; in Hampshire, 5807; wages paid, $2,259,986.

The principal manufactures were firearms, agricultural implements, artisans' tools, clothing, cotton goods, food preparations, furniture, lumber, machinery, metals and metallic goods, paper, printing and publishing, tobacco, woolen goods, wooden ware, worsted goods, etc.

EDUCATIONAL.

SCHOOLS.—Some account of the schools will be found in the history of the several towns and cities, including those of various kinds and grades.

The following statistics are from the State census for 1875:

The total number of public schools in Franklin County was 219, and total valuation of property, $208,015; number of private schools, 9; total valuation of property, $26,155; the total attendance of all ages, 5792; the total number of illiterates was 842, of whom 698 were foreign-born.

Hampden County.—Number of public schools, 214; valuation of property, $1,136,154; number of private schools, 16; value of property, $195,435; total attendance, all ages, 15,717; total illiterates, 9195, of whom 7942 were of foreign birth.

Hampshire County.—Number of public schools, 209; valuation of property, $383,039; number of private schools, 31; value of property, $763,515; total attendance, all ages, 8789; total illiterates, 2288, of whom 1998 were foreign-born.

LIBRARIES.—The number of public libraries, volumes,

* Including the town of Hampden, formed 1878.

† Census of 1875.

yearly circulation, and value of buildings in the three counties was as follows :

Franklin County.—Number of libraries, 10; volumes, 15,824; yearly circulation, 56,907; value of library buildings, $8000.

Hampden County.—Number of libraries, 5; number of volumes, 14,350; circulation, 20,656; value of buildings, $2500.

Hampshire County.—Number of libraries, 8; number of volumes, 25,256; circulation, 77,435; value of buildings, $80,000.

Of public and private school libraries, Franklin County had 1, with a circulation of 1050; Hampden County 6, with a circulation of 2783; and Hampshire 2, with a nominal circulation.

Of scientific and artistic libraries, there were 1 in Franklin, with 120 volumes; 1 in Hampden, with 7700 volumes; and 1 in Hampshire, with 1800 volumes.

Of association libraries, Franklin had 6, containing 12,330 volumes; Hampden 5, containing about 40,000 volumes; and Hampshire 4, with 3716 volumes.

Hampden also had 5 private circulating libraries, containing 3705 volumes.

Hampshire County also had 1 college library, with 30,406 volumes, with an endowment fund of $33,000, and value of library buildings, $10,000.

CHAPTER XXIV.

VALLEY AND COUNTY AGRICULTURAL ASSOCIATIONS—HAMPSHIRE, FRANKLIN, AND HAMPDEN AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.*

HAMPSHIRE, FRANKLIN, AND HAMPDEN AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

THIS society was organized on the 22d of January, 1818, and included the territory of the three river-counties.

The officers chosen at this meeting, which was held in Northampton and very largely attended, were Hon. Joseph Lyman, President; Josiah Dwight, Secretary; and J. D. Whitney, Treasurer. Committees upon Agriculture, Domestic Animals, and Manufactures were appointed, and the sum of one hundred dollars was subscribed for contingent expenses.

The act incorporating the society was passed in February, 1818, and the first meeting subsequently was held on the 5th of May following, at the court-house in Northampton, at which time the organization was completed. Measures were also taken to provide for a cattle-show, which was appointed for the 14th and 15th of October following. The premium-list included an aggregate of two hundred and seventy-two dollars and fifty cents, which was to be paid in silver-plate.

About the year 1835 great interest began to be manifested in the cultivation of the Chinese mulberry-plant, and the manufacture of domestic silk therefrom; but, from climatic and other causes, the attempts to make it a profitable industry were within a few years abandoned.

At the annual exhibition of 1847 there was a display of three hundred head of horned cattle, many of them imported, and the fair was a marked success. At this exhibition there was also a remarkable display of fine blooded horses, there being ninety-six entered, many of them of the justly-celebrated Justin Morgan breed. The first noted horse of this fine breed was the "Justin Morgan" which was raised in Western Massachusetts, and taken to the State of Vermont in 1798, and from whom nearly all the fine stock of the Green Mountain State has descended.

At the fair of 1847 were also present one hundred and seventy-two yokes of working-oxen. There was in addition a fair display of various kinds of fruit,—apples, pears, peaches, and grapes.

In 1857 there were one hundred and fifty horses on exhibition,—a greater number than ever before,—and the "show of fruit was magnificent."

From the date of its organization down to the year 1857 the annual exhibitions of the society were held on Main Street, at the head of King Street, in Northampton, and on the common near the cemetery, and the town-hall was used for the display of domestic manufactures.

In 1856 the society purchased fourteen acres and sixty square rods of land on North Street, at one hundred and seventy-five dollars per acre, which was inclosed with a substantial fence, and a trotting-course, half a mile in length, laid out and made ready for use. The necessary sheds and buildings were erected and fitted up, and the whole amount expended was four thousand and four dollars and sixty-one cents.

For a number of years following the exhibitions of stock were held on this ground, while the domestic manufactures were displayed in the town-hall. In 1861 the society voted to erect a hall on the grounds, so that every part of the exhibition could be together; and a suitable building, costing two thousand two hundred dollars, was completed the following year. Since that time the exhibitions have been eminently successful.

In the year 1872 two additional acres of land adjoining the grounds on the north were purchased; the track was lengthened and graded anew, the hall moved to a better location in the northwest corner of the lot, the cattle-sheds and pens removed and rebuilt, and everything put in excellent order. The cattle-sheds are sufficient to accommodate about 80 head under cover, and the grounds have been recently supplied with abundance of water from the town aqueduct.

In 1874 the experiment was tried of holding the fair during three consecutive days, which proved very successful, and has been continued. The premiums paid in 1875 amounted to about $1200.

The following list shows the names of those who have been presidents and secretaries of the society, and the date of their election from its formation to the present:

Presidents.—Hon. Joseph Lyman, elected 1818; Hon. I. C. Bates, elected 1826; Hon. Mark Doolittle, elected 1830; Joseph G. Cogswell, Esq., elected 1833; Hon. Samuel Lathrop, elected 1835; Hon. I. C. Bates, elected 1840; Hon. Edward Dickinson, elected 1841; Wells Lathrop, Esq., elected 1845; President Hitchcock, elected 1847; Hon. William Clark, elected 1849; Paoli Lathrop, Esq., elected 1852; Hon. Elisha Edwards, elected 1857; T. G. Huntington, Esq., elected 1859; Henry S. Porter, Esq., elected 1863; Milo J. Smith, Esq., elected 1866; Elnathan Graves, Esq., elected 1870; A. P. Peck, elected 1872; A. T. Judd, elected 1873; J. H. Stebbins, elected 1874; J. H. Demond, elected 1877; H. C. Haskell, elected 1879.

Secretaries.—Jona. H. Lyman, chosen 1818; Joseph Strong, 1821; Daniel Stebbins, 1823; Harvey Kirkland, 1840; S. L. Hinckley, 1847; W. O. Gorham, 1850; Benj. Barrett, 1854; John W. Wilson, 1855; Horace J. Hodges, 1856; H. K. Starkweather, 1859; A. Perry Peck, 1865; L. C. Ferry, 1872.

Addresses have been delivered at the annual cattle-show and fairs of the Hampshire, Franklin, and Hampden Agricultural Society as follows: 1818, Noah Webster, LL.D.; 1819, Hon. Joseph Lyman; 1820, Hon. Jonathan A. Lyman; 1821, Hon. Epaphras Hoyt; 1822, Hon. John Mills; 1823, Hon. I. C. Bates; 1824, Hon. George Grennell; 1825, Hon. W. B. Calhoun; 1826, Hon. Mark Doolittle; 1827, President Hitchcock; 1828, Patrick Boies, Esq.; 1829, Festus Foster, Esq.; 1830, Hon. Samuel C. Allen; 1831, Hon. Sam'l F. Dickinson; 1832, Hon. Myron Lawrence; 1833, Rev. Henry Coleman; 1834, Hon. Samuel Lathrop; 1835, Rev. John Todd; 1836, Hon. George T. Davis; 1837, Hon. Osmyn Baker; 1838, Rev. Henry Coleman; 1839, Hon. W. W. Bates; 1840, Rev. Henry Coleman; 1841, Prof. W. C. Fowler; 1842, Rev. John Todd; 1843, Hon. Charles Hudson; 1844, Hon. Josiah Quincy, Jr.; 1845, President Hitchcock; 1846, John S. Skinner, Esq.; 1847, Prof. Chas. U. Shepard; 1848, Prof. John P. Norton; 1849, Prof. John P. Norton; 1850, Dr. Daniel Lee; 1851, Dr. Daniel Lee; 1852, John S. Gould, Esq.; 1853; William S. King, Esq.; 1854, Prof. J. A. Nash; 1855, Solon Robinson, Esq.; 1857, Hon. A. H. Bullock; 1858, George B. Loring, M.D.; 1859, Hon. Josiah Quincy, Jr.; 1860, B. Perley Poore, Esq.; 1861, William G. Goldthwaite; 1862, Rev. F. D. Huntington; 1863, Judge Thomas Russell; 1864, Hon. Darwin E. Ware; 1865, Hon. Daniel Needham; 1866, Charles L. Flint, Esq.; 1867, Hon. Daniel Needham; 1868, Hon. Charles Delano; 1870, Richard Goodman, Esq.; 1871, Prof. P. A. Chadbourne; 1872, Rev. Dr. Seelye; 1873, Prof. Parker; 1874, H. M. Burt.

* For accounts of several minor societies in various parts of the three counties, not herein mentioned, see history of the respective towns where their grounds or headquarters are located.

HAMPDEN COUNTY AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

About the year 1843 the project of establishing a cattle-show or fair for the benefit of the agricultural interests of Hampden County was discussed by some of the leading farmers in the central portions of the county, which procedure eventuated in a petition to the Legislature for a chartered organization. The petition was granted, and on the 5th of March, 1844, a charter was granted for the "Hampden County Agricultural Society," of which the following is a copy:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives, in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the same,—

"Sec. I.—William B. Calhoun, Forbes Kyle, D. W. Willard, and their associates and successors, are hereby made a corporation, by the name of the Hampden County Agricultural Society, for the encouragement of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts in the County of Hampden, by premiums and other means.

"Sec. II.—And said corporation may hold and manage real estate not exceeding in value fifteen thousand dollars, and personal estate not exceeding a like sum, for the purpose aforesaid."

The first meeting under the charter was convened at the call of the president, Hon. William B. Calhoun, on the 9th of April, 1844. It was numerously attended by people from all parts of the county. A constitution was adopted, of which the following are some of the provisions:

"Any male may become a member of this society by paying into its treasury the sum of five dollars, and any female by paying the sum of two dollars and fifty cents.

"The annual meeting shall be held on the third Wednesday in December of each year, for the election of officers, etc.

"All animals, to be entitled to premiums, must have been owned or kept for three months previous to the annual exhibition within the county."

At the first election the following were the officers chosen: Hon. William B. Calhoun, President; thirteen Vice-Presidents; James R. Crooks, Treasurer; D. M. Bryant, Secretary.

At a meeting held in June, 1844, it was determined to hold the first cattle-show and fair in the city of Springfield, on the 16th and 17th days of October, 1844; provided, the citizens of Springfield should before that time contribute six hundred dollars to the society's funds.

The fair was held at the appointed time, and was considered a great success. There was a large attendance, and an attractive display of stock. The premiums paid at this exhibition amounted to a total of $269.

In 1852 the amount paid in premiums had risen to $485. In 1855 the society numbered over 500 members, and had accumulated a permanent fund of $4860.

The society has had a total membership of about 1000, which have been distributed among the various towns of the county as follows: Agawam, 21 members; Blandford, 2; Brimfield, 1; Chicopee, 88; Chester, 5; Granville, 1; Holyoke, 16; Longmeadow, 33; East Longmeadow, 22; Ludlow, 10; Monson, 12; Montgomery, 1; Palmer, 12; Russell, 2; Springfield, 520; West Springfield, 62; Southwick, 5; Tolland, 1; Westfield, 44; Wilbraham, 28; Hampden, 18; non-residents of the county, 78.

The following-named individuals have been officers in the order of rank and service:

Presidents.—Hon. William B. Calhoun, Hon. John Mills, Hon. Josiah Hooker, Thomas J. Shepherd, Francis Brewer, Horace M. Sessions, Hon. George Bliss, Hon. Chester W. Chapin, Phineas Stedman, William Birnie, Hon. Eliphalet Trask, George Dwight, Norman T. Leonard, Esq., William Pynchon, Charles L. Buel.

Secretaries.—D. M. Bryant, Hon. Henry Vose, Samuel Parsons, A. A. Allen, J. Newton Bagg.

Treasurers.—James W. Crooks, James Brewer, A. A. Allen, R. E. Ladd, J. Newton Bagg, J. S. McElwain, J. E. Russell, E. S. Bachelder.

The society elects a delegate to the State Board of Agriculture once in three years, and an annual report is published under direction of the secretary.

HAMPDEN HARVEST CLUB.

This society was organized on the 11th of December, 1857, at the house of George M. Atwater,—“Rockrimmon Farm,”—at which time the following persons were present: from Springfield, J. H. Demond, A. W. Stacy, George M. Atwater; from Chicopee, Phineas Stedman, H. J. Chapin, and Benjamin H. Stedman.

The first president was Phineas Stedman, and the first secretary George M. Atwater.

In October, 1858, the club was reorganized, with Phineas Stedman, President, and J. N. Bagg, Secretary. A lecture committee was chosen, consisting of William Birnie, George M. Atwater, and Phineas Stedman, and a series of bi-monthly meetings inaugurated, which have since been continued.

At the last-mentioned date eighteen members were admitted, as follows: William Birnie, Col. Edward Parsons, Phineas Stedman, H. J. Chapin, George M. Atwater, Wm. Pynchon, A. L. McKinstry, J. H. Demond, A. W. Stacy, B. H. Stedman, Richard Bliss, Reuben Brooks, J. N. Bagg, Justin Ely, Wilbur Wilson, Ethan C. Ely, and John Chase.

The club has had during the twenty-two years of its existence over one hundred active and honorary members. In the honorary list are the names of Chief-Justice Chapman, of Springfield; Hon. C. L. Flint, of Boston; Prof. Levi Stockbridge, of Amherst; Dr. J. G. Holland, of New York; Col. J. M. Thompson, of Springfield; Wells Lathrop, of South Hadley; Samuel Bowles, of Springfield; Maj. Edward Ingersoll, of the U.S.A.; and Marvin Chapin, of Springfield, who have attended the meetings of the club and taken an active interest in its deliberations.

On the 20th of December, 1858, Hon. Josiah Quincy, of Boston, delivered a lecture before the club upon the subject of milk-farming, and other lectures and addresses by distinguished agriculturists have been given from time to time.

By a standing rule of the club, the presiding officer is selected by a standing committee at a previous meeting, and elected at each session. The secretary and committees are elected at the annual meeting, which is held on the first Tuesday of December in each year.

J. Newton Bagg, of West Springfield, the present secretary, has held the office for twenty-one years. The club holds meetings during the winter months at the residences of its members. The wives of the members are always invited, and frequently take part in the discussions.

FRANKLIN HARVEST CLUB.*

The earliest “Farmers’ Club” organized in the Connecticut Valley in Massachusetts was a town club in Sunderland,

* Materials from an address delivered by L. F. Mellen, Esq., Dec. 7, 1878.

Franklin Co., in January, 1833, with twenty-three members.

The Franklin Harvest Club was organized at the Mansion House, in Greenfield, in the year 1859. Many of the original members had previously been in the habit of meeting together for the purpose of discussing matters and questions pertaining to agriculture.

The first officers of the club were Thomas J. Field, of Northfield, President; Edward W. Stebbins, of Deerfield, Vice-President; Hon. James S. Grinnell, of Greenfield, Secretary.

The following is the preamble to the constitution: "Whereas, The experience of each of our farmers ought to inure to the benefit of all, and since free conversation in a social gathering is the best way of transmitting information to each other, and since, also, associated action is more effective than individual exertions; we hereby, for the sole purpose of eliciting and disseminating agricultural information, agree to form an agricultural association, to be called the 'Franklin Harvest Club.'"

Article 3 of the constitution says: "The active membership of this club shall never exceed twenty-two, and candidates shall be admitted by unanimous ballot after being proposed by a membership committee."

One of the by-laws provides that "refreshments served at the meetings of the club shall be plain and unostentatious; and the use of ardent spirits, other than those of domestic manufacture, shall be prohibited at the meetings of the club."

The active membership of the society has for several years included many of the most prominent agriculturists of the valley, distributed through the three counties of Franklin, Hampshire, and Hampden, in Massachusetts, and the counties of Merrimack, in New Hampshire, and Hartford, in Connecticut. Its transactions have been published in the agricultural papers throughout the country, and it has been said of it that "no agricultural organization in the State possesses more dignity, intelligence, and enterprise than the Franklin Harvest Club."

The total membership since its organization considerably exceeds one hundred, representing stock-raisers, breeders of special lines of neat cattle,—Durhams, Devons, Jerseys, and Ayrshires,—market-gardeners, and fruit-growers.

A comparison of the productions of the county for the last thirty years shows considerable improvement, and the influence of this society has very likely been more or less instrumental in producing the change for the better. The rapid growth of the manufacturing centres in Western Massachusetts has caused important changes in some of the chief productions, and led to the cultivation of those products which were more immediately in demand in the local markets. The best-paying farms are those situated nearest these markets; and the production of butter, in particular, has increased remarkably since 1855, the amount now produced being nearly double what it was then.

In 1845 there were more acres of corn grown in the three counties of the valley than now, but the yield per acre has increased in Franklin County from thirty-two to thirty-seven and a half bushels; in Hampshire, from twenty-nine to thirty-two bushels; and in Hampden, from twenty-five to twenty-seven and five-eighths bushels per acre.

The Franklin Harvest Club elects its officers at the annual meeting, held on the first Saturday in December each year. The following are the present officers: President, S. Augustus Bates, of South Hadley; Vice-President, Joseph P. Felton, of Greenfield; Secretary, L. F. Mellen, of West Springfield.

FRANKLIN COUNTY AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

This important agricultural organization grew out of a voluntary exhibition held at Greenfield on the 15th of October, 1849. In the course of that year subscriptions were obtained, and the society was incorporated by the Legislature in the winter of 1849-50.

The first formal meeting of the society was held, for the election of officers, at Greenfield, on the 13th day of June, 1850, when the following were elected to serve for the year: President, Henry W. Clapp, of Greenfield; Vice-Presidents, Wm. Bardwell, of Shelburne; Moses Stebbins, of Deerfield; Hon. H. W. Cushman, of Bernardston; James White, of Northfield; R. B. Hubbard, of Sunderland; Secretary, W. T. Davis, of Greenfield; Treasurer, A. G. Hammond.

The amount of subscriptions received at the time of organization was about as follows, by townships: Ashfield, $24; Bernardston, $72; Buckland, $5; Deerfield, $104; Coleraine, $10; Greenfield, $711; Gill, $10; Northfield, $64; Rowe, $18; Shelburne, $159; Sunderland, $45; Warwick, $12; Wendell, $13; Charlemont, $10; Montague, $5; Orange, $100; a total of $1362.

The first annual cattle-show and fair was held on the 25th of September, 1850, and was a very successful one. The annual meeting was held on the 2d of January, 1851, when Henry W. Cushman was elected president. The total receipts for 1850, as reported by the treasurer, amounted to $1809.54. Annual fairs have been held without intermission at Greenfield since the year of organization.

The society, in common with others throughout the State, has received annually from the State the sum of $600.

The first purchase of grounds for permanent occupation was made in 1860, when five acres of land were bought of Hon. Almon Brainerd for $2000. In 1862 an additional five and a half acres were purchased of the same party for $3000, making a total of ten and a half acres, at a total cost of $5000. These grounds were situated on the Green River meadow, near the middle turnpike bridge, and, though small, answered fairly for a number of years.

A trotting-track was laid out, about one-third of a mile in circuit, open seats and cattle-pens were constructed, and a few cheap buildings erected; but it became apparent, with the growing interest soon manifested in the annual gatherings, that more spacious grounds were a necessity, and after several years of agitation, and the occupation of a portion of the land by the new line of the Troy and Greenfield Railway, the property was finally sold at auction in 1876 to John Osterhout for $7200, who, in turn, sold to Newell Snow, who disposed of about one-third subsequently to the railroad company.

The committee appointed at the annual meeting in January, 1876, to dispose of the old and purchase new grounds, consisted of Imla K. Brown, T. J. Field, G. P. Carpenter, Newell Snow, Christopher Stebbins, Carlos Batchelder, and N. Austin Smith.

This committee, after considerable negotiation, finally purchased in 1876 of various individuals about thirty-three and a half acres of finely-situated land in what is known as "Petty's Plain," a half-mile southwest of the railway station, and on the southwest side of Green River. The location is every way unexceptionable, and overlooks the Deerfield Valley and the village of Greenfield. The original cost of the land was $2571.70. The grounds contain a beautiful grove of about five acres, and are finely and most conveniently fitted up with all modern appliances, including excellent water furnished from the Greenfield water-works, and one of the best half-mile tracks in the State. The track was fitted up at an expense of $1650. The total outlay for all purposes has been between $9000 and $10,000.

The whole number of members in 1851 was, according to the statement of Hon. Henry W. Cushman, about 220.

The life-membership at the present time (1879) exceeds 2500, and it is believed to be the largest of any county society in the State.

The amount of premiums paid at the last annual fair, in 1878, amounted to a total of $663.25 on sixteen different classes of exhibits. Of this sum Shelburne carried off the largest amount of any one town, $242.75; and Greenfield came next, with $124.75. Upon neat stock, Shelburne received $134, and Deerfield came next, with $39.

The value of the property now owned by the association is about $10,000, and its liabilities, in the shape of indebtedness, amount to $1780.82.

OFFICERS.

The following are the names of the presidents and secretaries from 1850 to 1879, inclusive:

Presidents.—1850, Henry W. Clapp, of Greenfield; 1851–56, Hon. Henry W. Cushman, of Bernardston; 1857, Josiah Fogg, of Deerfield; 1858–59, Z. L. Raymond, of Greenfield; 1860–61, Henry W. Clapp; 1862–63, Hon. Henry W. Cushman; 1864–65, Edward W. Stebbins, of Deerfield; 1866, Joseph Anderson, of Shelburne; 1867–68, Thomas J. Field, of Northfield; 1869, Henry Wells, of Shelburne; 1870–71, Wm. Keith, of Greenfield; 1872–73, James M. Crafts, of Whately; 1874–75, Imla K. Brown, of Bernardston; 1876–77, D. Orlando Fisk, of Shelburne; 1878, James S. Grinnell, of Greenfield; 1879, James S. Grinnell, of Greenfield.

The secretaries have been: 1850–52, W. T. Davis, of Greenfield; 1853–54, Hon. H. G. Parker, of Greenfield; 1855, Edward F. Raymond, Esq., of Greenfield; 1856–62, James S. Grinnell,* of Greenfield; 1863–65, Austin De Wolf, of Greenfield; 1866–68, Edward E. Lyman, of Greenfield; 1869–72, Samuel J. Lyons, of Greenfield; 1873–76, Francis M. Thompson, of Greenfield; 1877–78, John A. Aiken; 1879, Henry G. Nims, of Greenfield.

CHAPTER XXV.

THE BAR OF THE CONNECTICUT VALLEY.†

HON. GEORGE BLISS, in his address to the members of the Bar of Hampshire, Franklin, and Hampden Counties, delivered at Northampton, Sept. 26, 1826, divides its history into four periods, viz.: the first, extending from the first settlement of the Connecticut River colony in Massachusetts, in 1636, to 1691, in which latter year the province charter was granted; the second, from that date to the year 1743; the third, from 1743 to 1774, when the courts were suspended by the troubles between the mother-country and the colony; and the fourth period from 1774 down to 1826, and in which may also be properly included whatever is worthy of record to the present time.

In his preliminary remarks Mr. Bliss makes the following observations: "The first settlers of the colony of Massachusetts were by no means destitute either of natural endowments or literary acquirements. Some of them were distinguished in our profession. The first governor, Winthrop, was a lawyer, and the son of a lawyer. His grandfather, also, had been an eminent counselor. His posterity in Connecticut and Massachusetts were much distinguished. But the spirit of the times in which they lived, the special object of their emigration, and the business in which they were incessantly engaged after they came to this country, prevented the first settlers from devoting much attention to the forms of legal proceedings. The practice of law in England, as exhibited in some of its departments, in the time of James the

* In 1862 Mr. Grinnell went to Washington, D. C., as chief clerk of the Department of Agriculture, where he served three years, when he was appointed chief clerk of the Patent Office, where he remained for ten years. He is a member of the New England and Massachusetts Agricultural Societies, and of the State Agricultural Board of Massachusetts; and is also connected with other similar associations. See chapter on the Bar.

† The three following chapters have been compiled largely from the addresses of Hon. George Bliss, 1826, Hon. William G. Bates, 1873, and Hon. Whiting Griswold, 1873, supplemented with such additions as we have been able to make from information gathered from various authentic sources.

First and the elder Charles, had no charms for the Puritans in general, or the emigrants to this country in particular.

"An extensive examination of the earliest records of the colonies of Plymouth and Massachusetts has induced me to believe that our ancestors were not so ignorant of the principles upon which justice had been administered in the mother-country as some have asserted. But it has also abundantly satisfied me that they were either in a great degree ignorant of the forms of legal proceedings, or considered them of very little importance.

"During our first period but little can be said of the reputation of the lawyers or of their practice."

The first administrator of justice, and the first person who had any knowledge of the law in the Agawam colony, was its first magistrate and principal business-man, William Pyncheon. Mr. Pyncheon was one of the original patentees of the Massachusetts colony, and also a magistrate; and when the General Court granted him and his associates permission to emigrate to the Connecticut Valley, it also constituted him the magistrate of the new colony.‡

Early in the year 1639, at a "full town-meeting" held at Agawam, a voluntary association was formed, and the people gave Mr. Pyncheon formal authority to continue until the General Court should provide for them. This movement was in consequence of the establishment of the line between Massachusetts and Connecticut in 1638, which left the Hartford colony within the jurisdiction of the latter State. The legislative proceedings of the Connecticut Valley had been for a number of years held at Hartford, and Agawam was represented in that court.

In 1641 the General Court of Massachusetts took cognizance of the matter, "and Pyncheon was authorized to exercise an extensive civil and criminal jurisdiction."

The right of appeal to the Court of Assistants, at Boston, was granted in difficult and weighty cases.

Mr. Pyncheon continued to exercise this jurisdiction down to the year 1650,§ at which date he was suspended from his office in consequence of the publication of a theological pamphlet by him, which was adjudged as heterodox.

His son-in-law, Henry Smith, was appointed in his place, but both he and Mr. Pyncheon soon after returned to England. In 1652 a joint commission was given to three persons, of whom John Pyncheon was one, having similar powers before possessed by the single magistrate.

In 1658 authority was given to the commissioners of Springfield and Northampton, united, to hold courts alternately at those places; and by the same authority the right of appeal was granted to the County Court at Boston, instead of to the Court of Assistants. This arrangement continued until the erection of Hampshire County, in March, 1662.

There would seem to have been very little respect shown to the lawyers of those days, and the business of the profession was anything but a lucrative one.

An ordinance passed by the General Court in 1663 shows the estimation in which the profession was held in the early days and the manifest determination to keep it in the background. It prohibits every person "who is a usual and common attorney in any inferior court" from being admitted to sit as a deputy in the General Court, and the regulation continued in force until the expiration of that charter.

According to Mr. Bliss, the earliest record of attorneys admitted to practice in Hampshire County bears date September, 1686. The parties were John King, of Northampton, and Samuel Marshfield and Jonathan Burt, Sr., of Springfield.

‡ In explanation of Mr. Pyncheon's powers it is specifically stated that his authority "shall extend to all causes, civil or criminal, subject to an appeal to the Courts of Assistants, with a jury of six men, until they shall have a greater number for that service."—Hon. W. G. Bates' address, page 18.

§ Hon. Wm. G. Bates makes this date 1651. For further notice of Mr. Pyncheon see general chapters of early history in this work.

field, who took the oath for the faithful performance of their duties. In addition to these, he states that there were several others incidentally mentioned as attorneys, though there is no written evidence of their having been admitted to practice.

There seems to be very little information concerning the legal profession on record during the colonial period from 1620 to 1691, when the new charter was granted. During the second period, from 1691 to 1743, the records are more full and explicit, though a portion of them are missing; but it appears certain that the practice of the law throughout Hampshire County, and probably the entire province, was considerably improved.

Touching this matter, Mr. Bliss says: "There were some general regulations which had a tendency to produce this result. A Superior Court was substituted, in the several counties, for a Court of Assistants, and Courts of Common Pleas for County Courts.

"At first no time or place was fixed for holding the Superior Courts in the county of Hampshire; but appellate jurisdiction was given to the court holden at Boston, with power to the Governor and Council to order a Superior Court to be holden in the county as occasion should require; but in the year 1699 a Superior Court was ordered to be holden once a year at Springfield; and in the year 1771 an additional term of that court was directed to be holden annually at Northampton. These courts were continued without interruption till all the courts of justice in the county were stopped, in the year 1774.

"By a law passed in 1692, the Courts of Common Pleas were expressly authorized to establish rules of practice. At the same time liberty was given to plaintiffs, if they should so elect, in all cases where the demand exceeded ten pounds, to institute their suits at first in the Superior Courts. In the year 1701 the form for the oath of an attorney was prescribed, which is in use to this day.*

"I have not been able to ascertain that the Court of Common Pleas established any rules of practice, except one affecting attorneys living out of the province and practicing in our courts, which imposed some restraints upon them, and regulated the costs which they should tax. These rules also provided that a person not residing in the State should not be admitted to take the oath of an attorney, and that none who had not taken the oath should tax attorneys' fees; that there should be no costs taxed for the writ from the clerk's office. No taxation to be allowed further than there was actual attendance. An attorney might elect to take his fees or his client's travel and attendance, but not both. These rules were adopted at the March term of 1728."

Between the years 1694 and 1720 there is a chasm in the court records, and the names of attorneys practicing during that period cannot be given. Mr. Bliss mentions John Huggins and Christopher Jacob Lawton as being residents of Springfield in 1686 and subsequently, and as having considerable practice,—probably more than any other persons. Huggins, in particular, had an extensive practice, and was an attorney of excellent information. He subsequently removed to Lower Housatonic (now Sheffield), where he continued in practice, and was succeeded by his son. His declarations were drawn with much formality.

Lawton was regularly admitted in 1726, but very little is known of his subsequent career.

Samuel Partridge, who had been clerk of the court, is mentioned as an attorney, and, after the year 1720, as chief-justice of the Court of Common Pleas.

Among the prominent men mentioned is Timothy Dwight, of Northampton, who was regularly admitted at the August term in 1721, "continuing many years in reputable practice," and subsequently held the office of judge. The names of William Pyncheon and Josiah Dwight, of Springfield, are also given, but the date of their admission to practice seems not to have been known. John Ashley, of Westfield, was admitted in 1732, and at the March term of 1733 the names of Joseph Dwight, Esq., of Brookfield (now in Worcester County), and Oliver Partridge, of Hatfield, appear of record. There is no mention of their legal acquirements other than that shown by the records.

Cornelius Jones, a resident of Springfield, and a tailor by trade, is mentioned as having commenced practice as a pettifogger in 1732; was regularly admitted in 1752, and continued in practice down to 1765. He is said to have been peculiar, and perhaps eccentric, in his manner of doing business, but, notwithstanding, had about as much practice as any attorney of his day.

It would appear, from information obtained by Mr. Bliss, that the attorneys practicing in the western part of the State previous to 1743 had few books, and those not the most valuable. He says, "In the latter part of this period three of the judges of the Court of Common Pleas had been practicing attorneys,—Samuel Partridge, John Ashley, and Henry Dwight. At a later period Timothy Dwight and Josiah Dwight were also judges; and at one time, after the year 1743, the three Dwights above named were on the bench together.

"Though there is plenary evidence that the practice had been, for several years before the year 1743, gradually improving, yet it was in many respects incorrect, and knowledge of legal principles was imperfect. From that time both were very much advanced. This ought to be attributed principally to three men,—Phineas Lyman, of Suffield, John Worthington, of Springfield, and Joseph Hawley, of Northampton."

GEN. PHINEAS LYMAN was born at Durham, Conn., in 1716, graduated at Yale College in 1738, and was a tutor in that institution for three years. In 1742 he left that position, and was soon after admitted to practice law, probably at New Haven, whence he came to Suffield, then considered a part of old Hampshire County, and commenced practice in 1743. His business soon became extensive for those days. Mr. Bliss says: "He was a distinguished advocate, and afterward an able politician and renowned officer." He continued in practice until 1749, at which date Suffield renounced the jurisdiction of Massachusetts, which result the general, according to his biographer, Dr. Dwight, was very instrumental in bringing about, though what the motives were, which impelled him to this course, are left to conjecture.

The general had a small but valuable library, including several ancient authors. From the date of separation between the two colonies, he probably withdrew from practice in Massachusetts.

Upon the breaking out of the French war in 1755, we find him holding a prominent position in military circles as commander-in-chief of the militia of Connecticut, and the same year he served with Sir Wm. Johnson in the campaign around Lake George. He was second in command at the series of battles fought on the 8th of September in that year, and when Sir William Johnson was wounded took the command, and defeated the enemy under the Baron Dieskau, who lost their commander and many men, killed, wounded, and prisoners.

He was also with Abercrombie at Ticonderoga in 1758, at the capture of Crown Point by Amherst in 1759, and at the surrender of Montreal to the same officer in September, 1760. In 1762 he commanded the provincial troops in the Havana expedition. Subsequently he went to England, where he remained for several years, endeavoring to procure grants of land in the Mississippi Valley for the purpose of establishing a colony. In this he was at length successful, and, in 1775, embarked with his son and others for the Mississippi country, but died in West Florida, on his way thither, in the same year.

Worthington and Hawley were both students of Gen. Lyman. The former commenced practice in 1744, and the latter about 1749. "Contemporary with these, in the early part of their practice, were Oliver Partridge, of Hatfield, Charles Phelps, of Hadley, Josiah Dwight, then of Westfield, John Ashley, of Lower Housatonic, and Cornelius Jones, of Springfield. Jones died in 1765."

* 1826.

The following list of barristers and attorneys who were practicing at the close of the third period, in 1774, is from Mr. Bliss' address. It includes, as will be noticed, the names of five who were residents of Berkshire County, but who practiced before the Superior Courts in Hampshire County: John Worthington, of Springfield, barrister; Joseph Hawley, of Northampton, barrister; Charles Phelps, of Hadley; Moses Bliss, of Springfield, barrister; Mark Hopkins, of Great Barrington; Simeon Strong, of Amherst, barrister; Thomas Williams, of Stockbridge; Timothy Danielson, of Brimfield; Elisha Porter, of Hadley; Jonathan Bliss, of Springfield, barrister; Daniel Hitchcock, of Northampton; Theodore Sedgwick, of Sheffield, barrister; Thomas Bridgman (quære, of Brimfield); Jonathan Ashley, of Deerfield; John Phelps, of Westfield; Justin Ely, of West Springfield; Samuel Field, of Deerfield; Elijah Williams, of Deerfield; William Billings, of Sunderland; Samuel Barnard, of Deerfield; Woodbridge Little, of Pittsfield; Samuel Fowler, of Westfield; John Chester Williams, of Hadley; Caleb Strong, of Northampton, barrister; David Noble, of Williamstown. Several of these, according to Mr. Bliss, including the Williamses, Danielson, Bridgman, and Hitchcock, were mostly retired from practice.

Mr. Bliss observes that previous to the advent of Worthington and Hawley "the practice was very illiberal; technical distinctions were much in vogue. This practice continued for some time after their admission, but it seems gradually to have gone out of use, and a more free and liberal course was adopted.

"While Worthington and Hawley were at the head of the profession in this county the Bar adopted a number of rules of practice, and, among others, the important one requiring three years' study before a recommendation for admission should be given. From the first establishment of courts to that time there seems to have been no rule, no settled, uniform practice, on this subject. Probably the courts generally required some previous study, and it has been said that a year had been many times required.

"This rule was adopted but a short time before the Revolution. These regulations originated with the Essex Bar. That county has always been among the foremost in improvement in the knowledge and practice of the law. . . . Some respectable members of the Bar, when this rule as to admission was proposed, doubted whether the term of study was not too long, but, after thorough experiment, became well satisfied with it."

WILLIAM PYNCHON, Esq., of Salem, was a native of old Hampshire County, though he neither studied nor practiced in the county of his birth. He removed to Salem in 1745, and read law with Mr. Sewall. He died in 1790.

In speaking of the Superior Courts, and the customs of the early days, Mr. Bliss remarks, "After the Superior Courts were ordered to be holden in this county, eminent counsel from Boston very frequently attended. The appearance of the Superior Court of that period was adapted to fill the mind with respect. It came into the county but once a year, and was ushered into it by the sheriff with his posse. The dress of the judges while on the bench—their robes and wigs—added to the majesty of their appearance. I saw the court when a boy; and after making all due allowance for the effect upon the mind of a child, I feel confident that no earthly tribunal could inspire greater reverence than its appearance did on my mind. I must believe that there was much in its appearance well adapted to command veneration and respect. The attorneys of that court were all obliged to dress in black, and the barristers, when in court, to wear black gowns. To me it has been a subject of regret that no peculiar costume has been retained or adopted by the Bench and the Bar. When I saw a chief-justice of the United States dressed, while on the bench, in a drab or mixed russet suit, it appeared to me out of character. I know that such a man as Chief-Justice Jay cannot fail to command respect and veneration, but we ought not to reason from the effect produced by a Jay or a Parsons to ordinary cases.

"After Worthington and Hawley came to the Bar they soon acquired a distinguished reputation, and were employed in all important trials. Associated with them, though much their juniors, were Simeon Strong, Moses Bliss, and Jonathan Bliss, and, toward the close of their practice, Mark Hopkins, Theodore Sedgwick, and Caleb Strong."

The northern section of the county, constituting the present county of Franklin, was much more recently settled than the southern and middle portions, and many of the towns were then entirely unsettled. This was also the case with the northern part of the county of Berkshire.

"For a short time before the Revolution, Ashley and Barnard were at Deerfield, Billings at Sunderland, and Field, as I believe, at Conway; Woodbridge Little at Pittsfield, and David Noble was at Williamstown. These, I believe, were all that were in practice in the northern part of these counties.

"In the present county of Hampshire I cannot find that there were attorneys in any of the towns except Northampton, Hadley, and Amherst. And in the limits of the county of Hampden there were none except within the limits of what was then Springfield and Westfield; for I think it uncertain whether either Danielson or Bridgman were in practice at Brimfield as late as the year 1774. Pleading, during this period, acquired in general the same standard which it now (1826) has. This, however, must have been gradual rather than sudden. Though Worthington and Hawley made rapid improvements, considering the disadvantages under which they labored, yet it is not to be supposed that they could produce an instantaneous revolution. It took them some time to procure libraries and become themselves sufficiently instructed, and it must have taken time to induce the court and their seniors at the Bar to conform to their standard. . . . In proportion to its numbers, this Bar has at no period had members of superior legal ability to that which immediately preceded the Revolution."

The following paragraphs upon the lives and characters of Col. Worthington and Maj. Hawley are from Mr. Bliss' address:

"COL. WORTHINGTON was a native of Springfield, born Nov. 24, 1719. He was educated at Yale College, where he graduated in the year 1740, and where he was some time a tutor. He left there in 1743, and read law a short time—as is supposed, about a year—with Gen. Lyman, at Suffield. He commenced practice in 1744, at Springfield, where he resided till his death.

"I have not been able to find any record of his admission, nor that of Lyman Hawley. His legal attainments were highly respectable. He usually attended the courts at Worcester, and, after Berkshire was made a county, the Court of Common Pleas there. His practice was very extensive. He was public prosecutor, or king's attorney, for this county. I never heard him argue a cause to a jury; but, from what I have known of his method of managing controversies, I have no doubt but he was an able advocate. His mind was ardent, his imagination lively, his feelings strong. His ideas were apt to flow in torrents, and he had great command of language. He was many times very powerful. If he had any fault as an advocate, it was this,—that, being very forcibly impressed with his subject, he would sometimes forget the condition of those whom he addressed, and, not always realizing their feelings, he would urge a topic beyond what it would bear. His style was nervous, forcible, and uncommonly correct. He had a taste for general science, and his knowledge was not confined to law and politics.

"From the interruption of the courts in August, 1774, to the time of his death, in April, 1800, Worthington lived retired from public and professional business. Having been thirty years in practice, and during that time conversant with the judges and familiarly acquainted with the eminent lawyers of his time, he was capable of communicating much legal information while his health and ability to converse were continued, and many interesting particulars of the course of practice and of the character of the eminent jurists of his time, and was very free to do it. I had frequently the pleasure and benefit of his instructions. As he had been for many years so situated as to form a very extensive acquaintance, and lived to a good old age, he had many of his friends and acquaintances to visit him and enjoy his conversation. He died in the eighty-first year of his age.*

"Of MAJ. HAWLEY I know much less than of Col. Worthington, but the information I have is derived from those who were many years associated with him in practice. He was born at Northampton in 1724, and graduated at Yale College in the year 1742. After he left college he studied divinity, and was a preacher for several years, though he was never settled in the ministry. He officiated as a chaplain in the provincial army, and was at the siege of Louisburg. After this he studied law with Gen. Lyman, at Suffield, but for how long a time I have not been able to learn. He came to his native place, and went into practice there. The precise time when he began to practice is not ascertained. The first notice of him as an attorney in court is at the May term, 1749, which, by tradition, is the first year of his practice.

"His practice was extensive, though more circumscribed than that of Worthington. He did not usually practice in Worcester County, but regularly attended the Berkshire courts after they were established. He was grave and solemn in his demeanor, was strictly conscientious, and had an instinctive abhorrence of anything approaching to deceit. Juries had confidence in his assertions; their opinion of his stern and undeviating integrity made them very ready to listen to him. His opinions had, with them, great weight. It was said, and generally believed, of him that he would not engage in a cause until he was fully persuaded that his client had right and justice on his side.

"When Hawley was satisfied of the justice of his cause his arguments were very powerful and convincing. When a point of law was to be taken he would meet the case fairly, and reason upon it as a sound logician. Hawley's judicial science was profound. He was peculiarly attached to the old English black-letter law. He was very attentive to forms and tenacious of ancient English precedents. Compared with Worthington, he was probably more conversant with Bracton, Britton, Fleta, and Rastell, but not so well acquainted with the more modern authors, and less acquainted with the various branches of commercial or mercantile law.

"Hawley was a very active and zealous magistrate. He was subject to turns of great depression of spirits. The general tenor of his manners made him more in favor with the people than with the court.

"Worthington, though very popular among his own townsmen, was more courtly in his manners, and, being thought to stand high with the provincial government, had less general popularity. They were generally engaged on opposite sides in court. When they were united a successful opposition to them rarely occurred. They were both correct special pleaders, and could not endure to have legal proceedings in any other than appropriate technical language.

* It is said by one writer that there were suspicions of the colonel's loyalty to the cause of the colonies during the era of the Revolution, and that Zelina Stebbins, chairman of the town committee of correspondence, once gave him a certificate of good character against the charge of Toryism.

"Maj. Hawley, in the year 1767 or '68, fell under the censure of the Superior Court and was suspended from practice. At the next term he was restored at the motion of Col. Worthington. The precise state of the case I cannot give, but have always understood that there was no imputation on Hawley's character in the affair. He was counsel for some persons in the county of Berkshire who had been indicted for being concerned in a riot. In the course of the trial he made some observations which the court considered as having too much of the spirit of liberty to be permitted to pass without animadversion.

"Worthington and Hawley had the honor of numbering among their pupils those who would be ornaments to any Bar. Hawley never practiced after the year 1774, but occasionally presided in the Court of Sessions as the oldest magistrate in the county. He died in March, 1788, aged sixty-four years."

President Dwight, in speaking of Hawley, uses this language: "Many men have spoken with more elegance and grace. I never heard one speak with more force. His mind, like his eloquence, was grave, austere, and powerful.

"Worthington and Hawley were both men in whose honesty and fairness those who knew them intimately would place unbounded confidence. Hawley retained more of the manners of our Puritan ancestors. Worthington had long been conversant with the most polished society in our country, and added to great acquisitions as a lawyer those of a scholar and a gentleman. Though their manners were very different, a dishonest, unprincipled man would choose to keep out of their way.

"That Worthington and Hawley should, with the means then in their power, have acquired such eminence is a proof of great talent and industry. It is also evidence that a thorough knowledge of the law, as derived from its ancient sources, will make a man respectable without reading every modern publication.

"Hawley's law-library consisted principally of ancient authors. Worthington had a much better collection of more modern authors."

MOSES BLISS graduated at Yale College in 1755, after which he studied divinity and preached for a considerable time. Subsequently he read law a year with Col. Worthington, and was admitted to the Bar in November, 1761. It appears that he practiced several years before his admission, which would seem from the records to have been a common occurrence in those days. He retired from practice in 1798.

Hon. George Bliss says of him, "He was generally esteemed as a sound lawyer and a skillful special pleader. His contemporaries valued his legal opinions."

SIMEON STRONG was born at Northampton in 1735, graduated at Yale College in 1756, and devoted himself to the ministry for several years; but relinquished the profession he had marked out, which he could the more easily do as he had not yet been settled over a church, on account of pulmonary difficulties. He afterward read law in the office of Col. Worthington and commenced practice at Amherst in 1762, and was admitted to the Bar in November of that year.

After the stoppage of the courts, in 1774, there followed an interval of several years before he resumed practice. From 1780 to 1800 he had an extensive business, and regularly attended the courts. In 1800 he was appointed one of the judges of the Supreme Court. During his retirement from practice, it is said that he employed his time in an extensive revision of his law-books.

In summing up his character, Mr. Bliss says of him, "There were some traits in his character which may be worthy of particular notice. He was very modest and unassuming in his deportment, and on all occasions treated the court before whom he appeared with deference and respect. Whatever he might think of the man, he always respected the judge. In a person of his acquirements, and with wit of such caustic powers as he sometimes exhibited, and before judges at times for whom no very high claims could be advanced, this was a feature of character rarely to be found. It is possible this might partially be owing to the respect habitually paid to the old Superior Court; but I am satisfied it was principally personal, and that he lost nothing in this way.

"I have known Mr. Strong to acquire considerable advantage by the course he pursued. Another trait not always to be found in the character of distinguished advocates was the perfect fairness with which he was accustomed to treat his antagonists. He was as astute as any man to discover a mistake, but would never take unreasonable advantage of it. In his remarks to the jury the client or the case might feel the keen point of his satire, but toward his brethren of the Bar he was always civil and courteous. He was eminently skilled in the science of special pleading. He generally attended the courts in Worcester as well as Hampshire, and in the former part of his practice frequently attended at Berkshire.

"After deducting the intervals of his practice, he was nearly a third of a century at the Bar. His manner was not the most graceful, but the clearness, force, and point of his address to the jury always procured him great attention. As Judge Strong was more than five years on the Bench of the Supreme Court, the soundness of his legal opinions will appear from the reports. He died December 14, 1805.

"Among the distinguished members of the Bar before the Revolution was JONATHAN BLISS, of Springfield. He graduated at Cambridge in 1763, read law with Judge Trowbridge, and was contemporary, and many years corresponded, with Francis Dana. He began practice in November, 1764; was in good practice, and esteemed an able advocate and counselor. At the approach of the Revolutionary contest, in August, 1774, having no family, he went to England, and never afterward resided in the United States. He was successively attorney-general and chief-justice of the province of New Brunswick, and died in the latter office at an advanced age. These offices he filled with high reputation. His manners were those of a gentleman of the old school."*

With reference to the five last-mentioned attorneys, Mr. Bliss says they "were the only barristers there were in this [Hampshire] county before the Revolution. Governor Strong and Judge Sedgwick were invested with this honor after the peace.

"One other distinguished man read law and was admitted to the Bar in this county,† though I do not learn that he ever practiced here. PIERPONT EDWARDS was of Northampton; he was admitted February term, 1771. He soon removed to New Haven, where he acquired great professional celebrity. His eloquence, as much as that of any other man, appeared to be strictly extemporaneous; yet I had the opportunity of knowing that no person was accustomed to bestow more pains in preparing a case. He was wont to study it thoroughly, and examine all points likely to arise in it."

In speaking of the law-libraries of early times in this region, Mr. Bliss says that Col. Worthington's was the most extensive; but that Maj. Hawley, after he purchased Gen. Lyman's old works, had a more valuable collection of ancient English authors. This last was mostly destroyed by fire about 1820 or 1822. Jonathan Bliss also had an extensive library, which remained in the country until after the peace of 1783.

From the records of the county it appears that the administration of justice in the inferior courts was suspended during the years 1765 and 1766, for the reason that all venires were required by the celebrated "Stamp Act" to be on stamped

* It is stated by Dr. Booth that Mr. Bliss returned to Springfield in 1791, married a daughter of Col. Worthington, and returned to New Brunswick. One of his sons became a lawyer in London, England, and another was made chief-justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, in Nova Scotia, and resided at Halifax.

† Old Hampshire County.

paper. These courts, imbued with something of the spirit which actuated the people of the colony, declined to use the evidence of what was considered an unjust and unlawful tax, and continued all jury causes till the law was repealed.

"At the time the courts were stopped, in 1774, there were probably in Hampshire and Berkshire a little more than twenty persons who paid some attention to professional business, but the principal part of it was done by a much less number. Of these, Worthington and Hawley never returned to practice, though Col. Worthington had several students in his office after 1774. Jonathan Bliss had removed, as I have stated, and three out of five barristers entirely left the courts. Many of the other lawyers retired, and either never came to the Bar again or did very little business there.

"The courts of justice were closed in August, 1774, and no Court of Common Pleas was appointed till May, 1778. The Superior Court might have been holden once or twice during the interval; but very little professional business was done till the close of the Revolutionary war. The most of what was done was by Governor Strong and John Chester Williams.

"At the close of the Revolutionary war business was very greatly increased in our courts. The fountains of justice, which had been some time closed, were suddenly opened, and the torrents seemed likely to overwhelm everything in their course. But this was soon checked. Barriers of various kinds were interposed, and the doors were but partially open. At this time the people in this county were greatly in debt. The merchants at Boston and New York had before the Revolution, many of them, given extensive credit to the country traders; they, in their turn, had generally sold their goods on credit.

"Those debts which had escaped the blast of paper-money—and many such there were—had accumulated to a large amount. In addition, too, the public burdens pressed very heavily. The debts incurred for hiring and supporting soldiers, as well as direct taxes, were beyond the means of the people to discharge. There was no market for produce, and its price was greatly reduced. Distressed and driven almost to desperation, instead of imputing their sufferings to the real causes, the people looked only to the immediate instruments, the attorneys, and sheriffs, and collectors of taxes, and considered them as nuisances and pests to society.

"From the latter part of the year 1784 the practice of the law was for several years in this county under a cloud. Mobs obstructed courts of justice and opened the prisons. Great pains were taken by artful and designing men, by means of publications in the newspapers and in various other ways, to fasten popular odium on the profession, and for a time their efforts were successful.

"Lawyers were accused of multiplying suits unnecessarily, and of improperly enhancing bills of costs. However this might be in other parts of the commonwealth,—and I have never heard any proof of the assertion in regard to any county,—it is certain that in this there was no foundation for the accusation.

"The Bar in this county, as a body, took a variety of measures to avert the odium. They determined to discourage all suits, where it could be done with safety, and adopted a practice, which has since become extensive, instead of appealing or continuing actions at large, that of continuing them for final judgment, thereby diminishing the expense, and giving each party as much advantage as would have been derived from an appeal upon default. But all expedients were ineffectual."

The discontent among the people succeeding the Revolution resulted in conventions which met to consider the state of the country and to devise measures for relief in various places, prominent among them being those held at Worcester, on the 15th of August, and at Hatfield, on the 22d of the same month, 1786.

These conventions voted themselves constitutional bodies, and drew up formidable lists of grievances, prominent among them being the lack of a circulating medium and the "method of practice of the attorneys-at-law."

The discontent finally culminated in the celebrated "Shays Rebellion," which was quelled by force of arms in January, 1787. But the difficulties were not disposed of by its suppression, and the General Court undertook to remedy the existing evils by numerous acts, among which was the one known as the "See Cause Act," which, however, was passed in December, 1786, before the dispersion of the insurgents.

This act gave justices of the peace greatly-increased jurisdiction, and was, no doubt, intended to virtually do away with the necessity for employing attorneys in all ordinary cases. This law was somewhat modified after 1790, but business did not return to its regular channels until about the year 1800.

Mr. Bliss closes his remarks upon the old Bar of Hampshire County with somewhat extended notices of Governor Caleb Strong and Judge Sedgwick, from which we make copious extracts. Of Governor Strong he says, "He was born at Northampton, Jan. 9, 1745, and graduated at Cambridge College in 1764. After he left college his health was very feeble, and he was so much afflicted with weakness in his eyes as to be entirely unable to read. He, however, commenced the study of law with Maj. Hawley, and was accustomed to procure his father or one of his sisters to read for him. He spent considerable of his time in journeying to regain his health. I have not been able to find any record of his admission. I have been told that the courts were for some time disinclined to admit any more attorneys, but finally consented to admit him.

"It is said he began to practice in 1772, and in that year I first find him named as attorney of record. It is very manifest that the court pursued no fixed course in regard to admissions, and it is also probable that some were admitted whose names may not appear on record. As it was but little more than two years from the time that Strong began to practice to the time when the courts were interrupted, it is probable that his business was not very extensive. But after the courts were re-established, and until he left the Bar, in 1800, his practice was more extensive than that of any person in the county. He regularly attended the courts in Worcester and Berkshire, as well as this county. Though much employed in public business, he generally was able to attend to his professional engagements as well as his public duties. That forecast which was so remarkable a trait in his character was advantageously employed in making his arrangements to attend the courts without deserting public business. When at General Court or at Congress, he would come and attend a court and return, and perhaps not be missed at all.

"He was one of the most diligent and industrious men living; he improved every moment. With a very large civil docket and many criminal cases to manage,—for he was public prosecutor for the county from the re-establishment of the courts, in 1778, till he left the Bar,—his business was so arranged as to be always ready. Habits of procrastination, which are sometimes found among lawyers, he never indulged, and it was astonishing how much business he would accomplish without any noise, or even the appearance of extraordinary engagements. His mind was uncommonly versatile: interruption did not seem to break its course. He would resume a subject, after attending to some important business, as though nothing had intervened. He was very fond of reading, and always had a book at hand, that he might improve every leisure moment. His knowledge of law was more universal than that of any of those already named, but I am not prepared to say that he was so peculiarly distinguished in the doctrines of real actions as Judge Strong; but in this branch of the law he was respectable, and there was no deficiency when applied to practice. His draughts and forms were uncommonly accurate. It was rare indeed that any defects or mistakes were discovered. Being peculiarly skilled in draughting, he was much employed in this branch of business.

"Many of the statutes of the United States and of this commonwealth were formed by him. His pleading was, among professional men, always received as good authority; it was, however, rather less in the English style than that of his master, or of Judge Strong.

"Governor Strong's aid and counsel were as much sought after and relied on as those of any one. He was a very successful advocate before a jury. His manner was as different from that of Hawley as could well be conceived. His address was pleasing and insinuating. He commonly began in a very low tone of voice, talking to the jury in a very familiar manner, but so as to gain their attention. Whether others heard or not, he was not concerned. Not infrequently, before those whom he addressed or any one else suspected it, he had gained his point. I have frequently heard it observed by one who had been called to practice in all the counties in the State that he found no man he so much feared as closing counsel as Caleb Strong.

"He was the favorite advocate when the rights of humanity were to be vindicated. He early took a decided part in favor of the negroes. As he lived several years after he retired from public life, and in good health and spirits, his conversation was uncommonly instructive and entertaining. He had known most of the great men of our country from the early part of the Revolution, and been conversant with most of the important measures that had been postponed or adopted; and as his memory was very tenacious, he was ready to give anecdotes of nearly all, and in such a manner as was always pleasing. He was twice offered a seat on the Bench of the Supreme Court, but declined it. He died Nov. 7, 1819, in his seventy-fifth year."

The HON. THEODORE SEDGWICK "was born at Hartford, West Division, in Connecticut, in the year 1746; graduated at Yale College in 1765, read law in the county of Berkshire with Mark Hopkins, Esq., and was admitted to the Bar in 1766. It is said that he did not complete his college term, and was therefore admitted to the Bar very young. The first notice I find of him, in our courts in this county, is at the May term of 1767. He first practiced in Great Barrington, then removed to Sheffield, and afterward to Stockbridge. He was fast rising into eminence when the Revolution interrupted the regular administration of justice. From the beginning of his practice until the year 1802, when he was appointed a judge of the Supreme Judicial Court, he regularly attended our courts and practiced at our Bar. His practice, however, was subject to many interruptions by public business. As he was many years a judge, those who did not know him personally may, from the reports, learn how profound his knowledge of law was. He was ardent in his feelings, and of a sanguine temperament. His eloquence was forcible and commanding. What he gained was by fair means. His attacks were above-board; he gave warning, and put his adversary upon his guard. In all important causes his assistance was requested, and he was frequently called out of the State.

"There is one thing which ought to be mentioned to his honor. He stood many years at the head of the profession in the county of Berkshire. During his professional life he had many students. His pupils, through his attention and that of an honorable gentleman long associated with him, came into practice much better indoctrinated than many of those who had served a clerkship in this county."

Of another prominent attorney Mr. Bliss says: "The HON. ELI P. ASHmun had not the advantages of a public education. He read law with Judge Sedgwick, and was a bright example to what eminence, notwithstanding the want of a thorough classical education, and notwithstanding very great feebleness of voice, a person may arrive. It will be no disparagement to any one to say that he was for many years at the head of the profession in this county. He was an eminent advocate and sage counselor; but he was more, very much more, than these epithets imply."

Previous to the year 1826 the territory now constituting the four western counties of the State had furnished one governor, two judges of the Supreme Court, two members of the old Congress, four United States senators, one speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, one member of the original United States Constitutional Convention, three members of the convention that formed the State constitution, seven representatives in Congress, twenty-seven State senators, six State councillors, one president of the State Senate and two speakers of the House of Representatives, eight judges of the Common Pleas and Circuit Courts, five judges of Probate, and four sheriffs.

In summing up his remarks upon the Bar, Mr. Bliss continues: "The men of whom I have given a particular account had not the advantages which students now have. Probably a copy of Blackstone was not to be found in the county before the year 1770. They had Hale and Gilbert, and, a short time before the Revolution, Bacon's Abridgment, but there was not in the county a copy of Cornyn's Digest. They had Coke and Littleton, as well as Rastell, Fitzherbert, Bracton, Britton, and Fleta. It is, however, to be recollected that what they had was in a narrow compass. They were not obliged, in acquiring the treasures of legal science, to hunt for them in hundreds of detached volumes, or to search for gold where it was spread out so thin, or the thread of it drawn so fine, that even a modern microscope could scarcely discover it. A person who was apt to learn might sooner get all their books by heart than cursorily look through modern law-publications."

The following is a list of the attorneys and counselors, either admitted to the Bar in the county of Hampshire or practicing in that county, from 1786 to 1826, taken from the appendix to Hon. George Bliss' address in 1826: Elihu Lyman, Moses Bliss, Simeon Strong, Theodore Sedgwick, Caleb Strong, Justin Ely, John Phelps, Samuel Fowler, William Billings, John Chester Williams, Abner Morgan, Edward Walker, John Chandler Williams, Alexander Wolcott, Samuel Lyman, Pliny Mirrick, Samuel Hinckley, John Hooker, Ephraim Williams, John Barrett, Samuel Mather, George Bliss, Joseph Lyman, John Taylor, William Coleman, Jona. E. Porter, Simeon Strong, William Ely, John Phelps, Eli P. Ashmun, Jona. Leavitt, Elijah Paine, Stephen Pynchon, John Ingersoll, Solomon Stoddard, Wm. M. Bliss, Richard E. Newcomb, Jonathan Grout, Hezekiah W. Strong, Charles P. Phelps, Samuel Lathrop, Elijah Bates, Solomon Vose, Jonathan Dwight, Jr., Jotham Cushman, Benjamin Parsons, Edward Upham, Jonathan Woodbridge, Joseph Proctor, Samuel F. Dickinson, Phineas Ashmun, Joseph Bridgman, Sylvester Maxwell, Wm. Billings, Elijah H. Mills, Pliny Arms, Elijah Alvord, Samuel C. Allen, Theodore Strong, Edmund Dwight, Oliver B. Morris, Henry Barnard, Giles E. Kellogg, Charles Shepard, John Nevers, James M. Cooley, Solomon Strong, Alvin Coe, Noah D. Mattoon, Isaac C. Bates, Jonathan H. Lyman, John M. Gannett, Lewis Strong, Alanson Knox, Asabel Wright, Mark Doolittle, Samuel Orne, Hooker Leavitt, Samuel Howe, Phinchas Blair, Samuel Cutting, Isaac B. Barber, Laban Marcy, Israel Billings, Deodatus Dutton, Apollos Cushman, Rodolphus Dickinson, Edward Bliss, Daniel Shearer, Calvin Pepper, Wm. Blair, John H. Henshaw, James Stebbins, Wm. Ward, George Grinnell, David Willard, Horace W. Taft, John Drury, Franklin Ripley, Thomas Powar, Augustus Collins, Dyer Bancroft, Warren A. Field, Patrick Boise, John Mills, John Hooker, Jr., Samuel Johnson, Wm. Knight, John Howard, Benjamin Day, Joshua N. Upham, George Bliss, Jr., Justice Willard, Charles F. Bates, Solomon Lathrop, Wm. Bowdoin, Hopuni

Judd, Ithamar Conkey, Norman Smith, James Fowler, Elisha Hubbard, Eli B. Hamilton, Daniel Wells, Samuel Wells, Alfred Stearns, Caleb Rice, Jonathan A. Saxton, Frederick A. Packard, Lucius Boltwood, Jonathan Eastman, Waldo Flint, Charles E. Forbes, Cyrus Joy, David Brigham, Aaron Arms, Joseph P. Allen, Benjamin Brainard, Jonathan Hartwell, David A. Gregg, Epaphras Clark, Benjamin Mills, Timothy C. Cooley, John B. Cooley, Asa Olmstead, Horace Smith, Joshua Leavitt, Mason Shaw, Elisha Mack, John H. Ashmun, Samuel F. Lyman, Justin W. Clark, Horatio Byington, Emory Washburn, Horatio G. Newcomb, Wm. B. Calhoun, Josiah Hooker, Wm. Bliss, Erasmus Norcross, Daniel N. Dewey, Myron Lawrence, James W. Crooks, Richard D. Morris, Dan Parish, Homer Bartlett, Osmyn Baker, Elijah Williams, Francis B. Stebbins, Norman T. Leonard, Reuben A. Chapman, George Ashmun, Henry Chapman, Stephen Emory, — Field, Edward Dickinson, Andrew A. Locke.

The attorneys and counselors admitted to the Bar in Hampshire County since 1826 have been as follows:

- 1827.—Edward Hooker.
 1829.—Arad Gilbert, William Dwight, Chas. P. Huntington, Elijah Williams (2d).
 1830.—William M. Lathrop, Henry Starkweather, Fred'k H. Allen, William G. Bates, Barlow Freeman, William D. Gere.
 1831.—George G. Parker, Benjamin D. Hyde.
 1832.—Chauncey B. Rising, Almon Brainerd, Francis Dwight.
 1833.—Samuel L. Hinckley.
 1834.—Lincoln B. Knowlton.
 1836.—Samuel Henshaw Bates.
 1839.—Addison H. White.
 1840.—John Chester Lyman.
 1842.—Charles Delano, Whiting Griswold, Henry L. Dawes Ervin H. Porter, Calvin Torrey.
 1844.—Samuel T. Spaulding, Horace I. Hodges, Chauncey P. Judd.
 1845.—William Allen, Jr.
 1846.—Wm. W. Whitman, James W. Boyden.
 1850.—D. G. Sherman, F. H. Underwood, Lewis J. Dudley, Charles Allen.
 1852.—John Newton Rogers.
 1858.—Ephraim L. Lincoln.
 1859.—James R. Dewey, Homer B. Stevens, Wm. E. Turner.
 1860.—Charles H. Day, Jos. Lyman Morton, Robert Ogden Dwight.
 1862.—Justin P. Kellogg.
 1863.—William P. Duncan.
 1864.—Francis A. Beals.
 1865.—Daniel W. Bond.
 1866.—Charles L. Gardner.
 1868.—John C. Hammond.
 1869.—Henry H. Bond.
 1872.—Wm. Bradford Homer, Wm. Slattery, Jr., Timothy R. Pelton.
 1873.—Terrence B. O'Donnell.
 1874.—John B. Bottum.
 1875.—Moses M. Hobart.
 1876.—Arthur Watson.
 1877.—Charles N. Clark.
 1878.—James I. Cooper, Enos Parsons, Wm. H. Clapp, David Hill, John B. O'Donnell, Robert W. Lyman.
 1879.—Edward A. Greeley.

The following attorneys resident in Hampshire County were admitted elsewhere: Wm. A. Dickinson, John Jameson, Edward E. Webster, Wm. P. Strickland, Alburn J. Fargo, Wm. G. Bassett, Thaddeus Graves, George Kress, Franklin D. Richards, Henry C. Davis.

The following is a list of the members of the Bar in Hampden County from 1812 to 1879, with the date of their admittance:

- 1812.—Patrick Boise.*
 1813.—John Hooker, Jr.* George Hinckley,† John Howard.*
 1814.—Solomon Lathrop.*
 1815.—Charles F. Bates,* Benjamin Day,* George Bliss, Jr.,*
 Eli B. Hamilton.*
 1816.—Gorham Parks.*
 1817.—Alfred Stearns,* Caleb Rice.*
 1818.—William B. Calhoun,* John B. Cooley.*
 1819.—Epaphras Clark,* Erasmus Norcross,* Heman Stebbins,* Asa Olmstead.*
 1820.—Josiah Hooker.*
 1822.—William Bliss,* Joel Miller,† Richard D. Morris.*
 1824.—Warham Crooks,* Norman T. Leonard.
 1825.—Reuben A. Chapman.*
 1827.—Matthew Ives, Jr.*
 1828.—William G. Bates, William M. Lathrop,† Joseph Knox,† George Ashmun.*
 1829.—Chauncey B. Rising,† William Dwight.†
 1830.—Francis Dwight,* William Hyde.†
 1831.—Joseph Huntington.*
 1832.—William Bliss,† William C. Dwight.*
 1833.—E. D. Beach.*
 1834.—Richard Bliss.†
 1835.—Henry Morris.
 1836.—H. H. Buckland,* George Baylies Upham.†
 1837.—Russell E. Dewey.†
 1839.—William W. Blair.†
 1840.—George B. Morris.*
 1841.—Henry Vose.*
 1842.—Edward Bates Gillett.
 1843.—Otis A. Seamans,* Lorenzo Norton,* William O. Gorham,† Lorenzo D. Brown.†
 1845.—Allen Bangs, Jr.,* Wellington Thompson,* Ephraim W. Bond, Lester E. Newell,† Albert Clarke,† William Allen, Jr.†
 1846.—P. Emory Aldrich,† Thomas B. Munn,* George Walker, Bernard B. Whittmore,† Lester Williams, Jr.,† Charles C. Hayward.†
 1847.—Samuel L. Fleming,† Elbridge G. Bowdoin,† James H. Morton,* Samuel Fowler, Edwin M. Bigelow,† Charles K. Wetherell.†
 1848.—Fayette Smith,† Charles R. Ladd, George L. Squier,† Reuben P. Boies,† Charles H. Bransecomb.†
 1849.—Joseph M. Cavis,† William B. C. Pearsons, Aug. L. Soule, Henry Fuller, John Munn,† Edward P. Burnham.†
 1850.—Timothy G. Pelton,† Charles A. Winchester,* Asabel Bush,† Franklin Crosby.†
 1851.—Charles T. Arthur,* John M. Stebbins, William Howland,† Oramel S. Senter,† N. A. Leonard, James C. Hinsdale.†
 1852.—George M. Stearns, Martin J. Severance,† James F. Dwight,† William C. Greene,† George L. Frost.*
 1853.—Milton B. Whitney, William L. Smith, James G. Allen,* John H. Thompson.†
 1854.—John M. Emerson,* Henry B. Lewis, George O. Ide,† James K. Mills.†
 1855.—Norman L. Johnson,† James E. McIntire, Samuel J. Ross,† A. M. Copeland.
 1856.—Joel T. Rice,† William S. Shurtleff, Irving Allen,† George H. Knapp.
 1857.—Ambrose N. Merrick,† S. B. Woolworth,† E. A. Warriner,† Edw. D. Hayden.†
 1858.—Liberty B. Dennett,† Stephen E. Seymour, Frank E. Merriman.†
 1859.—Moses W. Chapin,* Henry E. Daniels,† Porter Underwood, William C. Ide,† William H. Haile, Benton W. Cole,* E. Howard Lathrop, Homer B. Stevens.

- 1860.—Gideon Wells.
 1861.—James A. Rumrill, John W. Moore,† Otis P. Abercrombie.†
 1862.—Timothy M. Brown, Marcus P. Knowlton, Joseph H. Blair.†
 1863.—Sidney Sanders,† Reuben Chapman,* Samuel G. Loring.†
 1864.—William S. Green, Edward Morris.
 1865.—Charles A. Beach,† James C. Greenough,† J. P. Buckland, E. W. Chapin, Joseph Morgan.
 1866.—George D. Robinson.
 1867.—George B. Morris, Jr.,† Hugh Donnelly, Charles A. Birnie,† J. Porter, Jr.,† C. L. Gardner.
 1868.—Charles C. Spellman, Elisha B. Maynard, Luther White.
 1869.—William B. Rogers, John W. Burgess.†
 1870.—Elbridge W. Merrill,† Joseph W. Browne, John M. Cochran.†
 1871.—Albert A. Tyler, Edward Bellamy.
 1872.—John P. Wall, Thomas F. Riley,† Harris L. Sherman, John W. Converse, Charles L. Long, William Slatery, Jr., S. S. Taft.
 1873.—Robert O. Morris, Jonathan Allen, Luther Emerson Barnes,† F. E. Carpenter.
 1874.—James R. Dunbar, Loranus E. Hitchcock.

The following additional names have been added since Mr. Bates' list was prepared:

- 1874.—W. J. Quinn,† H. K. Hawes, Austin P. Cristy,† Daniel E. Webster.
 1875.—Joseph M. Ross, Geo. L. Pease, Elisha P. Bartholomew, Michael L. Moriarty,† Harrison Hume, John L. King,† Wm. G. White, Thomas B. Warren, C. A. Sherman, H. A. Bartholomew.
 1876.—Hubert M. Coney, Charles J. Bellamy, Neill Dumont,† Edmund P. Kendrick, John B. Vincent, Jr.
 1877.—Charles H. Hersey,† Geo. H. Graves,† Fred. H. Gillett,† Michael T. Foley, A. L. Murray, Patrick H. Casey, Allen Webster, Wm. H. Brooks.
 1878.—Jeremiah P. Whalen,† George Kress, Willmore B. Stone, Henry M. Walradt, Charles R. Dudley, W. W. McClench.

CHAPTER XXVI.

MOSTLY PRACTITIONERS AT THE HAMPDEN COUNTY BAR.

HON. GEORGE BLISS.

THE Bliss family have been prominent in the history of the Connecticut Valley, and especially in connection with the Bar, having furnished a half-dozen or more prominent members of the legal profession.

According to Mr. Bates, the oldest member of the Bar in 1828 was HON. GEORGE BLISS, author of the well-known address delivered to the members of the old Hampshire Bar at Northampton, in 1826, and also of an historical address delivered in 1828.

Mr. Bliss was born in 1765, and died in 1830, at the age of sixty-five years. He graduated at the age of nineteen, in 1784. "He was called 'Master George,' because he had been accustomed to have a number of students, and was reported to have been more than usually attentive to their instruction."

It is said that he prepared a course of lectures upon different branches of the law, which he was accustomed to deliver to his students. It has been stated that when the Court of Common Pleas was organized, in 1820, he desired and expected an appointment as one of the judges, but another was chosen,

* Deceased.

† Removed from the county

* Deceased.

† Removed from the county.

and Mr. Bliss was so much disappointed that he never afterward practiced in that court.

The reason of his not being appointed was claimed by his friends to have been his religious opinions. He was a well-read and thorough lawyer, as the various papers from his pen and the reports amply testify. His address before the Bar of old Hampshire County is a most excellently written paper, and an honor alike to his head and heart. Mr. Bates pays him several merited compliments in the incidents related of his practice in Hampden County.

He was a distinguished advocate before the Supreme Court, where he was a formidable antagonist of Governor Caleb Strong; which statement is in itself a high compliment to his scholarship and ability.

JOHN INGERSOLL* was born in Westfield, Mass., Aug. 13, 1769. His paternal and maternal ancestors, the Ingersolls and the Moseleys, were prominent in the early history of that town. His remote paternal ancestor was John Ingersoll,—one of the "seven pillars" or "foundation-men" who united to form the church in Westfield in 1679.

His collegiate education was received at Yale College, where he was a member of the class of 1790. He began the study of the law in Westfield, and subsequently continued it in the office of Hon. Caleb Strong, of Northampton, where he was admitted to practice before the Supreme Court in 1797.

He commenced practice in his native town, where, as early as the year 1800, he was successfully established. In the last-named year he married, at Northampton, Elizabeth Martin, of Antigua, West Indies. Upon the organization of the county of Hampden, in 1812, he was appointed clerk of the courts, but continued to reside at Westfield until November, 1814, when he removed his family to Springfield, where he continued to reside until his death, in 1840.

He held the office to which he was appointed until his decease,—a period of about twenty-nine years,—which is ample evidence that he was a faithful and an able officer.

The following extract is from an article which appeared at the time of his death in the local paper:

"John Ingersoll, Esq., died at his residence in this town on Saturday last, in the seventy-second year of his age. Since the organization of this county—a period of twenty-eight or nine years—he has held the office of clerk of the courts for the county, the duties of which he has faithfully and promptly discharged. He was universally respected by the members of the Bar, and his absence from the post which for so many years he has honorably occupied will be by them seriously felt.

"In his social and private relations he was, we believe, what a good citizen, a friend and father, should be, and by his virtues endeared himself to a large circle of friends, by whom his loss will be felt, his memory cherished."

HON. SAMUEL LATHROP was the fourth son of Rev. Joseph Lathrop; born in West Springfield in 1771, and graduated at Yale College in 1792. He read law, but the date of his admission to the Bar is not stated.

In 1797 he married Mary McCrackan, of New Haven, Conn., by whom he had ten children,—four sons and six daughters.

He was an attorney of eminent ability, and was elected to Congress, and represented his district from 1818 to 1824.

He was also for ten years a member of the State Senate, and president of that body in 1819–20, and ran very close for Governor of the State at one gubernatorial election. His services in the State Legislature and in the national Congress interfered with his practice of the law, though he continued it as late as 1825. In his later years, he devoted considerable of his time to agricultural pursuits, and paid great attention to the improvement of stock in the valley. He died in 1846, at the age of seventy-five.

HON. ELIJAH H. MILLS was the next in order of seniority of those who were practicing at the Hampden County Bar in 1825. He was graduated at Williams College in 1797, admitted to the Bar of the Supreme Judicial Court, at Northampton, in 1803, and was in an extensive practice.

His election to the Senate of the United States interfered with his practice, but during the vacations he had abundant opportunities for the display of his powers.

"He was connected in business with Hon. John H. Ashmun, who was subsequently Royal professor of law in the Harvard University, and who was well able to prepare his cases or to argue them in case of the necessary absence of Mr. Mills.

"During the years 1827–28 I was in the law-school at Northampton, and was a clerk in the office of Mills & Ashmun, and had the opportunity of observing their mode of preparing cases. This was mostly done by Mr. Ashmun during the absence of Mr. Mills. He prepared an elaborate brief, noticing the anticipated objections and citing the authorities, and also setting down the objections to be made to the proposed evidence of the opposite counsel. This was done with a thoroughness which I have never seen equaled. The brief was submitted to Mr. Mills, who appeared to apprehend it instinctively, and, with a slight conversation, went forth equipped for the contest.

"He was a man, in person, of full size, well formed, erect and graceful in his carriage, with an eye which, when lighted up with excitement, was as powerful as that of the Caliph Vathek upon the heart of a dishonest witness. He was connected with Judge Howe in the management of the law-school at Northampton, but his health was then in a decline, and he gradually withdrew from the school, and at last from the active duties of the law-office.

"At the courts in Hampshire he was the adversary of Hon. Lewis Strong and Hon. Isaac C. Bates. The contests between them used to call together large audiences. The people seemed delighted to witness the intellectual struggles of these eminent advocates."†

"HON. ISAAC C. BATES graduated at Yale College in 1802 with the highest honors of his class. He was admitted in the Supreme Court in 1807." He studied law in New Haven, and there acquired that knowledge of general principles which served him so well in after-years. His tastes naturally led him in the direction of agricultural pursuits, and for some time he gave up the care of his office to his partner, contenting himself with giving his time occasionally to such cases as seemed to force themselves upon him.

"A speech of his before the Agricultural Society, in 1823, and an address before the Bible Society in New York City, about the same time, by the complimentary notices which they elicited, seemed to arouse his energies, and he afterward devoted himself to the argument of important cases in the courts." His success was brilliant. In Hampshire County he rivaled Mr. Mills as a leader, and in a certain class of cases far exceeded him. He was equally successful in Hampden County, where he was an acknowledged leader.

"His addresses to the jury were studied and eloquent, and, when the facts and law of a cause would authorize it, his influence was omnipotent. Judge Howe, on his return from a term in Hampden, in narrating a speech of Mr. Bates, spoke of it as the most effective and eloquent to which he had ever listened; and Prof. Ashmun, in speaking of another argument, when he was upon the other side, said that he was so hurried along by the power of the advocate that he for the time forgot on which side he was engaged, and that all his sympathies moved on with him in opposition to the case of his own client.

"He was elected, and served a number of terms in the

* From memoranda furnished by his son, Maj. Edward Ingersoll, Paymaster U. S. A.

† Bates' address.

House of Representatives and for a period of five years in the Senate, and his eloquence in each body received high commendation. Those who listened to or read the glowing tribute to his memory pronounced by Mr. Webster in the United States Senate will appreciate how feelingly the words of the great Senator portrayed the eloquence of one whose lips were to be evermore silent."

HON. OLIVER B. MORRIS.—The following notice of this eminent and honored citizen of Hampden County is compiled from an article published in the Springfield Republican of April 10, 1871:

Oliver B. Morris, who died on Sunday morning, represented Springfield more fully, and for a longer period, than any man who remains among us. He was born in the village of South Wilbraham (now Hampden), Sept. 22, 1782, and was consequently in his eighty-ninth year and the oldest man in Springfield. His father, Edward Morris, had been a soldier in the Revolutionary war, serving principally in Canada, and his mother was the daughter of John Bliss, of Wilbraham, who was an officer in the Massachusetts militia which served at White Plains, and, after the war, a county judge and representative at the General Court.

Judge Morris prepared for college with Rev. Moses Warren, a South Wilbraham clergyman, and at the early age of fifteen years entered Williams College. He graduated in 1801, and at the time of his death was the oldest living graduate of that institution.

He came from college to Springfield, and commenced the study of the law with Hon. George Bliss, then a leading attorney in the Connecticut Valley. Mr. Bliss resided in the house next below the old Universalist church on Main Street, and his office was in the wing of the building. Judge Morris boarded with Mr. Bliss during his studies, and in 1813 married his daughter Caroline.

He was admitted to the Bar in 1804, and opened his first office in a frame building on the corner of Main and State Streets, owned by Moses Bliss (on the site of the present Savings-Bank building), where he continued until he retired from practice in 1835.

He was appointed register of Probate for Hampden County in 1813, and held the office until 1829, when he was appointed judge of the same court, and continued in that position until 1858. From 1820 to 1832 he was county attorney. During the years 1809-10-11 and 1813, he represented Springfield in the General Court, and in 1820 was a member of the Constitutional Convention.

For at least fifty years he bore a prominent part in all the public life of Springfield. He was a man of strong feelings and positive convictions. Politically, he was originally a Federalist, subsequently a Whig, and lastly a Republican, "though he was never wholly reconciled to the decay of the Whig party, to which, through all of its career, he was ardently attached, and of which he was an influential local leader."

One of his best-known efforts at the Bar was his defense of the son of Francis Elliot, who had killed, accidentally or otherwise, a boy named Buckland. His address to the jury was so convincing and exhaustive that a verdict of acquittal was rendered and the young man discharged from custody.

No man in Springfield, during the last thirty years of his life, was so familiar as Judge Morris with its early history and with its prominent business-men and representative families. In July and August, 1847, he furnished to the Springfield Gazette a series of papers covering two hundred years of the history of the place; and the only regret is that he did not more fully put upon record his valuable recollections of the town and people with whom he was so familiar.

For the last fifteen or twenty years of his life Judge Morris gradually withdrew from the local life of the place, but until within two or three years of his death he made daily, in pleasant weather, the round of his little circle, chatting at the "old corner store" with his friends, and "criticising with all his youthful positiveness the course of public affairs and public men."

On the two hundredth anniversary of the settlement of Springfield he delivered a most thorough and able historical address in the presence of the dignitaries of the State and a great concourse of people, who gathered from far and near to celebrate the founding of the colony.

He was stricken with paralysis while sitting at the table on Saturday, and died on Sunday morning, April 9, 1871, in the eighty-ninth year of his age.

HON. ALANSON KNOX.—Gen. Knox, as he was usually called (probably in consequence of his position in the State militia), was the son of Elijah Knox, who was a grandson of William Knox, one of the pioneers who settled in Blandford about 1737. The general was born in Blandford about 1785. He probably received a fair education, and subsequently read law, but with whom we are not informed. He was admitted to practice in 1810, and settled in his native town, where he practiced the greater part of his active life. He had at various times quite a number of students under instruction, among them his future son-in-law, Hon. Reuben Atwater Chapman, afterward Chief-Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court. In his latter years he removed to Ohio, where he died.

ASABEL WRIGHT.—Of this gentleman we have very little information, except that he was a graduate of Williams College in 1803, and settled in Chester, Hampden Co., where he married a daughter of Rev. Aaron Bascom, of that place. It is said in the history of Chester that Mr. Wright was an early settler. He studied law and settled in Chester, where he practiced his profession until his death, which took place in 1830, at the comparatively early age of forty-eight years. His professional business, from the necessity of the case, was small, but he was among the prominent men of the town, and his loss was seriously felt.

HON. JOHN MILLS was born in Sandisfield, about 1790. He read law in the office of John Phelps, of West Granville, and was admitted to the bar in 1815. He married a daughter of Col. Enos Foote, and probably settled in Southwick about the time of his admission to practice.

His business was extensive and profitable, and he amassed a considerable property. Quite early in life he gave great attention to politics, and became very prominent. He was elected to the State Senate, and in 1826-28 was president of that body, and had the reputation of being a most excellent and able officer.

Mr. Bates relates a very good story of him during the visit of Lafayette to this country in 1824-25. On the occasion of the marquis' visit to Boston he paid his respects to the State Senate, and the members were personally introduced to him. Mr. Mills was presented in his turn as the Hon. John Mills, the Hampden Senator.

"They shook hands with great cordiality, and as Lafayette arose from his bowing position his eye fell upon the polished head of the young Senator. Looking at him with an intense gaze, a delightful recognition stole over his joyous features, and, again taking the hand of Mr. Mills in both his own and shaking it cordially, he exclaimed, with fervid energy, 'My dear friend, I recollect you in the Revolution!'"

Mr. Mills eventually removed to Springfield, where he erected a fine residence and gave up his profession for commercial speculations, which eventually swept away his property, leaving him only regret that he had abandoned an honorable business for alluring but uncertain speculations which so often end in disaster.

HON. PATRICK BOISE.—The Boise, or Boies, family is said to be of French extraction, and the original name Du Boyce. It is said that an ancestor fled from his native country to Scotland in the days of the great Cardinal Richelieu, and from thence his descendants emigrated to America.

The first of the name who settled in the town of Blandford was David, who had four sons; but to which branch of this family Patrick belonged we have not been able to ascertain. He graduated at Williams College, and read law with his uncle, John Phelps, of West Granville, and was admitted to practice in 1815.

He opened an office in Granville, where he succeeded to the legal business of Mr. Phelps, who had been elected sheriff of Hampden County. Granville, in those days, was a prosperous and thriving town, and his business grew to important proportions. He became one of the most prominent attorneys of the county, and attended arbitrations and references in the western part of the county and in Southern Berkshire. His competitors in that region were Sheldon, of New Marlboro'; Filley, of Otis; Twining, of Sandisfield; Mills, of Southwick; Cooley, of Granville; Knox, of Blandford; and sometimes the more renowned and dignified Lathrop, of West Springfield.

Mr. Bates speaks of Mr. Boise as an impulsive man, easily excited, having great command of language, and possessing a wonderful power of invective whenever sharp practice in the opposite counsel rendered its use, in his estimation, necessary. He was perfectly at home in country trials and arbitrations, which allowed his peculiar powers a freer scope than would be admissible before a graver tribunal.

At the expiration of the term of Justin Wilson as sheriff of the county, in 1853, Mr. Boise was appointed to the office, which position he filled for two years with signal ability and discretion. He was a member of both the House of Representatives and the Senate in the Legislature of the State, and bore an unblemished reputation through all his public career.

In 1830, when business began to withdraw from the outlying towns toward the commercial and manufacturing centres, he removed to Westfield, where he remained until his decease, in 1859.

He had an exhaustless store of wit and could on occasion make use of the most brilliant repartee, and his control of the risibilities of an audience was most remarkable.

WILLIAM BLAIR.—This gentleman was a native of Blandford and a direct descendant of David Blair, who, with his family of twelve children, emigrated to America and settled in Worcester, Mass., about the year 1720. Matthew, the eldest son of David, removed from thence, and was among the earliest settlers of Blandford. Robert, a brother of Matthew and father of William, also removed to Blandford at an early date.

William was admitted to the Bar in 1813, and soon after settled in Westfield. He is spoken of as a young man of ability, industrious and painstaking, thorough in all his undertakings, and a man of great promise. But he unfortunately contracted a habit which insidiously destroyed his brilliant capabilities and clouded, in the very noon of his influence and promise, the usefulness which might have placed him in the foremost position among his compeers. He had a fine sense of personal honor, and was most scrupulous in the discharge of his duties toward others. At his death he was universally pitied and respected.

HON. JUSTICE WILLARD.—Justice Willard, of Springfield, was admitted to practice in 1816.

Upon the appointment of Oliver B. Morris to the office of judge of Probate, Mr. Willard succeeded him as register of Probate. He also represented his district in the State Senate. He was considered the ablest special pleader of his time, with the exception of Hon. George Bliss. Mr. Bates says of him: "Eloquence was not his forte. His manner was dry and hesitating, and he was too much given to refining and making nice distinctions to impress his views upon the jury. But he had great fervor of character; and when once he had examined a subject, he adopted the results with his whole heart."

He took an active interest in the new subject of railway intercommunication, and was so sanguine of the possibilities of the future that to those less demonstrative and of a soberer faith he sometimes appeared altogether too enthusiastic, though the wonderful advance in this branch of science has long since made his belief a reality. For instance, he once prophesied that during the lifetime of some in his presence a train of cars would make the trip from Springfield to Boston and return between sun and sun,—a prophecy long since fulfilled.

HON. CALEB RICE, born in 1792, was a graduate of Williams College, and read law in the office of William Blair, in Westfield. He was admitted to the Bar in 1819, and settled in West Springfield. He was sheriff of Hampden county from 1831 to 1850, and, soon after his appointment, removed to Springfield. He also represented his town and county in both branches of the Legislature, and was mayor of Springfield. To whatever office he was elevated, he brought distinguished ability and received the approbation of his constituents.

Mr. Bates says of him that "he was a good lawyer, prudent, careful, and sagacious." His death occurred in 1873, at the age of eighty-one.

CHARLES F. BATES was a native of Granville, and graduated at Williams College in 1812. He read law with his brother, Elijah Bates, of Westfield, and was admitted to practice in 1815. Looking around for a favorable location, he finally settled himself at Southampton, it being the only considerable village in the region not represented by a member of the legal profession. But a few years satisfied him that its quiet people were not calculated to furnish an attorney with profitable legal employment, and he threw up the business and returned to his paternal acres. But his parents were dead and all the members of his father's family had removed from the neighborhood, and even his own children eventually found new homes in the flourishing State of Ohio; and thither he followed them, and died among his kindred.

ASA OLMSTEAD was a native of Brimfield, and studied law in the office of Hon. George Bliss, in Springfield. He was admitted to practice in 1819, but did not long continue, having removed at an early date to Clinton, N. Y., where he died in 1874.*

ELI B. HAMILTON was a native of Blandford, where he read law with General Knox. He was admitted to the Bar in 1815, and settled in Westfield.

Mr. Bates says of him: "Nothing was wanting to his success but continued and faithful application. But this was a quality which he had not, and, in the constitution of his nature, he could never have: the very intensity of his temperament forbade it. In size and figure he was the very embodiment of strength and manly grace. He was over six feet in height, erect and well proportioned, and, with no marks of obesity, his weight was two hundred and sixty-four pounds.

"Mr. Hamilton was an ardent lover of natural scenery. He loved to wander over the country, and particularly into its wildest scenes. With his dog and gun or fishing-tackle, he roamed over the mountains and through the valleys, fording brooks and rivers, and never changed his wet clothing when he returned, because, as he said, it exposed him to a cold. He was born with a constitution for the years of Methusaleh, and with a strength and activity that I never saw equaled; but exposure and irregularity told their tale, and the strong man yielded himself in the very pride of his years."

HON. JAMES COOLEY was a native of East Granville, a graduate of Williams College, and a brother of Rev. Dr. Timothy M. Cooley. He was admitted to the Bar in 1814, after having read law in the office of John Phelps, in West

* See history of Wilbraham.

Granville. After his admission he opened an office in his native town. He was a member of the State Senate, and was a useful citizen.

HON. GEORGE BLISS, JR., was the son of George Bliss, Sr., already mentioned in these pages. He read law in his father's office and was entered at Yale College, where he graduated in 1812 with the reputation of a scholar well educated and fitted for the profession of the law. He was admitted in 1816, and at first settled at Monson, but soon removed to Springfield, where he formed a partnership with his father-in-law, Jonathan Dwight, Jr. Mr. Bliss attended to most of the court business and was the active member of the firm. He acquired a fine reputation as a thorough, able, and careful attorney.

He served in both branches of the Legislature, and was speaker of the House and president of the Senate. He was for several years connected with the Western Railroad, and also with railroads in the West. He died in 1873, leaving an untarnished reputation and respected and mourned by all who knew him.

NORMAN T. LEONARD was admitted to practice in Berkshire County in 1824, and as an attorney of the Supreme Court in 1827. He was for some years a resident of Feeding Hills, West Springfield, now in Agawam. He finally removed to Westfield in 1830. He was town-clerk from 1836 to 1842, and also represented Westfield in the General Court.

AUGUSTUS COLLINS, a native of Connecticut, was admitted to practice in Berkshire County, and afterward settled in Westfield, where he died at the age of sixty-two years. He was an indefatigable student and an excellent office lawyer. He served as the principal civil magistrate, and was remarkable for his untiring industry and the extreme care with which all his business was conducted.

SOLOMON LATHROP.—Of this gentleman we have very little information, except that he was admitted in 1816 and resided in West Springfield. Mr. Bates says his business was never extensive, and thinks he emigrated to the West.

SAMUEL JOHNSON.—Mr. Johnson appears to have been admitted to practice in the old county of Hampshire before its subdivision in 1811-12. In early years he practiced in Chester village, now in the town of Huntington, Hampshire Co.

He is described as being a large and fine-looking man, of dignified carriage and formal and stately address, but exceedingly eccentric in all his ways. His business was not extensive, and he devoted much of his time to the study of history and the knowledge to be obtained from the town-libraries. "He was a standing Fourth-of-July and eighth-of-January orator," and was always ready for great or small occasions, as the case might be.

He married an estimable woman somewhat late in life and removed to the West, where he is said to have established a reputation as an able advocate.

WILLIAM KNIGHT.—For notice of this gentleman, see history of the town of Wilbraham, in this work.

ALFRED STEARNS was a native of Hardwick, Worcester County. He was connected with the Westfield Academy for several years as usher, and finally as preceptor. He read law with Elijah Bates, of Westfield, and was admitted to practice in 1820. He was for a few years a partner of Mr. Bates. He afterward removed to Illinois, where he died.

JOHN HOOKER, JR., was the son of Hon. John Hooker, the second judge of Probate for Hampden County.* He was admitted in 1813, but seems to have never opened an office and seldom appeared in court, being mostly engaged in business outside of, and foreign to, his profession.

JOSIAH HOOKER was a younger brother of the last-named, and was admitted in 1829. He is remembered as an excellent lawyer and valuable citizen, fair and impartial in all his dealings, and so thorough and efficient as to be frequently called upon to act as arbitrator, referee, and auditor, in which positions he always sustained the highest reputation.

ERASMUS NORCROSS was a native of Monson, and was admitted to practice in 1823. He opened an office in his native town, and practiced for a brief period. His business was not extensive, and he was never a prominent member of the profession.

JOHN B. COOLEY was admitted to the Bar in 1818,† and settled in Brimfield. He removed to the State of New York in 1831, but, according to Mr. Bates' statement, has returned to Massachusetts within a few years. He is described as an able man, full of wit and humor, but not altogether given to laborious study or steady practice.

RICHARD D. MORRIS, a brother of Hon. O. B. Morris, was born in Springfield, Mass., in August, 1797. He was admitted to the Bar in 1822, and was for a time a law-partner with his brother.

Upon the organization of the Western Railway Company he was employed to settle the damages consequent upon obtaining the right of way and in attending to other necessary business for the corporation. Upon accepting his position he gave up his regular professional business, and devoted himself exclusively to the interests of the railway company. He was also a representative in the General Court from his native town. He died in 1870, at the age of seventy-three years.

WILLIAM BLISS was admitted to the Bar in 1822, and began practice in the then village of Springfield, where he formed a partnership with Mr. Justice Willard. His health failing, Mr. Bliss was compelled to abandon practice, and accepted the office of county commissioner, in the hope that out-door exercise and a purer air would restore his wasted energies; but in vain. His death soon followed, and the community lost a valuable citizen and a man of much promise in his profession.

HON. WILLIAM B. CALHOUN.—This gentleman was probably a student of Hon. George Bliss, Sr., and was admitted in 1821. Having a strong taste for political life, he did not continue practice very long. He was quite successful in the political arena, and represented his district in both branches of the Legislature. In 1828 he was chosen to the responsible office of speaker of the House, which position he filled until 1835, and in 1846-47 he was president of the Senate. He was also for many years a Representative in Congress from the Springfield district. The latter years of his life were quietly passed upon his farm.

JAMES STEBBINS was born in Springfield; studied law and practiced in Palmer for many years. In his old age he removed to his native town, where he remained until his death.

JAMES W. CROOKS was a native of Westfield, and a graduate of Yale College in 1818. He taught in the Westfield Academy for several years, and also in Springfield. He subsequently read law in the office of Hon. George Bliss, and was admitted to practice in 1824. He opened an office on the "Hill," in Springfield, and for some years had a large and lucrative business. His death occurred in 1867.

FRANCIS B. STEBBINS was born in Granville. He studied law and was admitted to the Bar in 1826, after which he settled in Brimfield, where he opened an office and became a skillful and quite prominent member of the profession.

He eventually removed to the State of New York, where he engaged in commercial business, giving up the practice of law. His wife was the sister of Hon. Thomas H. Bond, of New Haven, Conn. His death took place some years ago.

MATTHEW IVES, JR., studied law with William Blair, of Westfield, and was admitted as an attorney of the Common Pleas Court in 1827, but never engaged in practice. He was a member of both branches of the State Legislature, and also held the office of postmaster under President Jackson.

* Mr. Bates in his address states that Mr. Hooker was the first judge of Probate, but the records give the name of Saml. Fowler, of Westfield.

† Mr. Bates says in 1822.

FRANCIS DWIGHT was a student at the law-school of Judge Howe, at Northampton, and was admitted to the Bar in 1830. He soon after removed to the State of New York, where he engaged in the cause of education, and died, after a short but useful life, in the flower of his days.

JOSEPH D. HUNTINGTON.—Mr. Huntington studied law with Augustus Collins, of Westfield, and was admitted in 1831, but never practiced in Hampden County. He removed to Lancaster, Mass., where he died.

GEORGE B. MORRIS, son of Hon. O. B. Morris, and brother of Judge Henry Morris, was born in Springfield, Nov. 12, 1818. He graduated at Amherst College in 1837, and read law in the office of his brother. On the resignation of Richard Bliss as clerk of the courts in 1852, he was appointed to the position, and continued to fulfill its duties in a most faithful and thorough manner until the time of his death, July 7, 1872.

He was universally respected by the members of the Bar, who were greatly attached to him for his gentlemanly manners and social habits. His long term (over twenty years) in the clerk's office leaves honorable testimony to his popularity as a citizen and public officer.

HENRY VOSE was admitted in 1841, and practiced for a few years in Springfield. When the Superior Court was substituted for the old Court of Common Pleas, he was appointed one of the justices; which office he held until his death, in 1869.

Mr. Vose was a native of Norfolk Co., Mass., and graduated at Harvard, in 1839.*

ERASMUS D. BEACH was a native of Sandisfield and a nephew of Hon. John Mills, of Southwick, and a student in his office. He was admitted to practice in 1833, and located in Springfield, where he had a very extensive business. He had at various times as partners James W. Crooks, William G. Bates, Edward B. Gillett, and Ephraim W. Bond. He was a courteous gentleman, and always exercised a strong influence over a jury.

LORENZO NORTON was a student in the office of Messrs. Chapman & Ashmun, and was admitted to practice in 1843. He subsequently formed a partnership with the above firm, which continued until his death, about 1850. Mr. Bates speaks of him as a "diligent and faithful lawyer."

HON. EDWARD DICKINSON was born in the year 1803, and graduated at Yale College in 1823, in the "class with Hon. George Ashmun, with whom he was a room-mate and a life-long friend." He was a diligent and untiring student, of excellent habits, and at college took a high rank among his compeers.

He early exhibited those distinguishing traits which marked his subsequent career. He formed his opinions upon careful examination, and was ever after decided in expressing them. His independence of character, while it possibly stood in the way of his advancement, detracted nothing from the high estimation in which he was held by the people. In his later years he was elected to the House of Representatives, where he died suddenly, on the same day in which he had been engaged upon an important question then before the House.

AMOS W. STOCKWELL was a graduate of Amherst College in 1833. He read law at the school of the Harvard University, and was also a student in the office of Hon. Isaac Davis, in the city of Worcester, and was for a short time a partner with him. Subsequently he removed to Chicopee, and became a prominent practitioner at the Hampden Bar.

His health at length became too delicate to withstand the labors of his profession, and he finally died in 1853, regretted and respected both as a member of the legal profession and as a useful citizen.

HON. REUBEN ATWATER CHAPMAN.—This distinguished citizen was born in Russell, Hampden Co., Sept. 20, 1801. His parents being in ordinary circumstances, his means of education were limited to the facilities afforded by the common district school, which was open only a few months during the year. His home was in a sequestered portion of the country, and he labored, when not at school, upon the farm of his father.

Books were exceedingly scarce, but young Chapman made such good use of his opportunities that when he became of proper age his services were in demand as a teacher, and at the early age of seventeen years he taught a district school in the neighboring town of Montgomery. Soon after, he was employed as a clerk in a store at Blandford. It was during his stay at this place that he first distinguished himself as a debater in a lyceum, or debating-school, which the young men of the place had established.

He subsequently entered the office of Gen. Alanson Knox, of Blandford, as a law-student. During his course of study he was accustomed to attend justices' trials in the neighborhood as a practitioner, and even before his admission to the Bar had some considerable reputation.

He was admitted in 1825 at the Court of Common Pleas, and immediately opened an office in Westfield; but owing to the fact that there were already more attorneys in the place than were needed, his success was not flattering. In 1827 he removed to Monson, and again, in 1829, changed his residence to the more thriving town of Ware. There he was regarded as an intruder, and rivalry soon ripened into controversy, during which he won an enviable reputation and distanced his competitors.

In 1830, when his reputation was well established, he was offered a partnership by Hon. George Ashmun, of Springfield, which he accepted, and removed thither the same year, when the firm of Chapman & Ashmun was formed. Subsequently, Mr. Lorenzo Norton was admitted, and continued a member of the firm until his death. In 1850 the firm was dissolved, and Mr. Chapman continued the business for some time alone. In 1854, Mr. Franklin Chamberlain became his partner, and this relation continued until Mr. Chapman was appointed a justice of the Supreme Judicial Court, in 1860, when he removed to Hartford, Conn. Upon the retirement of Chief-Justice Bigelow, in February, 1868, Mr. Chapman was appointed to succeed him, and held the position till his death, June 28, 1873.

Chief-Justice Chapman ranked high even among the distinguished men who preceded him upon the Bench, among whom were Shaw, Parsons, and Parker,—men whose characters and abilities are recognized wherever the English tongue is understood. He rose by his own exertions from an obscure origin, and, through difficulties wellnigh insurmountable, to one of the most responsible and honorable positions in the commonwealth. It is related of him that in the intervals of his daily routine of duties after he commenced practice, he acquired a thorough knowledge of the Latin language and was a constant reader of the classics. He also successfully cultivated a knowledge of the French and German languages. He gave considerable attention to the natural sciences and entered into many discussions, in which he bore himself with credit and ability. He was an able and impartial administrative officer, and possessed the faculty of expediting business in a remarkable degree.

HON. GEORGE ASHMUN.—This distinguished citizen was the son of Hon. Eli P. Ashmun and a brother of the late Prof. John Hooker Ashmun, of Northampton. He graduated from Yale College in 1823, and was a student in the office of his brother at Northampton, where he was admitted to the Bar of Hampshire County in 1830 as counselor. He first opened an office at Enfield, Hampshire Co., but after a few years removed to Springfield and entered into a law-partnership with Reuben A. Chapman, which continued for many years.

* See Bar of Franklin County.

Mr. Ashmun filled many important positions in the gift of the people. He was a member of the State Legislature and speaker of the House of Representatives, and bore a distinguished part in its deliberations. He also represented his district in Congress. He was well known as a leader of the Bar, but his official positions interfered somewhat with the practice of his profession, though he continued it during the intervals in his public life, and always commanded the respect and confidence of his brethren of the Bar, as well as of the community generally. He died in Springfield in 1870.

ANSEL PHELPS, JR., was born in Greenfield, Franklin Co., in 1815, and was a student in the office of Wells, Alvord & Davis at Greenfield, where he was admitted to the Bar in 1840.

He at first settled in Ware, Hampshire Co., where he continued practice until 1846, when he removed to Springfield and accepted the position of attorney and legal adviser of the Western Railroad Company. In that capacity he attended to its business in the courts, and also before the Legislature. He was a member of both branches of the Legislature, and was always distinguished for his activity, intelligence, and energetic business-habits. He also filled the office of mayor of the city of Springfield from 1856 to 1859, in which capacity he fulfilled the highest expectations of his constituents. His death took place in 1860, at the age of forty-five.

HON. JOHN WELLS.—This prominent advocate and jurist was born in Rowe, Franklin Co.

He was a graduate of Williams College, and attended the law-school of Harvard University, where he laid the foundation for his future eminence under the tutelage of Story and Greenleaf. It is believed that he never practiced as a local attorney in his native county, but opened an office first in Chicopee, Hampden Co., where he practiced for some years.

During his residence at that place he held the position of judge of the Court of Probate and Insolvency from 1858 to 1863. He was also a member of the General Court. From Chicopee he removed to the sister-village of Chicopee Falls, where he continued until his appointment to the Bench of the Supreme Judicial Court in 1866, when he removed to Norfolk County. He presided in the county of Suffolk, and finally died at Salem, in Essex County, Nov. 23, 1875.

At a meeting of the members of the Bar of the commonwealth, held at Boston, Dec. 4, 1875, the attorney-general made a very appropriate and feeling address, from which we take the following extracts:

"I first knew him thirty-four years ago, in the law-school of the university, where, under the guidance of Story and Greenleaf, he laid the foundation of the superstructure which he subsequently reared. From that time to his death I was honored by his friendship, and have watched his progress from young manhood to middle age, and the only change noticed in him, as he advanced through the years, was a continued ripening day by day. He was the same John Wells all through those years,—thoughtful, conscientious, patient of labor, making all that could be made out of his opportunities, apparently ambitious only to discharge faithfully his duty in that station of life to which God had called him, and thus procure the approval of his own conscience, which he never intrusted to the keeping of others. Neither then nor since am I aware of his ever saying or doing a brilliant thing, and never, to my knowledge, was he guilty of a foolish act or silly utterance; but he moved right on with that steady, self-poised, and well-determined action which attracts no attention until its results are accomplished.

"As a lawyer in the country village which he had selected for his home, you find him no noisy or cunning pettifogger seeking to profit in pocket or reputation by the disputes of the people; no stirrer-up of strife, but one who remembered that the peacemakers are blessed.

"You find him the diligent student, the safe adviser, the kind neighbor, the efficient member of the parish, the active and Christian citizen, rendering cheerfully to the community every good influence, every kind act.

"A few years later he is in the General Court, exerting a commanding influence as a sound, safe, and discreet legislator.

"As judge of the Probate Court,—that most difficult office to fill, where the incumbent must be judge, counsel, and sympathizing friend at one and the same time,—as well as by his well-earned reputation as a lawyer, he demonstrated his mental, professional, and moral fitness for the duties and responsibilities of a judge of this the highest judicial tribunal of the State, to which he was appointed, I believe, upon the unanimous recommendation of the Bar of Western Massachusetts. The wisdom of the recommendation, upon his appointment to the Bench, was conceded at once upon acquaintance by the Bar of the commonwealth, and his judicial course proved that he had no superior where all should be equals.

"In his court-room every one felt that he was in a place 'appropriated to justice, to security, to restraint; where there is no high nor low, no strong nor weak; where will is nothing and person is nothing and members are nothing, and all are equal and all are secure before the law.'

"The corner-stone upon which the reputation of Judge Wells rested as a man, a lawyer, and a judge was his Christian character, vindicated by his love to God and to his neighbor, consistent always, forgetful never."

T. MORTON DEWEY.—This gentleman was born in Orford, N. H., March 16, 1812. He was the son of Abel Dewey, a farmer of the Connecticut Valley. Mr. Dewey read law with Hon. H. G. Parker, of Greenfield, and Burt and Lincoln, of Boston. He was admitted to the Supreme Judicial Court at Boston in October, 1855, commenced practice at Greenfield, Mass., in the same year, and remained until 1860, when he removed to the town of Montague and practiced four years. In 1864 he went to Westfield, where he remained until 1867, when he settled in Springfield, Mass., where he has since remained in the successful practice of his profession.

He has filled various civil and secular offices, was a member of the superintending school committee of his native town, and also at Montague, has been a member of the city board of assessors in Springfield, and filled the office of justice of the peace for thirty-five consecutive years.

He is an ardent lover of music, and has taken an active part in the cultivation and promotion of that branch of æsthetics as a teacher of vocal and instrumental music and as a member of the Boston Philharmonic Institute, of which organization he was president for a period of three years. He has also been a member of a church choir (a large share of the time as director) for a period of fifty years.

In his younger days he was a student in the military school of Capt. Alden Partridge in Norwich, Vt., and has been familiar with the early navigation of the Connecticut River, of which he wrote up a few years ago some exceedingly readable sketches, which will be found in this volume.

He married, in 1838, Maria, daughter of Ira Kellogg, of Montague, Mass. His family consists of four sons.

CHAPTER XXVII.

THE BAR OF FRANKLIN COUNTY.

THE first lawyer credited with being a resident of Greenfield, and perhaps of what now constitutes the county of Franklin, was WILLIAM COLEMAN, who was born in Boston in 1776, studied law at Worcester with Judge Paine, and settled in Greenfield in some of the latter years of the last century. He was always spoken of as "Lawyer Coleman," and was a man of talents and taste, enterprising and persevering, and, as Willard has it in his history of Greenfield, "excelled in everything, even in athletic exercises; in music, dancing, skating, ball-playing," and particularly in writing. He built what is known as the "Hollister House," importing Architect Shaw from Boston to draw the plans and superintend its erection. It was built after the liberal plans of the mansions of that day, and was the finest dwelling for years in this part of the county. It is still a roomy and well-preserved building. It was erected previous to 1800. Mr. Willard says he did not complete it, however.

He subsequently embarked in land speculation in Virginia, which resulted disastrously. About 1800 he went to New York, where he became famous as a Federal politician and editor of the New York Evening Post, the first number of which was issued Nov. 19, 1801, and which boasted among its contributors the gifted statesman Alexander Hamilton. It is stated by Mr. Willard that he was also the law-partner of Aaron Burr. From the founding of the Post he was principal editor for a period of nearly twenty years, and was connected with it until his death. William Cullen Bryant succeeded him, and was also junior editor in connection with him.

He was appointed in New York clerk of the city court, at a salary of three thousand dollars. "He was also a reporter of decisions, and published a volume of reports which bears his name." He was thrown from his carriage in 1829 and severely injured, and died from a combination of his injuries and other difficulties, at his dwelling in Hudson Street, New York, July 13, 1829, at the age of fifty-three years.

During his residence in Greenfield he planted a number of the beautiful elms which still adorn and beautify its pleasant streets.

JONATHAN LEAVITT was a son of Rev. Jonathan Leavitt, of Heath, Franklin Co., Mass. He graduated at Yale College in 1786, studied law in New Haven, and settled in Greenfield about 1790. He was senator, judge of Probate from 1814 to 1821, and also judge of the Court of Common Pleas. His wife was the daughter of President Stiles, of Yale College.

The imposing mansion still standing east of the Mansion-House block was erected by him, probably in the early part of the present century. It is sometimes also known as the "Hovey Mansion." In this elegant and substantial dwelling he lived until his death, which occurred in 1830, at the age of sixty-six years. He had the reputation of being a close student and a good lawyer, and previous to his appointment to the Bench had a very extensive and lucrative practice.

RICHARD ENGLISH NEWCOMB was a son of Hezekiah Newcomb, of Bernardston. He was born in Lebanon, Conn., in 1770, and graduated at Dartmouth College in 1793. He studied law with William Coleman, and was admitted to practice in 1796. He was a representative to the General Court, county attorney, and judge of Probate. "He was an able lawyer and a powerful advocate when in his prime, and had an extensive practice. He was a gentleman of the old school, of vigorous constitution and strong will, courageous and firm, but gentlemanly and courteous in all his intercourse with society." At the dedication of the second court-house in 1849 he was present, though in feeble health, and spoke at considerable length in a powerful and feeling manner.

He died in 1849, aged seventy-nine years. He was stately and dignified in his appearance even to his last days.

HORATIO GATES NEWCOMB was the son of Hezekiah Newcomb, of Bernardston, Mass., and brother of Judge Newcomb. He was born Sept. 27, 1785; studied law with John Barrett, of Northfield, and with his brother in Greenfield, and was admitted to the Bar in 1813. His first practice, for short periods, was in Winchendon and Northfield, Mass. He settled in Greenfield about the year 1827 as a law-partner of his brother, and continued a successful practice until his death. The honorary degree of A.M. was conferred upon him by Williams College. He was a member of the Legislature, master in Chancery under the insolvency law of 1838, and judge of the Insolvency Court under the revised constitution for a short time before his death.

He was twice married. His first wife was Maria Pratt, of Winchester, N. H., by whom he had one daughter. He married for his second wife, about 1821, Elmira Wells, of Deerfield, Mass., by whom he had five children,—two sons and three daughters. Of the six children, one son is now living in California, one daughter in Boston, one in Chicago, and two in Greenfield.

Mr. Griswold, in his address, when speaking of Mr. Newcomb, uses the following language: "He was employed much in the settlement of estates and in probate business; was a good lawyer and counselor, and always advised to that course which was for the interest of his client, not his own. He took a deep interest in local and public questions. He was kind and sympathizing, and if he was not one of the greatest, he was, what is of much more value, one of the best, of men."

His death occurred in Greenfield, Sept. 18, 1857, at the age of seventy-two years.

SAMUEL CLESSON ALLEN, son of Joseph Allen, of Bernardston, graduated at Dartmouth in 1794, and settled in the ministry at Northfield, Mass., in the following year; but the calling seems not to have been congenial, and we find him admitted to practice law, after studying with John Barrett, of Northfield, about the year 1800. He then settled in New Salem, Mass., and remained until about 1822, when he removed to Greenfield, locating himself on a farm on the banks of the Connecticut River, where "he pursued agriculture, practiced law, prosecuted his political and literary studies, and reared a family of children."

Three of his sons were eminent lawyers, two of them members of Congress from Maine, and one, Elisha H. Allen, chancellor and chief-justice of the Sandwich Islands.

Another son, Samuel C. Allen, was for many years representative from Northfield to the Legislature,—an able statesman, a prominent farmer, an indefatigable advocate of temperance, and subsequently postmaster at East Boston. The elder Allen was State senator, county attorney, and member of Congress for this district from 1816 to 1828.

"He was an accomplished scholar, and a statesman of high national reputation."

ELIJAH ALVORD, son of Caleb Alvord, studied law with Judge Newcomb, and was admitted to practice in 1802.

His residence, excepting the years from 1805 to 1809, during which he was at Greenwich, was at Greenfield. The honorary degree of A.M. was conferred upon him by Dartmouth and Williams Colleges. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention in 1820. He was clerk of the courts, register of Probate, and representative to the General Court, and in every position sustained the reputation of a "capable, courteous, and faithful public officer."

In connection with Judges Leavitt, Newcomb, and Grinnell, he exercised a strong influence on the questions connected with the establishment of Franklin County, the location of the county-seat, and the erection of the public buildings.

JAMES C. ALVORD was the son of Elijah Alvord, and was born in 1808. He graduated at Dartmouth in 1827, studied law with his uncle, Daniel Wells, and at the law-school at New Haven, Conn., and was admitted to practice in 1830.

He was elected to both branches of the State Legislature, was one of the commissioners to codify the criminal laws of Massachusetts, and was the author of the article on homicide and assault,—one of the ablest included in the report of the commission. He was elected to Congress in 1838, but never took his seat, in consequence of his death, in 1839. Mr. Griswold pays him a high tribute in the following passage:

"He gave early promise of great eminence in his profession and in public life. What others worked long to achieve he seemed to grasp by intuition. Law was the idol of his love, the field of his greatest ambition. It was the shrine at which he worshipped. He loved it as a science, he loved it in practice, and to it he devoted his days and nights without cessation. As a lawyer and advocate at the time of his death, though but thirty-one years old, he had but few equals, and no superior, at this or any other Bar."

D. W. ALVORD, son of Elijah Alvord, was born in 1817. He graduated at Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., in 1838, subsequently studied law with Wells, Alvord & Davis, and was admitted to the Bar in 1841.

He was a member of the State Senate, and of the Constitutional Convention of 1853, and district-attorney and collector of internal revenue for this district. The early training of his father and his experience with his uncle, Daniel Wells, his brother, James C. Alvord, and George T. Davis, all able lawyers and accomplished men, was invaluable, and he profited from it largely. He died in Virginia, in 1871, at the age of fifty-four years.

Had he lived to the ordinary age and devoted himself exclusively to his profession, he would undoubtedly have taken the foremost rank.

RODOLPHUS DICKINSON was the son of Col. T. W. Dickinson, of Deerfield, and graduated at Yale College in 1805. He studied law with John Taylor, of Northampton, and was admitted to practice in 1808. He opened an office and practiced in Springfield, Mass., until 1811, when he removed to the then new county of Franklin, and was the first clerk of its courts, from 1811 to 1819, when he changed from law to divinity, took orders in the Episcopal Church, and settled in South Carolina, where he was instrumental in forming the parishes of Greenville and Pendleton. Many of the distinguished men of that State were his parishioners, among them being John C. Calhoun. He was a great student and quite a prolific writer, publishing several important works. He subsequently returned to Western Massachusetts, where he resided until his death. He took a leading part in politics with the Jefferson school, and once came very near being elected to Congress. He bore the reputation of being an accomplished scholar, statesman, and distinguished Christian gentleman. He died in October, 1862.

HON. GEORGE GRINNELL was born in Greenfield, Dec. 25, 1786. He was the son of George and Lydia Grinnell, and received his early education in the common schools of his time and at the old Deerfield Academy. He entered Dartmouth College, and graduated at the age of twenty-two years with high honors. Soon after, he entered the law-office of Hon. Richard English Newcomb, and in 1811 was admitted to the Bar of old Hampshire County. He commenced practice in the new county of Franklin, which was organized the same year, and opened an office in Greenfield. He held the office of county attorney from 1820 to 1828, and from 1824 to 1827 was a member of the State Senate. In 1828 he was elected Representative to Congress from his district, his term of service commencing on the same day with the administration of Andrew Jackson, March 4, 1829. He was successively re-elected to the same position in 1830, 1832, 1834, and 1836. During this service of ten years in Congress he was the colleague of Isaac C. Bates, John Davis, Edward Everett, Rufus Choate, George N. Briggs, and John Quincy Adams, "all of whom honored him with their friendship and confidence." He declined a re-election, and in 1839 returned to the practice of his profession as a member of the well-known and eminent law-firm of Grinnell & Aiken (George Grinnell and David Aiken).

In 1840, Mr. Grinnell was chosen as one of the Presidential electors. In 1841 he was appointed register of Probate for Franklin County, which position he filled until 1849, when he was appointed judge of Probate, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Hon. R. E. Newcomb. This office he resigned in 1853, and was appointed clerk of the courts of the county, which office he filled, by appointment and election, until 1866, when, at the age of eighty years, he withdrew from the active duties and cares of public life.

Mr. Grinnell took an active and influential part in all the enterprises tending to promote the interests of his town and county. He was one of the incorporators and first president of the Troy and Greenfield Railroad Company. In connection with Hon. Whiting Griswold and others, he gave all his influence to the constructing of that line of road and the great tunnel under the Hoosac Mountain, and in August, 1877, had the satisfaction of passing over the road and through the tunnel.

He took a deep interest in the cause of education, and in 1838 was chosen by the Legislature a trustee of Amherst College, on behalf of the State, in which capacity he served faithfully and efficiently for twenty-one years, when, his other duties rendering it impossible for him to attend the annual commencement exercises, he resigned the position.

In 1854 the honorary title of LL.D. was conferred upon him by that college.

He was a worthy member of the Masonic order, uniting with it in 1813, and in 1815 was elected master of Republican Lodge, in Greenfield. At the time of his death he was (with one exception) the oldest member in this vicinity.

In 1817, Mr. Grinnell united with the Second Congregational Church of Greenfield, and continued to the day of his death a consistent and active member. Commencing with the year 1821, he served in the capacity of deacon for fifty years.

Judge Grinnell was twice married. In August, 1814, he married Helen Adele Blake, daughter of Hon. George Blake, of Boston. She died in 1818. In 1820 he married Eliza Seymour Perkins, daughter of Rev. Nathan Perkins, of East Amherst. The children by this union were James S. Grinnell, for a long period chief clerk in the Patent Office at Washington, but who returned to Greenfield about 1876 to care for his aged parents; George B., William F., and Thomas P. Grinnell, formerly prominent brokers in New York City; Helen, who married George Milne, member of a noted banking-house in England; Harriet, the wife of Mr. McCulloch, a shipping merchant of Montreal; and Ella, wife of Maj. Thomas W. Ripley, of Boston. Mr. Grinnell died at Greenfield, on the 20th of November, 1877, in his ninety-first year.

JAMES S. GRINNELL, son of Hon. George Grinnell, was born in Greenfield, on the site now occupied by the "Elm House," July 24, 1821. He graduated at Amherst College in 1842, and read law in the office of Grinnell & Aiken, and also at the Cambridge law-school.

He was admitted to the Bar in 1846 and opened an office in Greenfield, where he soon had a valuable office-practice and appeared in a large number of court-cases. But his tastes were greatly inclined to agricultural pursuits, and in 1862 he removed to Washington, D. C., where he had been appointed chief clerk of the Department of Agriculture, which position his previous studies and experience, as well as natural taste, had well fitted him to fill. In this capacity he remained for three years, when he was appointed chief clerk of the Patent Office, which position he held for a period of ten years. It is proper to remark that these important offices were never more ably filled in the history of the country.

In 1876 he returned to his native town to look after and care for his aged parents, and upon the death of his venerable father, in 1877, became the representative of one of the most prominent and highly-respected families of the place. Since his return he has devoted his time wholly to agricultural matters, except that he occasionally transacts patent-business for his personal friends; and no man in the valley may be truthfully said to have a greater number. He is now occupying the original farm owned and cultivated by his grandfather a hundred years ago, and exemplifying by practical farming his knowledge in that most ancient and honorable occupation.

In the amount of labor performed, and in the extent of his knowledge and influence, his position is properly at the head of the agricultural interest in Massachusetts, which position is unanimously accorded him. He is prominently connected with various agricultural organizations and leads an exceedingly busy life, but one pre-eminently to his tastes, and under exceedingly favorable circumstances and surroundings. He was one of the judges of the class of agricultural implements and machinery at the Philadelphia Exposition in 1876, where the display probably exceeded anything before seen in any country of the world.

Mr. Grinnell is a man of fine education and excellent literary attainments. His library is one of the most unique and valuable in New England, containing many rare and quaint old volumes, some of which date back in their compilation to the year 1440. Among the most interesting are "Lives of the Christian Fathers," from the imprint of Wm. Caxton, the first English printer, dating back to 1490; a beautiful illuminated prayer-book, printed and illustrated in colors by hand and of venerable age; many of the famous "black-letter" imprint, and the Bible once owned by Dr. Samuel Johnson, with his name and the date, 1780, engraved on the cover. He has a rich agricultural library, a collection of English dictionaries, numbering over one hundred and fifty varieties, two hundred and fifty volumes of Arctic explorations, and a most rare and complete collection of various editions of Shakspeare's works, together with curious works upon English field-sports, volumes upon heraldry, etc.

Mr. Grinnell was married on the 8th of August, 1855, to Miss Anne E. Stannard, of Fredericksburg, Va., who died in May, 1857, leaving no children. His homestead occupies one of the most beautiful locations in the village of Greenfield, at the head of Main Street, commanding one of the most pleasing views to be found in New England, and surrounded by ample and well-kept grounds.

FRANKLIN RIPLEY, the son of Jerome Ripley, of Greenfield, was born in 1789. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1809, studied law with John Barrett, of Northfield, Mass., and at Cooperstown, N. Y., and was admitted to the Bar in 1812. He practiced law at Northfield, was judge of Probate, and cashier and principal manager of the old Greenfield—since First National—Bank, of Greenfield, which position he continued to hold until his death, in 1860, at the age of seventy-one years. Mr. Griswold says of him: "He was a man of the strictest integrity, of great industry, and exerted a wide and salutary influence in business, in politics, and in the church."

DANIEL WELLS was the son of Col. Daniel Wells, of Greenfield, born Jan. 14, 1791. He graduated at Dartmouth in 1810; studied law with Elijah Alvord, and was admitted to the Bar in 1813.

He was State Senator, district attorney for the four western counties of Massachusetts, and chief-justice of the Court of Common Pleas from 1844 to the time of his death, in 1854, aged sixty-four.

"He was a most conscientious and pure-minded man; the kindest of husbands and fathers; of deep moral convictions and enlarged public spirit; progressive in all his ideas; an indefatigable student, able lawyer and advocate, and for thirty years held the leading sway at the Franklin Bar."*

HON. WHITING GRISWOLD.—This distinguished member of the Franklin Bar was the son of Hon. Joseph Griswold, who died in 1843 while a member of the State Senate. He was the tenth of a family of fourteen children, and was born in the town of Buckland, Nov. 12, 1814. He remained upon his father's farm, laboring with his hands and laying the foundation of a vigorous constitution, until his twentieth year, when he entered Amherst College after fitting himself under able instructors in his own town, and graduated among the first in his class in 1838. Subsequently he established a select school in Buckland, and gained a wide reputation as a successful and popular teacher.

In the spring of 1839 he commenced the study of law with the firm of Wells, Alvord & Davis, of Greenfield, with whom he remained one year, completing his legal studies in the office of Messrs. Grinnell & Aiken, and in 1842 was admitted to the Bar and immediately opened an office in Greenfield, where he took an influential position in the profession, which he ever after maintained.

His political career commenced as a member of the Democratic party, which, in 1847, elected him as Representative to the General Court, and he was re-elected in 1848 and 1849. In October, 1850, he was nominated for the State Senate by both the Democratic and Free-Soil parties, and elected by a very large majority, being the first Democratic Senator ever chosen by the electors of Franklin County.

During the succeeding session of the Legislature he voted steadily for Charles Sumner for United States Senator. In 1853 he was a prominent and influential member of the Constitutional Convention from the town of Erving, and took a leading part in the debates of that body, ranking among the most distinguished men of the commonwealth. In 1855 he was a prominent candidate for the gubernatorial nomination of the Democratic party, and in 1856 was a member of the Democratic National Convention, which put in nomination for the Presidency James Buchanan; he was also one of the candidates for electors-at-large on the Democratic State ticket.

In the beginning of the troubles which culminated in the Rebellion he joined the Republican party, and was elected to the State Senate in 1860. During the long and bloody years of the war he stood manfully, and at all times, by the side of Governor Andrew and Charles Sumner in defense of the rights and liberties of the American people, powerfully sustaining the imperiled government by both tongue and pen.

In 1864 he was one of the electors-at-large on the ticket with Edward Everett. In 1869 he was a third time in the State Senate, where he greatly distinguished himself by his able advocacy of woman suffrage and other important measures. As a member of the State Senate in 1851 he exerted a powerful influence in behalf of the Troy and Greenfield Railroad and in the interests of the great Hoosac tunnel. While in the Senate in the last-named year he reported a bill providing for submitting to the people the question of calling a convention for revising the State Constitution, of which convention, as previously stated, he was a member.

Among minor positions he held the office of superintending school committee of his town; was one of three commissioners appointed by Governor Briggs, in 1848, to visit the remnants of the Massachusetts Indians; one of the trustees of the Smith charities in 1849; and one of the State directors of the Western Railroad corporation about 1850, in all of which positions he acquitted himself with his usual ability and success.

"In his domestic relations Mr. Griswold was an exemplary husband and father. He was twice married,—first in 1844, and again in 1856. His first wife was Miss Jane M. Martindale, of Greenfield, who died in 1852. His last was Miss Fanny L. Clark, of Bangor, Maine, who died in 1867, leaving two children," who both survived their parents.

Mr. Griswold died in Greenfield, Mass., on the 28th of October, 1874, aged sixty years.

EX-GOVERNOR EMORY WASHBURN practiced law in Franklin County for a short time immediately after being admitted to the Bar. He was admitted in Berkshire County, March 1, 1821, and on the 3d of the same month opened an office in Charlemont, where he remained until the 18th of September in the same year, when he removed to Leicester, his native town.

* Griswold's address, 1873.

Among the numerous practitioners who have been residents of Franklin County may be mentioned PLINY ARMS, JONATHAN A. SAXTON, AARON ARMS, and ELIJAH WILLIAMS, of Deerfield; ELIJAH PAINE, of Ashfield; SYLVESTER MAXWELL and JOSEPH P. ALLEN, of Charlemont; JOHN DRURY and ISAAC BARBER, of Coleraine; JONATHAN HARTWELL, of Montague; STEPHEN EMERY, of Orange; WILLIAM BILLINGS, of Conway; HORACE W. TAFT and HENRY BARNARD, of Sunderland; and BENJAMIN BRAINARD, of Gill. These mostly practiced during the first period of the history of Franklin County, or from 1811 to the building of the second court-house, in 1848.

HON. DAVID AIKEN, son of Phineas Aiken, a farmer of Bedford, N. H., was born in that town June 7, 1804. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1830, studied law with Wells & Alvord, of Greenfield, and commenced practice in that place in 1834, where he has since continued with the exception of three years, from 1856 to 1859, during which period he was judge of the Court of Common Pleas of Massachusetts. He was a member of the State Senate in 1873-74. Judge Aiken has had numerous law-partners, among them Henry Chapman, George Grinnell, Davis & Allen, Chester C. Conant, Colonel W. S. B. Hopkins, and Charles E. Forbes, the latter of Northampton. Since 1844 he has stood at the head of the Franklin Bar. He married, in 1844, Miss Lydia W. Root, of Greenfield, who died in 1846, leaving no children. In 1848 he married Miss Mary Elizabeth Adams, of Amherst, Mass. He has three sons and two daughters. John Adams, his eldest son, is in practice with him in Greenfield. William F. is teller in the Franklin County National Bank, and Edward E. is fitting for college at Easthampton, Mass.

HON. ALMON BRAINARD was born in Randolph, Orange Co., Vt., about 1803. He graduated at Hamilton College, N. Y., in 1826, and subsequently attended the military school of Captain Alden Partridge, at Middletown, Conn., for a year. He studied law with Hon. George Grinnell, of Greenfield, and was admitted to practice in 1829. From 1842 until 1856 he held the offices of register of deeds and county treasurer, and was for many years secretary of the Franklin County Mutual Fire Insurance Company. He was a member of the State Senate in 1856, and at his death had held the office of trial-justice for over fourteen years. He was a man of sterling integrity and of remarkable capacity, and the amount of labor performed during a period of about forty-five years in various capacities was very great. His practice was extensive and lucrative, and at one time he had amassed a very comfortable fortune. He married, in 1848, Margaret E. Langstroth, who died in 1876, leaving two sons. Mr. Brainard died in Greenfield, Jan. 19, 1878, of disease of the heart, aged about seventy-five years.

GEORGE T. DAVIS is a native of Barnstable Co., Mass., born Jan. 12, 1810, and a graduate of Harvard University in 1829. He studied law at Cambridge and with the firm of Wells & Alvord, of Greenfield, and was admitted to the Bar in 1832. Mr. Davis practiced his profession for many years in Greenfield, and was one of the foremost lawyers of his time. He was a member of both branches of the Legislature, once in the House and twice in the Senate, and also represented the old Connecticut River district in Congress. He subsequently removed to Portland, Maine.

Mr. Griswold says of him: "In many respects he was the most striking figure in the second period. He was a keen, discriminating, able lawyer; a most charming conversationalist and speaker; the brightest of men, bristling with wit, fun, and raillery; most skillful in the examination of witnesses, and extracting amusement from the driest case. He did more than all others, at law and nisi prius terms, to incorporate into the cold and rigid logic and routine of courts and trials something of the cheerful, jolly, softer, better side of human nature; and if he did not win verdicts from the hands, he drove dyspepsia from the bodies, of the judges, jurors, and lawyers by the frequent convulsions of laughter which followed his inimitable wit and repartee." Mr. Davis died in Portland, June 17, 1877, and was buried in the Greenfield cemetery.

WENDELL T. DAVIS, younger brother of the preceding, was born in Sandwich, Barnstable Co., Mass., April 12, 1818. He graduated at Harvard University in 1838; studied law at Cambridge and was admitted to the Bar in 1841, in which year he entered into a law-partnership in Greenfield with his brother, George T. Davis, and Charles T. Devens, Jr.,* which continued for seven years. He was largely interested in real estate in and around Greenfield, laid out and opened Davis Street, and added much to the growth and beauty of the village.

He was for some years subsequent to 1844 clerk and treasurer of the Upper Locks and Canal Company, at Turner's Falls,—since the Turner's Falls Company,—and was principally instrumental in the founding of that embryo city. For many years he was clerk and treasurer of the Troy and Greenfield Railroad Company, and was Representative at the General Court for two years. He was for a long time one of the trial-justices of the county, and probably heard more cases than any other officer in the county.

In 1863 he formed a partnership with Austin De Wolf, which continued for eleven years, when the firm took in Mr. F. G. Fessenden. In 1875 he was appointed register in bankruptcy, which office he held till his death. From the date of this appointment he wholly retired from active law-practice. He also held the position of selectman of Greenfield, was a prominent officer in the State militia, and an honored member of the Masonic order.

His wife died in 1874, leaving two sons and three daughters,—N. Russell Davis, of Wyoming Territory, George T. Davis, lieutenant-commander U. S. navy; Carrie W., Mary B., who married Hon. John Conness, of Boston, and Louisa, who married Lieut.-Commander Charles V. Clark, U. S. navy.

Mr. Davis was a man of rare natural abilities, of a pre-eminently social nature, a friend to the needy and distressed, and one who always had an encouraging word for every young man. His death occurred on the 3d of December, 1876, at the age of fifty-eight years.

COL. W. S. B. HOPKINS practiced law in Greenfield, as a partner of Judge Aiken, from about 1866 to 1872. This was probably the commencement of a very successful career as a practitioner. He is a son of the Rev. Erastus Hopkins, of Northampton, and a native of the Connecticut Valley. During his stay in Franklin County he achieved a good reputation as a lawyer, and is now in the successful practice of his profession in the city of Worcester. He is a man of excellent natural talents, cool, imperturbable, and successful as an advocate.

Col. Hopkins saw arduous service during the Rebellion as lieutenant-colonel of the 31st Massachusetts Infantry, and was engaged in the Red River expedition under Banks, at the siege of Port Hudson, and in many minor movements in the Southwest.†

HON. HENRY L. DAWES, the present distinguished United States Senator from Massachusetts, was for a time a resident of Franklin County, and for some years practiced in its courts. He was born in Cummington, Hampshire Co., Mass.,—which was also the birthplace of William Cullen Bryant,—in 1816, and graduated at Yale College in 1839. After leaving college he came to Greenfield and read law in the office of Wells, Davis & Alvord, and was admitted to the Bar in 1842. He married in Ashfield, Franklin Co., and finally settled in North Adams, Berkshire Co., where he was district attorney for the northwest district of Massachusetts, and this brought him often before the courts in Greenfield. He was a member of

* Now attorney-general of the United States.

† See history of 31st Regiment, in this volume.

the Constitutional Convention of 1853, member of both branches of the Legislature, subsequently member of Congress for many years, and is now a United States Senator.

HON. CHARLES MATTOON was born in Northfield, Franklin Co., June 17, 1816. In early life he emigrated to Muscatine, Iowa, where he married and commenced the practice of the law. Subsequently he returned to Massachusetts, and took a prominent part in the local politics of Franklin County. For some years he held a position in the Boston custom-house. In June, 1853, he was appointed register of Probate and Insolvency for Franklin County and removed to Greenfield, where he continued to fulfill the duties of the office until the 13th of May, 1858, when, upon the reorganization of the courts, he was appointed judge; which office he held until his death, which took place on the 12th of August, 1870, at the age of fifty-four years. The fatal malady which carried him off was pulmonary consumption.

For about eleven years he was secretary and active manager of the Franklin County Mutual Fire Insurance Company, and also held various offices in the gift of the town and county. In all the positions occupied by him he ever bore himself as a faithful, capable, and efficient official and a popular and estimable citizen.

HON. CHARLES DEVENS, JR., the present attorney-general of the United States, was for several years a resident of Franklin County. He was born in Charlestown, Mass., April 4, 1820; graduated at Harvard in 1838; studied law at the Cambridge law-school and with Hubbard & Watts, of Boston; was admitted to the Bar in 1841, and opened an office, with Wendell T. Davis for a partner, in Northfield. In 1844 he removed to Greenfield, where he became the law-partner of Geo. T. and Wendell T. Davis. He was State Senator from Franklin County in 1848 and 1849, and United States marshal from 1849 to 1853. In 1854 he opened an office in Worcester, where he remained until 1861, a portion of the time in partnership with G. F. Hoar. He greatly distinguished himself in the service during the war of the Rebellion, and left the army with the brevet rank of major-general of volunteers. In 1866 he resumed the practice of law at Worcester; in 1867 was appointed associate justice of the Superior Court. In October, 1873, appointed associate justice of the Supreme Court, and upon the election of President Hayes was appointed attorney-general of the United States.

HORATIO G. PARKER was a graduate of Dartmouth College in 1844. He studied law at Keene, N. H., with his father, and with William Curtis Noyes, of New York, and Henry M. Parker, of Boston, and was admitted to the Bar in New York in 1847 and in Massachusetts in the following year. He settled and commenced practice in Greenfield. During his residence here he represented the town one term in the Legislature, and also held the office of judge of Probate. Subsequently he removed to Boston, where he has an excellent reputation in his profession and enjoys a very large and lucrative practice. In 1860 he was employed to assist the commissioners in the revision of the statutes of the commonwealth, in which position his services were laborious and valuable.

HON. CHARLES ALLEN, son of Sylvester Allen, a prominent merchant of Greenfield, was born in that town about 1827. He graduated at Harvard College in 1847, read law with Davis & Devens and at the Cambridge law-school, and was admitted to the Bar in 1850. Soon after his admission he became a member of the firm of Aiken & Davis, at Greenfield, and by attention to his profession and the cultivation of excellent natural abilities soon placed himself in the foremost rank of the profession.

About the year 1860 he removed to Boston and became a member of the Suffolk Bar, and, in a wider field, has won a high reputation and distinguished honors.

Soon after his settlement in Boston he was appointed law-reporter for the Supreme Court of the State, in which position he continued for several years, serving with unusual ability. His reports cover from ten to fifteen volumes.

In the fall of 1867 he was elected to the honorable and important office of attorney-general of the commonwealth, which position he filled with great acceptance for a period of four years. Since 1871 he has been in the practice of his profession, a portion of the time in partnership with James C. Davis, a son of George T. Davis. Mr. Allen has never married.

JAMES C. DAVIS is a son of George T. Davis, and was born and educated in Greenfield and at Harvard University. He has for many years been a member of the Suffolk Bar, where, though comparatively young in years, he has taken high rank in his profession. His standing and abilities are indicated by his elevation to the position of assistant attorney-general of the State, the duties of which he has discharged with signal ability and in a manner to win the highest respect and confidence of all.

CHESTER COOK CONANT, judge of Probate for the county of Franklin, was born at Lyme, N. H., Sept. 4, 1831. His father, Col. Jonathan Conant, was a soldier in the war of 1812; his mother was Clarissa Dimick. He graduated with honor at Dartmouth College in 1857, and at the Albany, N. Y., law-school in 1859. In the autumn of that year he came to Greenfield, an entire stranger, and entered into partnership with Judge David Aiken.

In 1863 he was elected register of Probate and Insolvency, and subsequently re-elected. On the death of Judge Charles Mattoon, in 1870, he was appointed judge of Probate and Insolvency, which office he now (1879) holds. Besides the duties of his judicial office, he has an extensive law-practice in the Superior and Supreme Judicial Courts.

He was one of the three original corporators of the Greenfield Savings-Bank, and has been a trustee and its secretary since its organization. He is also a director in the Franklin County National Bank. He has served in the town school committee for a number of terms, and is a trustee of the Greenfield Library Association, of which he was for ten years the secretary and efficient upbuilder. He married, in 1860, Sarah B., only daughter of Rev. Dr. R. S. Howard, then of Portland, Me., and since president of Norwich University, at Norwich, Vt. He has two children.

SAMUEL O. LAMB, of Greenfield, was admitted to the Bar in 1851 and located in Greenfield, where he has since resided. He has an extensive practice and good standing among his professional brethren, and, but for his extreme modesty, would have had a more extended notice in this chapter.

ANSEL PHELPS, JR., son of Hon. Ansel Phelps, of Greenfield, studied law with Wells, Alvord & Davis; was admitted to the Bar in 1840, and settled in Ware, Hampshire Co., Mass., where he soon built up a reputation and a successful practice. Being offered the post of attorney for the Western Railroad, he left Ware and settled in Springfield. (See Chapter XXVI. of this volume.)

GEORGE W. HERR was born in New Salem, Franklin Co., Mass., of a good family. He was at the Cambridge law-school for two years, and studied with Davis & Allen and with Maynard, Lincoln & Chatfield, of New York City. He was admitted to the Bar in 1860, and to the United States Court in 1870. He commenced practice in New Salem, but soon removed to Athol, where he has since built up quite an extensive business. He also has a good reputation as a lecturer upon astronomy and other subjects before the public schools and popular assemblies.

EPHRAIM WILLIAMS was born in Deerfield, Mass., in 1760. He studied law with his uncle, the eminent Judge Sedgwick, of Stockbridge, Mass., where he resided and practiced his profession as a partner with his uncle for about twenty years, during which he had an extensive practice and accumulated a handsome competency.

In 1803 he returned to Deerfield, where he resided until his death, in 1835. He was usually, among his intimate friends, called Bob Williams, and the reason is said to have been that the cognomen was an ancient and honorable one in the family. He was named for his uncle, Col. Ephraim Williams, the founder of Williams College, who fell at Lake George, in August, 1755. One of his sons was Bishop Williams, of Connecticut.

"While in practice in Berkshire County he had a misunderstanding with the presiding judge, who charged him with stating what was incorrect and ordered him to sit down.

"Indignant at having his veracity called in question, he replied that he would not sit down, but would leave the Bar and never enter it again; which he did, and faithfully kept his promise."

He was the reporter of the first volume of the "Massachusetts Reports." He was several times a member of both branches of the State Legislature, and was also a member of the Governor's council. His counsel was often sought by men of high legal standing, and it is said that Chief-Justice Parsons used all his influence to persuade him to return to the practice of his profession, but without success.

JAMES R. CURTIS, of Boston, practiced law for some time in Northfield. He attended the law-school at Cambridge one year, and subsequently studied in the office of Messrs. Wells & Alvord, of Greenfield. He was a member of the Franklin County Bar about one year, when he removed to Boston, where he became eminent as a member of the Suffolk Bar, and on the Bench of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Previous to the organization of Franklin County, Northfield was more of a centre for legal talent than Greenfield, and many prominent men were in practice then, among whom were JOHN BARRETT, JOHN NEVERS, and WILLIAM G. WOODARD. It was a noted place for law-students, and John Barrett's office seems to have turned out a large number of them. Mr. Barrett was a long-continued and successful practitioner, and we find his name very often mentioned.

John Nevers became sheriff in 1831, and relinquished practice. Mr. Woodard subsequently removed to Iowa, and became one of the supreme judges of that State.

JOHN DRURY, JR., the son of John Drury, a farmer of Athol, Worcester Co., Mass., was born in that town, March 22, 1780. He graduated at Williams College and studied law at Petersham and Grafton, in Worcester County, and was admitted to the Bar about 1811.

He married, in 1813, Miss Susan Reed, of Petersham, and settled in Coleraine Centre, where he continued in the practice of his profession for nearly forty years. He was for many years postmaster at the Centre, and also justice of the peace. He also carried on farming to a considerable extent, and was altogether a prominent man in the community.

He had two sons and four daughters. The sons moved to Troy, Miami Co., Ohio, many years ago, and thither, about 1854, their father followed them, and died in that place, Sept. 19, 1860, in his eighty-first year. His sons were merchants in Ohio, and the youngest enlisted during the Rebellion and died in the service. Two of his daughters are now living in Coleraine.

RUFUS D. CHASE graduated at Dartmouth College in 1845, studied law with E. D. Beach, of Springfield, Mass., and, with Royal Tyler and Asa Keyes, of Brattleboro', Vt., was admitted to the Bar in 1849, and soon after settled in the thriving village of Orange, where he still practices. He sustains a good reputation and has a very satisfactory business.

HAYNES H. CHILSON, now of Northampton, is a native of Buckland, Franklin Co., Mass. He studied law with Hon. Whiting Griswold, in Greenfield, and was admitted to the Bar in 1847. He settled in Northampton, where he married the daughter of Hon. Isaac C. Bates, and has been to the present time in active business. He has held the positions of school committee, postmaster, county commissioner, commissioner of insolvency, and United States assessor of internal revenue. During his continuance in these various offices he gave up practice at the Bar to a greater or less extent, but of late has again resumed his profession.

GEORGE LEONARD BARTON was the son of Bradford Benjamin Barton, a farmer of the town of Gill, in Franklin County, where he was born in the old red homestead-house at "Riverside," Nov. 6, 1845. His early education was received at the district school and at the Powers Institute, in Bernardston, where he studied under Prof. Ward. He subsequently fitted himself for college at the Exeter, N. H., Academy, and graduated at Harvard University in 1867. In 1870 he received the degree of A.M. from that institution. About 1868 he visited the West, stopping for some time in Chicago and Omaha, and resided for about two years in Madison, Wis., where he read law in the office of Mr. Carpenter, an eminent attorney. Returning to Massachusetts, he became principal of the high school in Greenfield, continuing his law-studies after school-hours in the office of Col. Hopkins. Here he continued about two years, when he accepted a position as private tutor in a wealthy family at Framingham, Mass., where he remained about one year, studying law in the mean time. He was admitted to the Bar in 1871, and opened an office at Turner's Falls in January, 1872, where he continued in practice until his death. He was appointed one of the trial-justices of the county in the same year, and soon established himself as an able and industrious professional man and valuable citizen, and his business prospered. He also held the position of notary public, and was one of the trustees of the Crocker Savings-Bank. He had recently erected a fine and tasteful residence on the bluff, overlooking the broad river and in full view of the falls, shrouded in its rolling mist and within agreeable sound of its "thundering waters."

On the 27th of August, 1872, he married Emma Sanford, daughter of Charles Sanford, Esq., of Jackson, Mich., by whom he had three children, fine, intelligent boys, who are left with a widowed mother to mourn his untimely loss. He died of pneumonia on the 19th of February, 1879, in his thirty-fourth year. His standing in the community was that of a faithful, upright citizen, a competent and excellent public officer, and a true husband and father.

JUSTIN W. CLARK practiced law in Whately about 1825 to 1827, and afterward in Hatfield, where he was the law-partner of Israel Billings. (He was an eminent lawyer, and the firm had great strength and an extensive practice.)

HON. SAMUEL T. FIELD was admitted to the Bar in 1852, and commenced practice at Shelburne Falls, where he has since resided and built up a respectable and successful practice. He is a man of large capacity, and bears an excellent reputation in the profession. He was for three years (from 1874 to 1877) district attorney, and has been a member of the Legislature.

Among the distinguished members of the Bar from abroad who have practiced, and still continue, in the Franklin County courts, are the following, whose names are mentioned by Mr. Griswold in his address, delivered in March, 1873, before the Bar of the county: GEORGE M. STEARNS, of the Hampden Bar; EDWARD DICKINSON and ITHAMAR F. CONKEY, of Amherst; CHARLES DELANO and SAMUEL T. SPAULDING, of Northampton; CHARLES FIELD and F. F. FAY, of Athol; PETER C. BACON and P. EMORY ALDRICH, of Worcester; RICHARD H. DANA, JR., CHARLES R. TRAIN, and B. F. HALLETT (deceased), of Boston; and CHARLES DAVENPORT, of Brattleboro', Vt., the latter a native of Franklin Co., Mass.

HON. RUFUS CHOATE also visited the county a number of times during his practice as an attorney, and on each occasion his presence was greeted with a crowded house of both sexes.

For notices of Col. GEORGE D. WELLS and Capt. GEORGE W. BARTLETT, see Rev. Mr. Moors' "History of Greenfield," and the military chapters in other parts of this work.

For notice of HON. JOHN WELLS, see Chapter XXVI.

The following is a list of lawyers who have been members of the Franklin County Bar since 1811, with the dates of their admission :

Greenfield.—William Coleman, —; Jonathan Leavitt, about 1789; Richard E. Newcomb, about 1796; Elijah Alvord, about 1802; Elihu Lyman, about 1806; George Grinnell, about 1811; Hooker Leavitt, about 1811; Franklin Ripley, about 1812; David Willard, about 1812; David Brigham, about —; Daniel Wells, about 1813; Horatio G. Newcomb, about 1813; Samuel Wells, about 1816; Henry Chapman, in 1826; Almon Brainard, in 1829; James C. Alvord, in 1830; George T. Davis, in 1832; David Aiken, in 1833; Charles Mattoon, in 1839; Daniel W. Alvord, in 1841; Wendell T. Davis, in 1841; Charles Devens, Jr., in 1841; Whiting Griswold, in 1842; Franklin Ripley, Jr., in 1845; James S. Grinnell, in 1846; Horatio G. Parker, in 1847; George D. Wells, in 1849; Charles Allen, in 1850; Samuel O. Lamb, in 1851; Edward F. Raymond, in 1854; W. S. B. Hopkins, in 1858; George W. Bartlett, in 1859; Chester Cook Conant, in 1859; James C. Davis, in 1861; Edward E. Lyman, in 1861; Austin De Wolf, in 1863; Gorham D. Williams, in 1868; William H. Gile, in 1869; George L. Barton, in 1871; John D. Aiken, in 1876; Franklin G. Fessenden, in —; Francis M. Thompson, in 1876; Henry L. Nelson, in —; Bowdoin S. Parker, in —; Samuel D. Conant, in 1878.

Deerfield.—Pliny Arms, about 1805; Rodolphus Dickinson, about 1808; Jonathan A. Saxton, about 1817; Aaron Arms, about 1817; Elijah Williams, about 1825.

Northfield.—Samuel C. Allen, about 1800; John Nevers, about 1808; John Barrett, about 1808; Benjamin R. Curtis, in 1832; William G. Woodard, about 1833; Solomon Vose, about —.

Charlemont.—Sylvester Maxwell, about 1804; Joseph P. Allen, about 1817; Emory Washburn, in 1821; Edwin H. Parker, in 1842.

Ashfield.—Elijah Paine, about 1793.

Conway.—William Billings, about 1812; Charles Baker, about 1825; Albert C. Clark, about 1847; John Newton, about 1853.

Sunderland.—Horace W. Taft, about 1810; Henry Barnard, —.

Montague.—Jonathan Hartwell, about 1812; Timothy M. Dewey, in 1855; William S. Dana, in —.

Orange.—Stephen Emory, about 1811; Rufus D. Chase, in 1849; Edgar V. Wilson, in 1876.

Gill.—Benjamin Brainard, about 1815.

Whately.—Justin W. Clark, about 1825.

Coleraine.—Isaac B. Barber, about 1808; John Drury, Jr., in 1811; William Lanfair, in 1845.

Shelburne.—Arthur Maxwell, 1849; Samuel T. Field, 1852; Henry M. Puffer, 1867.

Shutesbury.—William Ward, —.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

HOMŒOPATHY IN WESTERN MASSACHUSETTS.*

HISTORICAL AND STATISTICAL.

THE young man with no past to look back upon presses forward to grasp and control the future, stimulated and inspired by hope rather than by memory. Homœopathy, in the vigor of a lusty youth, heir of all the ages behind it, has a short but magnificent past to recall. Suggested, more or less distinctly, from the days of the father of medicine, its guiding principle, condensed into the terse aphorism "Similia similibus curantur," was never distinctly formulated as a law, or developed into an art of healing, until the last decade of the eighteenth and the early part of the nineteenth centuries. It was introduced into this country by Dr. Gram, who came to New York in 1825; into Philadelphia, seven years later, by George Butt, aided in 1833 by Dr. Hering; into Boston by Dr. Gregg in 1838, although physicians and laymen had been testing the remedies about five years previous to this date. Attention was first called to homœopathy in the Connecticut Valley by a newspaper war, carried on in the papers of Northampton, between Gen. B. E. Cook and his brother, Dr. G. W. Cook, of Hudson, N. Y., in behalf of homœopathy, and representatives of the old school of medicine. The facts and arguments in favor of homœopathy, vigorously presented by Gen. Cook and his brother, roused attention in Northampton to the claims of the new school, and led to experiments with the remedies by at least one allopathic physician and by several laymen, and to the purchase, by a few, of domestic books and cases.

To Gen. Cook belongs the honor of introducing into the Connecticut Valley the first trial of homœopathic remedies, both lay and professional, and of bringing about the first conversion to the new school from the ranks of allopathy. No one now living is able to state the precise time at which Dr. Charles Walker, whose life is sketched below, began his experiments with homœopathic remedies and his study of its principles. We know that he was the first physician to adopt the new practice in Western Massachusetts, and one of the very earliest in the State. When Dr. Cate succeeded Dr. Walker, after the latter's death, in 1855, Dr. Cate was the only homœopathic physician in Hampshire County; in Franklin County there were only two; in Hampden, none outside of Springfield. Now there are twenty-five in the three river-counties, not counting those who employ both methods of practice, while there are few allopathic physicians who do not, to a greater or less extent, employ homœopathic remedies,—none whose practice is not largely modified by its influence. Here, as elsewhere, the clientèle of homœopathic physicians is made up of families of the highest culture and intelligence; here, as elsewhere, the proportion of believers in homœopathy is a safe gauge of the intelligence and education of a community.

As has been noted elsewhere, in the biographical sketch of Dr. Swazey, he came to Springfield in 1844, and thenceforth became a force in the ranks of homœopathy in Western Massachusetts. In Franklin County, Dr. Collins, of Conway, and Dr. Chisholm, at Greenfield, were the earliest physicians to adopt the new mode of practice. Dr. Chisholm remained at Greenfield but a short time, and was succeeded by Dr. Stone, a sketch of whose life is given below, and in whose hands homœopathy at once assumed a strong and respected position. A portion of the physicians through the valley are members of the large and vigorous State organization; but in 1877 "The Homœopathic Medical Society of Western Massachusetts" was formed, for the convenience of those living in the western half of the State. The society holds quarterly meetings at some accessible place, at which practical papers are read and discussed and cases and patients presented for advice and treatment. It now has thirty-six members, of which the following is a list, with their places of practice: E. R. Morgan, Shelburne Falls; D. T. Vining, Conway; A. Harvey, North Adams; L. Macfarland, Springfield; H. Tucker, Brattleboro', Vt.; J. U. Woods, Holyoke; E. W. Higbee, Northampton; C. F. Sterling, Amherst; J. K. Warren, Palmer; W. F. Harding, Westfield; Geo. H. Smith, Holyoke; H. J. Cate, O. O. Roberts, Northampton; L. W. Cole, Springfield; Geo. F. Forbes, West Brookfield; J. M. Barton, W. B. Chamberlain, J. H. Carmichael, F. R. Sibley, Worcester; D. B. Whittier, Fitchburg; D. Warren, Winsted, Conn.; G. G. Hitchcock, South Hadley Falls; W. R. Bartlett, Chicopee; W. S. Severance, Greenfield; J. H. Darling, Thompsonville, Conn.; W. H. Wentworth, Pittsfield.

* By Hamilton J. Cate, M.D.

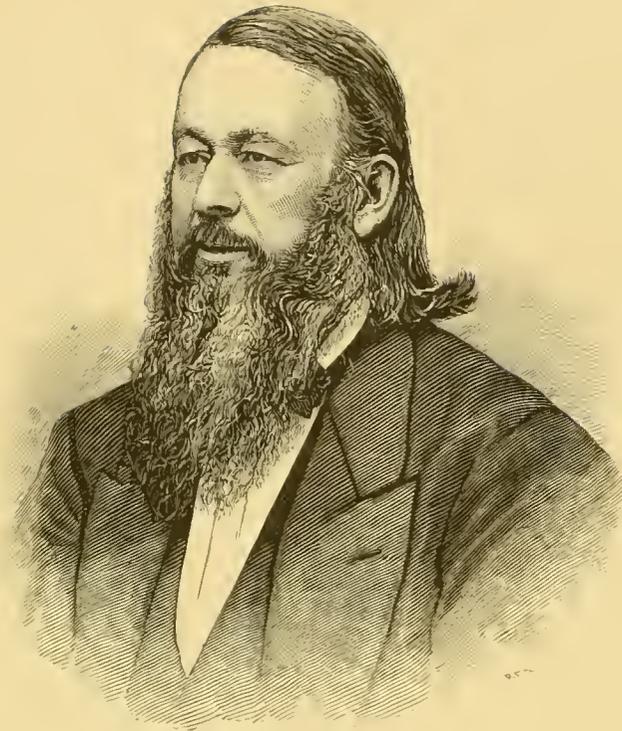

Photo. by Wm. B. Miles.

G. W. Swazey.

GEORGE W. SWAZEY, M.D., was born at Exeter, N. H., Aug. 10, 1812. He was seventh son of Thomas Swazey, a carpenter by trade, honest and industrious in character.

Having passed the first ten years of his life at Exeter, he went, in 1822, to Maine, Pennsylvania, and later to New Jersey, where in various ways he earned a living, embracing every opportunity to further his ambition for the attainment of knowledge. His first tuition of any importance was received in the Manual Labor School, Germantown, and afterward at Elizabethtown. In 1832 he entered Bowdoin College, where he pursued his education with close attention, and finally graduated from the medical department of the college at Brunswick, in 1837, and removed to Harwich, Mass., where he acquired a good practice, and later settled in Bucksport, Me., where a large field was open.

In this eventful decade of life he married Sarah E. Allen, of Bath, Me., who had at one time been his pupil. Having embraced the Swedenborgian faith, he was excommunicated from the communion of the Calvinist church, which he had joined in early life.

Becoming a partial convert to the theory of medicine introduced by Hahnemann, Dr. Swazey devoted a period of four years to anxious and earnest study, while still pursuing the practice of the old school. Being firmly persuaded as to the true course, and determined to adopt homœopathy, he announced his intention and removed to Newburyport, where he introduced the practice, bitterly opposed by the practitioners of the allopathic school. From Newburyport he removed to Springfield, and remained the sole practitioner of homœopathy until 1854, and became the pioneer of homœopathy in Western Massachusetts, where for more than thirty years he pursued an eventful career, rejoicing in the steady progress of the truths developed by the new theory of practice, as well as in the success of his life's ambition.

Dr. Swazey was, in the full acceptance of the term, a self-made man, having from the age of eleven educated and maintained himself by his own unaided efforts, demonstrating in his life the fact that perseverance and industry can accomplish wonderful results. He occupied honorable positions in the State and national societies of his school, and contributed to its literature.

The Homœopathic Medical Society of Massachusetts speaks as follows of him:

"He stood high in our school of medicine, and the many honors conferred upon him by his professional brethren were merited by his devotion to the cause of homœopathy. . . . He was nerved and disciplined for his career by his early conditions in life. He had genius and capacity for great endurance. . . . His fortitude did not fail him even in a few minutes of consciousness that remained after his fatal fall, a distance of nearly thirty feet, from a bridge in Deerfield, near nine o'clock of Saturday night, Sept. 8, 1877. Among the most striking characteristics of his nature were versatility of talent, and undaunted courage to attack error and defend truth, patience to wait, and wisdom to act."

His wife died in the year 1857, and he was married to Sarah A., daughter of Harvey Clark, of Mansfield, Conn., who survives him, and resides in Springfield.

C. O. Roberts M.D.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

DR. CHARLES WALKER, of Northampton, has a right to the first place, in point of time, among those of whom we give biographical sketches as identified with the early history of homeopathy in the Connecticut Valley.

Dr. Walker was born July 28, 1802. Graduating at Dartmouth College, he took his medical degree at Philadelphia. He married Miss Sarah Storrs, of Northampton, whose death preceded his by but a few months.

His attention was early called to homeopathy, and there is positive knowledge of at least one homeopathic prescription made by him which could not have been later than 1834, and may have been as early as the preceding year,—certainly the earliest in Western Massachusetts, and perhaps in the State. It is impossible to state when he first announced himself as a homeopathist. There was no point of time on one side of which he was an allopathist, on the other a homeopathist.

Dr. Walker embraced the faith and practice of the new school when it required courage to do so,—when the change involved not only professional but, to a great extent, social ostracism. It has been said that the history of every great discovery has its three stages,—of ridicule, of persecution, of general acceptance. Dr. Walker tested the first two of these stages.

He early became a Christian, identifying himself first with the old church, but withdrawing to aid in forming the Edwards Church in 1833. He was naturally genial in manner and character, and loved well to hear and to tell a good story. His health and strength gradually waned in the last years of his life, and his death took place Jan. 17, 1855.

HAMILTON J. CATE, M.D.* was born in Sanbornton, N. H., March 11, 1824. His father was Capt. Jonathan Cate, an officer of the war of 1812; his mother was Elizabeth Sanborn. Both were of Sanbornton, and grandchildren of two of the early and large proprietors of the township. In Dr. Cate's native town was an excellent academy, somewhat noted in those days, and in this Dr. Cate was fitted for college. A born lover of learning he was, and to this day has remained; a hard-working student in all directions where knowledge is to be found,—knowledge of the sciences, the languages, general literature, and of the profession to which he gave himself. And apropos of his profession, it was natural that he should choose medicine, since he found himself in a family of physicians on the maternal side. There are in the family of Dr. Cate's own generation four physicians, all of them homeopathic, including himself. In 1845, Dr. Cate began his studies with his uncle, Dr. Benaiah Sanborn, of Lyndon, Vt., whose partner was Dr. Charles B. Darling. They were then allopathists, but within the next few years the preceptors and many of their pupils, including Dr. Cate, became homeopathists, being among the earliest converts to the new school in that part of New England. As an allopath Dr. Cate attended one course of lectures in 1846 at Castleton, Vt., and two courses at Woodstock, where he graduated in 1849. In the same year he married Miss S. E. Roberts, of Lyndon, Vt. After the change in his convictions he studied homeopathy with Dr. Alpheus Morrill, of Concord, N. H., with whom, in 1851, he went into partnership, in 1849-50 and in 1852-53 attending lectures at the Philadelphia Homeopathic College. Upon Dr. Walker's death, in 1855, he came to Northampton, where he remained until 1857. In this year he was married to Miss Mary D. Plant, of Northampton.

Dr. Cate has at no time in his life been strong, and has many times been the subject of breakdowns, more or less protracted. One came in 1857, and from that time until 1865 he was unable to practice, with the exception of one year in Brooklyn, N. Y. In 1865 he returned to Western Massachusetts, settling at Amherst, where he still has an office in connection with his practice at Northampton, where he now resides. Dr. Cate is a member of the Boston Society of Natural History and of the Homeopathic Medical Society of Western Massachusetts. He was succeeded at Northampton by Dr. O. O. Roberts.

OSMON OSBORNE ROBERTS, M.D., was born Oct. 27, 1828, in Lyndon, Vt. His father, Charles Roberts, was a farmer, living near the village which was called "the depot of the lawyers of Caledonia County." There were churches, their pastors and their families; physicians, and their students and families; there were good common schools and an academy; so that Dr. Roberts had good educational and social advantages. In 1850 he began the study of medicine with his brother-in-law, Dr. Hamilton J. Cate, remaining with him through the whole course. In 1851-52 he attended lectures in Woodstock, Vt., and in 1852-53 at the Philadelphia Homeopathic College, where he graduated. Beginning practice in a few months at Milford, N. H., he remained there until 1857, when he removed to Northampton, where he still remains in the full practice to which his faithfulness, physical energy, and his "hail-fellow-well-met" qualities have fully entitled him.

In May, 1857, he married Miss Emilie E. Eastman, of Littleton, N. H. They have had no children, but their handsome house is made attractive by its many vines and flowers, by fine collections of coins and minerals, and by rich old furniture.

JOSHUA STONE, M.D., was born in Westfield, N. Y., Oct. 21, 1825. After the usual course of medical study, he attended lectures at the Homeopathic College of Philadelphia in the winter of 1851-52, and graduated in the spring of 1852. The first years of his professional life were spent in St. Johnsbury, Vt., in partnership with Dr. Benaiah Sanborn, of whom we have elsewhere spoken as a prominent physician and one of the earliest converts to homeopathy in Vermont. In November, 1855, he married Miss E. L. Ingersoll, of Greenfield, Mass., and in July, 1856, removed to Greenfield, where he remained in practice until his death, Sept. 1, 1859. Dr. Stone was still a young physician when he died, and to his many friends his early death seemed a sad one for homeopathy and for the community in which he lived. He was really the pioneer of homeopathy in Greenfield, as Dr. Chisholm was there but a short time and homeopathy had gained no substantial foothold. In one of the most conservative communities in conservative New England, he at once won a high position for himself and for homeopathy. A man of unusual intellectual calibre, energetic, alert, and studious in everything pertaining to the profession which he had chosen and loved, he at once gained and retained the respect and confidence of those with whom he came in contact. He gave one the impression of a refined gentleman,—a gentleman by habit and instinct. He won love as well as respect. Genial, kindly, and sympathetic in manner and heart, loving a good story and telling one well, he was able to reinforce his medical prescriptions by imparting to his patients the hopeful and cheerful mood often quite as important as medicine. For many years before his death Dr. Stone was an earnest Christian, carrying into all his life—domestic and public—the divine principles of the Master whom he faithfully served. The friends who knew him best loved him best, and the friends of homeopathy in Western Massachusetts must join with his many personal friends in regretting his early death. He was a physician "to the manor born," and united in himself to a rare degree the qualities that would have secured for the new school, as for himself, a strong and secure position in public respect and confidence.

WILLIAM BAKER CHAMBERLAIN, M.D., of Worcester, Mass., was born in London, N. H., Sept. 15, 1827. Educated in Sanbornton, in 1849 he began the study of medicine with Dr. Alpheus Morrill, of Concord, N. H., spending the latter part of his pupilage with Dr. S. M. Cate, of Augusta, Me., with whom he was also associated in practice. In 1852 he became partner of one of the pioneers of homœopathy in Maine,—Dr. J. Roberts, of North Vassalboro',—and the next year was settled at China, Me., still in partnership with Dr. Roberts.

* Written by a friend.

Dr. Chamberlain attended allopathic lectures at Hanover, and in the winter of 1853-54 took his final course at the Cleveland Homœopathic College, where he graduated in March, 1854. After graduating he succeeded Dr. J. C. Baker, at Keene, N. H., rapidly building up a large and widely-extended practice. Here, also, in 1859, he married Miss Louisa Brainard, of Boston. On account of the failing health of his brother-in-law, Dr. J. C. Freeland, of Fitchburg, he went to that city in 1863. In January, 1866, he established himself in Worcester, Mass., where he still remains in large and successful practice,—successful in the highest and worthiest sense. He is a member of the Worcester County society and of the State society, having been president of both these societies; he is also member of the society of Western Massachusetts and of the American Homœopathic Institute.

Observant and watchful by nature and habit, always a student, liberal and progressive in all directions, Dr. Chamberlain has in himself the elements that deserve and win success. Genial in face, character, and manner, kind and sympathetic in his intercourse with the sick and suffering, with a hearty and infectious laugh to which his somewhat aldermanic proportions are ever ready to respond, thoughtful and courteous in his intercourse with others, especially helpful to students and younger physicians,—he is eminently and deservedly successful.

DANIEL BRAINARD WHITTIER, M.D., was born in Goffstown, N. H., Oct. 21, 1834, inheriting English blood from his father and Scotch-Irish from his mother. After finishing his academical education, he spent two years or more at the West in agricultural pursuits, thence returning to New Hampshire, where he married Miss Mary Chamberlain in October, 1858. Soon after this he began the study of medicine with his brother-in-law, Dr. W. B. Chamberlain, then of Keene, N. H. In the winter of 1859-60 he attended lectures at Harvard University, during that of 1862-63 at the New York Homœopathic College, where he graduated in March, 1863. In the mean time he had begun practice, at first for a short time, in Gardner, Mass., from which place he went, in 1862, to Fitchburg, where he still remains.

Dr. Whittier has made a specialty of the diseases of women and children, in which he has acquired a creditable degree of skill and reputation. He is a member and has been president of the State society, member and president of the Worcester County society, and member of the society of Western Massachusetts. Inheriting from his parents a large degree of physical and intellectual vigor, kind and sympathetic by nature, thoroughly informed in everything pertaining to the profession he has chosen, he has gained the respect and confidence of a wide circle of friends and patrons and built up a large and prosperous business. A Christian gentleman and a good citizen as well as physician, he is interested in all the moral and political questions of the day, and contributes by his influence and efforts to the success of every worthy cause.

CHAPTER XXIX.

MILITARY—HISTORY OF ORGANIZATIONS WHICH SERVED DURING THE REBELLION, 1861-65—10TH REGIMENT.

THE history of the various organizations which went out during the war of the Rebellion from the three river-counties of Massachusetts, and including portions from Berkshire, is largely compiled from the volumes of the adjutant-general of the State and P. C. Headley's "Massachusetts in the Rebellion."

The 10th and 27th Regiments are exceptions, the former being condensed from Capt. Joseph K. Newell's very complete and interesting history of that organization, and the latter partly from Headley's work and partly from information furnished by Gen. Horace C. Lee, of Springfield, who commanded it until his capture at Drury's Bluff (Fort Darling). To these gentlemen we are under special obligations.*

It has been deemed advisable, in view of the fact that no entire regiment was recruited in either of the counties, to include the history of the various organizations in general chapters covering the whole valley. It is not as full and elaborate as we could wish, but the immense number of topics treated in this work compels the adoption of an abbreviated form for the military portion.

MILITARY STATISTICS.

The total number of men furnished by the State of Massachusetts to all arms of the service during the Rebellion was, in round numbers, 160,000. This covered a surplus, over and above all calls, of 13,492 men. The proportional quota for the three river-counties, according to population, would have been about 15,000, divided about as follows among the counties: Hampden, 7000; Hampshire, 4500; Franklin, 3500.

It is probable that the 13,000 surplus men were mostly from the seaboard-counties, where large numbers entered the naval service, but were not credited to the State for some time after their enlistment, the counties being called upon to furnish their regular quotas for the army without deducting seamen.

The total expenditure by the State during the war was $27,705,109, exclusive of amounts raised by cities and towns, and also of all sums contributed by sanitary and aid societies, etc., which amounted to very large figures.

THE TENTH MASSACHUSETTS INFANTRY.

This fine regiment was made up largely of members of the 10th Massachusetts Regiment of militia, which at the outbreak of the Rebellion consisted of the following eight companies: A, of Shutesbury; B, of Leverett; C, of Northampton; D, of Belchertown; E, of Coleraine; F, of Springfield; G, of Greenfield; H, of Shelburne; five companies being from Franklin County, two from Hampshire, and one from Hampden. Col. J. M. Decker, of Greenfield, was in command of the regiment.

The companies consisted of about 40 men each. Under the provisions of a bill passed by the House of Representatives Feb. 6, 1861, infantry and rifle companies were required to contain 64 privates. Cos. A, B, and D, not being able to fulfill the requirements of this law, were disbanded, and their places supplied by companies from Great Barrington, North Adams, and Pittsfield. Co. E, of Coleraine, was divided among other companies, and its place supplied by a company from Springfield recruited by Capt. Barton. A new company, I, was formed by uniting the volunteers of Holyoke and West Springfield, and a full company, K, was recruited at Westfield.

The State of Massachusetts was tolerably well prepared for hostilities when the rebellion burst forth. Her statesmen had anticipated the secession movement, and the militia had been pretty thoroughly strengthened and made ready for any emergency during the three or four months preceding the first hostile steps taken by the South.

When the electric thrill passed over the Northern States following the capture of Fort Sumter, and the proclamation of the President of the United States was sent to every part of the land calling for 75,000 men for three months, there was a sudden rush to the recruiting-stations in every State which remained loyal to the government; but Massachusetts, with her organized militia, was at once prepared to dispatch her quota to the "seat of war." The quota being only two regiments, the 6th and 8th, from the eastern part of the State, were immediately sent forward, and were the first, or among the first, to succor the national capital, in immediate danger of attack from the hosts of armed rebels which had been preparing for months to overthrow the republic and erect upon its ruins a quasi-republic, with slavery as its "chief corner-stone."

* We are also under obligations to Rev. Dr. Moors, of Greenfield, and Adjt. Holmes, of the 27th Regiment, for special favors. The history of the 52d Regiment is mainly from Rev. James K. Hosmer's most interesting volume entitled "The Color-Guard."

So far as we can ascertain from military records, the three Connecticut River counties only furnished six men to the three months' service, of whom three were from Hampden, two from Hampshire, and one from Franklin Counties. It is claimed, however, that a sufficient number of men from the four western counties of the State (impatient at the delay of the government) crossed over the border and enlisted in other State organizations to have formed at least half of a full regiment.

At length the long-looked-for order from the War Department at Washington was issued on the 15th of May, 1861, calling for six three years' regiments in addition to the two three months' regiments already in the field.

Under this call one regiment was assigned to the four western counties, and the following companies were chosen to form its complement: Springfield City Guard, Capt. Hosea C. Lombard; Capt. Fred. Barton's company, then in camp at Hampden Park, Springfield; the company made up from Holyoke and West Springfield, under Capt. John H. Clifford; the Westfield company, Capt. Lucius B. Walkley; the Northampton company, Capt. William R. Marsh; the Shelburne company, Capt. Ozro Miller; the Greenfield company, Capt. E. E. Day; the Pittsfield company, Capt. Thomas W. Clapp; the Adams company, Capt. Elisha Smart; and the company from Great Barrington, Capt. Ralph O. Ives. The company of Capt. Oliver Edwards, encamped on the park, and the Coleraine company, Capt. Nelson, were broken up and divided among the others.

On the 31st of May the company from Great Barrington arrived and went into camp at Hampden Park, making three companies then on the ground.

On the 9th of June, it being Sunday, the three companies, accompanied by the Springfield Guards, attended divine service at the First Church, which was tastefully decorated for the occasion.

By orders from headquarters of the State government, the ten companies composing the regiment were directed to rendezvous at Hampden Park, Springfield, on the 14th of June, there to remain until equipped for the field. All the companies reported promptly, except the Pittsfield company, which, by a mistake in mailing the orders, did not arrive until the 15th.

The companies were sworn into the United States service on the 21st of June by Capt. Marshall, of the regular army.

The following is the roster of the regiment as at first organized: Colonel, Henry S. Briggs, of Pittsfield; Lieutenant-Colonel, Jefford M. Decker, of Lawrence; Major, James S. Grinnell, of Greenfield (Mr. Grinnell declined the appointment, and Capt. William R. Marsh, of Northampton, was commissioned in his stead); Surgeon, Dr. C. N. Chamberlain, of Northampton; Assistant Surgeon, Dr. William Holbrook, of Palmer; Adjutant, Oliver Edwards, of Springfield; Quartermaster, John W. Howland, of North Adams; Chaplain, Frederick A. Barton, of Springfield; Sergeant-Major, Edward K. Wilcox, of Springfield; Quartermaster-Sergeant, Elihu B. Whittlesey, of Pittsfield; Commissary-Sergeant, Frank Jones Childs; Hospital Steward, Charles C. Wells.*

Company A.—Captain, Ralph O. Ives; First Lieutenant, James L. Bacon; Second Lieutenant, Henry L. Wilcox.

Company B.—Captain, Elisha Smart; First Lieutenant, F. C. Traver; Second Lieutenant, John Goddard.

Company C.—Captain, Wm. R. Marsh; First Lieutenant, Joseph B. Parsons; Second Lieutenant, Flavel Shurtleff.†

Company D.—Captain, Thomas W. Clapp; First Lieutenant, Charles Wheeler; Second Lieutenant, George E. Hagar.

Company E.—Captain, Fred. Barton; First Lieutenant, Byron Porter; Second Lieutenant, Wallace A. Putnam.

Company F.—Captain, Hosea C. Lombard; First Lieutenant, Hiram A. Keith; Second Lieutenant, George W. Bigelow.

Company G.—Captain, Edwin E. Day; First Lieutenant, George Pierce; Second Lieutenant, L. M. Remington.

Company H.—Captain, Ozro Miller; First Lieutenant, C. J. Woodward; Second Lieutenant, B. F. Leland.

Company I.—Captain, John H. Clifford; First Lieutenant, Joseph K. Newell; Second Lieutenant, James P. Brooks.

Company K.—Captain, Lucius B. Walkley; First Lieutenant, Pliny Wood; Second Lieutenant, David M. Chase.

On the same day Capt. Marsh, of Co. C, was appointed major in place of James S. Grinnell, declined, and this made other changes in the company officers, Lieut. J. B. Parsons being promoted to captain, James H. Weatherell to first, and Flavel Shurtleff to second lieutenant.

Under the State militia law each company was entitled to four lieutenants, and several of them were fully officered; but in the United States service only two lieutenants were provided for, and the surplus officers were consequently thrown out. James P. Brooks, who had been elected as second lieutenant of Co. I, was set aside, and Joseph H. Bennett substituted in his place. Changes were also made in Co. K.

Commanders of companies took their positions according to seniority of rank, the right company being the first post of honor, the left the second, the color-company the third, etc., alternately. This arrangement was continued throughout the war. In some portions of the volunteer army the regulation order was kept up without regard to seniority of commission.

The regiment remained at Camp Hampden until the 16th of July, during which interval the men were initiated into the business of a soldier's life so far as is practiced in camp. They were regularly drilled each day in company movements and in the manual of arms and practiced in guard-mounting, and on the anniversaries of the battle of Bunker Hill and the Declaration of American Independence took part in the local celebrations.

On the 2d of July the regiment marched to the United States armory, where they were furnished with muskets of the pattern of 1842, which they retained until the 5th of the same month, when they were exchanged for the English Enfield rifle, which in turn was eventually supplanted by the improved Springfield rifled musket, at that time the best infantry arm in use.

In the commencement of the war it was deemed essential that nearly every regiment of infantry should be provided with a regimental band, and the 10th was no exception to the rule. The band, which was from North Adams, under the leadership of William D. Hodge, joined the regiment on the 9th of July. Subsequently nearly all the regimental bands were mustered out under orders from the War Department, and thenceforward about one band to each division was allowed with the active army.

On the 10th of July the regiment was reviewed and inspected by Gov. Andrew and staff. During his stay the Governor visited the armory, where he was received with much attention and complimented with a national salute.

* The commissions were not all received at the same time, and some of the non-commissioned staff were not appointed until a subsequent date. In the course of the war they were all liable to change from casualties, promotions, etc.

† See farther on.

From the 11th to the 13th the men were granted leave of absence to visit families and friends, preparatory to departing for the seat of war.

On the 15th of the month a stand of elegant and costly colors was presented to the regiment by Mrs. James Barnes, on behalf of the women of Springfield. Col. James M. Thompson presided on the occasion, which drew together a large concourse of spectators. The colors were the exclusive gift of the ladies of the city, and were procured at an expense of $275.

Among other presentations by friends were a splendid chestnut horse to Adj. Edwards, a fine pair of pistols to Capt. Lombard, a revolver each to Capt. Clifford and Lieut. Bennett, a gold chain and signet-ring to Lieut. Newell, and a sash and epaulettes to Lieut. Geo. W. Bigelow.

On Tuesday, July 16, 1861, the regiment abandoned their camp at Hampden Park, and, with the Springfield Cadets and Union Guard as escort, moved to the railway depot, where they bade adieu to families and friends, and, filling seventeen passenger-cars, which slowly pulled out from the station, they departed for Boston amid the waving of handkerchiefs and banners and the tears and acclamations of the assembled spectators, many of them destined never to look upon the old familiar places again in this life. The story of the departure of every regiment which went into the field during the dark years of the Rebellion is almost identical,—the same sad handshakings and tearful adieus, the same "Good-by! God bless you!"

Never was a nation more thoroughly stirred to its deepest depths, and never in the history of the world, perhaps, has there been such a spontaneous burst of patriotism,—such a vast offering of the blood and treasure of a people voluntarily upon the altars of Freedom and Humanity. The feeling and uprising of the Southern people were probably in a similar degree, and it is for the pen of the impartial historian of the future to weigh well the underlying causes of the "Great Civil War" and assign to each belligerent in the gigantic struggle its proper position in the history of the human race.

The passage of the train through the numerous towns and stations lying between Springfield and Boston was the occasion of patriotic demonstrations. The regiment arrived in Boston without accident about five o'clock, and was immediately escorted by the Second Battalion of Infantry, under Maj.-Gen. Samuel Andrews, via Bunker Hill, to their new camp in Medford.

At this place—which was named "Camp Adams," from the fact that John Quincy Adams once owned the land—the regiment remained until the 25th of July, perfecting its discipline and getting ready for active service.

On the 22d the regiment was provided with twenty-five baggage-wagons, five ambulances, two hospital-wagons, and one hundred and twenty-three horses, delivered to the quartermaster at Cambridge Arsenal. This amount of transportation was no doubt considered necessary, but when in the course of the war it was reduced to two wagons and a hospital-wagon and one ambulance, divided between two regiments, it began to be understood how cumbersome were the trains in the beginning of the contest.

The regiment was visited by Capt. Marshall on the 23d, who administered the oath of allegiance to about one hundred men who had not been sworn. Among those mustered was Master Myron P. Walker, the drummer-boy of Co. C, from Belchertown.

At Medford village, on the 25th, the regiment was addressed by Hon. George N. Briggs, father of the colonel, and formerly Governor of the State.

At three P.M. the train took the regiment to Boston, where it was formed in line, and, escorted by the police, marched through the city to Central Wharf, receiving a perfect ovation all along its course. Here the regiment was divided, and Cos. C, K, B, D, and G went on board the steamer "S. R. Spaulding," accompanied by the colonel, major, adjutant, surgeon, and regimental band. Cos. A, H, E, F, and I embarked on the steamer "Ben De Ford," accompanied by the lieutenant-colonel, quartermaster, and assistant surgeon.

The two steamers were completely filled by this one regiment and its transportation and baggage, but at the close of the war two or three regiments were amply accommodated, with all their paraphernalia, on board a single vessel.

Salutes were fired by Fort Independence and the steamers as the ships passed down the harbor, and soon they were on the heaving waters of the Atlantic. They arrived at the entrance to Chesapeake Bay on the afternoon of the 27th, and about four o'clock P.M. of the 28th reached the wharf in Washington, D. C.

On the afternoon of the 29th the regiment marched to Kalorama Heights, about two and a half miles north of the Capitol, where a temporary camp was occupied in the midst of a heavy rain until the next day, when another was provided.

On Sunday, August 4th, the regiment was supplied with new uniforms,—gray pants and blue blouses. On the 6th of August the camp was again exchanged for one on the Seventh Street road, about four miles from the Capitol, where the regiment was brigaded with the 7th Massachusetts, 2d Rhode Island, and 36th New York.

On the 9th the camp was once more exchanged for a more eligible and much more healthful one at Brightwood, near the residence of Francis P. Blair, Sr. Here the regiment began to experience the usual results of camp-life, and measles were among the troubles that visited the men.

Gen. McClellan visited the regiment on the 12th, took a good survey of the men, complimented them on their soldierly appearance, and said he should soon need their services.

Religious services were usually held on Sunday, Chaplain Barton officiating. On the 25th of August he preached to them, and the music was furnished by a choir extemporized from among the members of the regiment, assisted by the band. On Sunday, Sept. 1st, religious exercises were omitted, as the entire regiment was detailed to work on the fortifications.

On the 2d of September the brigade was reviewed by Gen. McClellan, and on the 3d orders were received to be ready to move at a moment's notice.

On the 13th the regiment was paid off for the first time, receiving gold or treasury-notes, at each man's option. On the same day Col. Briggs left for Massachusetts to visit his venerable father, who had met with a serious accident, from which he expired before his son reached home.

On the 14th occurred the first funeral in the regiment,—that of private John C. Squires, of Co. I, who died of camp-fever on the 13th. This sad occasion brought many sober looks to faces which in after-days looked upon death as upon any other common occurrence.

The regiment was reviewed and inspected again on the 15th by Maj.-Gen. Don Carlos Buell, division commander. The day was intensely warm, and some of the men were overcome by the heat.

On the 17th a valuable addition was made to the regiment in the persons of Mrs. Solyman Merrick, of Springfield, and Miss Helen Wolcott, of Agawam, who came to offer their services as nurses for the regimental hospital. The same day Lieut. Remington arrived with fifty recruits for the regiment.

Considerable sickness prevailed, and on the 15th of October forty men were in the hospital, and about seventy-five were unable to do duty. On the 17th, Governor Andrew visited the camp of the regiment.

During the stay of the regiment in the vicinity of Washington the friends at home collected and forwarded at different times large quantities of necessaries, comforts, and even luxuries, for the benefit of the members. On the 20th of November Co. I received three large boxes filled with all manner of good things,—clothing, blankets, provisions, etc. A liberal supply of reading-matter was also sent on and distributed among the men.

Co. E also received a welcome donation of similar articles, and most of the other companies were also remembered.

On the 12th of December the Soldiers' Aid Society, of Holyoke, forwarded for the use of the regiment another invoice of clothing, blankets, towels, and many other things which were exceedingly acceptable and highly appreciated.

On the 15th another instalment of similar comforts was received and distributed. On the 26th of December, Surgeon Chamberlain sent a letter of acknowledgment to the Springfield Republican for publication.

In December the regiment built themselves wooden huts, or barracks, which during the cold weather were much more comfortable than tents. They were also more commodious, and were warmed by small sheet-iron stoves, which the men paid for out of their wages. A number of the officers' wives visited the camp, and some of them remained through the winter.

In January, 1862, a case of small-pox occurred, and the whole regiment was vaccinated to prevent the spreading of the disease. On the 8th of January, Col. Briggs returned from Massachusetts, where he had been to attend the obsequies of his father. On the 13th the regiment was paid off for two months' service. On the 6th of February private Carter, of Co. K, while on duty with the provost-guard, shot a member of Co. D, 7th Massachusetts, for attempting to run the line. He was badly wounded, but not killed, and the occurrence created considerable excitement for a time.

On the 10th of February, Dr. George Jewett, of Fitchburg, arrived to fill the vacancy occasioned by the promotion of Dr. Holbrook to be surgeon of the 18th Massachusetts.

February 12th news of Burnside's success at Roanoke Island was received with music and general rejoicings. At this date the health of the men was reported as excellent.

On the 15th a new excitement visited the camp. The regiment was ordered to fall in line, a hollow square was formed, and then the colonel read an order from headquarters calling for volunteers for the gunboat service in the Western waters. Over 200 of the men at once volunteered, but, the number being restricted to ten from each regiment, a good many were disappointed. The following were finally selected: From Co. B, Corp. N. O. Blinn and private John Boyle; Frank Boise, Co. C; Joseph A. Winn, Co. I; William Levy, Co. A; John H. Ross, Co. D; Henry L. Copley, Co. K; Benj. F. Brady, Co. F; Peter Bard, Co. H. The men left for their new field on the 17th with the blessings and hearty good-bys of their companions. On the same day news was received of the capture of Forts Henry and Donelson, with 15,000 prisoners, by Gen. Grant, which was hailed with the greatest enthusiasm. This was the first important victory of the war, and forced the rebels entirely from the States of Kentucky and Tennessee by flanking the strong positions of Columbus, Bowling Green, Nashville, and Memphis. The Confederate commanders were compelled to fall back upon the lines of Corinth, and the south bank of the Tennessee River beyond Tusculumbia.

Washington's natal-day was duly celebrated by a dress-parade in the morning, the reading of his Farewell Address, and target-shooting. On the 27th an order was received to be ready for an important expedition at two o'clock the next morning, with four days' rations, one hundred rounds of ball-cartridge, a blanket, a change of clothing, and an extra pair of shoes. Preparations were made, and the chaplain made a feeling address to the men, but at eight p.m. the orders were countermanded.

The question of slavery and the return of contrabands to their masters were hotly discussed, pro and con., and not a little feeling was manifested on both sides.

On March 1st six Maryland planters came into the camp looking for contrabands. Matters speedily developed a crisis, and the slave-hunters were glad to get away with their lives.

On the same night, by some unaccountable means, a majority of the enlisted men of the regiment were found to be missing. The explanation was this: Some one had propounded the query whether it would not be a good thing to visit "my Maryland" and administer the oath of allegiance to a few of the planters in that benighted region. A short discussion ended in a unanimous decision in the affirmative, whereupon a secret expedition stealthily left the camp and marched about eight miles to the house of one Nolan, where the skirmish-line, consisting of the negro pilot, got into difficulty with the "missus," which brought the soldiers at once to the spot, and two stalwart gentlemen of the Nolan family had the oath administered to them on their bended knees. The soldiers outside, meantime, had trouble with the poultry, and the whole ended with the return of the "expedition" to camp accompanied by a generous delegation of the feathered tribe.

When the discovery of the movement was made in camp "there was mounting in hot haste," and the foragers were intercepted on their return "from the field of their fame fresh and gory," disarmed, reprimanded, and sent to their quarters, and only the early demand for the services of the regiment in the field prevented a severer punishment.

On the 10th of March the regiment started on a movement into Virginia, which was pushed only a few miles toward Manassas, when intelligence was received that the enemy had evacuated that strong position and fallen back toward Richmond. After a stay of a couple of days, orders were received to return to Chain Bridge, where a halt was made during about twenty-four hours, when orders were given to return to their old camps north of the city.

On the 22d of March orders were issued for the army to prepare for an immediate movement. Baggage was reduced to the minimum and all surplus stored in an outbuilding, which was the last seen of it.

The 10th broke camp on the 25th and moved toward the city, expecting to take passage for Fortress Monroe; but at nightfall it was ordered to return to camp at Brightwood for the night.

On the 26th the regiment bade adieu to their old camp, joined the brigade, and marched to the foot of Sixth Street, where transports were in readiness to convey the troops southward. The 10th numbered at that time about 1000 men. The day was occupied in getting on board the transports, and the regiment was divided and quartered in detachments on three different vessels, to wit: the "Sea-Shore," the "Donaldson," and the "Ariel." The remainder of the brigade was embarked partly on these vessels and partly on the "Daniel Webster," while the sutlers' wagons, etc., were stowed on board the "Mystic."

At nine o'clock p.m. the squadron was under way, and on the 28th reached Fortress Monroe, where it was detained for orders. On the 29th the troops landed, and encamped until the 4th of April, when, at seven in the morning, the column started on the march toward Yorktown. From this time until the 5th of May there was a gradual advance toward the rebel capital, and the 10th was engaged on picket and fatigue duty, varied occasionally by forning line of battle when approaching a belt of timber, while the skirmish-line was pushed to the front and the field-guns unlimbered and put in position for battle. There was a little occasional skirmishing, but no serious fighting until the army approached Williamsburg, where the enemy was found in force and strongly posted behind formidable fortifications, above which floated defiantly the "Stars and Bars" of the Southern Confederacy.

About noon on the 5th the sound of heavy firing came booming over the level country around them, and the troops were hurried forward as fast as possible through the sticky mud,—infantry, cavalry, artillery, and trains all pushing toward the dread sound of battle in the front, where Hooker was hotly engaged.

As the division rapidly advanced, about five P.M., to the support of Hooker, the dead and wounded were being borne to the rear on the bloody stretchers, whose first sight to a soldier is something indescribable. Orders were given to load, which was done with the assurance that at last they were in the presence of the enemy and the trying hour had come.

As the division deployed in line of battle and advanced, an orderly dashed up from the front with a request from Gen. Hancock that reinforcements be sent him, as he was being fiercely assailed; and the statement was fully confirmed by the terrible crash of musketry and artillery in front. The 10th Massachusetts was immediately ordered forward to the assistance of Hancock, but when it arrived the enemy had already been repulsed by a skillful movement of that officer. The 10th was placed in the front line, and remained through the night.

A little in advance was an unfinished field-work, into which the enemy had carried many of their wounded, and their groans and cries through the night were anything but pleasant to the ears of raw troops. Under cover of night the enemy fell back toward Richmond, and in the morning their works were found abandoned.

On the 6th the army moved forward over the rebel works, and encamped near Williamsburg. The principal work of the enemy was known as Fort Magruder, named for the rebel Gen. John B. Magruder. On the same day the Union gunboats the "Galena," "Monitor," and "Naugatuck," moved up the river, while the rebel gunboats retreated before them beyond Fort Darling.

The 10th remained in camp until the 9th, when it again moved forward to James City, and the next day to Barboursville, where it remained until the 13th, when it again moved toward Richmond, and halted at New Kent Court-House.

On the 14th the entire regiment was detailed on picket duty, and was out through the day and night in a hard rain.

It was remarked by the Union troops that every house along the road had its "flag of truce" displayed in some conspicuous place, and nobody was found at home but women, children, and old men. Everybody professed loyalty, even while their husbands, sons, and fathers were in the rebel army.

On the 16th and 17th the regiment advanced a few miles, and went into camp at Crump's Cross-Roads, on ground recently occupied by Cobb's Georgia Legion. Here it remained until the 19th, when it was advanced three miles to the railway running from Richmond to West Point. Here the men went into camp in a fine grove close to the enemy's picket-line.

The regiment moved again on the 21st two miles nearer Richmond, and in the evening Cos. B and I were detailed upon outpost duty beyond the Chickahominy, crossed the burned railway-bridge on planks, waded knee-deep through the swamp, and watched for the enemy until daylight, when the enemy's cavalry pickets were driven in. The picket-line was advanced a half-mile on the 22d, and occasionally exchanged shots with the rebel pickets in their front on the railway.

On the 23d the regiment crossed the river, when the picket companies were called in, and on the 24th the troops advanced to within twelve miles of Richmond. The 10th was on a reconnaissance with Gen. Negley's division, and witnessed an artillery duel between the 7th New York Battery and the enemy.

May 25, at nine A.M., the 10th marched to Seven Pines, within seven and a half miles of Richmond; all baggage and trains ordered to the rear. On the 27th the enemy began their attacks upon the extreme right of Gen. McClellan's army near Mechanicsville, which finally ended in the retreat of the army from in front of Richmond to a new base at Harrison's Landing, on the James River. During the 27th the division to which the 10th belonged was employed in cutting timber and throwing up rifle-pits and light field-works.

On the 31st of May was fought the battle of Fair Oaks, which was commenced by a sudden and desperate assault by the rebels, soon after noon, upon the division of Gen. Casey. Instantly the various regiments were in line, and the stragglers from Casey's division were swarming to the rear. The 10th was ordered forward to some rifle-pits, when, finding them full of water, the men threw themselves upon the wet ground, where they remained for some time, while the batteries on both sides played over their heads. Several men were wounded, some of them by defective shells from the Union guns.

The 55th New York Regiment was in the mean time ordered to take a position in front of the 10th Massachusetts, in the midst of some felled timber, where they were exposed to a heavy and destructive fire from the enemy, and soon compelled to fall back. The 10th was now ordered forward, and soon found itself "under fire" and in a dangerous position, with the enemy on the front and left flank. The regiment was in the midst of the fray from this time until dark. The losses were heavy, and the gallantry of both men and officers conspicuous even among the many other gallant regiments engaged.

Col. Briggs, who was in command of his men, was severely wounded about five o'clock in the evening by a minie-ball, which passed through his left thigh and into the right. Lieut.-Col. Decker being disabled by rheumatism, and Maj. Marsh absent as officer of the day, the command devolved upon Capt. Miller, who handled the troops with such skill and bravery as to call out the highest compliments from his commanding officers.

Among the many encomiums bestowed upon the 10th, the following by Gen. Keyes is all we have space for. In conversation with a gentleman from Western Massachusetts, he said: "Tell them, when you go back, that I have led a hundred regiments into battle, and never did I see such bravery. I looked at them as they advanced, while the shot fell like hail, and there never was such a dauntless corps. When the fight was over I spoke to them of their courage, and they said they had only done their duty; but I never heard them mentioned in the journals. Their conduct was, and is, unparalleled in the whole war."

The total losses amounted to 27 killed and 95 wounded, 6 of them mortally. Among the officers killed were Capts. Smart and Day, and among the wounded were Col. Briggs and Capts. Parsons and Newell.

On the 1st of June, which was Sunday, the regiment was on picket duty all day. Details were made from each company to bury the dead, who were mostly interred where they fell. So far as possible, the graves were marked for identification at a future day. The rebels retired from in front of their lines, leaving all their dead and part of their wounded. A curious incident is related by Capt. Newell of an omnibus-load of sight-seers from Richmond venturing so far that they were taken prisoners and brought into the Union lines.

From the date of the battle of Fair Oaks to the 28th of June the 10th was engaged in picket and fatigue duty, occasionally varied by a sharp skirmish. About the 10th of June the surgeon received two large boxes of hospital stores from the Ladies' Soldiers' Aid Society, consisting of articles of clothing, bedding, bandages, dried fruits, wines, jellies and jams, and many other things, all most acceptable and useful.

On the 14th, Maj. Marsh received his discharge and started for home. Lieut. Woodward, of Co. H, was also discharged for disability on the same day. Lieut. Chase resigned, and started home on the 23d.

On the 25th the division was called out and marched to the battle-ground of Fair Oaks, where line of battle was formed and arms stacked for a brief period, when the division was ordered to the front, and again formed in line in the edge of some timber, about four hundred yards from the enemy, where the men began to throw up breastworks, but found so much quicksand they were obliged to desist. The division remained here all night, during which there was a constant skirmish-fire in front, and the rebels were busy felling timber and apparently strengthening their lines. Just before daylight on the 26th the troops were withdrawn to the breastworks of Casey's division, and about noon returned to camp.

There was heavy firing on the right of the army during the 27th. On the 28th the great movement toward the James River commenced. On the night of the 29th the army passed within less than a quarter of a mile of the enemy's outposts, but such was the silence of the march that the movement was not suspected. On the 30th the 10th arrived at Haxall's Landing, on the James, and the entire army was rapidly moving and concentrating at Harrison's Landing.

The morning of July 1st found the whole army united for the first time since crossing the Chickahominy, and holding a strong position at Malvern Hill.

"Malvern Hill forms a high plateau, sloping toward Richmond from Cold Banks, near the river, and bounded by deep ravines, making an excellent defensive position.

"The national line of battle was formed with Porter's corps* on the left, near Crew's house, where the artillery of the reserve, under Col. Hunt, was so disposed on high ground that a concentrated fire of sixty guns could be brought to bear on any point on his front or left, and on the highest point of the hill Col. Tyler had ten siege-guns in position."†

The 10th Massachusetts was in Couch's division, which was on the right of Porter's line.

The extreme left of the army, near the river, and where the heaviest attack was likely to be made, was strengthened by abatis and covered by the gunboats.

On this ground was fought one of the most terrible battles of the war.

The Union army had lost heavily on their retreat from the Chickahominy, both in men and material, but now they were in a strong position; and, moreover, defeat would be almost certain destruction, and they resolved that hitherto the rebels could come, but no farther.

The battle began about ten o'clock in the morning with a heavy artillery fire, which continued until afternoon, when Gen. Lee resolved to carry the Federal position by storm; and about two o'clock P.M. Anderson's North Carolina brigade charged across the level ground in front of Couch's division, but were bloodily repulsed by the 10th Massachusetts and 36th New York Regiments and the fire of the batteries.

The moment the enemy broke, the 10th and 36th left their works and charged them in turn, and took a new position in advance of the regular line. In this charge the flag of the 30th North Carolina Regiment was captured, and a large number of prisoners. While the 10th was occupying the advanced position Maj. Miller was mortally wounded by a shot through the neck, and when the Union army fell back was left, with other wounded men, in charge of Dr. Jewett, and taken to Richmond, where he died.

About four o'clock P.M. the enemy made a second attempt, with overwhelming numbers, to capture the position. They formed in three double lines, which deliberately filed out of the woods, formed in line of battle, and pushed steadily and rapidly on with the determination to force the position with the bayonet, and so roll up the Union army from left to right.

When this stern gray mass of men fairly appeared in the open ground, sixty guns from the heights and the whole line of infantry opened a storm of fire upon them which flesh and blood could not withstand. After a desperate but vain attempt to force their way through the lines of the Union army, during which the "rebel yell" could be distinctly heard above the roar of battle, they broke, and fled in irretrievable confusion.

In this battle the 10th had a little over 400 men engaged. When the fight began each man had sixty rounds of ball-cartridge, and these were all expended, besides many more taken from the cartridge-boxes of the fallen. The losses in the regiment were 8 killed and 73 wounded. Among the killed or mortally wounded were Maj. Ozro Miller and Sergts. Hemenway, of Co. D, and McFarlane, of Co. E; and among the wounded were Lieuts. Wheeler, Pierce, and Shurtleff.

After the battle was over the 10th was relieved, and marched to the rear of the batteries.

On the 2d of July the whole army was put in motion from the field where it had given the enemy such a terrible defeat, and moved to Harrison's Landing. Why Gen. McClellan was in such haste to retreat before a beaten enemy, leaving his badly wounded and considerable stores on the field, seems inexplicable, but such was the fact, and it most certainly reflects little credit upon him as a commander. When the veteran Taylor was hard pressed by Santa Anna at Buena Vista, and his officers urged a retreat, he nobly replied, "My wounded are behind me, and I will never pass them alive." But here was a general claiming to have defeated the enemy, and yet hastily retreating before him and leaving many of his wounded to languish in rebel prisons!

At evening on the 2d the whole Army of the Potomac were encamped in column, by division, in an immense wheat-field, under cover of the gunboat fleet.

At this point the 10th remained until the 16th of August. On the 8th of July, President Lincoln visited the army, and was received with the greatest enthusiasm. The regiment was engaged a good part of the time on picket and fatigue duty, varied by an occasional reconnoissance toward the enemy's lines.

On the 16th of August the retrograde movement of the army was continued, and on the 20th the 10th arrived at Yorktown, where it remained until the 29th, when it embarked on board the screw-steamer "Key West" for Alexandria.

At Yorktown, on the 27th, Dexter F. Parker, of Worcester, formerly brigade quartermaster, reported for duty as major of the 10th, in place of Maj. Miller, who had died of his wounds in Richmond on the 15th of July. This appointment was received with anything but satisfaction by the line-officers of the regiment, and eventually produced a vast deal of trouble. It was not claimed by the officers of the regiment that Maj. Parker was lacking in bravery or any of the essentials of a gentleman, or the necessary qualifications for his particular branch of the service. The objections were precisely the same as would be raised in any volunteer regiment. He did not belong to the regiment and was not educated in the experience of a line-officer, and the officers of the 10th regarded the appointment as an innovation upon the claims of brave and competent men in their own ranks.

The troops debarked at Alexandria on the 1st of September, and were ordered to Fairfax Court-House, to the support of Gen. Pope. The march was commenced, and continued for a few miles, but on the 2d the troops were ordered to return to Alexandria; which order was soon changed, and they moved to the Chain Bridge, which point they reached at noon on the 3d. Here Col. Eustis assumed the command.

On the 5th the 10th moved forward with the balance of the troops toward the rebel army in Maryland. Gen. Pope had been superseded by Gen. McClellan, and on the 14th and 17th were fought the battles of South Mountain and Antietam, in consequence of which the rebel army retreated once more into Virginia.

* Grand division.

† From history of the Tenth Regiment.

The regiment was in the vicinity of both these great actions, but not actively engaged in either. On the 15th a strong force, including the 10th, was ordered to the relief of the garrison at Harper's Ferry, then closely invested by Lee's army. The command proceeded rapidly on its way, but within an hour the firing at Harper's Ferry, which had been very heavy all the morning, suddenly ceased, and it was at once understood that the garrison, amounting to about 12,000 men, had surrendered. It was no doubt a shameful and unnecessary act, and the Union commander has been severely criticised. On the evening of the 17th the 10th reached the Antietam battle-field after a most fatiguing day of marching and countermarching, and threw themselves on the ground for a little rest.

On the 18th the 10th was assigned a position on the right of the front line, where it remained during the day. The battle, as is well known, was not renewed, and the morning of the 19th found the rebel army across the Potomac, and evidently retreating southward. After a great amount of marching the 10th went into camp on the 24th of September, near Downesville, where, on the 25th, the men were mustered for pay. The campaign had been a rough one, and the regiment—both officers and men—was ragged and shabby.

At this camp, on the 27th, eleven line-officers of the regiment tendered their resignations in consequence of the appointment of Maj. Parker. The names of these officers were as below: Captains Thomas W. Clapp, George Pierce, Samuel C. Traver, Joseph K. Newell; Lieutenants Hiram A. Keith, Joseph H. Bennett, Lorenzo M. Remington, George E. Hagar, Henry E. Crane, Edwin E. Moore, and James Knox.

Lieuts. Charles Wheeler and David W. Wells were honorably discharged on surgeons' certificates.

At dress-parade Col. Eustis informed the officers that he had received the resignations, but had not forwarded them, and would hold them until the next morning, trusting that they would be reconsidered and recalled. He cautioned them at the same time that they were violating the 7th article of war, and must expect the consequences.

None of them were withdrawn, however, and on the 28th the officers were all ordered under arrest. A court-martial was advised by Gen. Devens, the brigade commander, who deprecated in strong terms the action of the officers. From this time until the 14th of November the court-martial sat as opportunity was offered, and in the mean time the offenders remained with the regiment, under arrest and without arms or command. The last case was disposed of by the court-martial on the last-mentioned date, and forwarded for approval.

In the mean time, the regiment was almost constantly on the move in Maryland and Virginia, though scarcely under fire.

During the month of November a number of men were transferred from the regiment into the regular artillery service, most of them going into Butler's battery, 2d U. S. Artillery.

During the greater part of November the regiment was moving from place to place in Virginia, and in the beginning of December began a movement which terminated in front of the rebel position on the Rappahannock at Fredericksburg.

The 10th was present at the great battle of Fredericksburg, on the 13th of December, 1862, but, with the exception of being exposed at one time to a heavy shelling, did not participate. Upon the retreat of the army on the morning of the 15th, the 10th was selected as rear-guard for the left wing, and was the last regiment to leave the ground. The troops went into camp near Falmouth.

The officers who tendered their resignations had their cases gradually disposed of, and on the 20th of December the last of them received their discharges from the service. The sentence of the court-martial was that the four senior officers be cashiered and the remainder dismissed the service.

Upon the presentation of a written statement of the facts to the President of the United States, he set aside the findings of the court, and all the officers were honorably discharged. Several of them subsequently served with credit in the army.

On the 26th of November, Lieut. Wallace A. Putnam, of Co. E, had excused some of his barefooted men from drill. Upon hearing of this the colonel called the lieutenant to account, and ordered him to take these men and bring wood three-fourths of a mile to replenish the fire in front of his tent, and keep at work until he ordered him to stop. The lieutenant, considering the order an inhuman one, flatly refused to obey it, and was at once put under arrest by the colonel. Upon his trial he pleaded guilty to the charges, and upon giving a written statement of the reasons for disobeying the orders the reviewing-officer returned him to duty.

About the 5th of January the 10th was virtually reconstructed, with mostly a new set of officers, the places of those killed, disabled, and discharged having been filled by new men.

The following list shows the officers at this time: Colonel, Henry L. Eustis; Lieutenant-Colonel, Joseph B. Parsons; Major, Dexter F. Parker; Adjutant, Charles H. Brewster; Surgeon, C. N. Chamberlain; Assistant Surgeon, A. B. Robinson; Acting Assistant Surgeon, G. C. Clark; Quartermaster, Allen S. Mansir; Chaplain, A. J. Bingham.

Company A.—Captain, Ralph O. Ives; First Lieutenant, Levi Ross; Second Lieutenant, C. H. Knapp.

Company B.—Captain, William Streeter; First Lieutenant, E. B. Bartlett; Second Lieutenant, G. C. Kaulback.

Company C.—Captain, James H. Weatherall; First Lieutenant, Edwin Whitney; Second Lieutenant, E. H. Graves.

Company D.—Captain, Homer G. Gilmore; First Lieutenant, H. M. Cotrell; Second Lieutenant, E. B. Whittlesey.

Company E.—Captain, Edwin L. Knight; First Lieutenant, Wallace A. Putnam; Second Lieutenant, Simeon N. Eldridge.

Company F.—Captain, George W. Bigelow; First Lieutenant, L. O. Eaton; Second Lieutenant, T. S. Noble.

Company G.—Captain, George Pierce, Jr.; First Lieutenant, N. H. Gardner; Second Lieutenant, George W. Potter, Jr.

Company H.—Captain, Flavel Shurtleff; First Lieutenant, A. E. Munyan; Second Lieutenant, A. W. Midgley.

Company I.—Captain, Willard I. Bishop; First Lieutenant, William A. Ashley; Second Lieutenant, W. F. Darby.

Various articles from the officers of the regiment and others appeared in the papers, and altogether, with its distinguished services in the field and its internal difficulties, its history was among the most interesting and eventful of any that took the field from the State of Massachusetts.

The new chaplain did not remain long before continued ill health compelled his resignation. He was quite popular in his regiment, and upon the eve of his departure made a very feeling address to his companions.

In the latter part of January occurred the famous "forward-and-back" movement of Burnside's army, which was denominated the "mud campaign" by the soldiers. In this the 10th bore, as usual, a conspicuous part. The movement took place between the 20th and 24th of the month, and resulted in nothing except wear and tear of men and transportation.

Soon after the "mud campaign," Col. Eustis was placed in command of the brigade to which the 10th was attached. While encamped and doing picket duty along the Rappahannock, the pickets of the two armies kept open communications across the river, and exchanged newspapers, tobacco, coffee, and compliments, and occasionally written correspondence, notwithstanding it was strictly forbidden.

On the 6th of March, 1863, three wagon-loads of express goods were received and distributed, making glad the hearts of the soldiers, who felt that they were still remembered at home. During the month of March reviews and drills indicated active work at hand. On the 8th of April the army was reviewed by President Lincoln, who was accompanied by his two sons.

At one period during the spring of 1863 a balloon was attached to the army, and the 10th Massachusetts had the honor of furnishing an officer (Lieut. Kaulback) and 30 men to take charge of the apparatus.

Gen. Joe Hooker was now in command of the Army of the Potomac, and high hopes were entertained of great things to come.

On the 20th of April, Gen. Charles Devens, Jr., who had been a long time in command of the brigade, was ordered to report to Gen. Howard, of the 11th Corps, as commander of a division, and on the following day he bade his old command an affectionate adieu.

While lying in their camps about Falmouth the boys of the 10th and various other regiments instituted a series of base-ball games to while away the monotony of camp-life. The game had not then risen to the prominence it has since acquired as a national one, neither had it been reduced to such a science as at the present time, but it furnished abundance of sport, and was played with the greatest zest by both officers and men.

On the 28th of April commenced the series of movements which culminated, on the 3d of May, in the battles of Salem Heights and Chancellorsville. The left wing of the army, under Sedgwick, gallantly carried the rebel positions in front of Fredericksburg which had cost such sacrifices in Burnside's army the previous December; but the centre and right wing, under the immediate command of Gen. Hooker, were repulsed at Chancellorsville, and this enabled Gen. Lee to throw an overwhelming force upon Sedgwick's corps and compel it to fall back across the Rappahannock with considerable loss.

The 10th was heavily engaged in the attack upon Salem Heights and suffered severely, losing 10 killed and 56 wounded. Among the killed was First Sergt. Amos Pettis, of Co. I, and among the wounded were Capt. Shurtleff and Lieut. Noble.

Col. Eustis, of the 10th, exhibited great skill and bravery in handling the brigade after Col. Brown was wounded. Maj. Parker was in command of the 10th.

The regiment remained in camp, which was named "Camp Eustis," from the 8th of May to the 5th of June, when active operations were again commenced. On the 23d of May, Co. K was made the color-company. The men were constantly exercised in drilling and fatigue duty.

On the morning of June 5th the ball was opened by the Vermont brigade, who crossed the Rappahannock in boats, charged the enemy gallantly under a heavy artillery fire, drove them from their rifle-pits, and captured 200 prisoners. During these operations the 10th was under arms, but took no part in them.

On the 7th a detail of 1000 men, including seven companies of the 10th, was sent across the river about eight o'clock in the evening, fully armed and equipped. Once on the farther side, they were furnished with intrenching tools, and by daylight of the 8th had thrown up a strong line, a mile in length, confronting the rebel position. The detail was then relieved, and recrossed the river.

Intrenching and skirmishing, varied by artillery firing, was kept up until the 14th of June, when the army began the famous march toward the culminating battle of the war, at Gettysburg. Lee was moving his army toward the North, and the Federal army moved in a parallel course abreast of him, and brought him to bay at length among the hills of Southern Pennsylvania when the rich cities of Philadelphia and Baltimore were almost within his grasp.

During the long and toilsome march, while at Westminster, the 36th New York, which had been brigaded with the 10th Massachusetts ever since they were at Brightwood, left the brigade and returned home, the two years for which they enlisted having expired.

The 10th, during the terrible battle of July 3d, was among the reserves, almost constantly moving from one point to another, and during Gen. Lee's terrific cannonade with one hundred and twenty guns upon the centre of the Union position it passed through the concentrated storm, but fortunately losing only two men wounded.

On the 5th the army started in pursuit of the retreating enemy. On the 25th the 10th was near Warrenton, where it remained until the 15th of September. On the 21st of July a detail of three commissioned and six non-commissioned officers was made, to proceed to Massachusetts on recruiting service. On the 29th of July a fine new set of colors was received from Boston. The old colors were sent to Boston for safe-keeping.

On Saturday, the 8th of August, Capt. George Pierce rejoined the regiment, having been reinstated by Governor Andrew in his command. He was one of those who resigned on account of the appointment of Maj. Parker. About this time, also, the sutler made his appearance with two wagon-loads of goods. On the 17th of August the regiment was paid off for four months. Besides the allotments to their families, the quartermaster expressed home for the boys $10,105. The regiment at this time numbered about 400 men.

On the 3d of September, Capt. Ives, who had gone to a house outside the picket-line for a glass of milk, was captured by guerrillas and taken to Richmond. About the middle of September, Col. Eustis was promoted to brigadier-general for meritorious services. Col. Parsons had commanded the regiment after the battle of Salem Heights.

Soon after the promotion of Col. Eustis about $300 was raised to purchase a sword and accompanying trappings, to be presented to him as a token of esteem from the officers and men of his old command. A subscription was also started for the purpose of procuring a suitable memorial for presentation to Gen. McClellan. This last was participated in by the whole army.

At dress-parade on the 26th of September an order was read dismissing Capt. Ralph O. Ives from the service for violation of the 49th article of war. The regiment was again paid off on the 19th of September.

During the month of October the regiment was marching in Virginia, stopping for a few days at Bristow Station, where it was expected the troops would go into winter-quarters. On the 15th of October, Capt. Fred Barton, of the staff of Gen. Eustis, was captured by guerrillas while at Fairfax Station to see his father off on the cars.

On the 7th of November occurred the action at Rappahannock Station, where a strong work was captured by Gen. Russell's brigade at the point of the bayonet. In the course of the day the 10th lost 2 men wounded, 1 mortally.

At this place about 1500 of the enemy were captured, including the famous "Louisiana Tigers."

During the latter part of November the whole army made an advance beyond the Rapidan, and there was much skirmishing and considerable fighting between the 26th of November and the 1st of December, at which latter date the army commenced falling back toward Brandy Station. The 10th went into camp on the John Minor Botts farm on the 3d of December.

At this place the regiment constructed a permanent camp. The men built log huts, using tents for roofs. The huts were six feet by ten on the ground, with walls four feet in height.

During their stay at this camp a large number of the 10th Regiment re-enlisted for three years. Every man who re-enlisted was promised thirty-five days' furlough. On the 2d of January, 1864, the re-enlisted men of nine companies were mustered for three additional years of service by Capt. Smith, of Gen. Terry's staff, and on the next day the remaining company was mustered. At one time during their stay here rumors were afloat that the regiment would be ordered to Sandusky, Ohio, to guard prisoners of war.

About the middle of January the regiment was supplied with a new chaplain, in the person of Rev. Mr. Perkins, of Montague. Recruits began now to arrive in camp. Early in February the chaplain, having no suitable place for conducting religious services, set about constructing a chapel, which was soon completed. It was built of logs plastered with mud, and was seventeen by twenty-three feet and could accommodate about one hundred persons. It was decorated with bunting and evergreens.

Not long after the chapel was completed the major took possession of it for the purpose of practicing the bayonet exercise, but upon a representation of the matter to Col. Parsons the business was discontinued. A lyceum was organized in the regiment, and meetings were held once a week. There was heavy firing along the Rapidan on the 6th of February, and indications of some movement in the rebel camp.

On the 10th of February the re-enlisted veterans left for home on their promised furloughs. The balance of the regiment was consolidated into four companies, under command of Maj. Parker.

On the 19th, Gen. Eustis was presented with an elegant sword and trappings by the 10th Regiment. Maj. Parker made the presentation in an appropriate speech, which was feelingly responded to by the general. The old band of the 10th was reorganized as a brigade band, and rejoined the command under the lead of B. A. Stewart on the 14th of February, and on the 20th Mr. Burdick died very suddenly in the hospital. The regiment was again paid off on the 25th of this month.

From the 27th of February to March 2d the regiment was out on a reconnoissance. From the latter date until May 4th it remained in camp. On the 2d of April the paymaster again made his appearance. On the 18th there was a grand corps review by Gens. Grant, Meade, and Sedgwick. During the latter part of April various games of ball (wicket, base-ball, etc.) were indulged in, one company being generally matched against another.

On the 4th of May the whole Army of the Potomac broke camp and began the great forward movement under a new and at length successful leader.

The 10th was hotly engaged in the battle of May 5th, the initial conflict of the terrible "Wilderness" battles, and lost 115 killed and wounded, being about one-third of the whole. Among the killed was Lieut. Ashley, of West Springfield, and among the wounded were Lieuts. Eaton and Midgley, the latter mortally.

During the next day's fighting the 10th was in the reserve line, and suffered very little. Capt. Shurtleff was severely wounded in the arm. After two days' severe fighting, Gen. Lee became convinced that new tactics had been adopted by the Army of the Potomac, and that he could no longer maintain his position against Gen. Grant's tremendous assaults. He accordingly abandoned his advanced line, and retired behind his heavy intrenchments.

The 10th was slightly engaged on the 8th, losing 1 killed and 8 wounded. During the night of the 8th, Gen. Lee succeeded in taking up a very strong position across Gen. Grant's line of march, and here he held the national army at bay for the space of twelve days. On the 9th, Gen. John Sedgwick fell near the right of the 10th. Gen. H. G. Wright succeeded him in command of the 6th Army Corps.

During the battle of Spottsylvania, on the 10th, about 900 prisoners were captured by Gens. Russell and Upton's brigades of the 6th Corps. The total losses of the 10th from the 5th to the 11th of May were 17 killed and 94 wounded.

On the 12th of May occurred some of the most terrible fighting of the war. Under cover of a dense fog, in the gray light of the early morn, Gen. Hancock, by direction of Gen. Grant, suddenly penetrated the left centre of the Confederate army, and captured their works and about 30 guns, together with 2 generals and 3000 men, who were immediately sent to the rear by Hancock with the laconic dispatch, "I have captured from thirty to forty guns; I have finished up Johnson, and am going into Early." The charge cut the rebel army in two, and Lee himself narrowly escaped capture.

But though this success was highly satisfactory, it did not demoralize the rebel general or his army, and preparations were immediately made by him to recover the lost ground, at whatever cost.

In the mean time the brigade to which the 10th was attached was placed inside the captured works, and here for twenty-three consecutive hours they withstood one continuous assault and sustained a most terrific fire. As evidence of the truth of these statements, it is said that two years after the battle "full one-half of the trees of the wood, at a point where the fiercest struggle ensued within the salient of the Confederate works, were dead, and nearly all the others were scarred from the effects of musket-balls."^{*}

A large oak-tree, twenty-one inches in diameter, was cut in two by musket-balls alone.*

A section of this tree is preserved at Washington.

The small battalion of the 10th lost in this battle 11 killed, 44 wounded, and 6 missing and prisoners. Among the killed or mortally wounded were Maj. Parker, Capt. Weatherell, Lieut. A. E. Munyan, and Sergts. James H. Abbott and Charles W. Thompson.

On the 17th the 10th Massachusetts and 3d Vermont Regiments made a reconnoissance in the direction of Spottsylvania Court-House to discover the position of the enemy's infantry line, which was successfully accomplished, the command driving the rebel cavalry before it for a distance of five miles.

On the 18th was fought the battle of Spottsylvania Court-House, in which the 10th took a prominent part, and suffered correspondingly. The losses were 3 killed, 6 wounded, and 12 taken prisoners. Among the killed were Lieut. E. B. Bartlett and Sergt. Paull.

From the 18th of May until the 3d of June the regiment was moving toward the James River, foraging and skirmishing by the way. On the 3d of June occurred one of the bloodiest affairs of the whole war, the assault upon the rebel lines at Cold Harbor. The 10th was in the supporting line, and consequently suffered less than those in front. The loss was 1 killed and 4 wounded. Four men were also wounded on the 1st inst. On the 4th the regiment lost 1 man killed and 1 wounded. On the 6th, James Cormick, of Co. A, was killed.

On the 16th of June the regiment crossed the James River, and, marching all night and the next day, reached the vicinity of Petersburg at nightfall. On the 18th the 10th was engaged in an attack which carried the enemy's line in front, in which it had 7 men wounded.

On the evening of the 19th the regiment was relieved, and ordered to the rear.

During the 20th, while awaiting orders to return home, the rebels opened a battery of 20-pounder guns upon the command, by which Sergt.-Maj. George F. Polley was instantly killed.†

* The compiler recollects, during the investment of Atlanta, Ga., by Sherman's army, seeing a black-walnut tree, about two feet in diameter, nearly cut off by musketry-fire.

† A day or two preceding his death Sergt. Polley carved out the following inscription upon a board similar to those placed at the head of soldiers' graves: "Sergt.-Maj. George F. Polley, 10th Mass. Vols., killed June , 1864." He remarked, "I guess I'll leave the date blank." Afterward, by advice of his comrades, he split up the board to kindle fires with.

An exact fac-simile of this was placed at his grave. He had been commissioned first lieutenant, but the commission did not reach the command until after his death.

The poor fellow was buried on the 21st at City Point, and the regiment embarked for home on the 22d.

It arrived in Springfield on the 25th, where it was tendered, on behalf of the people of Western Massachusetts, a most enthusiastic reception. The streets were decorated with banners and inscriptions, and every window and balcony was crowded with faces. Salutes were fired, church bells rung, and citizens, societies, and orders turned out to do it honor. The regiment numbered 220 men in the grand procession which graced the occasion.

The procession marched to Court Square, where Mayor Alexander welcomed the remnant of the gallant band which had left the city three years before, 1000 strong, in a most appropriate speech, which was responded to by Col. J. B. Parsons on behalf of the regiment, after which the men partook of a grand collation.

On the 1st of July the field and staff officers and five companies were mustered out by Lieut. Arnold, of the 18th U. S. Infantry, and on the 6th the remaining companies. On the 18th the regiment was paid off at Springfield.

CHAPTER XXX.

EIGHTEENTH, TWENTIETH, AND TWENTY-FIRST REGIMENTS.

EIGHTEENTH REGIMENT.

THIS regiment was raised mostly in the counties of Norfolk, Bristol, and Plymouth, and was mustered into the service Aug. 27, 1861. A portion of Co. K was from Springfield and Chicopee.

The commander, Col. James Barnes, and the surgeon, David P. Smith, were also from Springfield. Col. Barnes was promoted to command of the brigade July 14, 1862.

The regiment left the State under orders for Washington, D. C., Aug. 28, 1861, and on the 3d of September was ordered to cross the Potomac and report to Gen. Fitz-John Porter.

It participated in Gen. McClellan's Richmond campaign, was engaged in many of the bloody battles of the advance and retreat, and was present at the second battle of Bull Run or Manassas, Aug. 30, 1862, where its loss was equal to fifty-two per cent. of the number engaged.

The regiment was present at the battles of Antietam and Fredericksburg, in the latter action losing again very heavily. In May following (1863) it took part in the disastrous battle of Chancellorsville, and in July following was on the field of Gettysburg.

In the great campaign of 1864, under Gen. Grant, it bore a conspicuous part and gallantly sustained the honor of its State. In July it was reduced to a battalion by the expiration of the term of service of a portion of the regiment, which was ordered to Washington. The battalion left in the field was in September consolidated with the 32d Massachusetts Regiment, and mustered out upon expiration of its term of service. The 32d Regiment was one of three to which was awarded a splendid outfit, furnished by Americans in Europe, for the three best-disciplined regiments at that time in the Union army.

TWENTIETH REGIMENT.

The 20th Regiment was first stationed on the upper Potomac as a portion of Gen. F. W. Lander's brigade of Gen. Stone's division. It was engaged in the unfortunate affair at Ball's Bluff, where it lost 208 men, killed, wounded, and missing.

During the following winter the regiment was on picket duty on the Potomac. In May, 1862, the brigade, under Gen. Dana, marched to the assistance of Gen. Banks in the Shenandoah Valley, but on reaching Berryville was ordered back to Harper's Ferry. On the 25th it returned to Washington, and on the 27th of May embarked for Fortress Monroe, Va.

The regiment was engaged throughout the Richmond campaign of 1862, and took part in the actions at Yorktown, West Point, Fair Oaks, Allen's Farm, Savage Station, White Oak Swamp, and Nelson's Farm.

After the retreat to Harrison's Landing it was transferred with the army to Northern Virginia, and thence to Maryland, and on the 17th of September it took part in the severe battle of Antietam, where its loss was 137 men.

Again, at the disastrous battle of Fredericksburg the regiment was warmly engaged and lost heavily; during the following winter it was encamped at Falmouth.

In the grand campaign of Gettysburg it took an important part, and in the dreadful battles of July 2d and 3d, out of a total of 230 officers and men engaged, lost 110. It was in the pursuit of Lee toward and into Virginia, and at Kelly's Ford, on the 25th of August, received 183 recruits. On the 12th and 13th of October it was engaged with the enemy at Catlett's and Bristow Stations.

In October and November the regiment was skirmishing with the rebels under Ewell, and on the 5th of December went into winter quarters at Stevensburg.

While in this camp about two-thirds of the old members of the regiment re-enlisted for three years.

On the 3d of May, 1864, it moved forward into the terrible campaign of the Wilderness, and thence "on to Richmond," and arrived at Petersburg, twenty-three miles beyond the Confederate capital, on the 15th of June.

It was hotly engaged with the enemy on the 20th, 21st, and 22d of June, and on the latter date its services were of vast importance in checking a formidable assault.

The term of its original enlistment expired on the 18th of July, 1864, and those who had not re-enlisted were sent to Boston, where they were mustered out of service. The veterans and recruits were consolidated into seven companies and incorporated with the 15th Massachusetts, which made up a total of ten companies.

On the 12th of August it was engaged in the action at Deep Bottom, where it met with considerable loss, Maj. Patten being among those mortally wounded.

On the 23d of the same month it was in the severe engagement at Reams' Station, on the Weldon Railway, where the entire number of men present, excepting ten, was either killed or captured.

On the 11th of September, Capt. Magnitzky arrived at the front and took command of the remnant of the regiment, now consolidated into one company of 70 men. Subsequently, upon the arrival of convalescents from hospital, it was organized into three companies, and employed in fatigue duty upon the fortifications until the latter part of October, when it was moved down the left of the line and encountered the enemy at Hatcher's Run. Advancing on the Boynton Plank-Road, it again encountered the enemy. On the 30th of November the battalion went into camp near Fort Emory.

On the 5th of February, 1865, it participated in the second movement across Hatcher's Run, and on the 29th of March began its march in the final campaign against Gen. Lee, participating in all the operations which culminated in the surrender of the rebel army on the 9th of May, 1865.

The regiment took part in the grand review at Washington on the 23d of May, and was mustered out of service on the 28th of July, after serving three years and ten days.

TWENTY-FIRST REGIMENT.

This regiment had a considerable number of men from Hampden County scattered through its ranks, though there was no single company wholly from the county.

The regiment was organized at Camp Lincoln, Worcester, which place it left on the 23d of August, 1861, numbering 1004 men.

Its first campaign in the field was in connection with the Burnside expedition against Roanoke Island. The regiment was commanded by Lieut.-Col. Albert Maggi. It left Annapolis, Md., on the 6th of January, 1862, and passed a stormy and disagreeable month on board the steamer "Northerner," off Cape Hatteras, N. C.

It disembarked on the 7th of February, and was conspicuously engaged, capturing a rebel battery and a stand of colors in a steady charge with the bayonet.

On the 4th of March following Maj. Clark was promoted to the lieutenant-colonelcy in place of Lieut.-Col. Maggi, resigned, and took the command.

In the battle of Newbern it was hotly engaged, and again captured a battery in a magnificent bayonet charge, for which gallant action it was commended by Gen. Burnside and presented with one of the guns captured from the enemy. The gallant Lieut. F. A. Stearns fell in this engagement.

The regiment left Newbern on the 17th of April, and, marching via Elizabeth City, took part in the spirited affair at Camden on the 19th, and thus celebrated the first blood shed in the Rebellion by a victory.

In May the regiment made a forced march to Pollocksville, and rescued the 2d Maryland (Union) Regiment from imminent danger of capture.

On the 9th of July it went into camp at Newport News, near Fortress Monroe, and from thence, on the 2d of August, proceeded, via Aquia Creek, to Fredericksburg, where it encamped for a short season.

The command took part in the campaign of Gen. Pope, and was present and warmly engaged at the second battle of Bull Run. It was also engaged at the battle of Chantilly, where its losses aggregated 150 men, killed, wounded, and captured. In this battle the brave and accomplished Gen. Kearney fell near the battle-line of the 21st. Col. Clark was very near being captured, but finally came into the Union lines, after wandering in the woods until the fourth day succeeding the battle.

The 21st was hotly engaged at the battle of South Mountain, Sept. 15, 1862, where another valuable Union officer, Gen. Reno, was killed in the moment of victory. It was also present at the great battle of Antietam, fought on the 17th of the same month, by which the rebel commander was compelled to withdraw once more within the Virginia fortifications.

In the fatal attack upon the enemy's lines at Fredericksburg, in December following, the 21st bore an honorable part, and lost 69 men. The regiment was stationed at Falmouth, where it performed picket duty, until the 10th of January, 1863, when it was transferred to Newport News, and thence, in March, to the State of Kentucky. It was engaged in picket and scouting duty in various parts of East Tennessee from July to the middle of November, when it was moved toward Knoxville, where Gen. Burnside was besieged by a strong force under the rebel Gen. Longstreet. After sharp fighting and much weary marching, the 21st succeeded in reaching Knoxville on the 17th of November.

During the siege it was actively engaged, and bore a conspicuous part in the action of the 24th of November, when, in connection with another picked regiment, it forced the enemy from his positions in North Knoxville and occupied his works.

Upon the advance of Sherman's column from Chattanooga for the relief of Burnside, Longstreet hastily broke up his camps and retreated into Virginia, and during the pursuit the 21st was actively engaged, and shared all the dangers and privations of that remarkable period.

On the 29th of December the regiment, with the exception of twenty-four men, re-enlisted for the war. On the 8th of January, 1864, it started home on "veteran furlough," and on its arrival at Worcester was accorded a most enthusiastic reception.

Upon the expiration of its furlough it rejoined the Army of the Potomac, and was assigned to the first division of the 9th Corps, under Gen. Stevenson. In the famous movement of Gen. Grant's army upon Richmond it bore its full share of the murderous conflicts of the "Wilderness," Spottsylvania Court-House, and Cold Harbor, losing many men and officers. On the 16th of June it was transferred to the lines in front of Petersburg, where it immediately became fiercely engaged with the enemy, taking part in the desperate assault which followed the explosion of the mine under the rebel works on the 3d of July, where its losses were severe.

On the 18th of August the military authorities decided it was not a veteran regiment, because, of the three-fourths who had re-enlisted, 56 men, for various reasons, had been rejected. The organization was ordered to be broken up, and the officers and non-re-enlisted men were ordered home to be mustered out of service.

On the 19th of August the remnant left behind was engaged, and lost several men, among them Capt. Sampson, Sergt. May, and private Murphy. Those remaining were soon after consolidated with the 36th Massachusetts Regiment. Capt. Clark was mortally wounded at Petersburg, but lived long enough to reach his home.

CHAPTER XXXI.

TWENTY-SEVENTH REGIMENT.

THIS regiment was raised in the four western counties of the State,—principally in the three river-counties. Horace C. Lee, of Springfield, was its first Colonel; Luke Lyman, of Northampton, Lieutenant-Colonel; Wm. M. Brown, of Adams, Major; Geo. A. Otis, of Springfield, Surgeon; Miles Sanford, of Adams, Chaplain; Geo. W. Bartlett, of Greenfield, Adjutant; and William H. Tyler (2d), of Adams, Quartermaster.

The regiment was mustered into the United States service at Springfield, Mass., Sept. 20, 1861. It was known as the 2d Western Regiment, and its officers were from the militia regiments of the State.

It left the State on the 2d of November, 1861, and arrived by sea at Annapolis, Md., on the 5th of the same month. At this point it remained until the 6th of January, 1862, employed in perfecting its drill and in learning the duties of camp-life.

On the last-mentioned date the regiment embarked on transports and proceeded to Fortress Monroe, where it arrived on the 11th. At this place two men—Michael Cavanaugh, of Co. F, and James M. Hamblin, of Co. E—were drowned by the upsetting of a boat, which was run down by a steam-tug.

The 27th formed a part of the Burnside expedition, and left Fortress Monroe on the 12th of January and arrived at Hatteras Inlet, N. C., on the 13th. Here the expedition remained, on account of severe weather, until the 6th of February, when the fleet proceeded to Pamlico Sound, and arrived in sight of Roanoke Island the same evening.*

On the evening of the 7th, after a heavy bombardment by the gunboats, the land forces, of which the 27th formed a part, were landed on the island, where they bivouacked in an open field in a drenching rain.

On the following morning, February 8th, the troops were formed, and advanced to the attack of the enemy's intrenchments. The approach was through almost impenetrable thickets and miry swamps; but nothing could check the ardor of the men, and the enemy's right and left were turned after a sharp encounter, and the place soon surrendered. In this its first engagement the 27th lost 5 men killed and 15

* This island is famous as having been the site of an English settlement in 1585, twenty-two years before the settlement at Jamestown, Va. It was, however, soon after abandoned.

Photo. by Hardie & Schadee.

Luke Lyman

LUKE LYMAN, son of Horace and Electa Lyman, is a descendant of one of the oldest and most prominent families of the historic town of Northampton.

He was born in Northampton, Nov. 1, 1824. His education was obtained at the public schools in his native town, which have ever been considered among the best in the State. He was reared as an agriculturist, and continued in that honorable vocation until 1856, when he was elected to the important office of register of insolvency, since which period his time has been occupied in the discharge of the duties of the various official positions to which he has been called by his fellow-citizens.

Gen. Lyman has ever been active in the political arena, and has been a Republican from the organization of that party. He has been chosen to various offices within the gift of his fellow-townsmen, and brought to the discharge of his duties a sound judgment and a ripe knowledge of men and events. As mentioned above, he was elected register of insolvency in 1856, and in 1858 register of probate and insolvency, and has held the office continuously since. In addition to this he has held the office of selectman, assessor, overseer of the poor, water commissioner, clerk of that board, director in the Massachusetts Central Railroad, director in Hampshire County National Bank, engineer of fire department, and various other offices.

In military matters Gen. Lyman has ever manifested a lively interest, and in the old militia held the various ranks from private to captain.

Upon the breaking out of the Rebellion he promptly and patriotically stepped to the front, and in the first outburst of Northern patriotism, in April, 1861, he organized a company for the service, but, the call being filled, the company was not accepted. On the 15th of September, 1861, he was commissioned lieutenant-colonel of the 27th Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, and remained in the service until June, 1863.

The gallant 27th saw severe service, and Col. Lyman was ever found sharing the fortunes of the regiment, whether on long, tedious marches, or in front of rebel bullets. He accompanied the memorable Burnside expedition, and participated in the following engagements: Roanoke Island, Newbern, Kingston, Goldsboro', Gum Swamp, Whitehall, and the siege of Washington, N. C. He was a brave and gallant officer, and was commissioned brevet-colonel for brave and meritorious conduct at the siege of Washington, N. C. His conduct attracted the attention of the commanding officers, and he was commissioned brevet brigadier-general for meritorious conduct during the war.

Upon leaving the field, in 1863, he returned to Northampton, and was appointed by Gov. Andrew superintendent of recruiting for Hampshire County, and is now a member of the "Military Order of the Loyal League of Massachusetts."

In all matters concerning the welfare of his native town and county, Gen. Lyman has ever been found aiding in both time and money. He is also prominent in Masonic circles, and is the present eminent commander of the Northampton Commandery of Knights Templar. In religious matters he is a Congregationalist, and is a member of the first parish.

wounded. On the 11th it went on board the transports, where it remained for about a month in very crowded and uncomfortable quarters. Many were taken sick in consequence, and on the 12th of February Capt. Henry A. Hubbard, of Co. A, died.

On the 11th of March following the troops left Roanoke Island, and, landing on the coast on the 13th, marched toward Newbern, N. C. On the morning of the 14th the enemy was encountered, well posted in a strong position near Newbern, and immediately attacked by the 27th Regiment, which pushed forward and maintained the fight until its ammunition became exhausted, when it was withdrawn and replaced by another regiment. In this affair it suffered a loss of 15 killed and 78 wounded. The result compelled the retreat of the enemy, who was rapidly followed up by the Union force to the vicinity of the city, which was found abandoned and on fire in several places. The 27th crossed the river Trent in boats, the great bridge having been fired by the retreating rebels, and went into camp in the abandoned camp of the 7th North Carolina Regiment, about a half-mile from the city, where it found good quarters and abundant supplies. Here it remained about six weeks.

The month of May was passed at Batchelder's Creek, about eight miles from Newbern. On the 1st of June the regiment returned to its first camp, near the city, where it remained until the latter part of July, under command of Lieut.-Col. Lyman, Col. Lee being in command of a brigade.

While lying at this place the regiment made a reconnaissance to Trenton to ascertain the force and positions of the enemy. A body of cavalry was met and dispersed, and, finding no fortifications, the force returned to Newbern after an absence of three days.

On the 9th of September three companies of the regiment were ordered to Washington, N. C., and five companies to Newport barracks, the two remaining companies having been left some time previously at Batchelder's Creek. On the 30th of November the regiment, with the exception of the two last-named companies, was ordered to join the expedition to Williamston and Hamilton.

The 27th also formed a part of the expedition to Goldsboro', N. C. The brigade to which it was attached consisted, besides the 27th, of the 3d, 4th, 5th, 25th, and 45th Massachusetts Regiments, all under command of Col. Lee, of the 27th.

The brigade left Newbern on the 11th of December, occupying the position of rear-guard with the baggage-train. At nightfall the troops encamped on the Trenton road. On the 12th the march was over terribly swampy roads, which were continually growing worse. On the 13th, about noon, the command arrived within a short distance of Kinston, where the enemy were driven in by the advance. Here they encamped for the night. Two days' rations and twenty rounds of ammunition were served to each man. On the 14th the brigade moved up the road, leaving the 5th Regiment to guard the baggage, and soon encountered the enemy, who retreated. The 27th reached Kinston, where it encamped for the night. On the 15th it marched all day, and encamped about eight o'clock in the evening. On the 16th the enemy was encountered at Whitehall, when sharp firing ensued, and the 27th was ordered toward Goldsboro', and the following night encamped eight miles below that town. On the 17th the movement was resumed, and at eleven o'clock the command came in sight of the Wilmington Railroad. Here ensued considerable fighting, in which the 27th behaved finely. The object of the expedition being accomplished, the regiment returned to Newbern.

The command remained in camp near Newbern from this time until the 4th of January, 1863, when it was ordered to Washington, N. C., which place it reached by water on the 5th.

On the 27th of January two companies, G and H, were sent, under command of Maj. Bartholomew, to Plymouth, N. C., where they arrived on the 28th, and Maj. Bartholomew assumed command of the fort at that place. Here they remained, doing garrison duty until the 8th of May, when they were ordered to Newbern. During their stay at Plymouth they performed considerable scouting duty on and around Albemarle Sound. Upon the attack of the post at Winfield, on the Chowan River, Co. H and three companies of the 25th Massachusetts were sent to its aid. The enemy hastily retreated and were pursued, and Co. H, having the advance, soon came up with them, and had a sharp encounter with a portion of the 42d North Carolina Regiment, in which the company lost two men killed and one wounded.

Everything remained quiet at Washington until the 30th of March, when the enemy appeared before the place, his advance driving in the pickets, and, his whole force being brought up, the place was regularly invested. Gen. Foster, being on a visit to the place, took command of the garrison. The enemy's batteries were completed, and fire was opened on the 3d of April, and the siege was pressed with great vigor for the next ten or twelve days. The weather was cold and stormy, but the men behaved admirably, whether under fire or running the blockade for supplies.

The rebels were in superior force and succeeded in cutting off all supplies, and rations began to be short, but, a short time after, the steamer "Escort" passed their batteries, with food and ammunition and the 5th Rhode Island Regiment on board, when the enemy, despairing of success, abandoned the siege, and retired to Kinston on the 16th.

On the 24th of the same month the 27th returned to Newbern. On the 27th, in the midst of a heavy rain, it started for Batchelder's Creek. On the 28th the enemy were unexpectedly encountered behind strong works, but were driven from them with the loss of forty men. The regiment lost one man, wounded. The command reached Newbern on the 30th.

On the 20th of May, in company with the 58th Pennsylvania Regiment, the 27th went on an expedition against the enemy at Gum Swamp. The command endeavored to gain the enemy's rear, and marched for fourteen hours, cutting their way through a dense, swampy undergrowth, and at length reached the rebel rear, where an immediate attack was made upon them, Cos. D and I following the opening-fire with a furious charge. The enemy were completely routed, with the loss of 170 men taken prisoners, one piece of artillery, and several ammunition-wagons. But they soon rallied, and in turn attacked the Union force, which retreated on Newbern, where a skirmish ensued, in which Col. Jones, the leader of the expedition, was killed.

From June until December the regiment was doing duty as provost-guard, and supported the cavalry in the Warsaw and Rocky Mountain raids; afterward joined Gen. Hickman's brigade at Newport News, Va., and was on duty at Norfolk and Portsmouth. During its stay at these points, up to the 22d of December, 1863, 200 of the men re-enlisted as veterans, and these went home on furlough; 194 recruits also joined the command. During the year 1863 the regiment had been in command of Lieut.-Col. Lyman and Maj. Bartholomew, Col. Lee being in command of a brigade.

On the 5th of March, 1864, the regiment took part in an expedition to Magnolia Springs. On the 22d it was relieved of provost duty by the 4th Rhode Island Regiment, and went into camp near Julien's Creek, Va., with the exception of Co. F, which was left at Norfolk until April 15, and a detail of 50 men who were on duty as prison-guard during the summer.

April 12th the regiment was engaged in an expedition beyond Suffolk, being gone three days and returning in a furious snow-storm. While stationed at Getty's, Lieut.-Col. Bartholomew had command of the regiment, Col. Lee commanding a brigade. On the 26th of April, under marching orders, the 27th went on board the steamer "Escort," which had relieved them a year before when besieged at Little Washington, N. C. The steamer proceeded to Yorktown, Va., where the troops landed and encamped until the 4th of May. From this point the knapsacks and surplus baggage were sent to Portsmouth, Va., for safe-keeping.

At Yorktown the regiment was assigned to Gen. Hickman's brigade, composed of the 23d, 25th, and 27th Massachusetts Regiments and the 9th New Jersey Regiment, and constituting the 1st Brigade, 2d Division, 18th Army Corps, Army of the James. Here Col. Lee again resumed command of the regiment. On the 1st of May it embarked on board the steamer "Wenonah," and, in company with a large fleet, sailed down the York and up the James River to Bermuda Hundred, where the troops landed on the 5th and encamped. On the morning of the 6th, Hickman's brigade took the advance and marched to Cobb's Plantation, six miles, driving in the enemy's pickets on the way. At four P.M. of the same day Hickman's brigade, with a section of the 4th United States Battery, was sent out by Maj.-Gen. W. F. Smith, commanding 18th Corps, on a reconnaissance to Port Walthall, three miles away. The 27th had the advance, Co. H, under Capt. Sanford, being deployed as skirmishers. The column rapidly advanced, the skirmishers on both sides keeping up a brisk fire. At a place called Mary Dunn's Farm the enemy were formed in line of battle behind a fence near the railroad. The troops were immediately deployed in line, and moved on the enemy. The 27th was soon briskly engaged, the other regiments forming a supporting line, and the firing was kept up until nearly nightfall, when the command was withdrawn in good order, the orders being not to bring on a general engagement. The enemy's loss was stated by themselves at 200 killed and wounded, among whom were three field-officers. The loss in the 27th amounted to 1 man—Sergt. G. S. Mantor—killed and 15 wounded, including 1 mortally. The enemy did not pursue.

On the 7th the brigade was sent, accompanied by the same guns, to make a feint on Port Walthall, while Brooke's Division of the 18th Corps advanced to the railroad at another point, flanking the enemy and tearing up the track. The enemy were driven toward Petersburg, and several miles of the railroad and telegraph were destroyed. Five men were slightly wounded in the 27th. The heat was excessive, and there were about 150 cases of sunstroke reported in the brigade.

On the 9th of May the advance on Petersburg was resumed by the whole force, and the enemy were encountered in strong force near Arrowfield Church. Their skirmishers and batteries opened briskly, and the Union line of battle was quickly formed, with the 27th on the right and the 25th on the left, supported by the 9th New Jersey and 25th Massachusetts. A section of the 4th U. S. Battery was in position on the road, but was soon after disabled by the heavy fire of the enemy and forced to retire. This elated the enemy, and they immediately formed for a charge, their commander telling them that our forces were a lot of Massachusetts militia whom they could easily disperse. The rebel regiments which made the charge were the 11th, 23d, 25th, and 27th South Carolina, and, curiously enough, they were opposed by three Massachusetts regiments bearing the same numbers as the three last named,—Massachusetts against South Carolina. They came rushing forward with that peculiar yell so well known by the "boys in blue," four lines deep, and with such impetuosity that they reached within fifteen or twenty yards of the Union line before they were checked by the terrible fire poured upon them. Very few of them ever got back to their lines. When they were within fifty yards the 25th and 27th Massachusetts Regiments, on the flanks of the line, opened at right and left oblique a most deadly fire, literally piling up the dead and wounded. At the same time a portion of the 27th Massachusetts and 9th New Jersey Regiments made a counter-charge, and the enemy were soon driven behind their works beyond Swift Creek. The casualties in the 27th were Lieut. Pliny Wood, of Co. F, mortally wounded, 4 enlisted men killed and 31 wounded.

The battle closed at dark, and the brigade remained on the ground through the night, which was cold and disagreeable. At ten o'clock on the following morning, when expecting orders to move on Petersburg, the troops were ordered to withdraw to their intrenchments.

Orders were received to move on Richmond at daylight on the 12th of May, and the brigade advanced slowly in line of battle, "en échelon." Skirmishing continued through the day, and the 27th had four men wounded. The two succeeding nights were cold and rainy, and the men were exceedingly uncomfortable, being without blankets or overcoats, but there was very little complaining. During the 13th the brigade moved slowly in line of battle and without casualties. On the 14th the advance continued, and the line came in sight of the fortifications at Drury's Bluff at nine A.M. The outer line of works was quickly taken and the enemy driven within his inner defenses. The rebel batteries were silenced by sharpshooters. The casualties in the 27th on this day were 14 men wounded.

On the 15th there was sharp skirmishing all day, and the regiment lost 9 men wounded. During the 13th, 14th, and 15th the regiment expended 80,000 cartridges in skirmishing. On the last-mentioned day the troops commenced to throw up a defensive line, using shovels, bayonets, plates, tin cups, and anything they could possibly make use of, in the absence of sufficient intrenching tools. During the night of the 15th the 27th constructed a temporary breastwork of logs, rails, and dirt along their front, which was on an old road, and in the edge of a belt of timber about one hundred and fifty yards in width, beyond and in front of which was an open field running up to the main works of the enemy on the James River, at Drury's Bluff. In rear of the line was another open field of smaller dimensions. Co. D, which was on picket, was attacked several times during the night, and the enemy could be heard massing troops in front. Gen. Beauregard had arrived with heavy reinforcements, and was preparing for an overwhelming attack upon the exposed portions of the Union line.

At daylight, under cover of a dense fog, the enemy made a sudden and furious attack on the line with both musketry and artillery. The pickets had not time to rally, but the line of battle was ready, and opened on them with a rapid discharge of musketry. There was no artillery on the portion of the line occupied by the 27th. At three different times the enemy made desperate attempts to carry the line by an attack in front, but the troops held the ground for an hour, and repulsed the rebels with severe loss. At length they drew back, and there was a temporary lull in the firing. At this time the ammunition of the 27th was nearly exhausted, and a supply was ordered. Suddenly a volley of musketry was poured in from the rear. At first it was supposed that reinforcements coming up had mistaken friends for foes, but a glance at the long line of gray uniforms soon undeceived them. They were the enemy, closed en masse in rear of the line. A portion of the regiment faced about and fired into them, but another force, pressing in front, rendered resistance useless, and the colonel gave the order, "Left face, run!" A portion of the three left companies escaped, but nearly all of the remainder were captured.

This surprise was caused by the giving way of two regiments on the right of the 27th, in spite of all Gen. Hickman's efforts to hold his line until reinforcements arrived. The general sent Lieut. Wheeler, an aid, to notify Col. Lee that the right was withdrawn and to order a change of front in the 27th, but the lieutenant was mortally wounded while endeavoring to execute the order, and the message did not reach Col. Lee. Gen. Hickman, getting impatient at the continued absence of Lieut. Wheeler, started to attend to the matter himself, and was captured.

The casualties in the 27th were: killed, Capt. Charles D.

Sanford, a brave and accomplished officer and a promising young man, and 5 enlisted men; wounded, 1 lieutenant and 29 men; prisoners, 9 officers, including the colonel and lieutenant-colonel, and 243 enlisted men. The remaining portions of the regiment, after disengaging themselves from the swamps through which they were compelled to pass, were finally rallied under Capt. Moore, senior officer present, and were under fire during the greater part of the day. The disasters of the morning were partially redeemed, and the enemy were compelled to retire. The troops fell back to their camps at eleven P.M.

The following extract from a letter of Gen. G. Wietzell to Gen. W. F. Smith will throw considerable additional light on this affair. It is dated May 29, 1864:

"MY DEAR GENERAL,—Have just received full files of Richmond papers from 16th to 28th by flag of truce boat. Full details of our fight, with list of killed and wounded, and list of officers captured from us. The force that attacked my division was six brigades of infantry and one unattached regiment of infantry, and three batteries of artillery, all under Maj.-Gen. Ransom. His entire loss was 3000, by official list. Two brigadiers (Ransom and Cove) wounded. Several high officers killed. They have about 500 of my men prisoners. Gen. Hickman sends word that Gilmore could easily have gone in. They speak of the wire as a devilish contrivance which none but a Yankee could devise. Information pretty authentic that the bulk of Beauregard's force left us day before yesterday to join Lee. In haste, yours,

"G. WIETZELL.

"TO MAJ.-GEN. W. F. SMITH.

"J. W. HOLMES,

(Official copy.)

"Adj't. 27th Mass. Volunteer Infantry."

The surrender of the regiment occurred at about 6.30 A.M., and the prisoners were taken immediately to Richmond, where the officers were incarcerated in Libby prison and the enlisted men in a building on the opposite side of the street. Here they remained about two weeks, when the prisons were ordered cleared, and the officers were sent to Macon, Ga., and the men to Andersonville stockade. From the time the officers left Richmond until they reached Macon was about ten days. The enlisted men were subsequently shifted about and considerably scattered between Florence, Charleston, Mellen, etc. Over one hundred died while prisoners.

Col. Lee and Lieut.-Col. Bartholomew remained only about a week at Macon, when they were ordered to Charleston, to be placed under the fire of the Union batteries. These two were exchanged on the 2d day of August, 1864, and returned to the regiment, where the lieutenant-colonel remained until his subsequent capture. Col. Lee was mustered out, as elsewhere stated, in October following.

The seven remaining officers were removed from Macon to Charleston, and subsequently to Columbia, S. C., where two of them, Capts. J. H. Nutting and P. McManus, escaped and rejoined the Union army. The remaining five were held prisoners until the close of the war. None of the captured officers died while prisoners.

Following the Drury's Bluff affair the brigade was reorganized, the 55th Pennsylvania Regiment being added to it, and Brig.-Gen. Stannard was assigned the command. The command of the 27th devolved on Maj. William A. Walker. The troops were engaged in picket duty until the 28th of May, when (on the next day, 29th) they were embarked on a steamer, and proceeded with the 18th Army Corps to White House, on the Pamunkey River, which was reached on the 30th.

On the 31st the troops moved with five days' rations toward Cold Harbor, and the next day joined the Army of the Potomac. Cos. F and H of the 27th were sent on the skirmish-line, where they remained until ten P.M. of the 2d of June, and had two men wounded. The other companies were sent to Devens' brigade, of the 6th Corps, and were on picket during the night. On the morning of the 2d these companies were moved by the right flank, and, passing under a heavy fire, had 4 men killed and 12 wounded.

On the 3d of June occurred the disastrous assault upon the rebel works at Cold Harbor. The 27th was deployed as skirmishers for the brigade, and in the charge which followed suffered severely. The casualties were: officers killed, 3,—Major William A. Walker (commanding regiment), Capt. E. R. Wilcox (of Gen. Stannard's staff), and Lieut. Morse; officers wounded, 4,—Capt. Caswell (slight), Lieuts. McKay, Newall, and Harrington; enlisted men killed, 10; wounded, 54.

Capt. Caswell, being the senior officer, now took the command, and the regiment remained in the trenches until the evening of the 12th of June. During this period it was constantly under fire, and Lieut. Coombs (commissioned, but not mustered) was killed, and Lieut. F. C. Wright, of Northampton, mortally wounded. Five enlisted men were also wounded, and seven taken prisoners.

On the night of the 12th the regiment marched to White House Landing, arriving at five A.M. on the 13th. The distance was twenty-one miles, and the dust and stench from dead horses, killed in Sheridan's cavalry fight two weeks before, were almost intolerable.

On the 13th, Capt. Caswell was relieved, and Capt. Moore took command of the regiment. Here it embarked on the transport "Claymont," and landed at Point of Rocks, on the Appomattox River, on the evening of the 14th. On the 15th the command crossed the Appomattox and advanced slowly toward Petersburg, driving the enemy's pickets before it toward their main force, about one and a half miles from the city. At four P.M. the enemy's outer line of works was carried with slight loss. The work of the day had been exhausting, the line having to push through thickets and swampy ground under a heavy fire of shot and shell. The 27th lost 11 enlisted men, severely wounded. During the 16th and 17th the regiment was in reserve, though under fire most of the time.

On the 18th of June a general advance was ordered, and one line of rifle-pits was carried and an assault made on the second line in front of Petersburg. The first assaulting line was formed of Col. Steadman's brigade, and the 27th was in the second line supporting. The advance was terrific and the slaughter almost unparalleled, Gen. Stannard remarking that he had never witnessed so severe a fire in any of the forty battles in which he had been engaged. Steadman's brigade was repulsed, but Stannard's advanced gallantly to its support and helped to establish the line within fifty yards of the enemy. The loss of the 27th in this affair was 3 officers wounded, leaving one lieutenant alone remaining, 10 enlisted men killed, and 32 wounded,—nearly fifty per cent. of the total number of men engaged.

Soon after this battle a number of officers were ordered back to the regiment from detached service, and during the two succeeding months Capts. McKay, Bailey, Caswell, and Bartlett and Lieuts. W. H. H. Briggs and W. C. Hunt rejoined the regiment and successively had the command. Immediately after the affair in front of Petersburg the command devolved upon Lieut. E. M. Jillson, the only commissioned officer remaining unhurt after the battle was over. The regiment remained in the trenches in front of Petersburg until August 24th, and was under fire every alternate two days during that period. Two men were killed and 8 wounded during the time by the enemy's sharpshooters.

On the 24th of August the 18th Corps was relieved by the 10th Corps, and the 27th went back to Gen. Butler's lines, between the Appomattox and James Rivers, where for the first time the men found themselves on friendly terms with the enemy's pickets (of Longstreet's Corps), and not exposed to danger from picket firing. Gen. Butler's good-will toward Hickman's brigade procured an order for the four original regiments to be transferred and sent to their old field in North Carolina. The 27th left the army on the 17th of September on the transport "Convoy." Col. Lee had been exchanged in August, and, meeting the regiment at Norfolk, obtained an order from Gen. Butler to retain all the men whose term of service expired before Oct 1. Capt. McKay and Lieut. Holmes were detailed to take command of this detachment (179 men), and proceeded to Springfield, Mass., where they were mustered out on the 27th of September, 1864. Col. Lee's term of service expired on the 20th of September, but he was not mustered out until some time in October.

On the 19th of September that portion of the regiment still in the field sailed for Beaufort, N. C., on the steamer "United States." The regiment went into camp near Carolina City on the 21st, and, having no tents, built themselves log huts. The regiment was commanded by Maj. Moore from September 17th to November 21st, when Lieut.-Col. Bartholomew, who had been under fire with Col. Lee at Charleston, S. C., having been exchanged, arrived and took command.

On the 28th of November the regiment broke camp and proceeded to Beaufort, under orders from Col. McChesney, commanding sub-district. Here they were engaged on picket duty until the 4th of December, when they were ordered to Newbern, and embarked on the steamer "Massasoit."

On the 7th of December they landed at Plymouth, where they were assigned to a command under Col. Jonas Frankle, 2d Massachusetts Artillery.

December 9th the command moved out at five A.M., and soon encountered the enemy's scouts near Jamestown. Capt. Graham's company of North Carolina (Union) cavalry charged them, and they fell back to Foster's Mills. Here they made a stand and attempted to prevent a crossing of the stream. The 27th was sent forward and secured the bridge, and the enemy soon fled, pursued by Graham's cavalry. That night the force encamped at Williamstown and remained until the 12th, when an advance was made to Hamilton; the enemy's pickets were encountered three miles from this place. At Spring Church the force was divided. The 27th Massachusetts and 9th New Jersey, under Col. J. E. Stewart, of the latter regiment, were ordered to execute a flank movement and gain the rear of the enemy's works at Butler's Bridge. The movement was an entire success, and the rebels were taken so completely by surprise that Col. Hinton, of North Carolina, commanding the post, took the Union force for a Confederate reinforcement, and was only disabused of the belief when Lieut.-Col. Bartholomew grasped the bridle-rein of his horse and informed him that he was a prisoner.

The command returned to Plymouth on the 15th, the 27th acting as rear-guard on the return. The loss during this movement was 1 killed and 2 wounded.

On the 8th of January, 1865, the regiment was ordered to Newbern, which place it reached on the 11th. Six companies were stationed at Rocky Run, under command of Lieut.-Col. Bartholomew, and the other four companies at Red House, under Capt. McKay.

Early in March the regiment was brigaded with the 15th Connecticut, to form the 2d Brigade, 2d Division of the District of Beaufort, under command of Col. Upham, and ordered to report to Gen. Cox, at Cove Creek, where it arrived on the afternoon of March 4th.

From this point, on the 6th, the command of Gen. Cox made the movement which resulted so disastrously. At nightfall the troops had made only eight miles, to Gum Swamp. On the 7th the 27th marched from Gum Swamp to Southwest Creek, where the enemy were found strongly entrenched behind the creek. Skirmishing ensued, and during the night the Union skirmish-line was advanced within seventy-five yards of the creek, and rifle-pits were thrown up. The brigade numbered about 1000 men, and was at this time two miles in advance of supports.

On the morning of the 8th information was received that the enemy were making a movement on the left, and upon this Col. Bartholomew faced to the left and formed his command at right angles with the 15th Connecticut, who were also ordered to face in the same direction, but when found by Adj. Holmes, of the 27th, who carried the order, they were lying on their faces and fronting away from the enemy, and seemingly bewildered as to what should be done. Subsequently, during the enemy's attack, they partially faced to the left, and fired directly into the ranks of the 27th.

There was a company of cavalry attached to this command, under Lieut. Fish, and they had two small howitzers, which the lieutenant placed in position and served splendidly until resistance was useless, when the gallant fellow limbered up and, charging directly through the enemy, escaped with his men and guns.

The enemy occupied the thick underbrush, from whence they poured in an incessant and heavy fire. By a sudden charge they forced the 27th back upon the 15th Connecticut, but the two regiments kept their ground for nearly an hour, when they broke and endeavored to escape, but, as the enemy had entirely surrounded them, very few succeeded. The 27th had one hundred and seventy-eight muskets at the beginning of the fight, and only one man succeeded in making his escape.*

While trying to rally his men Col. Bartholomew was struck through the leg and fell, and at his request Adj. Holmes remained with him. The adjutant had just succeeded in binding a handkerchief around the wounded limb and getting the colonel into a comfortable position beside a tree, when a rebel officer of Gen. Hoke's staff rode up, and, dismounting, snatched the handkerchief from the wounded officer, and, taking the overcoats, blankets, boots, and what money he could find from both men, rode away. They were soon taken to Kingston, where the colonel's wound was dressed, and from thence were removed to Goldsboro' the next day, where Col. B. was placed in hospital, with other wounded Union men, and three surgeons were left to attend them, who for a whole day paid no attention to them whatever, until Adj. Holmes reported the matter to a superior officer, who speedily ordered them to attend to their duties.

To Surg. Mathers, of the 28th Georgia Regiment, Col. Bartholomew was indebted for the saving of his limb after a council of surgeons had decided to amputate it. Adj. Holmes was permitted to remain with the colonel for a short time, when, with the remaining officers, he was sent to Weldon, where the officers occupied a church for two days, in the midst of a cold rain-storm, upon a promise that they would respect it. The wounded men were left in hospital at Goldsboro'. The able-bodied enlisted men were marched to Richmond, and the officers were taken from Weldon on the top of box-cars and placed in Libby prison.

A few days after this affair Gen. Sherman's army occupied Goldsboro' on their way north. While in Libby prison the officers purchased their own provisions, and consequently lived quite comfortably. Before the final campaign of 1865 began the officers were taken to City Point, and from thence went home on parole. The enlisted men were also paroled, and returned to Massachusetts. Subsequently they were taken to Annapolis, Md., and regularly exchanged.

Col. Bartholomew eventually recovered from his wound, though still crippled, and is at present living at Tampa, Fla. Both he and Adj. Holmes speak in the highest terms of Surg. Mathers, who was unremitting in his attentions to the Union wounded men; and, as a mark of gratitude for the saving of his limb, the colonel presented him with his gold watch-chain, which he had concealed when captured.

The rebel force engaged in this affair was Gen. Hoke's entire division, numbering, according to their own accounts, 8000 men. Their loss was not known. It was one of the last expiring struggles of the war. The battle of Bentonville occurred on the 19th of the same month.

The following statement exhibits the casualties in the regi-

* The loss of the 27th on the field in this affair was 14 killed and 48 wounded, including, among the latter, Col. Bartholomew and four other officers.

ment during the war, not including those who died in rebel hands, who probably numbered over 100 additional:

Commissioned Officers.—Killed, 6; died of wounds, 2; taken prisoners, 9;* wounded, 12; died of disease, 3.

Enlisted Men.—Killed, 70; died of wounds, 47;† died of disease, 128;‡ wounded, 272; died of disease while prisoners, (about) 250; taken prisoners, 430; deserters to Dec. 31, 1864, 51.

The following are the names of the commissioned officers who were killed or died of wounds and disease:

Capt. Henry A. Hubbard, Feb. 12, 1862, died of disease.

Lieut. Joseph W. Lawton, March 14, 1862, killed, Newbern.

Lieut. Cyrus W. Goodale, Oct. 30, 1862, died of disease.

Lieut. Edw. D. Lee, April 17, 1864, died of disease.

Capt. Charles D. Sanford, May 16, 1864, killed, Drury's Bluff.

Lieut. Pliny Wood, May 31, 1864, died of wounds.

Lieut. Edgar H. Coombs, June 1, 1864, killed, Cold Harbor.

Capt. Ed. D. Wilcox, June 3, 1864, killed, Cold Harbor.

Lieut. Saml. Morse, June 3, 1864, killed, Cold Harbor.

Maj. Wm. A. Walker, June 3, 1864, killed, Cold Harbor.

Lieut. Fred. C. Wright, June 27, 1864, died of wounds.

Asst.-Surg. Franklin L. Hunt, Nov. 18, 1864, killed.

CHAPTER XXXII.

THIRTY-FIRST, THIRTY-FOURTH, THIRTY-SEVENTH, AND FORTY-SIXTH REGIMENTS.

THIRTY-FIRST REGIMENT.

THIS regiment was raised in the western part of the State and designated the "Western Bay State Regiment." Co. E was mostly from Hampden County, and there were quite a number of Hampden men in Co. K.

On the 19th of February, 1862, marching orders were received, and on the 21st it left Boston, and reached Fortress Monroe on the 22d, when, taking on board Gen. Butler and staff, it proceeded to Ship Island, in the Mexican Gulf, where, after encountering considerable stormy weather, it arrived on the 20th of March. Here it remained until the 18th of April, when it sailed for New Orleans.

The regiment witnessed the bombardment of Forts Jackson and St. Philip, and the wonderful naval victory of Admiral Farragut over the powerful rebel fleet which contested the passage of the river with stubborn but unavailing bravery.

On the first day of May, 1862, the city surrendered, or rather was taken possession of by the army and navy, the 31st Massachusetts Infantry being the first regiment to land on the levee, and to it was assigned the duty of dispersing the noisy crowd of traitors who thronged the river-front of the city, and of escorting the commanding general to his headquarters.

The regiment was at first quartered in the United States Custom-House; but in August the command was divided, and part, under Col. Gooding, stationed in Forts Jackson and St. Philip, part, under Lieut.-Col. Welden, at Fort Pike, and part assigned to picket duty in the city.

In January, 1863, the detachments were united, and on the 10th of February, under command of Lieut.-Col. Hopkins, the regiment took part in the Plaquemine Bayou expedition.

In March the division to which the 31st was attached was assigned to the army destined to invest Port Hudson.

On the 13th of April the regiment was hotly engaged at Fort Bisland, under Gen. Emory. It was present during the siege of Port Hudson, and was prominently engaged in the battles of May 25th and 27th and June 14th. Soon after the surrender of this stronghold, which occurred on the 8th of July, 1863, it was ordered to Baton Rouge, when it was assigned to the 2d Brigade, 1st Division, of the 19th Army Corps. On the 9th of September the three companies which had been on detached service at Fort Pike returned to the regiment.

On the 9th of December the regiment reported to Gen. Lee at New Orleans, and on the 19th was ordered to be mounted as cavalry, and was furnished with cavalry arms, sabres, and revolvers. It was for a time known as the 6th Massachusetts Cavalry.

It was subsequently brigaded with the 3d Massachusetts, the 2d Illinois, and the 2d New Hampshire cavalry regiments, which formed the 4th Cavalry Brigade, commanded by Col. Dudley, of the 30th Massachusetts.

The brigade was in the celebrated but disastrous Red River expedition under Gen. Banks, and participated in the desperate battles of Sabine Cross-Roads, April 8th, and Pleasant Hill, on the 9th and 10th. Upon the retreat of the army the 31st acted as train-guard until the army reached Grand Ecore.

Grand Ecore was evacuated on the 21st of April, and on the 23d occurred the battle of Cane River, in which the 31st led the advance, capturing a number of Texas cavalry. At Hudnot's Plantation, seventeen miles from Alexandria, a sharp action was fought, in which the 31st again distinguished itself and captured more prisoners. In the retreat from this point the regiment acted as rear-guard, and had numerous skirmishes with the enemy.

On the 3d of July the regiment encamped on its old ground of two years before, opposite New Orleans, where it remained until the 21st, when it started via the Mississippi and Cairo, on veteran furlough, on the steamer "Pauline Carroll." It arrived at Boston on the 4th of August and remained until the 8th of September, when it left Pittsfield for New York, from which port it sailed on the 9th, and landed at New Orleans on the 19th, of the same month. It was at this time restored to its original organization as infantry. A few days subsequently it again, by order of Gen. Canby, reported to the chief of cavalry to be re-mounted.

On the 19th of November the three years' term of service of Cos. A, B, C, and D expired, and they were mustered out of the service. The regiment was then consolidated into a battalion of five companies. At the close of the year 1864 it was the only Massachusetts regiment remaining in the Department of the Gulf.

From this time until the beginning of February the battalion was engaged in the arduous duty of guarding and protecting a large district of country on the right bank of the Mississippi, and had several collisions with scouting-parties of the enemy.

On the 8th of February the regiment was brigaded with three others, and the whole assembled at Carrollton preparatory to a march upon Mobile. The advance commenced on the 19th of March, and the regiment performed various duties during the siege of that important place. The forts were captured on the 8th and 9th of April, and on the 4th of May the regiment formed the escort of Gen. Granger, to whom Gen. Dick Taylor surrendered on that day. The regiment was finally discharged on the 30th of September, 1865.

THIRTY-FOURTH REGIMENT.‡

This regiment was raised principally in Worcester County. Cos. D and G were largely from Hampden County. It left the State on the 15th of August, 1862, with full ranks, and proceeded to Washington, D. C., when it was ordered to Camp Casey, on Arlington Heights.

On the 2d of August the regiment was assigned to Gen. Banks' corps, and marched to Alexandria, Va., near which it

* Not including those taken at the Gum Swamp affair.

† This is only up to Jan. 1, 1865, and does not include those who died in the service or in rebel prisons.

‡ Three years.

performed picket duty during Gen. Pope's retreat from Manassas, and in addition furnished a provost-guard for Alexandria.

From the 15th of September, 1862, to May, 1863, it was stationed at Fort Lyon, one of the defenses of Washington. In June the regiment, together with the brigade to which it had been assigned (the 1st of Naglee's division), marched to Harper's Ferry and took possession, capturing a number of prisoners. It was for some time employed in that vicinity on picket duty. On the 18th of October the Confederate Gen. Imboden surprised and captured a portion of the force at Charlestown, West Va. Imboden was, however, beaten off by the brigade with considerable loss.

The regiment took part in the valley expedition under the command of Gen. Averill, who made a successful raid upon the Virginia and Tennessee Railway. In this movement the 34th extricated itself from a perilous situation in a masterly manner, under Col. Wells. On the return from the raid the infantry marched over the one hundred miles between Harpersburg and Harper's Ferry in less than four days.

From Dec. 24, 1863, to April 29, 1864, the regiment remained in the neighborhood of Harper's Ferry, employed in various duties. At the last-named date it left Martinsburg with the force of Gen. Franz Sigel, and advanced up the Shenandoah Valley as far as New Market, Va., where, on the 14th of May, it was heavily engaged with the enemy, and lost 28 men killed and 74 wounded, including 1 officer killed and 8 wounded.

At Piedmont, on the 5th of June, a severe action ensued, in which the 34th bore a conspicuous part, and the command captured 1000 prisoners. This battle was fought by Gen. Hunter.

On the 9th of June the regiment was transferred to the brigade commanded by Col. Wells, and on the 17th it reached Lynchburg, and laid in line of battle the following night. On the 18th a severe battle was fought, and during the remainder of the month it was constantly engaged in marching and skirmishing, and suffered considerably from lack of provisions. On the 19th of the month it took part in the desperate battle of Fisher's Hill, where the rebels were terribly beaten by the army under Gen. Sheridan.

On the 13th of October, in a severe action, Col. Wells was mortally wounded and taken prisoner, and died the same evening at Strasburg. The 34th was also engaged on the 11th. On the 19th it was ordered to Newtown, Va., where it rested for a month after a most arduous campaign, during which it had lost 7 officers and 73 men, killed or mortally wounded on the field.

On the 18th of December the regiment received marching orders, and, marching to Washington, embarked on board a steamer and proceeded to the James River and joined the Army of the James; was assigned to the 24th Corps, and went into camp on the extreme right of the Federal line.

On the 25th of March, 1865, the regiment moved toward Hatcher's Run and repulsed a sharp attack by the enemy on the 1st of April. On the 2d it was engaged in the terrible and successful assault upon Battery Gregg, a strong advanced work of the enemy, which was carried under a terrific fire, and the fort and its entire armament and garrison captured, with a loss to the 34th of 4 killed and 36 wounded.

This was the last fighting in which the regiment was engaged, and it was mustered out of the service on the 16th of June following.

The following is a list of officers belonging to the 34th Regiment who were killed or died during its term of service:

Col. Geo. D. Wells, Oct. 13, 1864, killed at Stiekney Farm, Va.

Maj. Harrison W. Pratt, Sept. 25, 1864, died of wounds.

Capt. George W. Thompson, Sept. 19, 1864, killed at Winchester, Va.

Capt. Wm. B. Bacon, May 15, 1864, killed.

Lieut. Samuel F. Woods, June 26, 1864, died of wounds.

Lieut. Albert C. Walker, Aug. 23, 1864, died of wounds.

Lieut. James Dempsey, Dec. 3, 1864, died of wounds.

Lieut. Malcolm Ammidown, Oct. 1, 1864, died in prison, Charleston, S. C.

Lieut. Charles I. Woods, Oct. 13, 1864, killed.

THIRTY-SEVENTH REGIMENT.

This regiment was mostly raised in the county of Berkshire, but Cos. A, D, L, and K were in good part from Hampden County. The regiment was recruited at Camp Briggs, Pittsfield, and left the State, Sept. 7, 1862, for Washington, when it was assigned to Gen. Briggs' brigade and went into a temporary camp below the Long Bridge, Va., and was subsequently, until November 13, engaged in various duties in Maryland and Virginia.

It was present under fire at the disastrous attack upon the rebel lines at Fredericksburg, in December, 1862, and subsequently took part in what was denominated the "mud campaign," in January, 1863.

In March a great amount of sickness occurred, and a new camp in a healthier location was laid out, when the men constructed a hundred and sixty comfortable log houses, or, as the boys were wont to call them, "chebangs," each twelve by seven feet, and five feet to the eaves, with a fireplace, and a floor of pine-poles or "puncheons." This work was completed in one week, and more than realized the expectations of the officers and surgeons.

On the 28th of April the spring campaign was opened, and the regiment crossed the Rappahannock and manœuvred until the 2d of May, when, making a night-march, they took position on the morning of the 3d in front of Fredericksburg Heights, also called Mary's Hill. In the course of the forenoon the position was gallantly carried, the enemy being routed at all points.

Pushing forward, the enemy were soon encountered in a strong position at Salem Heights.

The following paragraphs are from an account written by an officer of the regiment: "Renewing the attack, the first line of battle was severely repulsed, and thrown back in great disorder upon the second line, formed by our brigade, in which were three Massachusetts regiments. Nobly did they sustain upon that field the honor of the Old Bay State. Not a man faltered; freely they exposed their breasts to the leaden storm, and they who swarmed from the wood in assaulting columns, flushed with victory and yelling like demons, were thrown back into its sheltering cover, baffled, discomfited, defeated.

"At the beginning of their assault the 37th was in column by wing upon the extreme left of our line of battle, the right wing in part supporting two batteries.

"The enemy had come within fifty yards of the guns. At this point, by order of Maj.-Gen. Brooks, I sent Lieut.-Col. Montague with the left wing to check the assaulting column of the rebels, which, overlapping our line of battle, was endangering our left flank. Crossing a ravine, and moving by the flank under cover of a brush fence, they came within fifteen paces of the enemy's right without being perceived, and poured into them several deadly volleys, which threw them back in confusion to the shelter of the woods. The right wing having joined the left, and the 36th New York being added to the command, we held the enemy at bay on the extreme left of the front line during the night and the next day (May 4), during which time nearly the whole of Lee's army was engaged by the 6th Corps alone. After dark upon the evening of the 4th we fell back to Banks' Ford, and before daylight on the 5th safely recrossed the river.

"May 6th we returned to our old camp at Falmouth. June 6th we marched to Franklin's Crossing, and crossed over to the south bank June 10th. There we remained, threatening the enemy, till the 13th, when we recrossed the river and took

Dr. C. B. SMITH.

DR. CYRUS B. SMITH is a descendant in the eighth generation from Lieut. Samuel Smith, who, with his wife, sailed from England, April 30, 1634. They settled first in Wethersfield, Conn., and in 1660 removed to Hadley, Mass., where he died in 1680. He was a magistrate, and was prominent in town and church affairs.

The subsequent generations were as follows: 2d. Chileab. 3d. Ebenezer. 4th. Joho, who was a deacon in Granby, Mass. 5th. Nathan, also a deacon in the same town. The above generations were prominent owners of real-estate and leading men. 6th. Samuel, a deacon in Granby, Mass. 7th. Cyrus, the father of Dr. Smith, and after whom he was named. He was born in 1810, and died Aug. 13, 1849, in Huntington, Mass. He was a leading citizen in town affairs and active in support of the church.

His wife, and the mother of Dr. Smith, was Julia Ann Warner, born in 1810, in Williamsburg, Mass., where she at present resides. She was the daughter of Silas Warner, of Williamsburg, who was the son of Jonathan, one of the first settlers of the town, a wealthy landowner, and prominent in military and civil affairs.

The ancestral line of the Warner family can be traced back to the Waldenses or Huguenots, who emigrated to England, and settled in Wales, shortly after the Reformation. The original name was "Werner," but it is quite probable the "Warners" of this country generally can trace their genealogy back to this Welsh origin.

Dr. Cyrus Burnett Smith was born April 24, 1839, in South Hadley,

Mass. When he was two years old his father removed to West Springfield, Mass., and when he was six years old to Springfield, Mass., where he engaged in the mercantile business. The next year his father removed to Huntington, Mass. Three years later his father died, leaving his mother and four children. Mrs. Smith removed to Haydenville, Mass. There she carefully trained her family of four boys, all of whom are now men of standing and influence in their respective communities.

S. Warner Smith, the eldest son, lives in Haydenville, Mass., and also Lewis Finley Smith, the third son. Dr. Smith is the second son; the fourth is William W. Smith, who resides in Hartford, Conn.

Dr. Smith attended the public schools in the towns in which the family lived until his seventeenth year, partially supporting himself by his own labor. He also attended school in Hartford, Conn., and the high school in Northampton, Mass., and supplemented this education by private instructions in Latin, French, and in music.

Selecting the medical profession, he entered the office of Drs. D. & J. Thompson, of Northampton, Mass., and later read with Drs. Thompson & Chamberlain, of the same place. Diligently pursuing his studies, he supported himself (with some assistance from home) by teaching instrumental and vocal music.

After a few months he entered the office of Profs. T. & H. H. Childs, of Pittsfield, Mass. While there he attended the Berkshire Medical College, taking the full course, and graduated in November, 1859 the youngest member of his class, and was vice-president of the Alumni Association of the college. He commenced the practice of his profession at Indian Orchard (Springfield), Mass., where he remained until the spring of 1862, when he removed to Granby, Mass.

Photo. by Lewis.

At the time of his departure from Indian Orchard his friends presented him with a valuable horse. He practiced in Granby and Indian Orchard until July, 1862, when he was examined by the board of surgeons in Boston, and was commissioned by Gov. Andrew, July 31st, assistant surgeon of the 34th Massachusetts Infantry. When he left Granby for the army his friends in that town presented him with a beautiful and valuable sword. During his first two years of service he was with the regiment, and on hospital duty at Washington, D. C., and about Alexandria, Va., and filled various positions as operating surgeon. He was appointed post-surgeon, and also placed in charge of the hospital at Harper's Ferry, Va., and was subsequently promoted surgeon of the 11th Massachusetts Infantry, Army of the Potomac. He had charge of the 3d Division hospitals, Army of West Virginia, with Hunter, Sigel, and Sheridan, in West Virginia; after the battle of Winchester, Va., in charge of the Smith Hospital several months.

He subsequently had charge of the field hospital, and was operative surgeon in this army department. He was also, for a time, in charge of the general hospital. He was mustered out of the service in August, 1865, and returned to Granby, Mass., where he has since practiced his profession.

Dr. Smith has been a contributor to the medical journals of the day; has prepared valuable papers on the "Treatment of Asphyxia by Chloroform," which was published in the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal, and also an article on "Compatibility of Medicines," which was published in the Philadelphia Medical and Surgical Reporter. He was elected in 1878 president of the Hampshire District Medical Society, and re-elected in 1879, and is one of the councillors of the Massachusetts Medical Society.

Dr. Smith has well sustained the traditions of his ancestors by his active interest in all matters pertaining to the welfare of his town. He has been a member of the school committee for many years, and was a representative to the Legislature in 1872, serving also at the special session in the fall of that year.

Feb. 18, 1865, he married, in Haydenville, Mass., Mary Jane, daughter of Jerome and Triphena (Root) Halbert, of Pittsfield, Mass. She died July 31, 1868, in Granby, Mass.

He married a second time, Nov. 3, 1869,—Louise Jane, daughter of Christopher C. and Hannah (Leach) Aldrich, of Granby, Mass. Her father was a prominent woolen manufacturer, since retired from business, and residing in Granby. The children by this marriage are two,—Cyrus Aldrich, born Sept. 30, 1872, and Mary Louise, born Sept. 25, 1873.

JOSEPH KNIGHT TAYLOR.

JOSEPH KNIGHT TAYLOR was descended in the fourth generation from Ebenezer Taylor, who was one of the first settlers of Granby, Mass., and a noted Indian-fighter. His ancestors were among the early settlers of Hadley, Mass.

Levi, the son of Ebenezer, was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, entering the army at the age of sixteen. He was at West Point, and while there witnessed Arnold's flight down the river to the British man-of-war "Vulcan."

His descendants now living remember hearing the old gentleman narrate many anecdotes of the Revolution. Like the Spartan mother, who, when her son went out to battle, said, "Return with your shield or upon it," so Levi Taylor's mother said to him, when he left his home to enter the Continental army, "Levi, never let me hear of your being a coward."

Willard, the son of Levi, was for many years a deacon of the Congregational Church in Granby, Mass., where he died at the age of forty-eight years. His son, Frederick Taylor, Esq., the father of Joseph Knight Taylor, is a resident of Granby. His business is located in South Hadley, where he is engaged in the manufacture of paper.

The mother of Joseph K. Taylor was Sarah H., daughter of Rev. Joseph Knight, formerly pastor of the Congregational Church in Granby, Mass.

Joseph Knight Taylor, whose portrait appears upon this page, was born in Granby, Dec. 6, 1840. His preliminary education was obtained at Williston Seminary, Easthampton, Mass., entering Amherst College in 1861, where he remained about one year, when he enlisted in Co. F, 37th Massachusetts Infantry. The company was then under command of Capt. George L. Montague. He was promoted to first sergeant, and participated with his regiment in many of the battles of the Army of the Potomac.

Photo. by T. R. Lewis.

Jos. K. Taylor

On Aug. 21, 1864, he was wounded at Charleston, W. Va., where he rose from a sick-bed to accompany his comrades to battle. His wound, which was in the hip, was a severe one. The ball was extracted, and for a time hopes were entertained of his recovery; and he wrote two letters in a hopeful spirit to his father; but a relapse followed, and he died suddenly, nine days after the action, in the field hospital at Sandy Hook, Md. He was a brave and efficient soldier, and would, undoubtedly, have received a commission had he survived his wound.

Sergt. Taylor belonged to that large class of the promising young men of the country who, leaving their homes and friends, cheerfully took up arms in defense of the imperiled liberties of the nation, and, whether in the duties of the camp, on the weary march, or amidst the clash of arms, did thoroughly and well whatever duty was assigned them.

While his great-grandfather, Levi Taylor, fought to establish a nation, so, ninety years later, Sergt. Taylor fought and died to save it.

His remains lie in the cemetery of his native town, to which they were taken by his bereaved father. On his tombstone are these words:

"Sweet after battle is the tired soldier's rest."

up our line of march, whose northern limit was Gettysburg. Our corps protected the rear, crossing the Potomac at Edwards' Ferry, June 27, 1863.

"At four o'clock P.M. on July 2, 1863, we reached the battlefield of Gettysburg, after a forced march of thirty-four miles, marching from nine o'clock P.M., July 1st, without a halt even long enough to make coffee. Almost immediately upon our arrival we were ordered on the double-quick to the support of our left, then hotly engaged in repelling the attack of Longstreet's corps. The next day we were kept moving, much of the time at double-quick, from point to point of the line of battle. The heat was intense, and about 20 men fell in the ranks from sun-stroke.

"About three o'clock P.M., while marching from the right to the left centre, we passed through the most terrific shell-fire I ever witnessed, in the first two minutes losing 23 men killed and wounded. The steadiness of the men (exhibited in this, the severest test of the soldier, when he is obliged to receive blows with no chance to give) justly entitles them, beyond anything else, to the proud name of veterans. With no quickened step, with no confusion, straight through that feu d'enfer, they marched with a coolness, a steadiness, that deserves the highest praise."

The fighting of the 3d virtually ended the series of terrible conflicts which will go down to history as the battle of Gettysburg. Gen. Lee, satisfied that any attempt at a farther advance would end in irretrievable disaster, withdrew with his decimated battalions toward Virginia.

The Federal army followed the retreating enemy, and on the 19th of July the 6th Army Corps crossed the Potomac and advanced to Manassas Gap, where it took up a position near Warrenton, on the Sulphur Spring Road.

On the 30th of July the 37th was detailed by Gen. Sedgwick for service in putting down the draft rioters who were disgracing the American name in the city of New York.

Arriving at that place on the 2d of August, the regiment was ordered to Fort Hamilton, and on the night previous to the beginning of the draft it bivouacked on Washington parade-ground, with the exception of two companies, who were stationed in the building where the drawing was to take place. After serving on this duty for three days it was ordered back to Fort Hamilton.

On the 14th of October the regiment was ordered to report to Gen. Halleck, at Washington, and on the 17th it rejoined its old brigade at Chantilly, and followed up the retreating rebel army.

On the 7th of November it was present at the battle of Rappahannock Station, though not closely engaged. On the 2d of December the army fell back and went into camp near Brandy Station, where the regiment remained until the 29th of February, 1864, when it moved to one of its former camps near Madison Court-House. On the 24th of March it was transferred to the 4th Brigade, 2d Division, 6th Corps.

At the commencement of the Wilderness campaign, May 4, 1864, the regiment numbered 29 officers and 580 enlisted men present for duty. In the dreadful battles of the 5th and 6th of May the regiment was in the thickest of the fray and suffered severely, losing 150 men killed, wounded, and missing, among whom were Capts. J. L. Hayden and R. P. Lincoln, and Lieut. Chalmers.

On the 12th of May the regiment was again closely engaged, and captured a stand of colors from the enemy. From this date to the 2d of July it was constantly on duty in various directions, and on the 9th of July, along with the 6th Corps, it embarked for the defense of Washington against Gen. Early. At this time it numbered 17 officers and 308 men. Arriving at Washington, it was engaged in the affair at Fort Stevens on the 12th, where it lost 7 men, killed and wounded. On the 14th of July it was furnished with the Spencer repeating-rifle. August 21st it was engaged in skirmishing nearly the whole day and lost 17 men, killed and wounded.

On the 16th of September the veterans and recruits of the 7th and 10th Massachusetts Regiments were consolidated with the 37th, pursuant to Special Order No. 302, War Department. This added 73 men to its ranks.

On the 19th of September the regiment, now numbering 296 guns, crossed the Opequan Creek and encountered the enemy in an action which lasted until dark, when they were driven through Winchester. In this affair the colors of Stonewall Jackson's old regiment were taken from the enemy. The 37th was warmly commended for its services on this occasion.

The regiment was engaged in provost duty at Winchester until the 13th of December, when it was ordered to Washington, and thence to the 6th Corps, in front of Petersburg, where it was encamped until April, 1865, with two short interruptions. These were on the occasions of the affairs at Hatcher's Run and Dabb's Mills, on the 5th and 7th of February, and on the 25th of March, at the time the enemy captured Fort Stedman, in the opening of the campaign of 1865. It was ordered to the lines in front of the fort, but had only marched a part of the distance when it was announced that the fort had been re-taken and the enemy driven into his own lines.

On the 1st of April the 37th participated in the attack upon the rebel lines, and was the first regiment to enter Petersburg, which surrendered to Col. Edwards.

On the 6th, after a four days' march, it was present and engaged in the last battle of the war, at Amelia Court-House. The following account of the share taken by the 37th is from the official report:

"At noon we had made a march of twenty-five miles, double-quickening nearly eight miles of the way, and were confronting the enemy, with a deep stream between us. Our brigade was on the extreme right of the line, and the 37th occupied the left of the brigade. Rushing like an avalanche across Saylor's Creek, with the water up to our arm-pits, we dislodged the enemy from the opposite bank and drove them over the crest of the hill.

"Beyond the stream, for a quarter of a mile, we advanced through a thick growth of underbrush, fighting as we went. The firing waxed hotter and hotter, until suddenly we found, to our dismay, that the regiment on our right had given way and the brigade on our left had broken the connection and halted some distance back. We were lost to our friends. Our nearest neighbor was our foe. The rebels came pouring down upon us, and within a few seconds had attacked and enveloped both flanks of the regiment. A hand-to-hand conflict ensued. Many men were wounded with the bayonet, and pistol-shots were freely exchanged.

"Meanwhile, the Spencer rifle was working the havoc for which it was intended. All down the front of our regiment the gaps that our fire opened in the enemy's ranks were fearful. They had started to attack us massed in heavy columns; scattered fragments only reached us. They came, throwing down their guns, raising their hands, and imploring a cessation of the fire. After the battle more than 70 corpses were counted on the ground in our immediate front; and when we consider that the proportion of the slain to the disabled on the field of battle is usually only as 1 to 6, it will be seen that the carnage was terrific. Among the prisoners who fell into our hands was Maj.-Gen. Custis Lee, the son of the commander-in-chief of the rebel armies. We lost in this engagement 8 men killed and 31 wounded.

"Sergt. Bolton was a veteran, transferred to our regiment from the 10th Massachusetts Volunteers. He was one of the most perfect soldiers the regiment could boast; was always a courteous gentleman, and lion-hearted in battle. After passing unscathed through nearly four years of the battles of the Army of the Potomac, he fell in the very last engagement of the war, just as his comrades were rejoicing in the finale of their hard labors.

"Capt. Hopkins commanded the regiment in the engagements of the 2d and 6th of April, and received great praise for the skill with which he handled his command. He was twice brevetted for his gallantry in battle. After the battle of Saylor's Creek, we followed the track of Lee's army until it surrendered, on the 9th, near Appomattox Court-House."

On the 18th of May, 1865, the regiment began its homeward march. It was reviewed on the 15th of June in Washington, and left for Massachusetts on the 22d of the same month. It was finally mustered out and disbanded at Readville on the 1st of July. The following officers were killed or died in the service: Assist. Surg. J. J. Ellis, March 27, 1863, died of disease; Capt. Franklin W. Pease, May 14, 1864, died of wounds; Lieut. Charles S. Bardwell, Oct. 6, 1864, died at Winchester, Va.; Lieut. George E. Cook, May 12, 1864, died of wounds; Lieut. J. Follansbee, May 23, 1864, died in hospital.

FORTY-SIXTH INFANTRY.*

The 46th Regiment included five companies from Hampden County,—viz., A, B, C, D, and E,—besides individuals in other companies. It was mustered into service in September and October, 1862, and was assigned to the Department of North Carolina. It arrived at Newbern on the 15th of November, 1862, and was placed in the brigade commanded by Col. Horace C. Lee, of the 27th Massachusetts.

Soon after its arrival, and while encamped on the Neuse River, two of its companies, A and K, were detached and assigned to outpost duty at Newport barracks, of which post Capt. Spooner was placed in command. During the winter the regiment remained most of the time in camp, engaged in fatigue duties and in perfecting its drill and discipline. It took part in the Goldsboro' expedition in December, 1862, and January, 1863, and returned to its camp on the 23d of January.

The detached companies soon after rejoined the regiment, and its duties were continued, large details being made each day to work on the fortifications, until the 13th of March, when the enemy showed his columns in force in front of the place and evinced a determination to attempt its capture. A strong demonstration was made on the Trent road, and the 5th and 46th Massachusetts Regiments were assigned important positions in the defense. But, the enemy attacking on the north side of the Neuse River, Gen. Palmer, commanding the division to which these regiments belonged, withdrew his command inside the fortifications.

On the 14th of March the 46th was sent out on the Trent road to reinforce Col. Amory, but only had the satisfaction of following a retreating enemy during the three following days. From the date of its return to camp until March 26th it was engaged in its old duties. On the last-mentioned date, with the exception of two companies, the regiment was sent to Plymouth, N. C., a very important post, then heavily threatened by the rebels.

Under command of Col. Pickett, of the 25th Massachusetts Infantry, the whole land-force was employed in strengthening and completing the fortifications.

The town of Washington was besieged during eighteen days by the enemy, and all this time the force under Col. Pickett worked uninterruptedly within sound of the besiegers' guns, expecting every hour that their own turn would come. But the enemy at length withdrew from the contest, having been defeated in every attempt, and the garrison at Plymouth escaped unscathed.

On the 8th of May the regiment went into barracks on the Neuse River, where it was employed in the construction of fortifications during the remainder of its stay, with the exception of the period occupied in the expedition against the enemy's outposts at Dover Swamp, about eight miles from Kinston, which attack was eminently successful.

During the absence of the regiment at Plymouth, the detachment left at Newbern took an active part in the defense of that place against a second threatened attack. It was also employed upon outpost duty at Bachelder's Creek, where it served with the command of Col. Jones, commanding the line of outposts, and rendered gallant and efficient service in holding the position against a most determined attack made by the enemy on the 23d of May. In this severe encounter Col. Jones was killed, and in consequence of this deplorable event the detachment did not receive a just recognition of its services on the occasion.

Capt. Tift received most honorable mention in connection with this affair for great bravery and soldierly conduct in holding his position when the command of Col. Jones, demoralized for an instant by the fall of their leader, had fallen back. The brave captain valiantly held his post until discovered and relieved.

"The nine months' service, reckoning from the date of their muster into service, of five of the companies of the 46th Regiment expired on the 25th of June. It had been decided by the War Department that the term must be reckoned from the day of the muster in of the last, or tenth, company. This giving dissatisfaction on account of lengthening the terms of several other of the nine months' regiments, Gen. Foster issued a circular, leaving it to the option of the men to go home or remain. The 46th remained. Over 100 of the regiment re-enlisted, under command of Col. Frankle, who was recruiting at Newbern a regiment of heavy artillery," the 2d Massachusetts.

On the 23d of June the regiment reported to Gen. Halleck at Washington, D. C., for orders, and was assigned to Gen. Dix's command, which was preparing for a demonstration upon the rebel capital. Before reporting for duty, however, it was found that Gen. Dix did not desire the services of troops whose terms had so nearly expired; and, upon the proposition of Gen. Naglee, the nine months' regiments were ordered to report to Gen. Schenck at Baltimore, Md., where the 46th was assigned to duty in the brigade of Gen. Tyler, commanding the exterior defenses of that city. The brigade of nine months' men was stationed at "Camp Bradford," where it was employed in guard and patrol duty until the 6th of July, when it was ordered to occupy Maryland Heights, arriving there on the 7th of July. The brigade performed picket duty on the Sharpsburg road until July 11th, when it was sent to join the main Army of the Potomac.

It joined the 1st Corps, where it remained, momentarily expecting orders for active operations, until the day on which the Army of the Potomac crossed the river at Berlin, when orders were received for the brigade to proceed to Massachusetts for the purpose of being mustered out. On the 21st of July the 46th reached Springfield, and was mustered out of the service by Capt. Gardner.

The total losses of the 46th during its term of service were reported at 215 men, of whom 33 died of sickness.

CHAPTER XXXIII.†

FIFTY-SECOND REGIMENT.

THIS regiment‡ was recruited in the counties of Hampshire and Franklin in 1862, and served till August, 1863.

It was organized at Camp Miller, Greenfield, with the following officers: Colonel, H. S. Greenleaf; Lieutenant-Colonel, S. J. Storrs; Major, Henry Winn; Surgeon, F. A. Sawyer; Chaplain, J. F. Moors.

The regiment embarked for the Gulf of Mexico, on board the steamer "Illinois," on the 19th of November, 1862, and

† The greater, and by far the most interesting, portion of this chapter has been compiled from "The Color-Guard," by Rev. James K. Hosmer.

‡ Nine months.

* Nine months.

EDWIN C. CLARK.

EDWIN C. CLARK, son of Allen and Sophia Cook Clark, was born in Northampton, Oct. 23, 1826. Here he passed his boyhood, and was educated in the public schools. In 1849, when the "gold fever" swept over the land, he, like many other adventurous spirits, left for California, where he worked in the mines one year, and returned to Northampton. Here he remained one season, and then went to New York, and was with Beebe & Co. four years, at the expiration of which time he again returned to his native county, and located in Southampton. In this town he conducted the lumber business for four years, then returned to Northampton and engaged in the livery business, where he has since remained.

At the breaking out of the Rebellion he promptly—in April, 1861—enlisted in a rifle company; but the government declining to accept a single company, he, with others, recruited Company A, 27th Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, and was commissioned second lieutenant. His war record he may well be proud of.

He was in the Burnside expedition to North Carolina, and in the battles of Roanoke and Newbern. He resigned and came home in 1862. With others he enlisted a company, and was commissioned first lieutenant in the 52d Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers; was subsequently commissioned quartermaster, and went with the Banks expedition to Louisiana. He was at the recapture of Baton Rouge, went with the army into Western Louisiana, and was post quartermaster at Barry's Landing; was at the capture of Port Hudson, and with the first regiment that ascended the Mississippi River; and mustered out of the United States service in the fall of 1863.

Photo. by Hardie & Schadee.

Edwin C. Clark

Mr. Clark married Emily L. Hine, of Lee, Mass., in November, 1850. Their family consists of four children, viz.: Ida B., Edwin C., Jr., Mary A., and William H.

Politically, he is a Republican. He attends the Congregational Church. He has always taken an active interest in the welfare of his native town, and was a member of the fire department more than twenty-five years, serving several terms as engineer. He has been superintendent and treasurer of the Northampton Street Railway Company since December, 1877.

The ancestors of Mr. Clark were William, who came from England in 1630, and died in Northampton in 1691. John, born in 1651. Increase, born in 1684. Daniel, born in 1712. Solomon, born in 1744, and died in 1821. Allen, born in 1789, and died in 1849.

MARK H. SPAULDING.

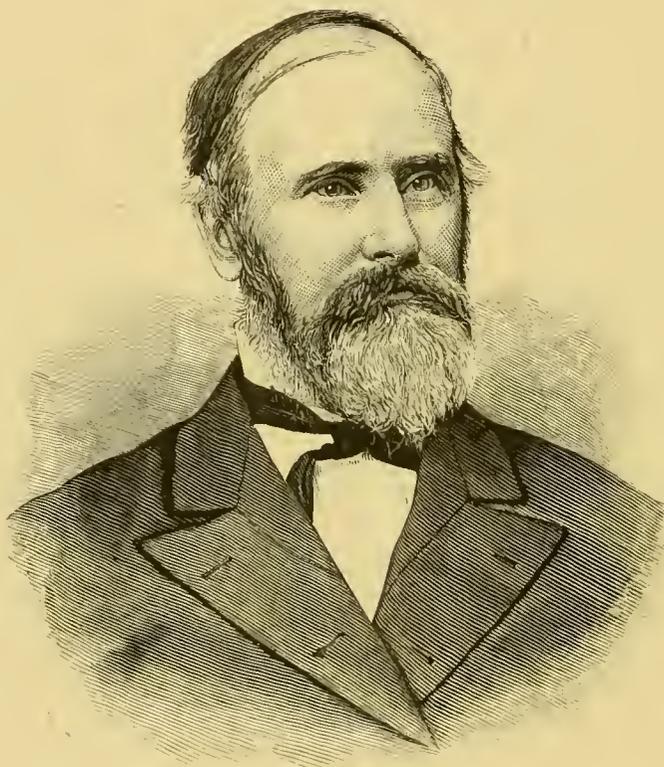

CAPT. MARK H. SPAULDING, son of Josiah and Fanny Hildreth Spaulding, was born in Townsend, Mass., March 20, 1827. His father was of the seventh generation by the name of Spaulding in this country, and descendant in a direct line of Edward Spaulding, who came to this country from England in 1630. The history of the Spaulding family is traced back to the time that Ethelbald began to reign in England, A.D. 716. The Spauldings were men of prominence in England and Scotland. The mother of Captain Spaulding was of the family of Hildreths, of Braintree.

Young Spaulding remained at home until fourteen years of age, during which time he attended the common schools. He was then apprenticed to a rope-maker, with whom he remained about one year, and then, as he facetiously expressed it, "I concluded that I should like the pulling of ropes better than making them, and went to sea." He experienced the ups and downs of seafaring life, and at the age of eighteen was second officer of a ship. He remained at sea many years, and traveled on salt water about four hundred thousand miles. He visited nearly all the cities and ports of Europe, the Mediterranean, ports of Africa, east and west coast of South America, nearly all the West India Islands, and nearly every port, city, and State in the United States.

In 1848 he shipped as first officer of a vessel from Savannah to San Francisco. Upon arriving at California, during the "gold fever" of 1849, he became what was known as one of the old "forty-niners" of that period, and continued mining and trading until 1856. While here he was a member of the constitutional convention that made California a State. In 1856 he left the gold coast for New England, and in November of the same year began the mercantile business in Northampton, in which he has continued to the present time.

At the breaking out of the late civil war he rallied to the defense of his imperiled country, and in April, 1861, enlisted in a rifle company. The government, however, refused to accept a single company, and he with others then organized Co. A, 27th Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, and he was commissioned 1st lieutenant. He saw active service, and was ever found in the line of duty. He was in the Burnside expedition to North Carolina; in the battles of Roanoke and Newbern. Was disabled by sciatic rheumatism soon after the battle of Newbern by hardship and exposure, resigned, came home, recovered during the summer, and enlisted a company; was commissioned captain in the 52d Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, and went with the "Banks expedition" to Louisiana, and participated in the second recapture of Baton Rouge. In the first expedition and demonstration on Port Hudson, Captain Spaulding had charge of the advance infantry picket line when the "Hartford" ran the batteries of Port Hudson, and was in the battles of Franklin, Vermilion Bayou, Opelousas, and the assault and final capture of Port Hudson. His was the first United States regiment that steamed the entire length of the Mississippi after the war commenced. At the close of an honored and active military career, Captain Spaulding was mustered out of the service in the autumn of 1863.

M. H. Spaulding

Politically, Captain Spaulding is a Republican, and has held many offices within the gift of his fellow-citizens, always discharging their duties in a satisfactory manner. He was elected collector and treasurer of Northampton in 1865, and held the office nine years; was elected to the Legislature in 1875 and 1876, and was also chairman of the board of selectmen in 1876.

He has always labored to advance the interests of Northampton, and was decidedly active in hunting down the incendiaries that lurked about, causing such great havoc in the village in 1867.

In 1856 he united in marriage with Sylvia Sanders, of Townsend, Mass., daughter of Ebenezer Sanders, of the eighth generation of that name who came from England about the year 1625. Their family consists of six children, viz.: Sylvia S., Marcia, Nellie B., Mary L., Josephine, and M. Harry. Sylvia S. was one of the fifteen in number that comprised the first class of the Smith Female College.

The travels by land and water of Captain Spaulding have been of a very interesting character. He was in Rome, Italy, in 1848, when the French held armed possession for Pope Pius IX., and was at Sacrificios, near Vera Cruz, when General Scott bombarded and captured the city of Vera Cruz, Mexico, and has been in every port on the Atlantic coast and Gulf of Mexico from Campeachy to Sidney, Cape Breton.

Captain Spaulding is now one of the active business-men of Northampton; is a hardware merchant. He has been connected with the first parish of Northampton twenty-one years.

arrived at New Orleans after a short and generally pleasant voyage. During the two succeeding months it was stationed at Baton Rouge.

On the 13th of March, 1863, it was sent on a reconnoissance toward Port Hudson, and made a bold advance to within range of the guns of the fortifications. Col. Greenleaf, in his report for the month, says, concerning this movement:

"Our reconnoissance to within about five hundred yards of the rebel batteries of Port Hudson we regard as an exceedingly hazardous one to ourselves, but it was, nevertheless, handsomely done, the regiment not only deporting itself to my entire satisfaction, but in such a manner as to call forth the congratulations of our brigade and division commanders."

On the 1st of April the regiment moved from Pancoult, on the Bayou Lafourche, to Cox's Plantation, thirteen miles; on the 2d, from Cox's to Thibodeaux, fifteen miles; on the 4th, by rail, to Bayou Bœuf, seventeen miles; on the 9th marched from Brashear City, ten miles; on the 11th took passage on the steamer "St. Mary," and landed, on the 13th, at Indian Bend, on Grand Lake, about thirty-five miles from Brashear City, and marched thence about three miles, during which there was skirmishing with the enemy, who was driven back. Grover's division encamped for the night on Madame Porter's plantation.

The battle of Indian Ridge was fought on the 14th, but the regiment did not participate in the action, the brigade to which it was attached being in reserve. On the 15th and 16th it marched to New Iberia in pursuit of the retreating enemy,—a distance of thirty-two miles.

Four companies were left at this point on provost duty, while the remainder of the regiment advanced to Barre's Landing, where it remained until the 21st of May, busily engaged in collecting and guarding negroes, cotton, corn, sugar, molasses, etc., and in loading and unloading steamers. The six companies of the 52d and Nims' battery were left in charge of the post, the remainder of Grover's division pushing on in the direction of Alexandria. By the 5th of the month there had been collected about 4000 negroes, mostly women and children, 4000 bales of cotton, considerable quantities of sugar and molasses, and 100 horses.

On the 12th inst. Col. Thomas E. Chickering arrived from Opelousas, and, by order of Gen. Banks, assumed command of the post. On the 19th the companies left at New Iberia (A, E, F, and G) rejoined the regiment, having marched as far as Brashear City, and thence coming by boat.

On the 21st of May the command began its return march to Brashear City, taking with it a supply-train and a large number of negroes. The force was commanded by Col. Joseph S. Morgan, of the 90th New York Infantry Volunteers.

On the 22d, after a steady march of two days, the expedition reached Bayou Têche,—a distance of thirty-six miles from Barre's Landing. On the 23d the force marched about eighteen miles, passing through St. Martinsville, and encamped about a mile above New Iberia. On the 24th it marched about fifteen miles, passing through New Iberia, and encamped in a fine grove of oak on the Bayou Têche.

On the 25th the command passed through Franklin and Centreville, near which it was suddenly attacked in the rear by what the commanding officer supposed to be the advance of a large force under the rebel Gen. Mouton. Here the 52d was sent back a distance of five miles to repel the enemy, who, however, retreated, and the troops resumed their march, continuing it through the night, and making a distance, in the course of twenty-four hours, of forty miles. Brashear City was reached a few hours later. From this latter point it went by rail to Algiers, and thence by steamer to Springfield Landing. From thence it marched to headquarters in front of Port Hudson, where it arrived at midnight on the 30th, after a very fatiguing march of twelve miles.

From the 5th to the 8th of June the regiment formed a portion of a column under Gen. Paine, which marched to Clinton and dispersed a body of the enemy.

On the 14th of June an assault was made upon Port Hudson, and the 52d was assigned a position in the line of battle, but was subsequently ordered to deploy toward the flank as skirmishers, to prevent a threatened attack by the enemy. It took up a position within easy range of the works, which it occupied until the 20th, when it was withdrawn and sent under Col. Greenleaf as part of an escort for a wagon-train to Jackson's Cross-Roads. While engaged in loading the wagons at the latter point it was vigorously attacked by a greatly superior force, which was gallantly repulsed with a loss to the enemy of 30 or 40 killed and wounded and a number taken prisoners. The regiment lost 2 men taken prisoners, and about 60 teams, which stampeded in the mêlée.

On the night of the 20th the command returned to its position in the besieging-lines before Port Hudson. Its loss during the month was 1 captain and 8 men killed, 12 wounded, and 2 taken prisoners; total, 23. The regiment arrived home on the 3d of August, and was mustered out of service Aug. 14, 1863. It returned via the Mississippi River, and was said to have been the first to ascend the river after the surrender of the rebel strongholds, Vicksburg and Port Hudson.*

The Rev. James K. Hosmer, who had very recently been settled as pastor of the First Congregational Church in Deerfield, was a volunteer in the 52d Regiment, and held the position of corporal in the color-guard. He kept a journal of his experiences and those of the regiment during his term of service, which was sent to his father's family, and others, in the form of letters, and at their request, on his return from the field, he revised the journal and consented to its publication under the title of "THE COLOR-GUARD," making a book of two hundred and forty-four pages. It is written in a scholarly, racy, and most interesting manner, and gives the reader the most graphic and vivid description of the life of a soldier of anything which we remember to have seen in connection with the great Rebellion. From the very beginning in the tent in Camp Miller, at Greenfield, to the close, it fixes the closest attention, detailing the thousand and one things pertaining to the life of the soldier with great faithfulness and a most life-like delineation, which bring before the mind the varied scenes, both grave and gay, that mark the bivouac, the march, the battlefield, and the hospital.

Aside from its value as a narrative of thrilling adventures, skirmishes, battles, sieges, it possesses rare literary merit,—seldom found in works of the kind. In perusing its pages the attentive reader lives over again the life on board the crowded ocean steamer, where the soldier is stowed away in the midst of a confused mass of munitions of war, batteries of shining guns, bales of hay, accoutrements, mules, and boxes of provisions; he hears the bugle-call and the roll of the drum; he sees the ghastly paraphernalia of the hospital; he stands guard with the weary sentinel amid the pelting storm; he lies down in the muddy cornfield at night; he hears the whistling musket-ball and the shriek of the monster shell, and trembles with the terrible sound of battle. He grows weary on the long and perilous march beneath a burning sun; he sees the brave line of "boys in blue," the glittering bayonets sweeping to the charge, and hears the shout of victory from myriad throats as the rebel rag comes down upon the smoking ramparts, and the "starry banner" flings out its wondrous folds upon the sulphureous air.

His descriptions of the terrible fever and the death of his brother, the orderly-sergeant of his company, are equal to the finest passages to be found in the language; while his recital of ludicrous and picturesque camp-scenes is true to the very life, vividly recalling the times "when we went soldiering."

* Portions of Gen. Grant's army at Vicksburg had been furloughed and sent up the river at an earlier date. It was probably the first regiment to ascend the river.

We make some interesting selections from this book :

"Our guns were issued to us the other day,—beautiful pieces of the most approved pattern,—the Springfield rifled musket of 1862. Mine is behind me now, dark, black-walnut stock, well oiled, so that the beauty of the wood is brought out; hollowed at the base and smoothly fitted with steel, to correspond exactly with the curve of the shoulder, against which I shall have to press it many a time. The spring of the lock, just stiff and just limber enough; the eagle and stamp of the Government pressed into the steel plate; barrel long and glistening,—bound into its bed by gleaming rings,—long and straight, and so bright that when I present arms and bring it before my face I can see nose and spectacles and the heavy beard on lip and chin, which already the camp is beginning to develop. Then the bayonet, straight and tapering, dazzling under a sun-ray, grooved delicately as if it were meant to illustrate a problem in conic sections, smooth to the finger as a surface of glass, and coming to a point sharp as a needle."

Of the ocean passage and life on the steamer he thus discourses: "I have been down the brass-plated staircase into the splendors of the commissioned officers' cabin,—really nothing great, after all, but luxurious as compared with our quarters, already greasy from rations and stained with tobacco-juice, and sumptuous beyond words as compared with the unplanned boards and tarry odors of the privates' quarters. Have I mentioned that now our places are assigned? The 'non-coms'—non-commissioned meaning, not non compos, though evil-minded 'high privates' declare that it might well mean that—have assigned to them an upper cabin, with state-rooms over the quarters of the officers, in the after-part of the ship. The privates are in front, on the lower deck, and in the hold. I promise in a day or two to play Virgil and conduct you through the dismal circles of this Malebolge. Now I speak of the cabin of the officers. The hatches are open above and below, to the upper deck and into the hold. Down the hatch goes a dirty stream of commissary stores, gun-carriages, rifled cannon, and pressed hay, within an inch or two of cut-glass, gilt mouldings, and mahogany. The third mate, with voice coarse and deep as the grating of ten-ton packages along the skids, orders this and that, or bays inarticulately in a growl at a shirking sailor.

"Five sergeants in our company, and two corporals of us, have a state-room together,—perhaps six feet by eight. Besides us, two officers' servants consider that they have a right here. Did any one say 'elbow-room'?"

... "The keel of the ship grates harshly upon the bottom. The captain jumps to the wheel, and it is about immediately, until land fades again, and it is once more 'one wide water all around us.' The sun sets gloriously behind this land of romance. A soft crimson haze hangs over it, and smokes up zenithward like rich fumes and vapor from old Ponce de Leon's fountain of youth. A splendor of cloud and light is thrown upon the west,—tall buttressed pillars glowing in the light as if the powers of the air had begun to paint there the proud escutcheon of the Spanish kings. In another moment I shall behold the crowned shield and the rampant lions; but it fades, and now to the eastward rises the moon. The sky to-night is vapory, with fine, clear lines of azure running through the vapor-like veins,—veins how blue and deep, as if filled with the blue blood of the true hidalgos of Old Castile!"

Approaching New Orleans:

"We go below for supper. When we return to the deck night has fallen, and in front we can just begin to see the lights of New Orleans. To the right of the city, in the heavens, glares a conflagration, red like a great light we saw on the night of our arrival at Ship Island, said then to be toward Mobile, and perhaps the signal-fire of the enemy. E. and I sit on the paddle-box watching the light,—the hostile city in chains and under our cannon. Now we are close upon it. At our side lies the 'North Star,' when plunge goes the anchor, with its rattling chain, in twenty-five fathoms water. All is mystery about us except that through the night the invisible city looks at us through its blinking lights,—eyes alone visible, like the wolf that Putnam followed into its cavern. The 'United States,' the 'Boardman,' and other vessels of the squadron come up. The fine band of the 41st, on the 'North Star,' play 'Twinkling stars are laughing, love,' and other pieces, to the delight of all the transports. One of our fellows offers to 'swap our band for yours,' which goes for a great joke aboard the 'Illinois,' we being rather lame in point of music,—a few drums and fifes, with a most limited répertoire of tunes. A certain creeper, the pest of camps from time immemorial, has made its appearance on the 'Illinois,' as was to be expected, and been the staple horror of the latter part of the voyage. Of course some one must yell out the inquiry if the 41st know anything about them. The answer comes pealing back across the water: 'We've got 'em with U. S. marked on their backs.' So the jokes go through the evening.

"I sit on deck beneath a June-like sun. A crowd have assembled on the levee,—in large part, of contrabands. Boys cry the papers with Gen. Butler's farewell. Behind me, in the river, lie the 'Hartford,' with Admiral Farragut on board, the 'Mississippi,' 'Pensacola,' and the smaller gunboats. In the distance, down the stream, lie two French war-ships, and the 'Rinaldo' flying the cross of St. George. Up-stream lies a steamer with the flag of Spain,—swarthy watchmen on the paddle-boxes, the space over the forencastle crowded with sailors of the same hue. There are but few merchant-ships, and little appearance of commercial bustle. Big artillery-men (artillery-men always look strong), Boston boys in red-trimmed jackets, wheel the light cannons aboard the ship. These shining pieces are no holiday affairs, that never go out of the arsenals except on Fourth of July or after an election, and then only to belch harmless discharges. Each one, on the average, has probably killed its score of men, and wounded perhaps two or three times as many. Smooth, elegant, polished, quiet, they stand on deck like elegant French swordsmen I have read of, who go with dainty rapiers, almost plaything-like, soft as silk, but dangerous as death.

"My first visit to the hospital put me face to face with its gloomiest spectacles. A mail had come, and it fell to me to distribute to the patients their letters. I had been giving letters to well men, had my own pocket full, was happy myself, and had come from among men happy as men ever are; for I have discovered the secret of happiness to be hidden in mail-bags. I rushed up the stairs leading to the second story of the building, the rooms of which are used as part of the hospital. Two or three doors were before me. I opened the first, and found myself alone in the presence of a corpse. It was the body of a man who had died the night before. He lay in full soldier's dress, decently-brushed coat with military buttons,—'his martial cloak around him,'—and with a white cloth covering the face. He was buried in the afternoon, the regiment, drawn up in a hollow square, solemnly silent while the service was performed, then standing reverently while the body and its escort with the muffled drum moved to the burial. I have heard of the 'wail' of the fife, but never made it real to myself until then, when across the parade-ground, down the street, then from the distance, came the notes of the 'Dead March.'

"In the next room to the one in which lay the corpse the floor was covered with pale, sick men. Now they have rough bedsteads,—'bunks,'—but then there was nothing but the mattress under them, and sometimes only the blankets. One or two attendants—as many as could be spared from the regiment—had the care of the whole, but they were far too few. One poor man was in a sad way with inflammatory rheumatism, which made it very painful for him to stir, and at the same time with dysentery, so that he required to be lifted every few minutes. Pale, forlorn men, away from friends, tended by nurses who have no special interest in them and are over-worked, crouching, wrapped up in blankets, over the fire, or stretched out on a floor. God pity the world if it has sights in it more melancholy than a military hospital!"

Approaching Port Hudson:

"Boom! go the far-away guns. We are moving rapidly to the front; so the other regiments and the stout batterymen and the yellow cavalymen give way for us, cheering us on. Down a cross-road toward the river a sweet south wind shaking white cloud-favors in heaven at us, the sun smiling God-speed, and the lady rose-bushes, from fence-corners like balconies, showing their blossom handkerchiefs.

"A sweet woodland by-road! We rush forward at double-quick. Ah, here is war indeed! a colonel on the general's staff, just wounded by the retreating rebel pickets, lying by the roadside. I catch a glimpse of him on an extemporized litter of rails as he lies under the surgeon's hands. We rush by, —tramp! tramp!—at the double-quick, and he pushes himself up a little with his hands, so that we can see his pale face, just wounded ahead here in the road where we are going.

"Cautiously, boys! A few steps, and we stumble over the handsome horse of the wounded colonel, dead in the middle of the road, with eight bullets in him. There, too, is the bloody boot of his rider, hastily cut off after the wounding was accomplished. A company are detailed as flankers, and as they go through the wood a few rods distant from the road they hear the groans of other wounded men. They cannot go to them, for to stop would be to expose the whole flank of the column to danger.

"Now we pass other dead horses belonging to cavalymen, which were shot in the road by the retreating rebel pickets. At length we reach a fork where is a regiment drawn up, and Gen. Glover sitting on horseback with his staff,—a light-haired man, with face sufficiently resolute, his beard cut in a peak, and wearing a cavalier-hat. We halt only for a moment. The general's pointing hand indicates the direction we are to take; so down we go through a wooded road, driving before us the enemy's pickets, our flankers in the wood seeing them mount their horses and gallop off as we come within musket-range. Presently we go by their camps, where they have cut on trees some defiance or warning to us: 'Beware, Yankee! This is a hard road to travel.'

"By the side of the column rides an officer of engineers, who stops every now and then to note a by-path or prominent knoll, or draw a rough plan of the wood. The dust has hardly settled yet along the wood from the tramp of their retreating infantry. We press on close behind, until at length the column halts close within range of the Port Hudson batteries.

"It is now just after sunset. I hitch my cartridge-box a little off my shoulder for relief, and bathe my head and face in a roadside pool. At the head of the column spy-glasses are being passed from hand to hand among the officers. What is it they and the skirmishers see to the northward and westward from the bend in the road? If we camp here for the night, we rank and file will go forward and see for ourselves. They are the outer earthworks of the rebel stronghold. As the dusk deepens the column turns, and back we go, we fellows in the very heart of it, the crimson stripes of the standard leaping and flowing out above us like currents of arterial blood.

"We fell back that Saturday night two or three miles, then camped in the woods. Later a battery went forward to a position near that to which we advanced, and fired shells for a while toward the rebel intrenchments. Our blankets and baggage were four miles behind. We hung equipments and haversacks on the gun-stocks, and, wet with sweat, lay down in our clothes, without covering.

"The eyelids shut together like a pair of scissors-blades and cut the thread of consciousness; but in the midst of my dreaming crash after crash broke upon my ear like the chorus of doomsday. We all jumped to our posts, for we thought the hour of battle had come. I looked at my watch by the light of a few embers: it was half-past eleven. At the time we were completely ignorant of the events that were transpiring. We know now that it was the fleet just passing the batteries, and all this was the uproar of the bombardment. Through the trees to the westward arose the flashes, incessant, like the winking heat-lightning of a hot summer evening. Through the air rolled reports, now isolated, now twenty combining in a grand crash, now a continuous roll of them,—a thundering rub-a-dub, as if the giants were going to storm heaven again, and were beating a réveille to summon every gnome and all the genii and each slumbering Titan to fall in for a charge. The centre of the regiment, the color-guard, rested in the road. The pickets, four or five rods off, could see the falling bombs, the streams of comet-like rockets, and the outlines of the shore-batteries lit up by the cannon flames. It went on, and we sat listening with our hands close at our guns. Then, at last, the heavens reddened high and far with a fiercer and steadier glare that moved slowly southward, crimsoning in turn the moss and old scars on the north, on the west, and on the southwest of the tree-trunks. Meantime came up the boom of cannon, slowly receding in the same direction. So we heard the swan-song of the stern old 'Mississippi,' abandoned, beaten with shot, ragged through her whole frame where shells had torn and burst. On that night a freight of dead men were on her deck, and the bodies of drowned men floated about her hoary hull for retinue. Then came a crash,—a light making all bright, flung back from the burnished gun-stocks, from the pool by the roadside, revealing the watching soldiers and the slain steeds fallen headlong in the road in the midst of the camp. So passed the veteran ship through fire and earthquake-shock to an immortality in history."

On the battlefield in Louisiana:

"Presently we hear the sound of firing. 'They have found them again,' I say to the color-sergeant; and we look off over the woods to where the white cloud of the discharge can be seen rising among the trees. As we sweep along the road toward the firing, the day each minute becomes more and more beautiful. Each minute, too, the roar of cannon is more frequent, and becomes mingled at last with sharp, rattling volleys of small-arms.

"We come at last into full view of the scene. We halt in the road; and, leaning against a fence, looking southward through the rails, the whole combat is visible to us, who are now within cannon-range. We look down a gentle slope. To the left we can see a battery posted, which fires very vigorously; then bodies of infantry, in long, dark lines, moving upon an open field in front of a wood. In the lines are gaps, which may be caused by moving over rough ground or by the plunge of shot and shell.

"To the right, again, we can see bodies of troops and batteries. Hear that long crash of musketry! each individual discharge so blending into others that we can only hear one long sound, like the slow fall of some huge tower. It is a rebel volley, terribly effective, as we afterward hear; and while the wind bears it to us we are ordered forward, and presently are on the very field.

"Ambulance-men with stretchers are hurrying across the field to a sugar-house in the rear, where a hospital is established. On each stretcher is a wounded man, and the number of these make it certain to us that the engagement has reached the sad dignity of a pitched-battle. We are passing ammunition-wagons now; now a tree, beneath which is a surgeon at work; and close where he stands, on his back, stiff and stark, dead, a tall, broad-chested man with closed eyes. The column files to the right, out of the road, and we stand in line of battle just in the rear of the action, within rifle-range of the woods where the enemy lie concealed, expecting every moment the order to advance. The firing, however, slackens; and presently word comes that the enemy are withdrawing.

"Between the color-company and the next company, through the centre of our line, runs the cart-track down into the field, along which is now constantly passing a stream of wounded men on stretchers or supported by comrades, and lines of rebel prisoners. I am close by, and can hear the talk of a sergeant, bloody, but able to walk, who is glad he has had a chance to do some service. I look, too, upon the ghastly head of a young lieutenant who is dying upon his stretcher, and upon many others. Prisoners come in by squads, sometimes five or six, sometimes twenty or thirty; some in gray, some in blue, some in faded brown. Once in a while there is an intelligent, good-looking face; more often the features are unintelligent,—the brutish face of that deteriorating class, the 'white trash.' Thus we stand close at hand to suffering and death.

"The pursuit is being continued down the road. Hours pass, and we still remain in line. We cook, eat, and sleep. I get out my portfolio and write a little. In the course of the day, up into the blue, calm sky go mighty columns of smoke, with deep reports, the explosions of rebel gunboats and transports, overtaken in the Têche by the victorious army, and blown up by their crews as they flee. Within half a dozen rods of our line is a field-hospital, where lie, of one New York regiment, the wounded colonel, the dead lieutenant-colonel, adjutant, and other officers and men. Of other regiments, too, are many wounded, Federal and rebel, some dying under the surgeons' hands. I go over and see the writhing wounded, and the hospital attendants laying out the dead. An Irish private lies close by the straight young adjutant, whose face is reverently covered, and not far off is a rebel covered thick with his own gore. Before death go down all distinctions and animosities.

"Does it not seem, when the experiences are so out of the common course and so dreadful, as if there ought to be some change in outward circumstances to make them correspond? But no; it was a perfect summer day, an almost cloudless sky, with a cool, sweet wind coming from the woods where the rebels had been hidden,—the woods green and fresh and innocent as if they were only a haunt for fairies.

"Toward night I go down the cart-path to the actual field, and see the broken muskets, the scattered knapsacks and clothing, the furrows where the enemy lay, the bloody pools where the dying fainted, the burial-parties, and the piles of distorted corpses lying by the trenches just dug to receive them."

In the hospital:

"At Baton Rouge we heard first of the sudden investment of Port Hudson by Gen. Banks, and that very day, in front of the beleaguered fortress, such a battle was threatened as the department had never known. The transports were all detained to wait for this struggle, and even the sick had been sent up from the hospitals to do duty with the ambulances. There would be no opportunity to rejoin the regiment for some days, so I went to the medical director: 'I am So-and-so, doctor, on leave of absence; if I can be of any service, send me up as a nurse till I can rejoin my regiment.'

"That night I went to 'Springfield Landing,' three miles below the grim, hostile batteries,—as near as peaceful vessels dare go. As we touched land at midnight the air was full of thunder, and whirling among the stars went the lighted fuses of the slow-revolving bombs, high up toward the zenith, then dropping through a long, fire-lit arch to a deep explosion,—all this, now close at hand, what we had been hearing on the remote bayou, fifty miles away."

Battle:

"A formidable battery of ship's guns has opened, within a few days, not far from us. My first visit to it was in the evening. Bivins and I slung our canteens (for we never miss an opportunity of going for water), and started down the blind, obstructed cart-track which leads out of the woods. Every few minutes came in the heavy crash of the Dahlgrens we were going to see, and the lighter reports of guns farther off. We were soon out on the plain where the battery is placed. To the right of it ran a hedge, behind which, screened from the rebel riflemen, lay a regiment stationed there to protect the guns against a sudden dash of the enemy.

"It is now quite dark, but in the starlight we can see the outlines of the sandwork behind which the guns are ranged. The rebel intrenchments are from a quarter to a half-mile away in front of us. We can see three or four large fires burning within them. Volumes of flame and smoke roll up among the trees, and the soldiers about us think they can make out the figures of men standing by the glare. As often as once a minute, from the east, where lies a huge New York battery, from the right, which Weitzel holds,—or over on the opposite side from us, where lies the fleet in the river, as often as once in a minute, like heat-lightning,—flashes a cannon; then, in a few seconds, comes the roar; then another light within the fortress as the shell explodes.

"Now a 'Dahlgren' in our battery here is discharged. How fierce and sullen! I must have a nearer view; so I make my way in behind the earthwork itself, and stand with the sailors who are detached from duty on shipboard to manage these great fellows. Each gun stands on a broad platform, sloping from rear to front to prevent the recoil of the piece from sending it too far back. They are a part of the broadside of the Richmond, and have already done good service at the taking of the forts and the running of the Port Hudson batteries in March.

"'Ready there at No. 2!' says the officer in charge. The crew of 'No. 2' stand back, and I brace myself for the concussion. A sailor jerks a lanyard, and it is done. It is no light field-piece, remember, but one of war's grimmest monsters. Clash go my teeth together; my bones almost rattle; then follows the hungry, ravening shriek of the shell, which breaks forth like a horrible bird of prey to devour the whole world. It sweeps hoarsely toward the enemy's line; then I hear it go 'thud-thud!' through some obstruction. In a moment the air beyond is lit up with its bursting, and the sound roars back to us,—to us, now enveloped in the sulphureous cloud that wraps the whole neighborhood."

The attack:

"Before dark we were ordered into line and stacked our arms. Each captain made a little speech: 'No talking in the ranks; no flinching. Let every one see that his canteen is full, and that he has hard bread enough for a day. That is all you will carry besides gun and equipments.'

"We left the guns in stack, polished and ready to be caught on the instant, and lay down under the trees. At midnight came the cooks with coffee and warm food. Soon after came the order to move; then slowly, and with many halts, nearly four hundred strong, we took up our route along the wood-paths.

"Many other regiments were also in motion. The forest was full of Rembrandt pictures: a bright blaze under a tree, the faces and arms of soldiers all aglow about it; the wheel of an army-wagon or the brass of a cannon lit up; then the gloom of the wood, and the night shutting down upon it.

"At length it was daybreak, and with every new shade of light in the east a new degree of energy was imparted to the cannonade. As we stood at the edge of the wood, it was war on all sides. In a few moments we were in motion again. We crossed a little bridge over a brook thickly covered with cotton, to conceal the tramp of men and noise of wheels, climbed a steep pitch, and entered a trench or military road cut through a ravine, passing some freshly-made rifle-pits and batteries. We are now only screened from the rebel works by a thin hedge. Here the rifle-balls began to cut keen and sharp through the air about us, and the cannonade, as the east now began to redden, reached its height,—a continued, deafening uproar, hurling the air against one in great waves till it felt almost like a wall of rubber, hounding and rebounding from the body,—the great guns of the 'Richmond,' the siege-Parrotts, the smaller field-batteries, and, through all, the bursting of the shells within the rebel lines and the keen, deadly whistle of well-aimed bullets. A few rods down the military road the column paused. The work of death had begun, for ambulance-men were bringing back the wounded, and, almost before we had time to think we were in danger, I saw one of our men fall back into the arms of his comrades, shot dead through the chest. The banks of the ravine rose on either side of the road in which we had halted; but just here the trench made a turn, and in front, at a distance of five or six hundred yards, we could plainly see the rebel rampart, red in the morning light as with blood, and shrouded in white vapor along the edge, as the sharpshooters behind kept up an incessant discharge. I believe I felt no sensation of fear, nor do I think those about me did.

"Our brigadier is with us at the front; and now, calling the colonel, the two soldierly figures climb the bank of the ravine and take a narrow survey of the ground. In a moment the order comes. We are to move up this rough path to the right, then advance out from the shelter of the trees into the open space before the fortifications, deploying as skirmishers meanwhile, and making our way through the fire to a closer position. We climb up the path. I go with my rifle between W.* and H.*, keeping nearest to the former, who carries the national flag. In a minute or two the column has ascended and is deploying in a long line, under the colonel's eye, on the open ground. The rebel engineers are most skillful fellows. Between us and the brown earth-heap which we are trying to gain to-day the space is not wide, but it is cut up in every direction with ravines and gullies. These were covered, until the parapet was raised, with a heavy growth of timber; but now it has all been cut down, so that in every direction the fallen tops of large trees interlace, trunks block up every passage, and brambles are growing over the whole. It is out of the question to advance in line of battle: it seems almost out of the question to advance in any order; but the word is given, 'Forward!' and on we go. Know that this whole space is swept by a constant patter of balls; it is really a 'lead rain.' We go crawling and stooping; but now and then before us rises in plain view the line of earthworks, smoky and sulphureous with volleys; while all about us fall the balls, now sending a lot of little splinters from a stump, now knocking the dead wood out of the old tree-trunk that is sheltering me, now driving up a cloud of dust from a little knoll, or cutting off the head of a weed just under the hand as with an invisible knife. I see one of our best captains carried off the field mortally wounded, sbot through both lungs,—straight, bright-eyed, though so sadly hurt,—supported by two of his men; and now, almost at my side, in the color-company, one soldier is struck in the hand and another in the leg. 'Forward!' is the order. We all stoop, but the colonel does not stoop; he is as cool as he was in his tent last night when I saw him drink iced lemonade. He turns now to examine the ground, then faces back again to direct this or that flank. W. springs from cover to cover, and I follow close after him. It is hard work to get the flag along; it cannot be carried in the air, and we drag it and pass it from hand to hand among the brambles, much to the detriment of its folds. The line pauses a moment. Capt. Morton, who has risen from a sick-bed to be with his command, is coolly cautioning his company. The right wing is to remain in reserve, while the left pushes still farther forward. The major is out in front of us now. He stands upon a log which bridges a ravine,—a plain mark for the sharpshooters, who overlook the position not only from the parapet, but from the tall trees within the rebel works. Presently we move on again through brambles and under charred trunks, tearing our way and pulling after us the colors; creeping on our bellies across exposed ridges, where bullets hum and sing like stinging-bees; and right in plain view the ridge of earth, its brow white with incessant volleys.

"Down this slope, and it will do. The color-guard is some rods in advance of the company, and many pause. I hear cheering. A ridge hides the space in front of the works from which it comes, and I tell W. I must creep up and see the charge.

"'Better not,' he says. 'We will go where our duty lies, but we had better run no risk beyond that.'

"He is wiser than I. While he speaks I have partially raised myself to climb forward to the point of view. Balls are striking close by me. I have become a mark to sharpshooters in the trees, and lie down again to be safe.

"The color-guard are under orders not to fire except when the colors are specially threatened. My piece is loaded and capped, but I can only be shot at without returning the discharge. Down into our little nook now come tumbling a crowd of disorganized, panting men. They are part of a New York regiment, who, on the crest just over us, have been meeting with very severe loss. They say their dead and dying are heaped up there.

"We believe it, for we can hear them, they are so near; indeed, some of those who come stumbling down are wounded; some have their gunstocks broken by shot and the barrels bent, while they are unharmed.

"They are frightened and exhausted, and stop to recover themselves; but presently their officers come up and order them forward again. From time to time afterward wounded men crawl back from their position a few yards in front of where we are,—one shot through the ankles, who, however, can crawl on his hands and knees; one in the hand; one with his blouse all torn about his breast, where a ball has struck him, yet he can creep away."

In the sap:

"You shall go with me into this outmost sap and know what sights and sounds it is our business now to be familiar with. Into this sap I am obliged to go three times a day for my rations, out of the retreat of the colors. First we must creep out of our ravine through the top of this prostrate tree, whose boughs catch our clothing; then up by the charred trunk, the feet slipping in the mud. Your head now comes within the range of riflemen in the trees over there. Sometimes they are in the trees, though not always. A few steps more, and we come within full range from the parapet; but do not stop to look. Stoop as low as you can, and run. This stump will shelter you,—pitted with the striking of balls against it, as if it had the smallpox when a sapling. When you have caught your breath, run for that trunk. It is an ugly one to get over, for it is breast-high, and one's whole body has to come into the enemy's view. Once over this, and the road is smoother. We soon gain the cover of the woods, and are comparatively safe. The other day I was twice shot at while passing the space we have just been over. I do not know how near the bullets came; only the first seemed as if it were sweeping my legs off at the knee with its sharp rush. I stooped and labored through the brush, when the second came cold along the length of my spine just above the vertebrae. We are to have a better road, however. One of Co. E has just been shot through the head—dead in an instant—here, and we are to have a protected passage-way.

"Down this little gully, and we enter the beginning of the sap at the end of the military road. Behind the angle, just back there, is the station of the ambulance-men. They wait there day and night with stretchers ready. These stretchers are now all blood-stained. Three or four a day out of the brigade and working-party are carried out. The ambulance-corps is made up largely of the musicians, but music— We never hear it now, not even the drum and fife. It is too stern a time for that.

* Fictitious names.

"We pass out into the sap. Here is the most dangerous point of all, just at the entrance, where the first man from our regiment was killed the day of the assault. You see how the rebel parapet commands it. We are going considerably nearer to it, but we shall be better sheltered. 'Tis just in front, with an old shot-pierced building behind it, and white sand-bags lying on the top of the lawny slope. That old building might be a ruinous mill, and those bags might be grist laid out there along the wall until the miller was ready for it, but every bag or two there is a sharp-eyed Mississippian with his rifle pointed through some chink. Let us go at a good pace, so that no one of those fellows will have a chance to 'draw a bead' on either of us. The trench goes under a large trunk, stretching from bank to bank, and from here we are tolerably safe. Only tolerably, for the other day, close by here, one of our company was hit in the face by a glancing ball; and Sergt. Bennett, of Co. K, was mortally wounded by a fragment of one of our own shells, which flew back into our lines from over the rebel parapet, where the shell exploded. We are coming close, you see. Climb a steep pitch now, and we reach the station of Co. D. The sap is here about six feet wide and four deep, dug out of the hard soil, the dirt being thrown out on the side toward the enemy, forming a bank rising about five feet from the surface, and therefore about nine feet from the bottom of the trench. Here now are our boys, the few that are left,—barely twenty. Along the top of the ridge of earth logs are placed, into the under side of which notches are cut at intervals of three or four feet, leaving, between the earth below and the timber above, a loop-hole four or five inches in diameter for the men to fire through. McG. has just sprung down after discharging his piece. Before he loads again let us climb up and take a view of the world through the hole. Carefully! Lay your body up against the steeply-sloping bank, resting your feet on the edge of the sap. By all means take care that the top of your head does not project above the narrow timber. Your face is at the hole now. From the outside a groove runs along the top of the thick bank, then comes the open air, and opposite you, within call easily enough, is the deadly ridge,—the two or three tents behind it, the old ruinous chimneys, the one or two shattered buildings, so near you can plainly see threads, and bricks, and splinters. Do not look long. Every yard (perhaps the intervals are less) behind the sand-bags there is a rifleman. Mellen, of Co. F, has just been shot while aiming his piece through one of these holes. The ball entered through the hole, hit the band of his gun, then the lock, splintering wood and steel, then crashed in through his chest.

"You duck your head now as the balls whistle over. It is a marvelous sound, but you would soon get over that here. They go with a hundred different sounds through the air, according to the shape, size, and velocity of the projectile. Two strike the bank. It is like two quick blows of a whiplash. That went overhead, sharp as the cut of a cimeter; another goes with a long moan, then drops into the earth with a 'thud!' It comes from some more distant point, and is nearly spent. A shot comes from some great gun in the rear,—an earthquake report, then the groaning, shuddering rush of the shell, as if the air were sick and tired of them and it was too much to be borne that they should be so constantly sent.

"But let us go out to the end of the sap. We pass the young captain of engineers who is in charge here,—a pleasant, active young fellow, who nods back to us as we give him the salute. We make several turns, and presently are at the end. Negroes are making the trench here wider. We push through them to the cotton-stuffed hoghead at the extremity. They roll this forward a foot or two, then dig out behind it, and so on. A lieutenant of engineers and a negro have just been shot here. From this crevice we can get a peep. Is it not near? You can easily throw a hard tack across. Looking back on to a side-hill, we can see some of the old wreck of the assault,—a rusty gun or two, muddy equipments, and there a skeleton. Some regiments got very near on the 14th. Close by runs the little disused path, among weeds and wild-flowers, along which, before we came, the garrison used to go from their works to the road. It looks innocent as the path up Pocumtuc, but what a way of death it would be to him who should go out of the sap and try to walk in it! Our boys in the sap have distinguished company. Almost every day Gen. Banks comes through,—sometimes with quite a retinue, sometimes only with Gen. Stone.

"Well, boys, how do you stand it?" said he the other day to our men.

"Arrah, now, yer honor," said Pat O'Toole, 'we're nearly dead intirely for the want of whisky.'

One more extract, and we close the sketch. After the surrender the troops visited Port Hudson and the grounds lying between the hostile lines. On the first day the "color-guard" visited the salient in front of where the 52d had lain for twenty-five days breasting the fiery storm of war. In speaking of his second visit to another portion of the rebel lines, Mr. Hosmer says:

"The 'citadel' at the southern end of the intrenchments was the goal of an excursion on the day following. It was a walk of a mile and a half. Here the siege-operations had been of greater magnitude than at our approach. The effects of the enormous artillery of the fleet appeared as they could not be seen elsewhere. Here, too, the rebels had placed along the bluff their most formidable guns,—the mouths that had spoken so thunderously the doom of the 'Mississippi,' stranded on the shore opposite there that night in March when we listened in the woods. We found great cavities where the large bombs had exploded. If the earth was soft, it is not exaggerating much to say that these were large enough for cellars to small houses. If the earth was hard, they were large enough to make rifle-pits for a soldier. We came to smooth round holes, a foot or so in diameter, bored down into the earth out of sight.* I thought at first they were ventilators to some deep bomb-proof or subterranean passage of the enemy, but they were too numerous and too irregularly disposed for that. They were made by descending shot. Presently we found some projectiles,—gigantic bolts of iron two feet long and eight inches thick, and cone-shaped at one end. We could not begin to lift them, nor many of the fragments of the exploded shells.

"The shells were the missiles whose wonderful flight I had watched so often, alone, at midnight, from the top of the slope above the ravine of the color-guard. The southern horizon would light up with the wide-spreading glare of the discharge; then came the majestic planetary sweep of the ascending bomb, revealed by its revolving fuse, far into the zenith, the deep, swinging roar, the stern music of the rushing sphere; then the awful fall from the perihelion of its tremendous orbit, and the earthquake crash at last. In such manner once, perhaps, a circling world with fire-charged heart burst into the asteroids.

"As we approached the southern defenses, we found them to be evidently of older construction and more formidable character than those we had before seen. The citadel was an outlying work in front of a double or triple line of parapets. Less than an eighth of a mile opposite, across a depression, was a seventeen-gun battery of ours, which had added its force to that of the fleet. From this battery toward the river ran a trench perhaps forty rods in length. Opening from the trench, a zigzag sap approached the citadel, so dug that troops could come up to its walls without exposure. The approach touched the hostile parapet, and ended in a mine which was nearly completed at the time of the surrender, and ran—a deep, resounding cavern—far under the feet of the defenders. It was designed, by means of this, to blow this whole part of the fortifications into the air.

* A rebel surgeon, Dr. Boyd, taken prisoner during the siege of Vicksburg, stated that he had seen these holes made by heavy shells from the mortar fleet that extended into the ground sixteen feet by actual measurement.

“The clash of the hostile forces here had been tremendous. It was impossible to think of the Northern power except as a terrible fiery tide, which, responding to some tempest-breathing of God, had hurled itself upon this outpost. I came when the storm was gone, and could see the mark of the sublime impact. The sea had torn its rugged zigzag way through the bosom of the hill and plain, dashed against battlement and cliff, and reared at the bases until it had hollowed out for itself deep, penetrating channels. Everywhere it had scattered its fiery spume. Within the citadel lay siege-guns and field-pieces broken and dented by blows mightier than those of trip-hammers; wheels torn to bits; solid oaken beams riven as by lightning; stubborn parapets dashed through almost as a locomotive's plow dashes through a snow-drift,—these and the bloody garments of men.”

CHAPTER XXXIV.

57TH AND 61ST REGIMENTS ARTILLERY AND CAVALRY.

QUITE a number of men enlisted in these regiments from the county of Hampden, though there was no full company from the county.

The 57th was organized at Worcester as the 2d Veteran Massachusetts Volunteers, in the autumn, winter, and spring of 1863-64. It left the State for the field on the 18th of April, 1864, though not fully organized, and with one company (H) unarmed.

The regiment arrived at Annapolis, Md., on the 20th of April, and was assigned to the 9th Army Corps. It crossed the Rapidan on the 5th of May, and at once became engaged in the Wilderness battles, and in that of the 6th sustained a loss of 251 men, killed, wounded, and missing. Among the wounded was Col. Bartlett. Again, in the action of the 24th, the regiment suffered severely, and Lieut.-Col. Chandler was taken prisoner.

On the 15th of June the regiment crossed the James River, and encamped within sight of Petersburg. About sunset on the 17th of June the 3d Division, 9th Corps, with which the 57th was connected, carried the rebel works with the bayonet. The loss was 5 officers and 41 men, and among the wounded of the 57th was Capt. J. M. Tucker.

In the bloody affair known as the action of the “crater,” on the 30th of June, the regiment was in the assault which followed the springing of the mine under the rebel works. The “crater” was occupied by the 57th and other regiments, and the men were so crowded as to be incapable of acting to advantage, but they maintained the position against every attempt of the enemy to regain it until the repulse of the 4th (colored) Division of the 9th Corps, which fell back upon the troops already thronging the covered-way, and brought on the greatest confusion. A terrible charge of the rebel infantry followed, and the affair, which promised so much in the beginning, ended in disaster and defeat.

At the commencement of the action the 57th numbered 7 officers and 91 enlisted men, of whom 6 officers and 45 men were killed, wounded, or captured, and the national standard of the regiment was lost in the mêlée.

Maj. Prescott and Capts. Howe and Dresser were killed, Lieuts. Barton and Anderson wounded, and Lieut. Reed missing. The remnant of the regiment was left in command of Lieut. Albert Doty.

From July 31st to August 18th the regiment was on duty in the trenches, and in that period lost five enlisted men, killed and wounded. On the 19th of August it took part in the operations on the Weldon Railway, and in a fight of an hour's duration lost 15 men out of a total of 46, or 33 per cent.

The regiment was again engaged on the 30th of October near the Pegram House, losing several men. Lieut.-Col. Tucker was now in command. It was engaged in the movement against the South Side Railway, and again on the Weldon road on the 9th and 12th of December.

From the 1st of January to the 25th of March, 1865, it was in the lines before Petersburg, with the single exception of making a reconnoissance on the Weldon Railway under Gen. Warren.

On the 25th of March the 57th was engaged in the action with the rebel Gen. Gordon's corps, during which Sergt.-Maj. Pinkham captured the colors of the 57th North Carolina Regiment.

On the 3d of April the regiment entered Petersburg, and was subsequently engaged in picket duty on the roads until toward the last of April, when it proceeded with the 9th Corps to Washington, where it remained on duty in and around the city until August, when it was sent home and discharged at Readville on the 9th of that month. The 59th was consolidated with this regiment, June 20, 1865.

The services performed by the 57th, and the losses and hardships endured, were most remarkable, considering the time of its service. Among those who fell, none were more sincerely lamented than Maj. James Doherty, who was mortally wounded on the 25th of March, 1865, while gallantly encouraging his men.

The 61st Regiment was organized in October as a battalion of five companies at Galloupe's Island, Boston Harbor. On the 7th of October it embarked for the field, and reached City Point, Va., on the 12th, where it was immediately assigned to duty with Gen. Benham's engineer brigade in erecting fortifications, where it continued until the 10th of November. It was then advanced toward Prince George's Court-House, on the extreme left of the defenses of City Point, where it remained on picket-duty until the 10th of December. Here the sixth company joined the battalion.

Leaving this position, the brigade was moved to the lines to the left of Fort Sedgwick (commonly called Fort Hell), which it held until the 12th of December, when it was ordered back to its old camp at City Point.

This regiment was engaged in the desperate fight about Fort Sedgwick (Hell) on the 2d of April, 1865, and when the rebels forced a portion of the 9th Corps from Fort Mahone, the 61st retook the work in a furious charge with the bayonet, losing 35 men in the encounter.

The regiment was honored with a number of brevet promotions for gallant conduct. On the 12th of April it was sent in charge of the late army of Gen. Ewell to City Point. On the 1st of May it marched for Washington. The original companies were discharged at Readville, June 17. The remaining companies were mustered out on the 1st of August.

In addition to those already named, there were many men from Hampden County in other organizations. Cos. A and H, of the 8th Infantry,—one hundred days' men,—were from Springfield, and Co. H, of the 8th Infantry,—nine months' men,—was partly from Springfield.

ARTILLERY.

Co. I, of the 3d Regiment Heavy Artillery, was mostly recruited at Springfield. The company was on detached service during its term of enlistment. The following sketch of its services is from the report of Gen. Michie, chief-engineer Department of Virginia:

“Co. I was ordered to report to Maj.-Gen. Butler, commanding Department of Virginia and North Carolina. It was mostly recruited from Springfield Armory, and was composed of as fine a body of men as I have ever seen in the service ; and I may add here that their after-conduct more than justified the expectations then formed.

"It was at once assigned to duty with Capt. F. U. Farqnhar, United States Corps of Engineers, chief-engineer of the Department, and was put in charge of the pontoon-trains of this army. Knowing nothing of pontoon-drill, the officers and men applied themselves so steadily that early in May they were excellent pontoniers, and could build a bridge as rapidly and as well as men of longer experience.

"Briefly, it has since built two bridges across the Appomattox River and taken care of them. These bridges connected the armies of the Potomac and the James. Repaired, and almost re-made, the bridge-train wagons furnished by the government. Built two pontoon-bridges across the James, which enabled our army to cross and advance on Chaffin's Farm, Sept. 29, 1864. Assisted in building wharves, permanent bridges, and road-ways. Repaired and took charge of three captured and burnt saw-mills, which have cut nearly 2,000,000 feet of lumber since October last, used in building hospitals, bridges, batteries, and magazines, and thereby saved the government the cost of that quantity. Had charge of the pontoon-train which accompanied the Army of the James in its rapid march against Gen. Lee, and built the pontoon-bridges at Farmville, which passed over the artillery and trains of two corps of the Army of the Potomac—2d and 6th—and enabled them to follow in rapid pursuit of the enemy. Had charge of the pontoon-bridges across the James River at Richmond, which passed over safely all the Army of the James, Army of the Potomac, Sherman's army, and Sheridan's cavalry, with their trains and artillery. Furnished the assistance to the surveying-parties engaged in mapping the rebel lines and country in the vicinity of Richmond.

"This company has merited the best praise and commendation that a commander can give his men. They have always given a ready and willing obedience to every order, are good and worthy men, and are now ready to make upright citizens."

The 1st, 2d, and 3d Regiments of heavy artillery contained more or less men from Hampden County, and the 30th unattached company of the same arm was from Springfield.

CAVALRY.

The 3d Regiment of Massachusetts Cavalry had one company (M) mostly from Springfield and vicinity. The regiment was recruited and organized as the 41st Infantry in 1862, and saw its first service in Louisiana under Gen. Banks. Its first experience under fire was at the battle of Irish Bend, in the Lafourche country, April 14, 1863.

As the 41st Mounted Rifles the regiment formed a part of the force which, under Col. Chickering, left Barre Landing on the 21st of May, 1863, and conducted an immense train of army-wagons and contrabands to Berwick—a distance of one hundred and five miles—in five days. On the 25th, when near Franklin, the convoy was attacked by a large body of the enemy, consisting of infantry and Texas cavalry, but they were easily beaten off.

The 41st was reorganized on the 17th of June, by Special Orders No. 144, as the 3d Massachusetts Cavalry. During the month of September the regiment was encamped at Port Hudson, and suffered severely from sickness. During the months of October and November it was constantly in the saddle, and upon one occasion a detachment was fired upon by guerrillas, who killed and wounded 10 men and captured an officer and 4 men.

On the 5th of January, 1864, the regiment was assigned to the 4th Cavalry Brigade, and made ready for the Red River campaign. At Henderson Hill the regiment was conspicuous in the engagement of March 21st, in which a Texas battery and the 2d Louisiana Infantry were captured. At the battle of Sabine Cross-Roads, on the 8th of April, the 3d was hotly engaged, losing 73 men and 157 horses.

During the retreat of Banks' army the 3d formed the rear-guard of Gen. A. J. Smith's corps (19th), and was constantly skirmishing with the enemy for many miles. On the 26th of April was fought the action of Muddy Run, and on the 29th there was another collision with the celebrated Quantrell's band. In these encounters the 3d lost a number of men.

From the 9th to the 17th of May the regiment was skirmishing daily, and in the battle of Yellow Bayou, on the 17th, made a splendid charge, in which 300 prisoners were captured, the regiment losing 14 men and 39 horses.

On the 25th of June the regiment was dismounted by special orders, armed as infantry, and ordered to report to Lieut.-Gen. Grant, at Fortress Monroe.

It was assigned to the command of Gen. Sheridan, and on the 10th of August moved with his army, and in the battle of Opequan made a gallant charge, driving the enemy three miles, and losing in the action 104 men. It participated in the battles of Fisher's Hill and Cedar Creek, and subsequently went into winter-quarters at Opequan Creek, where it remained until Dec. 25th.

Feb. 18, 1865, after performing duty as infantry for six months, the regiment was reorganized, and thoroughly, with new arms, horses, colors, and equipments, and again sent to the field as cavalry, where it relieved the 20th Pennsylvania Cavalry at Duffield Station, Va.

On the 1st of March the regiment reported to Maj.-Gen. Torbert, chief of cavalry, at Winchester, Va. The 3d took part in the grand review at Washington in May, and was subsequently transferred to Nebraska. The regiment was mustered, out of service at Fort Kearney, Aug. 28, 1865. From thence it returned to Massachusetts via Chicago, Detroit, and the Great Western Railway of Canada, having been the only regiment that entered the Dominion during the war.

On the 8th of October it was paid off and finally discharged from service. During its term of service it traversed fifteen thousand miles of territory and was in thirty engagements, among which were Irish Bend, Henderson Hill, Cane River, Port Hudson, Sabine Cross-Roads, Muddy Bayou, Piney Woods, Snag Point, Bayou de Glaze, Yellow Bayou, Opequan Creek, Fisher's Hill, and Cedar Creek.

HISTORY

OF

HAMPSHIRE COUNTY, MASSACHUSETTS.*

CHAPTER I.

CIVIL ORGANIZATION.

A COMMITTEE was appointed by the town of Springfield, Feb. 26, 1662, "concerning settling the towns in this western portion of the colony into the form of a county." On the 7th day of May ensuing, the General Court passed the act establishing the county of Hampshire.

The county was organized with very indefinite bounds, and a committee was soon afterward chosen by the several towns "to order and settle y^e affaires of y^e county." This committee consisted of Capt. John Pyncheon, Mr. Henry Clarke, Capt. Aaron Cooke, Lieut. David Milton, and Elzur Holyoke, who reported April 2, 1663, that they had "Agreed and determined y^t y^e Beginning of y^e yeare for y^e Shire meetings of this County shal be on y^e first day of March yearly; And that the Shire meetings shal be each other yeare at Springfield, and each other yeare at Northampton, in a constant course. And all our Shire meetings this yeare to be at Northampton; Springfield having had them last yeere. Also they agreed that y^e Commissioner chosen in March yearely by y^e Shire Commissioner to carry y^e votes for Nomination of Magistrates to Boston, shall have allowed him by the County thirty shillings, to be paid by the County Treasurer; the rest of his charges he is to beare himself; and that noe one man be thereby overburthened, It is determined that there be a change yearely of y^e person to carry the votes, except for necessity or conveniency they shall see cause to act otherwise."

The county of Berkshire was set off from Hampshire in 1761.

The county of Franklin was set off from Hampshire in 1811, and the county of Hampden in 1812. The histories of these counties will be found elsewhere in this volume. Joseph Lyman was appointed, Sept. 6, 1813, "a commissioner to meet with the commissioners appointed by the counties of Franklin and Hampden to complete and adjust the equitable share of each of said counties in the moneys and credits due them at the time of the division of the old county of Hampshire, agreeably to an act of the General Court, passed Feb. 27, 1813."

The following addition was made to the county by an act approved May 25, 1853:

"SECT. 1. So much of the towns of Chester and Blandford, in the county of Hampden, with the inhabitants thereon, as lies within the following-described line is hereby set off from said towns of Chester and Blandford, and annexed to the town of Norwich,† in the county of Hampshire, and made a part of said county of Hampshire, to wit: Beginning at the southwest corner of Norwich, at a stone monument in the river at Chester Village, and running thence north six degrees and four minutes east, in the line between Chester and Norwich, six hundred and ninety rods, to a point forty-four rods north of the grist-mill in Norwich, known as the Red Mill; thence south fifty degrees forty-five minutes west, seven hundred and eighty rods, to a point in the line between Chester and Blandford; thence south forty-three degrees forty minutes east, eight hundred and thirty-five rods and thirteen links, to the angle in the line between Blandford and Russell, designated by a tree known as 'Love and Unity Tree,' thence north, twenty-eight degrees forty-one minutes east in the line between Blandford and Montgomery, three hundred and seventy-five rods, to the corner known as Rock-house Corner; thence north seventy degrees west, in the line between Blandford and Norwich, two hundred and forty rods, to the first-mentioned bound."

A county treasurer was first chosen in 1660. William Pyncheon, the first treasurer, held the office until 1681, when Mr. Peter Tilton succeeded, and served until 1689. Major John Pyncheon followed Mr. Tilton. The next treasurer whose name appears on the records as such was William Pyncheon, 1798.

A county marshal was appointed by the court in 1668. After 1692 the office of sheriff supplanted that of marshal. "The second Samuel Porter held the office several years, and in 1696 executed two Indians for murder."‡ The records do not certainly indicate who were sheriffs between the years 1696 and 1781, although in the years 1771, '72, and '73 Oliver Warner, — Wright, and William and Walter Pyncheon seem to have attended the courts in such capacity.

Hampshire County contains twenty-three towns,—Amherst, Belchertown, Chesterfield, Cummington, Easthampton, Enfield, Goshen, Granby, Greenwich, Hadley, Hatfield, Huntington, Middlefield, Northampton, Pelham, Plainfield, Prescott, South Hadley, Southampton, Ware, Westhampton, Williamsburg, and Worthington.

PRESENT COUNTY OFFICERS.

State Senator, Hampshire District, John L. Otis; Judge of Probate and Insolvency, William G. Bassett, Easthampton; Register of Probate and Insolvency, Luke Lyman, Northampton; Sheriff, Henry A. Longley; Clerk of the Courts, William P. Strickland; Treasurer, Watson L. Smith; Register of Deeds, Henry P. Billings; County Commissioners, Elisha A. Edwards, Southampton, term expires December, 1879; Elnathan Graves, Williamsburg, term expires December, 1880; Flavel Gaylord, Amherst, term expires December, 1881; Special County Commissioners, Samuel L. Parsons, Northampton, Charles E. Blood, Ware, whose terms expire December, 1880; Trial-Justices, Franklin D. Richards, Ware; Edward A. Thomas, Amherst; Garry Munson, Huntington; Charles Richards, Enfield; Franklin Dickinson, Belchertown; Nathan Morse, South Hadley; Albion P. Peck and Haynes H. Chilson, Northampton; Francis H. Dawes, Cummington; Lafayette Clapp, Easthampton.

CHAPTER II.

THE COURTS, COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, AND COUNTY BUILDINGS.

THE colonial courts of Massachusetts were established at an early period, and in September, 1639, the Legislature ordered that every judgment of court, "with all the evidence, be recorded in a book to be kept to posterity," and that records be "kept of wills, administrations, and inventories;" also of marriages, births, and deaths.

* Prepared by Horace Mack.

† Changed to Huntington.

‡ See Judd's History of Hadley, pp. 95, 96.

The Court of Assistants was established by the charter of 1628, and remained a Superior Court; while county courts were formed as early as 1642, having jurisdiction in cases involving the amount of forty shillings and upward. In 1642 certain actions were "triable before the commissioners in Boston," and actions under forty shillings before such court or before one magistrate, "or the three commissioners for ending small causes." By an act passed in 1650 an appeal was allowed from any inferior court to the Court of Assistants, whose decision was final except in some special cases. By another act, in 1654, the Inferior Court was allowed, in private suits, to state the question to be decided to the General Court, who thus determined the difficult questions arising.

Town magistrates were empowered, by acts passed in 1647 and subsequently, to hear and determine all causes arising within their county in matters of debt or trespass not exceeding forty shillings. In a town having no such magistrate the Court of Assistants or County Court might, on the request of the town, "appoint three of the freemen as commissioners in such cases."

By an act passed in 1651 the commissioners in Boston were annually chosen, and were empowered to try and decide causes under ten pounds, with one magistrate, who resided within the town, and each commissioner was made a judge in criminal cases where the fine did not exceed forty shillings for one offense; but an appeal lay to the Court of Assistants.

A County Court was established in each county, to be held by the magistrates living in it, or any other magistrates that could attend the same, or by such magistrates as the General Court should appoint from time to time, "together with such persons of worth, where there shall be need, as shall from time to time be appointed by the General Court." This court had power to hear and determine all causes, civil and criminal, not extending to life, member, or banishment, or to cases of divorce. Probate matters also were within its jurisdiction.

May 28, 1659, the General Court enacted as follows:

"In answer to the petition of the inhabitants of Springfield, it is ordered, that Capt. John Pynchon, Left. Elizur Holyoke, and Mr. Samuel Chapin, for the year ensuing, and until the Courts shall take further orders, shall have full power and authority to govern the inhabitants of Springfield, and to hear and determine all cases and offences, both civil and criminal, that reach not life, limb, or banishment, according to the laws here established; provided it shall and may be lawfull for any party to appeal to the Court of Assistants at Boston, so as they prosecute the same according to the order of this Court; provided, also, that their trials may be by the oaths of six men, if twelve cannot be had for that service, and that Northampton be referred to Springfield in reference to County Courts, wch Courts shall be kept, one on the last Tuesday in the first month, and the other on the last Tuesday in September, yearly, at Springfield, unlesse the commissioners aforesaid shall see just cause to keepe one of them at Northampton; and the two Courts to be kept at Springfield or at Northampton, as aforesaid, shall in all respects have the power and privileges of any County Court till this Court shall see cause otherwise to determine; provided, they shall not warne above fower jurymen from Northampton to Springfield, or from Springfield to Northampton; and all fines as well as entry of actions shall goe toward the defraying of charges of Courts; and out of Court the commissioners, or any two of them agreeing, may act in all respects as any one magistrate may doe, either at Springfield or Northampton; and the commission granted last yeare respecting Northampton is hereby repealed."*

The first session of court held within the territory of the old county of Hampshire was at Springfield, March 27, 1660, by Capt. John Pynchon, Mr. Samuel Chapin, and Elizur Holyoke, in the capacity of commissioners. The jurors present were Thomas Cooper, George Colton, Benjamin Cooley, Thomas Stebbins, Jonathan Burt, John Dumbleton, Thomas Gilbert, Benjamin Parsons, and Samuel Marshfield, of Springfield; Henry Curtis, Henry Woodward, and Thomas Bascomb, of Northampton. The first case presented was one for breach of agreement, which was dismissed, plaintiff being adjudged to pay ten shillings and eightpence, costs of court, and six shillings and eightpence for defendant's "journey from Northampton." The second case was that of Nathaniel Clark, son of William Clark, of Northampton, against Edward Elmer, for "slander in calling said Nathaniel Theife, to the damage of five pounds." Judgment, four pounds for plaintiff and costs of court.

The county courts were held alternately at Springfield and Northampton,† the first at the latter place being on the 26th of March, 1661, when there "were sent" to hold the same Mr. John Webster, Capt. John Pynchon, and Elizur Holyoke, commissioners. At the second court, held at Springfield, Sept. 25, 1660, Elizur Holyoke was "appointed recorder for this Court and County."

The following order of the court, made Jan. 28, 1665, illustrates the condition of court affairs in the early times:

"This Corte doth determine that the reasonable charges of y^e horses of the Judges or Commissioners & Jurymen that travell to the Cortes at Northampton and Springfield shal be satisfied by the County Treasurer. This in reference to y^e Townes now in being in y^e County, & not for such Townes as may hereafter be nearer. By reasonable charges for horses mentioned in this order the Corte declared to be meant & intended only pasture or hay according to y^e season; and by travelling to intend only such as travell from Springfield to Northampton, & from Northampton and Hadley to Springfield."

The first record of a Court of Assistants occurs under date of Sept. 26, 1665. This court was held by Capt. John Pynchon, one of his Majesty's assistants, and Lieut. William Clark, Lieut. Samuel Smith, and Mr. Peter Tilton, associates. The last-named became assistant, by appointment, May 27, 1685. Capt. Pynchon and Mr. Tilton "presided in the county courts, and were members of the house of magistrates, at Boston, and judges of the Courts of Assistants."

By the second volume of court records, it appears that the last act of the original county court was at a meeting of the worshipful Maj. Pynchon and the worshipful Peter Tilton, Esquires, at Springfield, when two wills were admitted to probate.

From the opening of the courts in Hampshire until 1692, the records were kept in the same volumes‡ with the registry of wills and probate proceedings, and, until 1677, by one clerk, who followed the court in its perambulations between the two places. In that year the court at Springfield ordered as follows:

"This court, considering the remoteness of the places one from the other where the County Courts are kept, and the trouble and the hazard in carrying and conveying the records from place to place, besides the inconveniencies and the charge to the people in going for to search any records, as occasion may be, Do therefore judge meet to have the records kept henceforward in or near each town where the courts are kept, that there may be double records for the greater security, for which end it is concluded to have two clerks, or recorders, for this county; Samuel Partridge being already stated, he is henceforward to attend at Northampton court, and to keep and record all matters that respect y^e part of the county thereabouts; and this court doth now appoint Mr. John Holyoke also a Clerke of the Courts, who is to attend at Springfield Courts, and is to record deeds for Lands, etc., and whatever respects this part of the county hereabouts; each clerk to attend y^e respective courts in their several stations, and some short time after the end of every court, as soon as they have fairly recorded y^e acts of the court out of their day-book or waste-booke, which they are speedily to do, and then to transmit the day-book to the other clerk, who is likewise to record as fair in his book, & then return y^e day-book or waste-book; & this each of them to attend from time to time."

PROVINCIAL COURTS.

Provincial courts were established under the charter of William and Mary, of 1691. The provincial Legislature was empowered by this charter "to erect and constitute judicatories, and courts of record or other courts," to be held in the name of the King. By the same charter the governor for the time being, with the council or assistants, had power to "do, execute, and perform all that is necessary for the probate

† The courts were held, till the erection of a court-house, at the house of some innholder,—in those days called an ordinary. The first in Northampton were held at the house of Henry Woodward, who kept an ordinary near where the Smith College now stands.

‡ There are two such volumes,—the first in the office of the register of probate, the second in that of the clerk of the courts.

of wills, and granting administrations for, touching, or concerning, any interests or estates which any person or persons shall have within our said province or territory."

In 1692 the "Superior Court of judicature over the whole province" was instituted, to be held by "one chief-justice and four other justices," three of them to be a quorum. This court had power in civil cases, and was also a court of assize and general jail delivery. A further act, passed in 1699, added to the powers of this court, authorizing it to take cognizance "of all other matters, as fully and amply, to all intents and purposes whatsoever, as the Courts of King's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, within his Majesty's kingdom of England could do."

By the acts of 1692 and 1699 the Inferior Court of Common Pleas was established in each county, to be held by four justices duly appointed and commissioned, three of whom should form a quorum. Their powers extended to all civil actions arising or happening within the county triable at the common law, and upon judgment to award execution.

By the same acts there was established a Court of General Sessions of the Peace, to be held in each county four times each year, empowered "to hear and determine all matters relating to the conservation of the peace and punishment of offenders, and whatever is by them cognizable according to law." By the later act, 1699, the defendant was allowed his appeal to the next Court of Assize. This court was held at the same time and place with the Court of Common Pleas.

The first record of any court held under the laws of the province is that of a "General Sessions of the Peace, County Court, and Inferior Court of Common Pleas," held July 25, 1692. The record reads:

"At the General Sessions of the Peace, held at —, in West Hampshire, in y^e Majesty's Province of Massachusetts Bay in New England, being the first sessions after that his Excellency Sr William Phips, Knight, took the Government,— present, John Lynchon, Sam^l Partrigg, Atron Cooke, Joseph Hawley, Esq. The Commission for their Majesties' Justices of the Peace for said Hampshire, in their Majesties' Province of the Massachusetts Bay in New England, for the conservation of the Peace, and for the quiet Rule and Government of the people of said County, was firstly read. Imprimis, it was ordered that constables, tithing-men, or other officers, according to their respective times and places chosen and sworn, shall stand and continue their respective year by and according to s^d choices and oathes, and to officiate accordingly."

Having thus established the civil government on a firm footing, the court decreed that "Capt. Samuel Partrigg hath license to retails strong drinke."

There is a gap in the records of this court from June 5, 1694, until March 7, 1727, when it again appears as an "Inferior Court of Common Pleas," with Samuel Partrigg, John Stoddard, John Ashley, and Henry Dwight, Esquires, presiding. The last session of this court prior to the Revolution was held May 17, 1774, at which sat Israel Williams, Oliver Partridge, Timothy Dwight, and Thomas Williamson, justices. After an intermission of four years this court was again organized by the General Court, which appointed Esquires Timothy Danielson, Eleazer Porter, John Bliss, Samuel Mather, Jr., to be justices thereof, who made Robert Breck clerk, and held their first session Aug. 25, 1778.

The province courts were superseded by those of the commonwealth in 1782.

COMMONWEALTH COURTS.

The courts of the commonwealth of Massachusetts were established by act of July 3, 1782. These were the Supreme Judicial Court, the Court of Common Pleas, and Court of General Sessions of the Peace.

The judges of the Supreme Judicial Court, by that act, were to "hold their offices as long as they behave themselves well," and to have honorable salaries, ascertained and established by standing laws. This court was to consist of one chief and four other justices, any three of whom constituted a lawful tribunal. It was given jurisdiction in civil and criminal causes and in various other matters, and was constituted the "Supreme Court of Probate," with appellate jurisdiction in nearly all probate matters.

A Court of Common Pleas established by the same act for each county was similar to the provincial court of that name, and was superseded by the Circuit Court of Common Pleas, by act of June 21, 1811; which act divided the State into six circuits, exclusive of Dukes and Nantucket Counties. This court was abolished in 1821, and a Court of Common Pleas throughout the State established, consisting of four judges, one judge empowered to hold a court. The powers and duties of the latter court were substantially those of the Circuit Courts.

The Court of General Sessions of the Peace established by the act of 1782 for each county was held by the justices of peace therein, and determined matters relating to the conservation of the peace and the punishment of offenses cognizable by them at common law. After several changes and modifications its powers and duties were transferred to the Circuit Court of Common Pleas, before described.

The Court of Common Pleas was finally abolished in 1859.

PROBATE COURTS.

In 1639, as previously stated, the Legislature ordered that records be kept of "wills, administrations, and inventories." On page 6 of the first volume of court records is the first will that was admitted to probate, as follows:

"The will and testament of John Harman, of Sp^gfld, deceased, who died the 7th day of March, 1660-1661. Know all whom this may concerne, that John Harman, of Springfield, being sick & weake in body, but of ready memory & understanding, being requested on the 4th day of March, 1660-1661, to settle his worldly estate, did refuse to dispose of any thing pertickularly, but said he would leave all that he had unto his wives hand; for he said shee is a tender Mother, & therefore shee should have the dispose of all. This was spoken by the said John Harman the day above mentioned, beinge two dayes before his death. Witnesses wheremto were _____ the mark of

"ELIZUR HOLYOKE & JOHN X LUMBARD.

"Recorded May 13, 1661."

By the constitution of Massachusetts, "judges of probate of wills, and for granting letters of administration," hold their offices during good behavior, and are appointed and commissioned by the Governor. By the act of March 12, 1784, probate courts were established, and their powers and duties prescribed.

When the provincial courts were established, in 1792, the Court of Probate was separated from the others,—at least, in Hampshire County. From that time until June, 1858, the officers of this court were a judge of probate and a register of probate. At the latter date the Court of Insolvency was placed under the jurisdiction of these officers, who have since been denominated respectively "Judge of Probate and Insolvency" and "Register of Probate and Insolvency."

The Court of Insolvency was established in 1856, superseding the commissioners of insolvency, who had previously the charge of insolvent matters. Horace I. Hodges was appointed judge of insolvency in June of the year named, and R. B. Hubbard register. The latter served until January, 1857, and was succeeded by Luke Lyman, who was chosen in the fall of 1856, the office having been made elective. The duties of these officers ceased when the courts were united as above named in 1858.

FIRST CORONER'S INQUEST.

The first coroner's inquest within the old county of Hampshire was held on the 7th of April, 1660. The jurors present were Thomas Cooper, William Branch, William Warriner, Thomas Stebbins, Thomas Noble, John Stewart, Samuel Marshfield, Henry Burt, Benjamin Parsons, Abel Wright, Richard Sikes, and John Clark. The following is from the record of the inquest:

"This day the youngest child of John Harmon, of Springfield, called Ebenezer, of about three years of age, was found dead in the brooke in Nathaniel Pritchard's yard; concerning whose death there was search and inquiry made by a jury of twelve men of this Towne of Springfield how the said child came to its end.

"The jury's return upon oath before Samuel Chapin & Elizur Holyoke, commissioners, was that according to their best light that they could have in the case they judge that the child was drowned in the brooke through its own weakness and imbecillity, without the hand of any other person being any occasion or cause thereof."

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

A board of county commissioners was established by act of the General Court, Feb. 26, 1828. The powers and duties of the Court of Sessions and of commissioners of highways were transferred to the board of commissioners. The board consists of three members, one of whom is chosen annually for a term of three years. Two special commissioners are elected, each at the same time, for a term of three years.

The commissioners have the care of county property, and are empowered, among other things, to estimate and apportion county taxes, erect and repair county buildings, lay out highways, license ferries and inn-holders, appoint overseers of the house of correction, and establish rules for its government.

The special commissioners are called to act in cases of vacancy in the board, or where the commissioners are interested parties.

Hon. Levi Lyman, Hon. Charles P. Phelps, and Alvan Rice were the first county commissioners, and Ithamar Conkey* the first special county commissioner.

COUNTY BUILDINGS—COURT-HOUSES.

In 1655 a committee of five persons was appointed by the inhabitants of the town of Northampton "to build a house for the town of sawen timber." It is probable that this building was used to accommodate the courts, which were first held in Northampton in 1661, and was, in fact, the "first court-house," which is described as having been situated "near the intersection of Main and King Streets."

March 6, 1738, the inhabitants of Northampton voted to build a "Town-House" the summer following, and chose a committee to present the matter to the Court of General Sessions of the Peace, "to see what they will order toward defraying the charges of building the Town-House." The materials of the old meeting-house, so far as suitable, were to be employed in the proposed building.

This, the second court-house, was situated "near the east end of the green, fronting Shop Row."† When it was built, or by whom, are matters unrevealed; but it was occupied by the courts until the erection of its successor in 1813. The committee having the new edifice in charge were authorized to dispose of the old court-house, and it was finally sold to Isaac Damon, the contractor, at "the appraisement of men." At the court held in January, 1814, it was ordered "that the old court-house be removed from the county ground within fifteen days from the 18th day of January." It was removed to the rear of the present Granite Row, where it was occupied for a time as a vinegar-factory, and finally to Market Street, where it now stands (1879), the property of Erastus Slate.

The corner-stone of the third court-house was laid in due form by the officers and members of Jerusalem Lodge, June 24, 1813. An address was delivered upon the occasion. In the "foundation-stone of the northeast corner" were deposited sundry silver and copper coins of our own and foreign countries, both ancient and modern. The oldest coin was of the reign of Canute, King of England. "The cavity was filled with melted lead, over which was placed a plate of lead having the following engraved thereon: 'June 24, A.L. 5813, was laid the foundation-stone hereof,—the superstructure designed for the safe-keeping of the public records and dedicated to Justice. Daniel Stebbins, P. D. D. G. M. Isaac Damon, architect." This stone at the date of building was about three feet below the hewn stone at the northeast corner.

* Who was the other commissioner for 1828 does not appear.

† A correspondent of the Hampshire Gazette, "D. T.," June 1, 1869, says: "The church, court-house, and school-house were on a line. The school-house stood on the flat, in front of the two elms that now stand there, and the two first-named buildings on the hill." Another correspondent, June 15, says: "The court-house stood nearer the street than the church, doors at the west, with a bank wall of stone, topped by a round log or logs, unhewed, running from the southwest corner, in a diagonal direction, toward the street, making a rather crooked path up to the court-house."

The first steps toward the erection of the third building were taken in August, 1810, when a committee was appointed, consisting of Ebenezer Mattoon, William Ely, Jonathan Smith, Jr., Sylvester Judd, Asa Stebbins, Richard E. Newcomb, Esq., and Mr. Oliver Smith, who reported, Jan. 11th following, that a court-house ought to be erected "on the county land near where the present court-house now stands, and that it be built with bricks, sixty by fifty feet, with twenty-eight feet walls: the court-room to be on the upper floor, and clerk's office and jury-rooms on the lower floor." The cost was estimated at six thousand three hundred and eighty-four dollars and eighty cents. There was no progress made until December, 1812, when a contract was made with Isaac Damon for the proposed work, a new estimate and proposals having meantime been submitted.

This edifice was occupied by the courts and county offices until November, 1822, when it was destroyed by fire, which originated in the space above the court-room, under the roof. The fire was discovered at ten o'clock in the morning, during a session of the court, and defied all efforts to extinguish it. "The interiors of the fire-proof rooms were not affected by the flame," but their contents were removed.‡

Feb. 27, 1823, a contract was made with Capt. Damon, the builder before mentioned, for "rebuilding the fire-proof offices required by law, connected with the court-rooms and jury-rooms." After some time considering the question of location, it was ordered, April 9th, that the "southeasterly corner be the same as that of the late court-house, and to extend northwesterly on a line of the old foundation, sixty-eight feet, the north-easterly corner thereof to be five feet farther toward the northeast than the former court-house, and the line of the front end be the same as the front line of that house." Hon. Jonathan H. Lyman was appointed to superintend the rebuilding. Oliver Warner's hall was used for sessions of the court during the interval of building.

This, the present court-house, has been several times changed in its interior arrangement, the last alteration being made in 1858, when an office was prepared for the register of deeds. Besides this office it now contains on the ground-floor an office for the clerk of the courts, in which are the court records and the Hampshire Law Library, and an office for the register of probate, and a jury-room. The court-room is in the former building, and occupies the upper floor.

HOUSES OF CORRECTION AND JAILS.

A little more than one year before the erection of the county the first steps were taken toward providing a house of correction. March 26, 1661, Mr. Pyncheon, "the county treasurer," having a balance of £13 10s. in his hands, the court ordered that said sum should be "allowed and improved to the building of a house of Correction in Springfield, which buildinge the said Mr. Pyncheon is appointed to take care of, that it be carried on to effect." Sept. 30, 1662, the court ordered a rate levied upon the three towns in "reference to charges concerning ye house of Correction and other occurrences." Jan. 17, 1665, Nathaniel Ely was authorized to finish "said house with all possible speed to compleat it for ye service to which it is appointed." Sept. 24, 1667, the court authorized Capt. Pyncheon and Elizur Holyoke to agree with a master to keep the house, and to "engage, if they see cause, that he shall have five pounds per annum paid unto him by this county."

The building was completed in 1658; was forty feet in length, and constructed mainly of hand-sawed boards, plank, and timber. Accommodations for the keeper were provided under the same roof. The prison was burned by the Indians in 1675, and a new one built in 1677-80, at a cost of about sixty pounds. Simon Lobdell was the first keeper, in 1668.

‡ Vide Hampshire Gazette, Nov. 27, 1822.

The first prison built at Northampton was erected in 1704; it was twenty-four by sixteen feet in size, "besides the chimney," and had a small dwelling at one end for the keeper. It stood near where the present town-hall is situated.

Between 1783 and 1794, Stephen Burroughs was convicted upon the charge of passing counterfeit coin, with knowledge, and was confined in the jail at Springfield. Owing to the supposed insecurity of that edifice as a place of confinement for the illustrious prisoner, he was removed to Northampton jail. "About sunset," he says, "we arrived at Northampton, and were consigned to the abodes of misery. The ponderous doors growled on their reluctant hinges. The rattling of bolts, bars, and locks, reverberating through the hollow apartments of the dreary abode, made such an impression on my mind that with difficulty I supported myself under this situation. The appearance of the Cerberus of these infernal abodes was equal to every poetic description of the janitor of hell. 'Hail, ye infernal powers,' said I, 'who inhabit these regions! Assemble your forces, gather your strength, and keep high carnival to-day, in consideration of those victims which have now fallen a sacrifice at your shrine!' I was confined in a room on the ground-floor, alone and shut out from the possibility of seeing any company."

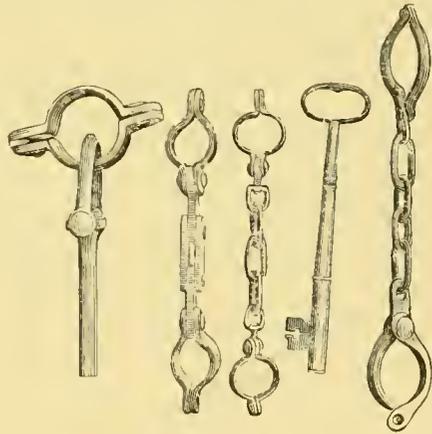

A man by the name of Rood was soon after placed in the same cell, charged with having, by mistake, "taken some cattle not his own." The two were later joined by another, named Hutchins, alias Warner, who was charged with passing counterfeit bank-bills. Burroughs planned an escape, the story of which he tells as follows:

"Notwithstanding the assistance of Rood was not to be expected, Warner and I were determined to make the attempt immediately after the approach of night, as that was the only time in which we could work without an immediate detection. Therefore, after the time of retirement, we pulled off our coats and went to work with a great degree of energy upon the stone in the chimney; we soon filled our room with stones and rubbish. In this situation we experienced great inconvenience for want of light, being obliged to have recourse to pine slivers peeled off from a board, which kept one hand constantly employed in feeding the blaze lest it should be extinguished, which would at once defeat all our purposes. As I was the strongest of the two, I kept Warner feeding the light, whilst I labored like Sisyphus in rolling huge stones out of the chimney-way. Happy should I have thought myself at that time if, Hercules-like, I could have turned the course of some mighty river under the jail, to have assisted me with its force to sweep away those huge rocks. I labored and toiled without intermission till about midnight, when, coming to a rock I could not possibly get out of the hole, I for a moment despaired of success, after straining with all my might a number of times to no effect. Rood, seeing the situation in which matters stood, jumped out of bed and helped to lift the stone from its place, and then returned again into bed. I again renewed my labor, and had overcome the greatest part of the difficulties before us when the light became extinct for want of fuel, the board being all consumed. I tried to pursue the business in the dark, but found it in vain, and therefore was obliged to quit our undertaking. How much would I now have given for a farthing candle! but wishes were as vain as our expectations were unfounded."

Toward morning the attempt was renewed, without success: "The jailer came into the room, and what was the scene pictured to his view? Rubbish, rocks, stones, and dirt filled the room. Two men almost naked, covered with sweat and dust." Burroughs and Warner were given "ten lashes" each, put into the dungeon, where they lay two days, and were then transferred to another room. The narrative continues: "The second day of my confinement, nearly night, I heard a terrible clanking of massy chains approaching toward my apartment. The door of the dungeon opened, when lo! horrid to relate, a deformed Vulcan attended with his grisly Cyclops, carrying with them a huge iron chain and all the tools for their infernal purpose. I was ordered into another apartment, and to work went those engines of cruelty. They, in the first place, made fast a flat ring around my leg, about six inches wide and an inch thick. This was connected with a chain weighing about thirty-six pounds, and ten feet in length. The other end of the chain was fastened to the timber composing our floor, with a staple driven in with a sledge which made the whole jail tremble. After I was fixed in this manner they left me to my reflections, inwardly exulting at their mighty power and making a poor wretch secure from enjoying the cold comfort of hoping for better times."*

It is probable that Burroughs was confined in the last-mentioned jail, built in 1704. If such be the fact, this vivid description furnishes the only remaining clew to the characteristics of that edifice, whose old joints trembled under the blows of the sturdy blacksmiths. The handcuffs made for Burroughs are preserved, with other gyves and bonds of iron, in the custody of Christopher Wright, the present deputy sheriff of the county, and bring to the sensitive imagination visions of the Bastille and of instruments of the Inquisition. The annexed cut represents two pairs of handcuffs, one pair of leg-fetters, the great bull-ring, and the key to the outer door of the prison. Their combined weight is thirty-six pounds. The key belonged to the prison next described, and may also have been used for its predecessor.

SHACKLES OF THE OLD JAIL AT NORTHAMPTON.

The second "gaol" was erected in the years 1800 and 1801, concerning which the first discoverable record bears date in January of the latter year. The Court of Common Pleas then ordered "that the county treasurer pay to Ebenezer Mattoon, Jr., Charles Phelps, Esq., and Mr. Josiah Dickinson, the committee for building the gaol in Northampton, one thousand dollars, they giving their receipt to be accountable for the expenditure of the same." There had already been expended, Jan. 1, 1800, $1443.84 for materials furnished, including 6000 feet of square timber, 5000 feet of two-inch oak plank, 600 feet of boards, 15,000 shingles, 50 hogsheads of lime, 600 loads of stone at 3s., 300 loads of stone at 5s., and 7000 bricks. The iron required was estimated at 4 tons, at £40 per ton. This jail was of stone principally, was situated on Pleasant Street, in the rear of William R. Clapp's present residence, and cost $8321.12, exceeding the estimate $3137.27. May 30, 1801, Benjamin Smith, David Mack, and Samuel Taylor, Esq., who were appointed to examine the accounts of the building committee, reported a "balance of

* Memoirs of Stephen Burroughs, published by M. N. Spear, Amherst, Mass., 1858.

$13.56 due to the committee, after deducting the proceeds of the sale of the old gaol."

The building was approximately forty by fifty feet in size, was of two stories, about eight feet between joints, and had five or six rooms besides the dungeon, which was on the ground-floor. It contained a "debtors' room," described as being "more cheerful" than the others. The common cells had rings in the floor, to which prisoners were chained; one had a stone floor and a fireplace. The house of Mr. Clapp, already mentioned, was the residence of the jailer, and connected with the prison by a covered passage. The house has since been remodeled.

No further record concerning a prison or house of correction is found prior to March 1, 1825, when the following occurs:

"No fit and convenient house of correction being provided in the county of Hampshire, it is ordered by the court that the common prison in said county be made use of for that purpose, to be used and employed for the keeping, correcting, and setting to work of rogues, vagabonds, and common beggars, and other idle, disorderly, and lewd persons; and Cephas Clapp, of Northampton, is nominated and appointed master of said house of correction."

May 3, 1833, Charles Phelps, Joseph Lyman, and Daniel Stebbins, a committee appointed for the purpose, made a contract with Asahel S. Abel for the "erection and finishing of a county house of brick, to be connected with and to accommodate the gaol." The building was examined and accepted Sept. 8, 1834, and cost $4100. The same committee, finding the roof of the gaol very defective, caused the same to be sheathed with tin, at a cost of $225.90.*

The jailers from 1825 to 1852 were Cephas Clapp, Ansel Wright (one year), Frederick W. Clark, William W. Partridge, Christopher Wright, and Hiram Ferry.

The present jail and house of correction was ordered built in September, 1850, and was finished in 1852. It is of brick, consists of a central edifice, four stories or sixty-six feet in height, with basement and attic, and with ground dimensions forty-six by sixty-one feet; and two wings, each with a frontage of sixty-five feet and a width of forty-five, and fifty feet in height. The jail wing contains two departments,—one for males, the other for females, that for males including twelve cells, eight by ten feet in size and ten feet high, while that for females has twenty-two cells, four by ten feet and ten feet high. The other wing is the "house of correction," and has fifty-four cells corresponding in size to the cells for females in the jail wing. These are all for males. The cell-floors are of brick.

The building contains also the keeper's residence, chapel, poor debtors' room, hospital, and bathing-room. In the rear of the main building is a workshop, thirty by sixty feet and two stories in height.

The jailers who have served in the present institution are Hiram Ferry, Cornelius Delano, and James Bangs; the last serving five years,—1856 to 1861. Since the last date named the sheriff has discharged the duties of a jailer.

CHAPTER III.

REPRESENTATIVE DISTRICTS—CIVIL LISTS.

REPRESENTATIVE DISTRICTS.

PRIOR to 1857 each town in the county was entitled to separate representation in the General Court. Districts were first formed in that year, each comprised of two or more towns, and each empowered to send one or more representatives. Two changes in the composition of these districts have since been made.

From 1857 to 1866, inclusive, the districts were as follows:

First District.—Easthampton, Hatfield, Northampton, and Southampton.—Two representatives.

* Thomas Pratt was employed by the committee to make a "survey and plan of the county ground."

Second District.—Chesterfield, Huntington, Westhampton, and Williamsburg.—One representative.

Third District.—Cummington, Goshen, Middlefield, Plainfield, and Worthington.—One representative.

Fourth District.—Hadley and South Hadley.—One representative.

Fifth District.—Amherst, Granby, and Pelham.—One representative.

Sixth District.—Belchertown, Enfield, Greenwich, Prescott, and Ware.—Two representatives.

From 1867 to 1876, inclusive, the districts were as follows:

First District.—Easthampton, Northampton, Southampton, and Westhampton.—Two representatives.

Second District.—Chesterfield, Cummington, Goshen, Middlefield, Plainfield, and Worthington.—One representative.

Third District.—Hadley, Hatfield, and Williamsburg.—One representative.

Fourth District.—Amherst and South Hadley.—One representative.

Fifth District.—Belchertown, Granby, and Pelham.—One representative.

Sixth District.—Enfield, Greenwich, Prescott, and Ware.—One representative.

From 1877 to the present time (1879) the districts have been as follows:

First District.—Easthampton, Northampton, and Southampton.—Two representatives.

Second District.—Hadley, Hatfield, Westhampton, and Williamsburg.—One representative.

Third District.—Chesterfield, Cummington, Goshen, Huntington, Middlefield, Plainfield, and Worthington.—One representative.

Fourth District.—Amherst, Pelham, Prescott, and South Hadley.—One representative.

Fifth District.—Belchertown, Enfield, Granby, Greenwich, and Ware.—One representative.

CIVIL LIST.

Among the residents of Hampshire who have served the country in public offices are the following:

United States Senators.

Caleb Strong, Northampton, 1789–96; Eli Porter Ashmun, Northampton, 1816–18; Elijah Hunt Mills, Northampton, 1820–27; Isaac C. Bates, Northampton, 1841–45.

Governors of the Commonwealth.

Caleb Strong, Northampton, 1800–7.

Secretaries of the Commonwealth.

Ephraim M. Wright, Northampton, 1853–56; Oliver Warner, Northampton, 1858–76.

State Senators.

Levi Stockbridge, Hadley, 1865–66; Edmund H. Sawyer, Easthampton, 1867–68; Edward A. Thomas, Prescott, 1869; Stephen M. Crosby, Williamsburg, 1870; Rufus D. Woods, Enfield, 1872–73; Francis Edson, Hadley, 1874; William M. Gaylord, Northampton, 1876; Lewis N. Gilbert, Ware, 1877–78.

County Treasurers.

Maj. John Pynchon, Springfield, May 27, 1660, to 1681; Mr. Peter Tilton, Hadley, 1682 to 1688; John Pynchon, Springfield, appointed Jan. 23, 1689; . . . William Pynchon, Springfield, from 1798, and perhaps earlier, to 1808, when he died; Edward Pynchon, appointed March 30, 1808, continued until November, 1812; Daniel Stebbins, November 12, 1812, to 1845; Jonathan H. Butler, 1846 to 1849; Charles De Lano, 1850 to 1858; † Henry S. Gere, 1859 to 1876; Watson L. Smith, 1877 to —.

† Prior to 1835 treasurers were chosen yearly. In that year, and subsequently, they were chosen for terms of three years.

*Sheriffs.

The following have served as sheriffs of Hampshire County since the adoption of the constitution of the commonwealth in 1780. The dates are those of appointment :

Elisha Porter, Hadley, Sept. 20, 1781.
Ebenezer Mattoon, Amherst, June 9, 1796.
Thomas Shepard, Northampton, Oct. 8, 1811.
Ebenezer Mattoon, Amherst, June 20, 1812.
Joseph Lyman, Northampton, July 3, 1816.
Samuel L. Hinekley, Northampton, Nov. 25, 1844.
Alfred L. Strong, Easthampton, July 8, 1851.
William A. Hawley, Northampton, March 10, 1853.
Henry A. Longley, Belchertown, Jan 24, 1855.†

Judges of Probate.

Col. John Pynchon, Springfield, appointed 1692.
Col. Samuel Partridge, Hatfield, 1703.
Col. John Stoddard, Northampton, 1729.
Col. Timothy Dwight, Northampton, 1748.
Col. Isaac Williams, Hatfield, 1764-74.
Dr. Samuel Mather, Northampton, 1776.‡
Eleazer Porter, Hadley, 1779.
Samuel Henshaw, Northampton, 1797.
Jonathan Leavitt, Greenfield, 1809.
Joseph Lyman, Northampton, 1810.
Samuel Hinekley, Northampton, 1816.
Ithamar Conkey, Amherst, 1834.
Samuel F. Lyman, Northampton, 1858.
Samuel T. Spaulding, Northampton, 1873.
William G. Bassett, Easthampton, 1879.§

Registers of Probate.

Samuel Partridge, Hatfield, appointed 1692.
John Pynchon, Springfield, 1703.
Timothy Dwight, Northampton, 1729.
Timothy Dwight, Jr., Northampton, 1748.
Solomon Stoddard, Northampton, 1764.
Israel Williams, Jr., Hatfield, 1769-74.
John C. Williams, Hadley, 1776.||
Samuel Hinekley, Northampton, 1787.
Isaac C. Bates, Northampton, 1816.
Samuel F. Lyman, Northampton, 1827.
A. Perry Peck, Northampton, 1855.
Luke Lyman, Northampton, 1859.

Clerks of the Courts.¶

Elizur Holyoke, Springfield, appointed September, 1660.
Samuel Partridge, Hatfield, March, 1676.
John Holyoke, Springfield, 1678.
John Pynchon, Springfield, Dec. 26, 1693.
Israel Williams, Hatfield, 1735.
William Williams, Hatfield, Feb. 14, 1758.
Robert Breck, Northampton, May 21, 1778.
Joseph Lyman, Northampton, 1798.
Josiah Dwight, Northampton, 1810.
John Taylor, Northampton, 1811.
Josiah Dwight, Northampton, 1812.
Solomon Stoddard, Northampton, 1821.
Samuel Wells, Northampton, 1837.
William P. Strickland, Northampton, 1865.

Registers of Deeds.

The first record of real estate conveyances for the middle district of Hampshire County made in Northampton bears date Aug. 1, 1787. The office of the register for the old county of Hampshire was previously kept in West Springfield, from whence it was removed to Springfield. The following have been registers of deeds from the several dates named, respectively: Ebenezer Hunt, Aug. 1, 1787; Levi Lyman, May 20, 1796; Solomon Stoddard, May 24, 1811; Levi Lyman, May 15, 1821; Charles Hooker,†† Jan. 29, 1830; C. P. Huntington, May 16, 1833; Giles C. Kellogg, Dec. 30, 1833; Harvey Kirkland, June 9, 1846; Henry P. Billings, Jan. 1, 1871.

Trial-Justices.

In 1858 a law was passed giving certain powers in criminal cases to justices of the peace, who were entitled Trial-Justices. These were appointed by the Governor, to hold office for three years. The county of Hampshire is entitled to ten trial-justices. The names of those persons who have held the office since the law went into effect are given below. Those still in office are designated by a *.

Horace I. Hodges, Northampton, appointed May 7, 1858.
James W. Boyden, Amherst, May 7, 1858.
William S. Brackenridge, Ware, May 11, 1858.
Elisha H. Brewster, Worthington, May 7, 1858.
Epaphras Clark, Enfield, May 7, 1858.
Elijah N. Woods, Huntington, June 3, 1858.
Franklin Dickinson,* Belchertown, June 8, 1858.
Albion P. Howe, Amherst, Dec. 8, 1859.
Albion P. Peck,* Northampton, June 29, 1860.
Francis De Witt, Ware, Oct. 3, 1860.
Franklin D. Richards,* Ware, Jan. 20, 1863.
Samuel Wells, Northampton, Oct. 7, 1863.
Charles Richards,* Enfield, May 28, 1864.
Hiram Smith, Jr., South Hadley, Dec. 30, 1864.
Oliver Pease, Amherst, May 5, 1865.
Wm. P. Strickland, Northampton, May 17, 1865.
Seth Warner, Easthampton, May 25, 1865.
R. Ogden Dwight, South Hadley, Jan. 23, 1868.
C. Edgar Smith, Northampton, March 23, 1869.
William G. Bassett, Easthampton, May 28, 1869.
Alfred M. Copeland, Huntington, June 11, 1869.
Francis H. Dawes,* Cummington, April 5, 1870.
Garry Munson,* Huntington, June 14, 1872.
Edward A. Thomas,* Amherst, May 19, 1874.
Haynes H. Chilson,* Northampton, May 12, 1875.
Nathan Morse,* South Hadley, 1876.
Lafayette Clapp,* Easthampton, 1877.

County Commissioners.

The following have served as commissioners, during the periods named, as nearly as could be ascertained: Hon. Levi Lyman, 1829-30; Hon. Charles P. Phelps, 1828-34; Alvan Rice, 1829-33; Ithamar Conkey, 1830-34; Osmyn Baker, 1834-37; Elisha Strong, 1835-40; Joseph Cummings, 1835-52; Channey B. Rising, 1838-40; Roswell Hubbard, 1838; Israel Billings, 1841-43; Timothy A. Phelps, 1841-43; Mark Doolittle, 1844-46; Joel Hayden, 1844-52; Hon. William Bowdoin, 1847-48; Benjamin Barrett, 1847-48; Haynes H. Chilson, 1850-52; Horace I. Hodges, 1853-54; Elisha H. Brewster, 1853-65; John Warner, 1853; William P. Dickinson, 1855-59; Elkanah Ring, Jr., 1856-58; Daniel B. Gillett, 1859-61; Enoch H. Lyman, 1860-66; William C. Eaton, 1862-67; P. Smith Williams, 1867-69; Elisha A. Edwards, 1868-79; Justin Thayer, 1869-74; Samuel Mills Cook, 1871-75; Elnathan Graves, 1875-79; Flavel Gaylord, 1879.

Special County Commissioners.

Ithamar Conkey, 1828-29; Oliver Smith, 1830-34; Elisha Strong, 1830-34; Dyar Baneroff, 1835; Ephraim Smith, 1835-40; Benjamin White, 1835-40; William Clark, Jr., 1841-43; James H. Clapp, 1841-43; Joseph Smith, 1841-48; †† Died 1833; C. P. Huntington appointed to fill the vacancy.

* See ante, "Civil Organization."

† The office was made elective in 1856.

‡ A vacancy of about two years preceded Dr. Mather's appointment.

§ Vacancy in 1878.

|| A vacancy of about two years preceded Mr. Williams' appointment.

¶ See ante, "Courts."

 Office made elective in 1856. Mr. Wells was accidentally shot in October, 1864, Mr. Strickland succeeding for the unexpired term of two years.

Luther Edwards, 1844-49; John A. Morton, 1849; George Allen, 1850-52; Elkanah Ring, Jr., 1850-52; Adolphus Strong, 1853-56; Otis G. Hill, 1853-56; Charles Adams, 1857-62; Justin Thayer, 1857-68; Lorenzo S. Nash, 1863-68; Elnathan Graves, 1869-74; Austin Eastman, 1869-73;* Samuel L. Parsons, 1874-79; Charles E. Blood, 1874-79.

JUDICIARY.

Since the Revolution the persons whose names follow have been appointed to positions on the Bench:

Justices of Superior Court of Judicature and Supreme Judicial Court.—Simeon Strong, Amherst, appointed in 1801, continued until his death in 1805; Charles Augustus Dewey, a native of Northampton, appointed from Worcester in 1837, continued until the year of his death, 1866; Charles Edward Forbes, Northampton, appointed in 1848, resigned in the same year, resides in Northampton.

Justices of the Court of Common Pleas.—Solomon Strong, Amherst, appointed in 1820, resigned in 1842, died in 1850; Samuel Howe, Northampton, appointed in 1820, left the Bench in 1828, the year of his death; Charles Edward Forbes, Northampton, appointed in 1847, and to the Supreme Bench in the following year.

William Allen, Northampton, was appointed in 1872 to the Bench of the Supreme Court, established in 1859, and is still in that position, 1879.

CHAPTER IV.

SOCIETIES.

THE HAMPSHIRE DISTRICT MEDICAL SOCIETY

was organized in 1833, and embraced in that year the following members: Joseph H. Flint, Benjamin Barrett, David Hunt, Elisha Mather, Edward E. Denniston, Northampton; Reuben Bell, Hadley; Isaac G. Cutler, Rufus Cowles, Amherst; Elihu Dwight, South Hadley; William Bridgman, Belchertown; Atherton Clark, Ira Bryant, Cummington; Bela B. Jones, Southampton; Caleb H. Stickney, Huntington; Samuel Shaw, Plainfield; Joseph Warren, Middlefield; Edward Dickinson, John Hastings, and Moses Porter.

The subjoined additional names first appear in the books of the treasurer of the society in the years given respectively: 1840, Watson Loud, S. Clapp, Lewis S. Hopkins (now, 1879, in Bridgewater), Gardner Dorrance, Amherst. 1841, Edward G. Upford, West Springfield; T. H. Brown, Worthington; † Henry Orcutt, Westhampton; † Chauncey A. Hall, Northampton; S. E. Strong, Amherst; Philemon Stacy, Hadley, lost his eyesight and left the profession. 1842, Daniel Thompson, Northampton, to which place he removed in 1837; Thos. Meekins, Williamsburg; Addison S. Peck, † Hatfield, removed to California. 1843, Horatio Thompson, Belchertown; James Thompson, † Northampton; Seth Fish, North Hadley, died at North Amherst; Israel H. Taylor, Pelham, was a resident of Amherst in 1864. 1844, Artemas Bell, † Southampton; Washington Shaw, died at Haydenville. 1845, Ebenezer C. Richardson, Ware. 1846, J. W. Smith, practiced dentistry; Lorin Allen, Belchertown, now in Illinois. 1848, Franklin Bonney, Hadley, where he is still in practice; Samuel D. Brooks, Norwich, now at Springfield, Mass. 1852, Benjamin F. Smith, Amherst, where he died; Samuel A. Fisk, Northampton. 1853, D. O. Perry, Chesterfield; James Dunlap, Northampton. 1854, Francis C. Green, Easthampton. 1855, Levi Chamberlain, Hatfield; Cyrus N. Chamberlain, son of the preceding, Granby, is now in Lawrence. 1856, Edward S. Hill, Williamsburg. 1857, John H. Richardson, Chesterfield. 1858, Henry C. Prentiss, Northampton; Theron Temple, Belchertown; Lebbeus E. Marsh, Granby. 1860, John W. Barker, Easthampton; William M. Trow, Haydenville; William Lester, South Hadley; Noah Gilman, Hatfield. 1861, George F. Thompson, † Belchertown; Lorin H. Pease, Amherst; Austin W. Thompson, Northampton; Edward B. Barrett, Northampton. 1862, John W. Bement, Belchertown. 1864, Alfred Montville, Hatfield; † William H. Prince, present first assistant superintendent of the Hospital for the Insane at Northampton; Joseph W. Winslow, Easthampton. 1865, David W. Miner, Ware. 1866, Cyrus K. Bartlett, then connected with the hospital at Northampton, now in charge of the State Lunatic Asylum, Minnesota; Oscar C. De Wolf, now commissioner of health at Chicago, Ill.; Edwin M. Johnson, Williamsburg, studied medicine at the office of Dr. James Dunlap, Northampton, and with his entire family was swept away in the flood which devastated the former place, May 16, 1874; Edwin F. Ward, Easthampton, now practicing in New York City; Dyar B. N. Fish, Amherst; Harlow Gamwell and Josiah H. Goddard, † Huntington; Albert H. Daniels and Orvis F. Bigelow, Amherst. 1867, Alonzo Lewis, Hatfield; John Dole † and Edward R. Lewis, Amherst; John Yale, Ware; Oscar L. Roberts, Belchertown. 1868, John B. Tyler, Henry B. Stoddard (now at Newtonville), and Charles L. Knowlton, Northampton; Thomas D. Smith, Easthampton; Charles M. Billings, Hatfield. 1870, John B. Learned, Florence. 1871, Chester M. Barton, Worthington, now of Hatfield; Gardner Cox, South Hadley Falls; Cyrus B. Smith, Granby; Edwin A. Kemp, Enfield. 1872, Samuel E. Thayer, Southampton; John R. Greenleaf, Easthampton. 1874, William Dwight, North Amherst; George A. Pierce, Hatfield; Thomas Gilfillan, Northampton. 1875, Christopher Seymour, Edward B. Nims, assistant superintendent of the hospital; Pliny Earl, superintendent of the hospital, and Junius M. Hall, Northampton; Joseph C. Yale, Ware, son of John Yale, M.D. 1876, Arthur H. Kimball, Cummington. 1877, Harmon Heed, Pelham; Charles W. Parsons, Worthington; Solon R. Towne, Enfield; James D. Seymour, now of Whately. 1878, Daniel Pickard, assistant at the hospital, Northampton; George W. Wood, Southampton; Elbridge Gerry Wheeler, Middlefield; James N. Dickson, now at Huntington; Charles W. Cooper, Amherst.

DR. JOSIAH GOODHUE.—This distinguished medical man, though not a native of the Connecticut Valley, was for a long time a citizen of Hampshire County, and foremost in his profession. He was born at Dunstable, Middlesex Co., Mass., Jan. 17, 1759. Early in life he devoted himself to study, and entered Harvard University about the beginning of the Revolutionary war, but owing to the disturbances of that period the doors of the institution were of necessity closed, and he returned to his home. Here he was troubled by a white-swelling upon one of his knees, and applied to Dr. Kittredge, of Tewksbury, for medical treatment. While under the care of Dr. Kittredge he became interested in medicine, and afterward began the study of physic and surgery with him, continuing for two years, which was then the customary term. He then returned to Putney, Vt., where his parents then resided, and commenced practice, under very discouraging conditions, when he was about twenty years of age. The reputation of Dr. Kittredge, however, gave him some advantages, and he soon won the confidence of the people; and a successful operation soon gave him a reputation and brought him plenty of practice.

By great industry he ere long obtained an extensive patronage, and his practice eventually extended widely in Vermont, and thence to New Hampshire and Massachusetts. His first capital operation—the amputation of a leg—he performed without ever having seen it done before,—was guided solely by knowledge obtained from books. His reputation rapidly increased and spread abroad, and he was thronged with students,

* A. R. Owen is named as special commissioner in 1872.

† Deceased.

‡ Deceased.

§ See medical chapter in Franklin County history.

who came from far and near,—among them the afterward greatly celebrated Dr. Nathan Smith, the founder of the medical department of Dartmouth College.

“In the year 1800, in consequence of his high attainments and respectable standing in the profession, the faculty of Dartmouth College conferred upon him the highest medical honor which can be granted to any physician, viz., the honorary degree of doctor of medicine.”

In 1803, with a view to extend his sphere of usefulness, he removed to Chester, Vt., where he remained until 1816, fully sustaining his previous reputation, when the approaching infirmities of age admonished him of the necessity of relaxing somewhat from his arduous duties. He accordingly removed to Hadley, Hampshire Co., Mass., where his duties would be less laborious, on account of the more level character of the country. Here he continued to enjoy an unlimited practice, and maintained his great reputation in the profession until declining health compelled him to abandon active practice.

In 1823 he was appointed by the trustees president of the Berkshire Medical Institution, which position he continued to hold to the time of his death, on the 9th of September, 1829, in his seventy-first year.

Dr. Goodhue was for a great number of years president of the Windham County Medical Society, called the Vermont Second Medical Society. He was also for one term a representative in the State Legislature.

His practice in operative surgery was very extensive. He performed the operation of trepanning upward of forty times, and operated for strangulated hernia as many more. He believed himself to have been the first man in New England to amputate at the shoulder-joint.

He was extremely temperate and regular in his manner of living, and for many years previous to his death abstained entirely from spirituous liquors, at a time when their use was universal among all classes.

He raised a family of eight children,—four sons and four daughters. Two of his sons adopted the profession of medicine, one of whom died in Alabama about 1842, and the other settled in Canada. His eldest surviving daughter married Dr. Twitchell, of Keene, one of the most distinguished surgeons of New Hampshire.

DR. DAVID HUNT was the son of Ebenezer Hunt, of Northampton, Mass. He was born at Northampton in 1773. His study of the theory and practice of medicine was mostly in his father's office. His active practice commenced in his native town soon after he became of age, and was continued to the time of his death, in 1837, at the age of sixty-four years.

Although not a college graduate, he was an excellent scholar and respectable practitioner, and was held in such high repute that in 1818 Yale College conferred upon him the honorary degree of doctor of medicine. He was a member of the American Antiquarian Society, the American Geological Society, and of the Physico-Medical Society, of New York.

He devoted considerable time to the study of mineralogy and geology, and collected a very fine and rare cabinet of minerals. He was on terms of intimacy with Dr. Bruce and Professors Siliman, Cleveland, and Hitchcock, and other distinguished geologists and mineralogists. He was admitted to the Massachusetts Medical Association in 1813, and resigned in 1833.

DR. ELISHA MATHER was a native of Northampton, Hampshire Co., where he was born in 1792. Both his father and grandfather were also natives of that place, and both were eminent physicians. The elder was a contemporary of Dr. Pynchon, of Springfield, and Dr. Thomas Williams, of Deerfield, and the three were about the only physicians of note in their day in the Connecticut Valley in Massachusetts.

Dr. S. W. Williams says that Dr. Mather was a respectable practitioner, and a member, counselor, and censor of the Massachusetts Medical Society, with which he united in 1824, and continued his fellowship to the time of his death, on the 24th of April, 1840, at the age of forty-eight years.

From an obituary, which appeared at the time of his decease in the columns of the Hampshire Gazette, we extract the following:

“In noticing the death of this good man and physician, it is not our object to analyze particularly his character or describe minutely the elements of what it was composed, but generally to bear testimony to his high standing in the profession and the excellency of his character.

“Dr. Mather was undoubtedly more self-taught than most of his professional brethren. He was indebted to his talents, his industry, and his application for the rank which he attained. In all the various branches of his profession he was entitled to entire confidence. With the structure and functions of the different parts of the human system he was most intimately acquainted, and was seldom surpassed in accuracy of anatomical knowledge.

“In his deportment he was neither forbidding nor imposing, but affable and accessible to all, so that his younger brethren could always approach him without being apprehensive that they should be overpowered by his feeling of superiority. In his domestic relations he was greatly endeared.”

DANIEL THOMPSON, M.D., was born at Pelham, Jan. 14, 1800. His father and grandfather were farmers of that town during their lives. His paternal grandmother, whose maiden name was Mary Cowan, was of Scotch descent; his mother was Matilda Pierce, of Middleborough, near Boston.

He attended the common schools of his native town, which were then in good repute, and afterward became a member of Amherst Academy, of which Jared H. Hallock was then principal. He pursued medical studies at Northampton and Pittsfield, and attended three full courses of lectures at the Berkshire Medical Institution, at Pittsfield, in the years 1823–25. From Dec. 3, 1825, until Oct. 20, 1837, he pursued the practice of his profession at Pelham, from whence he removed to Northampton, at the suggestion of Dr. Flint, who was about to remove to Springfield. In 1827 he married Caroline Augusta, a daughter of Dr. David Hunt, son of Dr. Ebenezer Hunt, who died at Northampton, Jan. 18, 1874.

In 1839 Dr. Thompson formed a copartnership with Dr. Benjamin Barrett, one of his former preceptors in Northampton, which lasted till the latter retired from practice,—a period of nearly seven years. He then took as partner his brother James, the connection lasting until the latter's death, when he admitted to the same relation his nephew, A. W. Thompson,—graduate of the Boston School of Medicine,—whom he had adopted as a son. After a few years this partnership was dissolved, Dr. Thompson ever after pursuing his profession single-handed down to the present time.

Dr. Thompson has risen from comparative poverty to a condition of pecuniary independence, notwithstanding the generosity with which he has given of his means for worthy objects. With him the fee was never the inspiring motive in the exercise of his profession, but rather the wish to benefit mankind.

EDWARD EVANS DENNISTON, M.D., was born at Cocksheath, County Donegal, Ireland, July 2, 1803, and received his education at Dublin, and at Edinburgh, in Scotland. He was for six years bound apprentice to the firm of Bernard Rogan & Sons, surgeons and physicians to the hospital and dispensaries at Strabane, County Tyrone, Ireland, and in that institution succeeded Dr. Rogan as surgeon upon the latter's election to the superintendency of the Ulster Insane Asylum, at Londonderry. In 1833 he settled in Northampton, for three years successfully pursuing his profession in partnership with Dr. Benjamin Barrett, and the succeeding ten years quite as successfully alone. A severe injury which he received at the end of this period unfitting him for the drudgery of ordinary country practice, he entered upon the charge of an establishment devoted to the cure of chronic invalidism, and known as "Spring Dale," situated near the village of Northampton. After thirty-three years of unremitting service in that institution, he retired therefrom in May, 1879, but continues, at the age of seventy-six, in active practice.

JOSEPH H. FLINT, M.D., was born at Leicester, Worcester Co., Mass.; removed to Northampton prior to 1830, where, for a number of years, he followed the practice of his chosen profession. He subsequently removed to Springfield, where he died. While at Northampton he was associated professionally with Dr. Elisha Mather.*

JAMES DUNLAP, M.D., attended Amherst College from 1843 to 1845, graduated five years afterwards at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, in New York City, and has since been engaged in active practice in Northampton, Mass.

TIMOTHY J. GRIDLEY was a pupil of the elder Dr. Smith in the medical college at New Haven; was celebrated as a surgeon, and was in practice at Amherst, in or near the year 1821.†

THE HAMPSHIRE MISSIONARY SOCIETY AT NORTHAMPTON was incorporated Feb. 21, 1804. Officers of the society were chosen yearly "on the Thursday of the week when the Court of Common Pleas" was held, in the month of August. The following were the officers for the year 1805,—President, his Excellency, Caleb Strong;‡ Vice-President, Rev. Samuel Hopkins; Treasurer, Ruggles Woodbridge, Esq.; Corresponding Secretary, Rev. Enoch Hale; Recording Secretary, Rev. Samuel Taggart; Trustees, Hon. John Hastings, Joseph Lathrop, D.D., Hon. Ebenezer Hunt, Joseph Lyman, D.D., Justin Ely, Esq., Rev. Solomon Williams, Wm. Billings, Esq., David Parsons, D.D., Chas. Phelps, Esq., Rev. Rich'd S. Storrs.

THE HAMPSHIRE BIBLE SOCIETY

was formed July 10, 1816, at a meeting holden at the courthouse in Northampton, "for the purpose of securing the distribution of the Holy Scriptures without note or comment." At this meeting Noah Webster, Esq., was chairman, and Josiah Dwight, secretary.

A constitution was adopted at the same meeting, the second article of which provides that the "towns in the vicinity of the county of Hampshire containing a member or members of the society shall enjoy all the benefits and privileges of towns within the county."

The constitution provided that any surplus funds not needed for use within the limits of the society shall be forwarded to the American Bible Society, established in New York, "to which this society shall so far be considered auxiliary."

A president, vice-president, treasurer, secretary, and a board of trustees are chosen annually. The president and vice-president are trustees ex-officio. The treasurer is the only paid officer. The following were the first officers chosen: President, Hon. Caleb Strong; Vice-President, Rev. Nathan Perkins; Treasurer, Ebenezer Hunt, Jr., Esq.; Secretary, Isaac C. Bates;‡ Trustees, Hon. Joseph Lyman, Rev. Henry Lord, Dr. William Porter, of Amherst, Rev. Nathan Pease, Noah Webster, Esq.

The following have served as presidents: Caleb Strong, 1816; Nathan Perkins, 1817 to 1839; Hon. Mark Doolittle, 1840 to 1855; Rev. Gordon Hall, 1856 to 1879. As vice-presidents: Nathan Perkins, 1816; Joseph Lyman, 1817 to 1823; Isaac C. Bates, 1824 to 1830; Hon. Mark Doolittle, 1832|| to 1839; Rev. Charles Wiley, 1840 to 1844; Hon. David Mack, 1845 to 1853; Luke Sweetzer, 1854 to 1871; Rev. Ephraim Lyman, 1872 to 1873; Rev. Samuel T. Seelye, 1876|| to 1879. As treasurers: Ebenezer Hunt, Jr., 1816 to 1823; Samuel Wells, Jr., Esq., 1824 to 1830; Eliphalet Williams, 1832|| to 1873; J. L. Warriner, 1876|| to 1879. As secretaries, Isaac C. Bates, 1816 to 1823; Eliphalet Williams, 1824 to 1830; William H. Stoddard, 1832 to 1879.

Present Officers.—Rev. Gordon Hall, D.D., President; Rev. Samuel T. Seelye, D.D., Vice-President; William H. Stoddard, Secretary; J. L. Warriner, Treasurer; John Whittlesey, Auditor; Revs. W. S. Leavitt, E. G. Cobb, A. M. Colton, E. S. Dwight, and A. J. Lincoln, Directors.

HISTORY OF THE TOWNS OF HAMPSHIRE COUNTY.

NORTHAMPTON.

As the fertility of the soil, beauty of location, and picturesque scenery of the "great river," as Cotton Mather called the Connecticut, attracted the attention of the overcrowded settlements at the Bay in 1635, so in 1653 the fertile meadows of Nonotuck¶ were regarded as the most inviting locality for a new plantation by the settlers at Windsor, Hartford, and Springfield, and on the 20th day of May in that year a petition was presented to the General Court by inhabitants of the above towns for leave to plant a settlement at Nonotuck. There is, however, no doubt that the real projectors and those through whose energy and influence the scheme was sustained and fostered were John Pynchon, son of William Pynchon, the founder of Roxbury and Springfield, Elizur Holyoke, son-in-law of John Pynchon, and Samuel Chapin.

The following is a copy of the original petition:

"To the Right Worshypful Governour, and the Worshypful Magistrates, Assistants, and Deputies of this much-honored Court,—Your humble petitioners wish increase of all felicity. Your humble Petitioners being fully persuaded by your former promptness and pious endeavors to begin and settle Plantations in such places as appeared convenient within the liberty of your Jurisprudence and Patent, for the further enlarging of the territories of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the common utility of the Common Weal, are therefore emboldened to present these few lines to your Judicious consideration, and their request therein that you would be pleased to give and grant Liberty to your Petitioners whose names are subscribed, and such as so join with them, according to your wonted clemency, power, right, and authority, from, by, and under you to plant, possess, and inhabit the place, being on Conctiquot River, above Springfield, called Nonotuck, as their own inheritance, according to their divisions by estate, and to carry on the affairs of the place by erecting a town there, to be governed according to the laws, directions, and instructions they shall receive from you. Your Petitioners having some knowledge of the place by reason of the propinquity of our habitation, to be a place desirable to erect a

* See chapter on the medical profession of Hampden County.

† For additional items upon the medical profession of Hampshire County, see histories of the various towns.

‡ Ex-officio trustee of the Massachusetts Missionary Society, instituted at Boston, May 28, 1799; also United States Senator.

¶ There is a tradition that one English family came to this place in 1652, and lived here during the next winter on land which lies east of what is called Hawley Street (Williams).

‡ Subsequently United States Senator.

|| No election of officers in 1831, 1874, and 1875.

CENTRAL PART OF NORTHAMPTON, MASS., IN 1839,

SHOWING THE COURT-HOUSE, FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, ETC., AS SEEN FROM THE ROAD IN A NORTHEASTERN DIRECTION.

City Hall. Public Library. First Congregational Church. Court-House.
CENTRAL PART OF NORTHAMPTON, MASS., IN 1879.

town in for the furtherance of the public weal, by providing corn and raising cattle, not only for their own but likewise for the good of others,—the propagating of the gospel,—the place promising in an ordinary way of God's Providence a comfortable subsistence, whereby people may live, and attend upon God in his holy ordinances without distraction. So, committing you to the Guidance of the mighty Counsellor, we rest your humble Petitioners.

"Edward Elmore, Richard Smith, John Gilbert, Wm. Miller, John Allen, Richard Wekley, Thomas Barnham, Matthias Foot, Thomas Root, Wm. Clark, Joseph Smith, John Stedman, Jonathan Smith, Wm. Holton, Robt. Bartlett, John Cole, Nicholas Ackley, John Webb, Thomas Stebuan, Thomas Bird, Wm. Janes, John North, Joseph Bird, and James Bird."

This petition for the planting of Non-o-tuck was supplemented by a petition signed by John Pynchon, Elizur Holyoke, and Samuel Chapin, praying that the prayers of the above petitioners might be granted, and they state that twenty-five families at least were desirous of forming a new settlement, "many of them," to use their own words, "of considerable quality for estates and fit matter for a church when it shall please God to give opportunity that way;" and further on it is stated that "the inducement to us in these desires is not any sinister respect of our own, but that we, being so alone, by this means may have some more neighborhood and your jurisdiction."

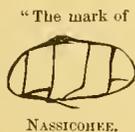

The petition was finally granted by the General Court, May 18, 1653, and Messrs. Pynchon, Holyoke, and Chapin were chosen as commissioners to lay out the plantation of Non-o-tuck.

The next move to be made in the grand scheme which Mr. Pynchon had projected was the purchase of the lands from the Indians, and in this he followed in the footsteps of his illustrious and humane father in dealing honestly and fairly with the children of the forest. The following is a copy of the instrument that conveyed the lands of Non-o-tuck to John Pynchon and others:

"Be it known by these presents that Chickwallop, alias Wawhillowa, Nenassahalant, Nassischoee, Kiniks, Paquaharant, Assellquoompas, & Awounsk, the wife of Walluther, all Nonotuck, who are the chief and proper owners of all the lands on the west side of Connecticut River at Nonotuck, on the one, do give, grant, bargain, and sell unto John Pynchon, of Springfield, on the other party, to him, his heirs, and assigns, all the Grounds and Meadows, Woods and Ponds & W lying on the west side of Quonneticut River, beginning the small river (below Munham) called Sankrohouk, & so up by Quonneticut River to the little meadow called Capawonk, namely, to the little brook or Gutter on this side Capawonk, which little brook is called Masquanpe, and the Grounds lying Westward from Connecticut River (within the compass aforesaid) for nine miles out into the woods, viz.: as far as Manskoonish is from Springfield,—for so it was expressed to the Indians,—all that Tract of Grounds from Sankronk river, Quonaikguck, called Munham, Pochneck, Pelowwag, Aspowounk, Luckcommuk, Assattayagg, Hayyagg, Nayyounhegg, Masquup, and by whatsoever other names the said Grounds are called, & all out into the woods from the great river for 9 miles within this compass. The aforesaid Indians, and in Particular Wawhillowa, Nenassahalant, & Nassischoee, being the Sachems of Nonotuck, do for themselves, & with the consent of the other Indians and owners of the Said Grounds, Sell, Give, and Grant unto John Pynchon, of Springfield, and to his assigns, for and in consideration of one hundred fathom of Wampam by Sale & for Ten coats (beside some small gifts) in hand paid to the said Sachems & owners, all the land aforesaid as* these presents have bargained, Granted & Sold to the said Pynchon all and singular the said lands free from all Incumbrances of Indians, provided the Said Pynchon Shall plow up, or cause to be plowed up, for the said Indians Sixteen acres of land on the Easterly side of Quonneticut river, which is to be done sometime next Summer, 1654; and in the meantime, viz., the next spring 1654, the Indians have liberty to plant their present cornfields, but after that time they are wholly to leave that west side of the river, & not to plant, or molest the English there.

* All the said premises the said Pynchon & his assigns Shall have & enjoy absolutely & clearly forever,† all Incumbrances from any Indians or their Cornfields. Witness of this these presents the said Indians have subscribed their marks this twenty-fourth day of September, 1653.

"The mark of CHICKWALLOP,

NASSISCHOOEE.

alias WAWHILLOWA.

NENESSAHALANT.

"The mark of PAQUAHALANT."

* Omissions in deed.

† This grant was witnessed by Elizur Holyoke, Henry Burt, Thomas Cooper, Thos. Stebbins, and two Indians.

The two great steps had now already been taken, and on Oct. 3, 1653, not two weeks after the purchase was made, the proprietors met at Springfield to confer concerning the future plantation and the regulation thereof. Among other things, it was agreed that of the petitioners all should be "resident there, and dwell, themselves and their families, there by the spring next ensuing the date hereof." It was also agreed that any person failing to do this should "lose his money paid for the purchase, with the charges." At this meeting it seems the whole number of petitioners did not appear, and ten new persons were substituted.

It is evident that the object of the above meeting was to permanently secure the settlement of the place in the following year, and at a meeting of the proprietors, held at Springfield, Nov. 15, 1653, it was announced that the petition had been granted, and the following order was made:

"It is ordered and agreed that all such persons as shall go up to Nalwotoge the next spring ensuing the date hereof, there to dwell the next winter, for the furthering and promoting the planting of the said place, it is agreed that every single man shall receive four acres of meadow besides the rest of his division, and every head of a family shall receive five acres beside the rest of their division."

In that early day it was considered an "inalienable right" of the "good men" of the town to designate who should be admitted into the plantation. At a meeting of the progenitors of the settlement, held at Springfield in 1653, a committee of five was appointed "to receive in such inhabitants as they shall judge fit for the carrying on the designs of the company, and to accommodate them according to the former rule, which is a quarter to twenty families, being in estimation eight hundred acres,"—that is, that the first twenty families were to have forty acres each.

Among the early regulations of the plantations were these: that there must be a residence of four years before any settler should have a right to either sell or let his lands, and in case he should remove from the town before the expiration of four years his lands should be declared forfeited.

In the spring of 1654, Pynchon, Holyoke, and Chapin, in furtherance of this plan, proceeded to lay out the plantation of Non-o-tuck, as shown by the following record in the old town-book of Northampton:

"A true copy of the bounds of the plantation which the Committee appointed by the Honored General Court laid out to the Planters of Nonotuck.

"Whereas, we whose names are underwritten were appointed by the General Court of the Massachusetts to lay out the land at Nonotuck for two plantations, for the present we have only appointed the bounds of one of them, to which we allow the great Meadow on the west side of Connecticut River, as also a little meadow, called by the Indians (Capawonke), which lieth about two miles above the great Meadow, the bounds of which plantation is to extend from the (south side) of the little meadow, called Capawonke, to the great falls, to Springfield ward; and westward is to extend nine miles into the woods, from the river of Connecticut, lying . . . east the foresaid meadows; and (the same) to belong to the planters and such as shall come to plant with them, who, according (to the) liberty granted from the Court, have made choice thereof for themselves and their successors, not molesting the Indians (nor) depriving them of their just right and property without allowance to their satisfaction.

"By us, JOHN PYNCHON,
ELEZUR HOLYOKE,
SAMUEL CHAPIN.

"SPRINGFIELD, 9th May, 1654."

In this connection the following record also appears, under date of Oct. 18, 1654:

"NONOTUCK PLANTATION.

"To the Honored General Court of the Massachusetts: We whose names are underwritten being appointed to divide the lands at Nonotuck into two plantations, we accordingly have granted to them that now first appear to remove thither to plant themselves on the west side of the River Connecticut, as they desired, and have laid out their bounds, viz., from the little meadow above (bire) plantation—which meadow is called Capawonke or Mattomett—down to the head of the falls which are below them, reserving the lands on the east side of said river for another Plantation, when God, by his Providence, shall so dispose thereof, and still remain your humble servants,

"JOHN PYNCHON,
ELEZUR HOLYOKE,
SAMUEL CHAPIN.

"The Court approves of this return."

We have now presented to the reader in detail the various petitions, orders, etc., that gave a "local habitation and a name" to Non-o-tuck, and next in order is to mention the names of those sturdy pioneers who left the rude comforts and conveniences of the plantations in this valley, that had been settled more than a decade, and had already taken upon them many of the attributes of the Eastern home, for an abode in the wilds of Non-o-tuck. It required no prophetic eye to discern that the rich intervals of this section must soon become the site of a flourishing settlement, and it is not surprising that the project of John Pynchon met with a hearty response, and that the people were anxious to rear their homes in the fertile valley of the Connecticut, on Non-o-tuck, within the shadows of those grand upheavals of creation, Mounts Tom and Holyoke.

Among the first of those courageous pioneers who located at Non-o-tuck, erecting the standard of home in the midst of a dense, uninviting wilderness, surrounded by wild beasts and the treacherous savages, were Thomas Judd, John King, Joseph Parsons, Thomas Bascom, Isaac Shelden, John Strong, Thos. Ford, Edward Elmore, Aaron Cook, John Hillyer, William Hulburt, Thomas Woodford, Samuel Wright, Robt. Bartlett, John Lyman, James Bridgman, Thomas Root, Alexander Edwards, Wm. Miller, David Burt, Samuel Allen, William Hannum, William Hulburt, Nathaniel Phelps, and John Stebbins.

The healthful climate and fertility of the soil of the "Plantation of Non-o-tuck," as the place was called, soon attracted the attention of others, and the years 1658 to 1662 witnessed an influx of sturdy yeomen from the adjoining settlements of Windsor, Hartford, and Springfield. Among them are mentioned the names of Edward Baker, John Searle, Eleazer Mather, Alexander Alvord, Wm. Clark, Henry Woodward, Enos Kingsley, Aaron Cook, John Strong, Medad Pomeroy, Jonathan Hunt, and John Taylor. Soon after came Israel Rusk, Preserved Clapp, Caleb Pomeroy, Solomon Stoddard, Robert Danks, Samuel Judd, and Thomas Judd.

It is a somewhat singular fact that of the twenty-four petitioners for the settlement of Non-o-tuck only eight settled here, viz., Edward Elmore, William Miller, Thomas Root, William Clark, William Holton, Robert Bartlett, John Webb, and William Janes.

The home-lots of the first settlers were located in the vicinity of what is now known as Market, Pleasant, King, and Hawley Streets. As the plantation increased, settlements were next made west of the "old church," and later south of Mill River.

The pioneers evidently gave but little attention to the laying out of streets, and it has been said that they were laid out by the cows, the inhabitants building wherever these animals made a path.

The causes which drove the fugitives from their native country to Plymouth Rock were still fresh in their minds, and the settlement had hardly been effected ere a movement was made toward the erection of a house of worship. It was placed under the control of the town, the town voting for the selection of a minister, his wages, etc.* The first meeting-house was contracted to be built by five of the settlers, and to be completed by the middle of April, 1655.

March 13, 1657, the town employed an agent "to obtain a minister, and to devise means to prevent the excess of liquors and cider from coming to town." This commission alone clearly portrays the character of the pioneers of Northampton. They were religious and temperate, firm in the right, and with a strength of character that rendered them conspicuous. They left their impress upon the following generations, and the "New England traits of character" have ever been synonyms with honesty, uprightness, sobriety, and Christianity.

During the first four years the expenses of the plantation must have been very light, as the first record of a tax voted was under date of March 29, 1658, when they voted a tax of thirty pounds to pay the town's debts; this doubtless covered the period from the date of settlement to that time. At that meeting it was also voted that a ferry-boat be built for the common use of the people.

"January 4, 1658, "The Town voted to pay Mr. Mather twenty-five pounds for half a year, in good and merchantable pay in wheat, in this place." They also granted eighty acres of land for the ministry.

December 20, 1658, "The Town voted one hundred pounds to build a minister's house."

It is quite certain that hospitality was not reckoned as one of the virtues of the good people of Northampton in 1672, as the town records for that year disclosed the following order:

"4th (1) '72, '73. Whereas a great deal of trouble, detriment, and change have been brought upon this Town by reason of receiving into the same Foreigners and Strangers, we do, therefore, by this order, and by this it is ordered, that whosoever in this town shall bring into it or receive into his family a foreigner or Stranger, or any man from abroad, or entertain him in his house above Ten days without Liberty from the Selectmen, shall forfeit to the Town Ten Shillings for every week so entertaining him. By the Selectmen, David Wilton, William Clark, Wm. Holton, Henry Woodward, and Medad Pomeroy."

Feb. 8, 1657, it was voted that three men should be chosen "to end small causes. They shall first choose one, and he that hath most votes by Papers Shall Stand for one and for the rest in order." It seems, however, there were but two chosen, William Holton and Thomas Bascom.

In 1658 thirty pounds were levied to pay the town debts.

In 1661 it was voted that the mill be free, and "that the Town will build a new boat."

It seems in those early days there was a penalty for being absent from town-meetings, as under date of Feb. 9, 1658, it was ordered that whosoever he be that absents himself from the town-meeting, after having been warned by the townsmen, shall forfeit the sum of 12*d.* A fine of 1*d.* was also ordered "if they be not at the beginning of the meeting when it is orderly begun."

Some trouble was evidently experienced in the town-meetings, as the following order appears on the town-book:

"Northampton, 19th of 12th mo., 1660. At a meeting of the Selectmen, considering that might be for the well ordering of town-meetings, and finding by experience that Tumults and many speaking at one time in Such a Tumultuous manner that it hinders the work in hand, and is dishonorable to God and grievous to many persons, do therefore order whilst any common business is in hand, or under consideration and debate, every man shall apply himself to the common work, and not to be more speakers than one at a time, lovingly and moderately, upon the Penalty of 12*d.* for every such offence, to be levied by distress. We intend not to hinder any man to give his advice in any matter one at a time."

On the 31st of the 10th month "it was voted and agreed that the town rates for this present year wheat shall go for 3*s.* 6*d.* per bushel."

"Cornelius, the Irishman," was dealt with as follows:

"17th day, 9th mo., 1663. At a legal Town-meeting there was then granted to Cornelius, the Irishman, three acres of land, upon condition he build upon it & make improvements of it within one year; yet not so as to make him Capable of Acting in any Town affairs no more than he had before it was granted to him."

The price of grain for the year 1664 was fixed as follows: wheat 3*s.* and 4*d.*; "pease," 3*s.* per bushel; and Indian corn at 2*s.* and 3*d.* per bushel, "till they see cause to alter it."

"2 April, 1664, Capt. Cooke brought a wolf's head to my house, & I cut off his ears, according to law.

"Per me, DAVID WILTON."

"Capt. Cooke" was evidently a wolf-hunter, as the records show that within a few months he killed twelve of these animals, all of whose "ears were cut off" by David Wilton, "according to law."

The sport of "horse-racing" was not in much favor with the "goodmen" of the parish away back in 1664, as it voted in that year "that if any shall run races with their horses or mares in any Street in this Town shall for every such offense pay 2*s.* 6*d.*, the one-half to the town the other half to its Informer."

* See history of the First Church.

THE INDIANS—KING PHILIP'S WAR.

The Indians of whom the plantation was purchased still roamed the forests, and were given the right to hunt on all the lands sold. A friendly intercourse was maintained, and not the slightest discord arose to mar the brotherly feeling existing until the breaking out of King Philip's war. The mutual confidence between them can be no better illustrated than by the following permit to erect a fort, which appears on the old town records under date of April 7, 1664:

"At a Town-meeting the Indians advised a place to build a fort. The Town granted they should, provided they would attend these articles underwritten. The men that the Town choose to deliver their mind to the Indians were David Wilton, John Lyman, and Joseph Parsons. The Town's mind was declared to the Indians by us April 13, 1664.

"5: 2 mo., 1664, upon the Indians' request to the Town to have liberty to build a fort on our land, on which the Town declare on what Terms they may make a fort on our land, viz.:

"1. First, they shall not break the Sabbath by working or gaming, or carrying Burdens or the like.

"2. They shall not Powwow on that place or any where else amongst us.

"3. They shall not get Liquors or Cider and drink themselves drunk as So kill one another as they have done.

"4. They shall not take in other Indians of other places to seat amongst them, we allow Noutague Indians that were the inhabitants of the place.

"5. They shall not break down our fences and let in cattle and Swine, but shall go over a stile at one place.

"6. The Murderers, Callawane & Wuttowhan & Paquallant, shall not seat amongst them.

"7. They shall not hunt or kill our cattle or sheep or swine with their dogs; if they do, they shall pay for them."

The cause that led to the building of this fort was doubtless their fear of other Indians. "The fort," says Rev. Solomon Williams, in his "Historical Sketch of Northampton," a sermon delivered April 13, 1815, "is said to have been built on the northerly end of Fort Plain, which is now in Easthampton."*

When King Philip sounded the war-whoop through this beautiful valley, these natives in the vicinity of Northampton were inclined to remain true to the English, with whom they had dwelt so long in peace, never receiving any but the kindest treatment, but the proud chief of the Wampanoags roused their lurking treachery, and they joined the hostile savages.†

As soon as it was discovered that the Indians here had joined Philip's warriors, and that the coming contest was likely to be of a serious nature, a barricade was built around the town—a sort of Chinese wall—to defend the settlement against a surprise. This was constructed of palisades,—pieces of wood about eight feet long firmly planted in a trench. March 14, 1676, a body of Indians assaulted this defense, and forced their way through, but were driven back by the soldiers. In this attack they killed six persons, among whom were Robert Bartlett and Thomas Holton, and burned a number of buildings. No further attempt was made by the Indians to molest this town; but in the contest at Deerfield, May 19, 1676, fifteen residents of Northampton were killed. The town, after the close of Philip's war, remained in comparative quiet, and the barricade was allowed to decay. In the year 1790, during King William's war, the town was again thrown into a state of alarm, and the place was surrounded by pickets, located near the site of the old barricade. No attack was, however, made, and in fact Northampton was never after molested by the enemy. In 1704, old style, the village of Paokhomuck, located in what is now Southampton, was attacked by the Indians, and all the inhabitants were either killed or taken prisoners. As an instance of the barbarity of the savages, it is stated that, not content with the horrible butcheries just perpetrated on the unsuspecting inhabitants of the little settlement, they conveyed the wife of Benjamin James to the top of Pomeroy's Mountain, where she was knocked in the head and scalped. She was found in this condition, and was carried to Northampton, and lived until she reached the age of over eighty years.

For a number of years after, the savages roamed the adjacent forest, committing depredations, and, Jan. 9, 1708, killed Samuel and Joseph Parsons, and in 1711, Samuel Strong, Jr., was killed, and his father taken prisoner. In 1724, Nathaniel Edwards was killed, and in 1747 the prowling savages murdered Elisha Clark, and soon after Noah Pixley also fell by the hands of these murderous marauders. The two latter lived in what is now Southampton.

Although, as stated above, the inhabitants of this town were not attacked after Philip's war, nevertheless they dwelt in almost constant alarm until the conquest of Canada, in 1759. In 1745 there were fourteen "forted" houses in the town; and in 1755, during the French-and-Indian war, a watch was kept during the nights, and a number of soldiers were stationed here for the defense of the inhabitants of this vicinity.

In the year 1749 the resolute little band of settlers in this frontier plantation, who had retained and defended their forest home through the various wars, believing that peace was soon again to settle down over this beautiful valley, voted, under date of June 12, 1749, "That the forts, mounts, and fortifications in the town of Northampton be demolished, and that Lieut. Ebenezer Clark, Mr. Josiah Parsons, and Benjamin Alvord be a committee to sell and dispose of the timber, boards, etc., to the best advantage of the town."

THE REVOLUTION.‡

When the tidings of the firing of the first gun at Concord reached the settlement, and the hideous head of British oppression rose in this free land, the inhabitants rallied around the colonial standard, and, during the eight long years of that arduous struggle, contributed freely in both men and means.

In 1775 a committee of "Correspondence, Inspection, and Safety" was organized with the following persons: Joseph Hawley, Robert Beck, Ezra Clark, Josiah Clark, Jacob Parsons, Col. Seth Pomeroy, Elijah Hunt, Ephraim Wright, Elias Lyman, Elijah Clark, Capt. Joseph Lyman, Quartus Pomeroy, Martin Phelps, Caleb Strong, Jr., and Dr. Shepherd.

Among the leading spirits of Northampton at the beginning of the Revolution was Seth Pomeroy, who was instrumental in raising troops, and subsequently became a brigadier-general.

The following is a copy of a letter written to his son, Capt. Pomeroy, of Southampton, under date September, 1776:

"NORTHAMPTON, Sept. 18, 1776.

"DEAR SIR,—The affair of enlisting one 5th of ye men To go in this the present exigency is of ye greatest importance, and thay must be equipped and sent off as soon as possible, and carry with them as much provision as to last them down; and I think they had better take horses,—that is, I think a horse to two men will do, lest thay may take turns to ride. So leave ye horse at a place as they shall agree for ye other to take when he comes to him. This town and Southampton will make a company when raised; they shall have such officers as they shall choose.

"In great haste.

"From your Loving Father,

"CAPTAIN POMEROY.

"SETH POMEROY."

Gen. Pomeroy was made a brigadier-general June 22, 1775. He was a volunteer at the battle of Bunker Hill, and also served in the French war under Sir William Johnson. He died in February, 1777.

Maj. Jonathan Allen and four brothers also served with distinction. Capt. Elisha Hawley, Lieut. Daniel Pomeroy, and Thomas Wait, natives of this town, were killed in battle at Lake George, in 1755.

It seems that two companies of soldiers were sent to the army from Northampton, in 1776, as the records of March 3, 1777, contain the following vote: "That those persons that

* Dr. Dwight in his Travels says, "This fort was built in the heart of the town, at the distance of perhaps twenty rods from the most populous street."

† See history of King Philip's war, in the general history of this work.

‡ For names of Revolutionary soldiers see Chapter XVII.

shall now engage in the service of the Continental Army, who belonged to Capt. Allin's and Capt. Chapin's Company, the last year, both officers and Privates, Shall have full compensation for all losses by them sustained in Cloaths and other articles where such losses were unavoidable, and not through the negligence of those who sustained them."

At the same meeting a bounty of $15 was voted; and a committee also appointed "to examine and consider what persons have in the town been delinquent in doing their proportion in promoting the publick cause." This committee was constituted as follows:

"Capt. Jonathan Allin, Lieut. Elijah Clark, Lieut. Enoch Clark, Mr. Benjamin Clark, and Mr. Robert Breck, for the first company."

Lieut. Simon Clap, Lieut. Joseph Cook, Dea. Josiah Clark, Mr. Elias Lyman, and Mr. Abner Barnard, for the second company.

Lieut. Elijah Lyman, Lieut. Hezekiah Russell, Mr. Asa Wright, Mr. Samuel Clark, and Mr. Jacob Parsons, for the third company.

Lieut. David Lyman, Messrs. Jonathan James, Samuel Judd, David Chapman, and Joel Parsons, for the fourth company.

Messrs. Martin Clark, William Bartlett, Abner Clafflin, John Smith, and Azariah Lyman, for the fifth company.

In 1779 it was voted "that every able-bodied man that shall engage to serve in the Continental army for the term of nine months shall have paid to him by the town, according to the rate of eighteen pounds for nine months for the term he shall actually serve, in wheat at four shillings per bushel, rice at three shillings per bushel, or Indian corn at two shillings per bushel." Sixty pounds bounty was also voted them, and "two shillings per mile for mileage."

Aug. 9, 1779, the town promptly voted to raise 1500 pounds "to pay for the clothing that is called for from this town by the General Court for the Continental army."

At a meeting held Oct. 15, 1779, a motion was made by Capt. Cook that the town should refund to the militia officers money which they had paid "for liquor to facilitate the raising of men." The motion "passed in the negative."

June 5, 1780, under a call for men by the General Court, the quota of this town was twenty-two men, and the following were appointed "a committee to manage and transact the whole business of raising the twenty-two men: the militia officers, together with Maj. Hawley, Quartus Pomeroy, Elijah Clark, Stephen Baker, Capt. Samuel Clark, Benj. Sheldon, Samuel Judd, Nathaniel Edwards, and Ithamer Strong."

The treaty of peace between Great Britain and the United States, signed on the 3d of September, 1783, was duly celebrated at Northampton, and a sermon was preached on the occasion by Rev. Mr. Spring. The proclamation was read from the court-house steps by the sheriff of the county to the militia under arms and a large assembly of gentlemen, "and the evening was concluded with decent mirth and hilarity." It seems that the ladies of the town were allowed no part in this demonstration, and, much incensed, on the following day celebrated the event by drinking to Lady Washington and Congress, after which the following toasts and sentiments were given: "Reformation to our husbands," "May the gentlemen and ladies ever unite on joyful occasions!" "Happiness and prosperity to our families," "Reformation to the men in general," and "May refined husbands ever find obedient wives!"

Some rhymer of the day caricatured them as follows:

"The presidentess, spry to leap,
Led just as shepherd leads the sheep;
The rest rush in with sturdy straddle,
With each in hand a pudding-paddle.
By neat tow-strings, all at their backs,
Hung thirteen pretty little sacks,
All tied tight; they did conceal
Just thirteen quarts of Indian meal.
Each had a spoon of white-wood metal,
Each at her side a nice tin-kettle.
Thus fixed, they march right through the town,
Nor would be stopped by spark or clown.
Old Dido with her Tyrian band
Ne'er cut a flash one-half so grand,
While they moved on with pomp and show,
To take some tea and pudding too."

LAFAYETTE'S VISIT.

The name of this honored chieftain and soldier, who left his home in sunny France to assist the struggling and oppressed colonists in 1776, will ever be revered by the American citizen. His visits to the country which he had helped to free from the yoke of Britain were a series of ovations, towns vying with each other in paying him tributes of respect.

The papers of the day announced that in 1826, when he passed through here, he entered the village attended by the sheriff, the committee, the cavalry, and private guests, under Col. Shepherd, chief marshal. At the village the procession was met by the infantry, artillery, and volunteer companies of the town. He visited the Round Hill school, then conducted by Bancroft & Co., afterward returned to Warner's Hotel, and was introduced to the selectmen of the town. He then drove through the principal streets of the town, attended by his suite and attendants, and stopped at the church, where he was introduced to various persons. After partaking of a feast at two o'clock, he proceeded on his journey westward, and Northampton had met and honored Lafayette.

OTHER EARLY SETTLERS.

In addition to the other pioneers noted on a previous page, the following list, which was compiled by Wm. Allen, D.D., in 1854, is subjoined:

Samuel Allen* was the son of Samuel Allyn, who died at Windsor in 1648, and who is supposed to have been the brother of Mathew Allyn, of Hartford and Windsor, and of Thomas Allyn, of Middletown. His lot was north of Mr. Woodford's, afterward Jonathan Edwards', in King Street. He married Hannah Woodford in 1659, and died Oct. 18, 1703. His children were ten, of whom Samuel, who died in 1839, was a deacon of the church in the time of Mr. Edwards. Deacon Samuel's son, Joseph, was the father of Thomas Allen, the first minister of Pittsfield, and of other sons.

Nehemiah Allen, son of Samuel, of Windsor, married Sarah Woodford in 1664, and died in 1684. He had nine children. Samuel removed to Deerfield in 1706, and thence to Coventry. His son Joseph, born in 1708 at Deerfield, married Mary Baker, of Woodbury, and was the father of Col. Ethan Allen, of Vermont.

John Allen, son of Samuel, of Windsor, married Mary Hannum in 1669 and removed to Deerfield, where both were killed by the Indians in May, 1704.

Alexander Alvord settled here in about 1658.

Edward Baker was here as early as 1655. Osmyn Baker, at one time member of Congress, was a descendant.

Thomas Bascom came from the north of England and settled here in about 1650, and died in 1689.

James Bridgman was also an early settler. Thomas Bridgman, a descendant, published a work entitled "Inscriptions on the Grave-Stones of Northampton," and several other works relating to cemeteries in Boston and elsewhere.

Daniel Burt was a son of Henry Burt, of Springfield.

Preserved Clapp was born Nov. 23, 1643, and died in 1720. A descendant, Simeon Clapp, was at Saratoga during the Revolution, and was also a guard of Maj. André at his execution. He died in 1851.

William Clark removed to Northampton, and was one of the pillars of the church in 1661.

Capt. Aaron Cook came to this place in 1661. Robert Danks was also an early settler.

Alexander Edwards located here in 1655. Prof. Bela Bates Edwards and Dr. Justin Edwards were descendants.

Joseph Hawley, grandfather of Maj. Joseph Hawley, mentioned elsewhere, was here as early as 1678.

Nehemiah Strong, professor of mathematics and natural philosophy in Yale College, graduated in 1755, and died in

* Spelled Allyn in the old records.

1807. He heard Edwards preach the sermons constituting his "History of Redemption." Simeon Strong, LL.D., judge of the Supreme Court, was born here in 1735. He died in 1805. Joseph Strong, LL.D., and his son, Henry Strong, LL.D., both died in Norwich, Conn. Caleb Strong, minister, of Montreal, died in 1847. He was a grandson of Gov. Caleb Strong.

The name of Lyman has ever been prominent in the history of Northampton. Richard Lyman was here in 1658, and died in 1662. A descendant, Jonathan H. Lyman, was recorder of the proprietors of Non-o-tuck from 1654 to 1657. John Lyman, brother of Isaac, was here as early as 1658.

Among other early settlers were William Holton, William Hulburt, Jonathan Hunt, William Janes, Thomas Judd, John King, Enos Kingsley, David Lee, William Miller, Joseph Parsons, Nathaniel Phelps, Eldad Pomeroy, Thomas Root, John Searle, Isaac Sheldon, John Stebbins, John Strong, Thomas Woodford, Samuel Wright, and Benjamin Tappan.

EMINENT MEN.

Northampton has ever been the home of men prominent in the councils of the State and nation. Her record is a noble one. In addition to the long list of talented and venerated divines who occupied the pulpit of the First Church, and whose history may be found in the sketch of that church, there were men whose talents and genuine worth elevated them to many of the highest councils in the land.

This town has sent three representatives to the United States Senate, and gave Massachusetts one of the purest Governors of the many noble statesmen who have occupied the gubernatorial chair,—HON. CALEB STRONG. He was born in Northampton, Jan. 9, 1745. He graduated at Harvard in 1764, and began the study of the law with that able counselor Maj. Joseph Hawley. He early manifested an interest in public matters, and in 1774 represented the town in the Provincial Congress. From this period his life was passed chiefly in the public service. In 1776 he received the appointment of county attorney, which office he held twenty-four years. He represented the town at the convention called to adopt a constitution, and was on the committee appointed to submit a plan. He was a member of the Council in 1780, and was also appointed a delegate to Congress. The latter office he declined. At the framing of the Constitution in 1787 he was a delegate, and in the following year was elected to the United States Senate. He was re-elected in 1793, but resigned before the expiration of his term of office.

In 1800 he was elected Governor of Massachusetts, and in seven or eight towns about Northampton not one vote was polled against him. He was re-elected in 1811, and after four years of office withdrew permanently from public life. He died here Nov. 7, 1819, aged seventy-four.

COL. JOHN STODDARD was the son of Rev. Solomon Stoddard, and was born in 1682. He was a graduate of Harvard in 1701, and for a number of years after took no prominent part in public life. In 1713, however, he was sent on public business to Quebec, and from this time forward was an acknowledged power in the affairs of Western Massachusetts. During his long career he never stooped to the tricks which so often then, as well as now, marked the course of many politicians, but his talents shone resplendent in important affairs.

He ever commanded the respect of the foremost men of that day in the State, and with Maj. John Pynehon, of Springfield, and Samuel Partridge, of Hatfield, formed the trio "which ruled or led Western Massachusetts through a century of its history." President Edwards, speaking of him, said, "Upon the whole, everything in him was great, and perhaps there was never a man in New England to whom the denomination of a great man did more properly belong." He died in Boston, June 19, 1748, aged sixty-six.

ISAAC C. BATES.—Among the prominent citizens of Northampton none occupied a more prominent position in the councils of the nation than the subject of this sketch.

Isaac C. Bates, son of Col. Jacob Bates and Ruth Robinson Bates, was born at Granville, Mass., Jan. 23, 1779, and was prepared for college by Rev. Timothy M. Cooley, M.D., of East Granville. He entered Yale College and took high rank among his associates, and was valedictorian of the class of 1802. He studied law in New York, and subsequently settled in Northampton, and soon took a prominent position at the Bar of the State.

He was active in political matters, and in 1803-9, and once afterward, was a Representative in the Legislature of Massachusetts, and in 1817 took his seat in Congress, where he remained eight years, and then declined a re-election. Later he was a member of the Governor's Council, and was once a Presidential elector. In 1841 he was chosen United States Senator to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Hon. John Davis, who had been elected Governor of the State. At the close of this term he was re-elected Senator for six years, and while serving this term he died at Washington, March 16, 1845, aged sixty-six years. The morning after his death, amid a large concourse of people, Daniel Webster arose in the Senate Chamber, and pronounced a fitting eulogy upon the life and character of this distinguished citizen. Mr. Bates was a thorough scholar, a sound thinker, a fine writer, and, as an advocate, he ranked among the foremost orators in the Senate.

ELIJAH H. MILLS died in Northampton, May 5, 1829, aged fifty-seven. He was a lawyer. Graduated at Williams College in 1797. In his profession he attained the highest rank as a jurist, and particularly as an advocate, and for many years was professedly at the head of the Bar in the western part of the State. He was for a long period a member of our State Legislature in both branches. During the war of 1812 he was one of the leaders of the Federal party in Massachusetts, and was the author of the address of the House of Representatives to the people of Massachusetts protesting against that measure. Afterward he was repeatedly elected Representative in Congress, and served two terms in the Senate of the United States, in which station he remained till his health failed.

Other noted men born in Northampton were Nehemiah Strong, an eminent preacher, born 1730, and died in 1807; Simeon Strong, a celebrated jurist and preacher, born in 1736, died in 1805; Thomas Allen, born in 1743, was a chaplain in the Revolutionary army, died in 1810; Moses Allen, a prominent preacher, born in 1748, and died in 1779; Pierpont Edwards, a celebrated advocate, born in 1750, and died in 1826; Solomon Allen, a preacher, born in 1751, and died in 1821; William Lyman, born in 1752, was a member of Congress from 1793 to 1797, died in 1811; Timothy Dwight, LL.D., D.D., was born in 1752, and was celebrated as a divine, poet, and author: he died in 1817; Theodore Dwight, a member of Congress from 1806 to 1807, was born in 1764, and died in 1846; Benjamin Tappan, the able jurist, was born in 1773, and died in 1857; Phineas Allen, a noted editor, was born in 1776, and died in 1860; the distinguished philanthropist Arthur Tappan was born here in 1785, and died in 1865; Ebenezer Lane, LL.D., an eminent attorney, was born in 1793, and died in 1866; Dorus Clarke, D.D., divine and author, was born near here in 1797; Geo. H. Clark, the poet, in 1809; Henry Lyman, the author, in 1810, died in 1834; Josiah Dwight Whitney, the geologist, in 1819; William Dwight Whitney, LL.D., the able philologist, in 1827; and Austin Flint, the author and physician, in 1836.

THE FIRST DRUGGIST—PIONEER ADVERTISEMENTS.

The first druggist in this section of the country was Levi Shepherd, who came from Hartford, Conn., and located here in 1765. Four years later he formed a copartnership with Dr. Ebenezer Hunt. Their drugs and medicines were imported, and their trade extended over a large section of country.

The Hampshire Gazette of 1786 contains an advertisement of Breeck, Shepherd & Clark, who inform the people that "they have just received a fresh supply of goods, which they propose to sell for Cash, Grain, Pork, Potash, Salts, Flaxseed, etc." The printing-office advertises for sale the first, second, and third part of Webster's Institute, also Watts' Hymns, and one copy of Col. Humphrey's poem. Soon after this date an advertisement of Levi Shepherd appears, and also of Prescott & Dixon.

In the issue of March 4, 1787, James Shepherd is authorized to receive the several articles hereinafter enumerated, at the price thereunto annexed, for all arrearages of taxes assessed during the year 1784, viz.: good merchantable heef at 1s. and 8d. per hundred; pork at 3½d. per pound; wheat, 5s.; rye, 3s. and 6d.; corn, 3s.; oats, 1s. 6d.; peas, 5s.; beans, 5s. per bushel; well-dressed flax, 8d. per pound; wheat flour, 16s. per hundred; good tobacco packed in casks, according to law, 25s. per hundred; potash, 16s. per ton; pearlsh, 39d. and 10s. per ton; and on all nails the same sum shall be allowed as in the stores in the town of Boston.

HOSTELRIES.

The tavern, or inn, of "ye olden time" was as much, if not more, of an "institution" in a town or village than the more pretentious structures of modern times are to the people of to-day. Among the first records of the town may be seen votes designating the number of "ordinaries" that should be kept, and naming their keepers.

Northampton very soon after its settlement became an important point in Western Massachusetts, and prior to and during the Revolution it kept pace in its improvements with the various towns in the Bay State, and its places of entertainment for man and beast were about on a par with other inns throughout the valley.

After the close of the Revolution, in 1794, Asahel Pomeroy, who was a valiant soldier in that struggle, built the tavern subsequently known as the Warner House, which was an "institution" of Northampton for seventy-six years. In 1821 it received the name of Warner House, from Oliver Warner, who purchased it that year and became its landlord. In 1832 he sold the house to J. B. Vinton, who resold it to Mr. Warner in 1840, and he conducted it until his death in 1853. During the period it was kept by Mr. Warner, it gained a reputation far and near as one of the best inns in the country. The traveler was ever anxious to reach the "Warner House," with its well-supplied larder, good beds, and genial host. After the death of Mr. Warner it was purchased by Strong & Lewis, and kept by Wm. Marsh & Son. C. F. Simonds subsequently purchased it, and for several years was its proprietor. It was afterward kept by Roswell Hunt and J. C. Orcutt. In the days of the stage-coach Northampton was on the line from Boston to Albany, and from Springfield to Brattleboro', and it was no uncommon occurrence for eight coaches to arrive and depart during a single day. The blast of the horn and the crack of the driver's whip have long since passed away, and in the early morning of July 18, 1870, the old building succumbed to the fiery element, and the old Warner House passed into history. The old Mansion House on Elm Street, now used as a dwelling-house, was at one time one of the prominent hotels of this section.

The Mansion House, which now occupies the site of the Warner House, was erected by the Fitch brothers, of Hatfield, in 1870, and opened as the Fitch Hotel by the Fitch Brothers & Simonds, who conducted it about two years, when Mr. Simonds became proprietor. After various vicissitudes Mr. Hill became proprietor, and its name was changed to Mansion House. He conducted it a short time, and was succeeded (1877) by its present proprietor, Mr. Frank Kingman, a landlord of large experience, who has placed the Mansion House in the front rank of the best hotels in the Connecticut Valley.

Round Hill Hotel, pleasantly located on Round Hill, is closed during the winter months, being used only as a summer resort. It is at present under the management of Mr. Olney. Its picturesque location and pleasant surroundings, together with the deserved popularity of its landlord, give it a wide notoriety throughout the country.

Other hotels are the Hampshire House and Nonotuck House.

MASONIC—ODD-FELLOWS.

The first Masonic lodge of which we have any record established in this town was the Hampshire Lodge, chartered Jan. 30, 1784. Who were its founders, how long it flourished, and when it ceased to exist, we have been unable to discover. Its history and transactions are buried in oblivion.

Jerusalem Lodge was chartered June 13, 1797. The petitioners for the lodge resided in South Hadley, and there its sessions were held for many years. Its charter members were as follows: Samuel Alvord, Thos. White, Frederick Milton, Jos. White, Justin Alvord, E. Goodman, Jr., Adonijah Nash, Jos. Kellogg, John Bennett, Jr., Bezulial Alvord, E. Dwight, and Simeon Goodman. Though the Hampshire Lodge had an existence at Northampton prior to the establishment of Jerusalem Lodge at South Hadley, yet it seems to have died before the latter had been long at work.

In May, 1802, it was voted to move the lodge from South Hadley to Northampton, and in the following month the lodge met at the house of Asahel Pomeroy, in the latter place, the following persons acting as officers: Daniel Stebbins, W. M.; Levi Lyman, S. W.; John Bennett, Sec.; N. Pease, Treas.; Justin Alvord, J. W.; Aaron Wright, Jr., J. D.; Levi Smith, S. D.; and Aaron Bartlett, T. In October, 1807, the lodge was removed to Williamsburg, where it remained until Nov. 18, 1817, when it was again removed to Northampton, where it has since remained. During the reign of fanaticism and bigotry known as the Morgan excitement the lodge ceased to work, but with Spartan zeal refused to surrender its charter, although demanded by the Grand Lodge.

The following-named persons served as Masters of the lodge from 1797 to 1879: Simeon Goodman, 1797-98; John Smith, Elihu Dwight, 1799; Daniel Stebbins, 1800-3; Henry Frink, 1804; Phineas Ashmun, 1805; Daniel Stebbins, 1806; Phineas Ashmun, 1806; Isaac C. Bates, 1807; Southw'th Jenkins, 1808-9; Edmund Taylor, 1810-13; Southw'th Jenkins, 1814-15; Joseph H. Flint, 1816-17; Isaac C. Bates, 1818; Charles E. Forbes, 1819-20; Levi Lyman, 1821; Charles E. Forbes, 1822; Christopher Clarke, 1823-24; James Hutchison, 1825; W. W. Partridge, 1826-27; Nelson Palmer, 1828; Wm. W. Partridge, 1845-46; Benj. E. Cook, 1847-48; Ebenezer Hancock, 1849-50; Benj. E. Cook, 1851; Ebenezer Hancock, 1852; Samuel N. Bosworth, 1853; Geo. F. Wright, 1854-55; D. W. Crafts, 1856-60; Wm. H. Jones, 1861; W. D. Axtell, 1862-64; J. H. Prindle, 1865; J. C. Williams, 1866-67; W. C. Pomeroy, 1868-69; S. B. Fuller, 1870; H. W. Morgan, 1871-72; C. L. Bartlett, 1873-74; S. A. Phelps, 1875-76; W. C. Robinson, 1877-78; C. Humphrey, 1879.

Royal Arch Chapter.—The chapter was constituted June 23, 1825, with the following charter members: Isaac C. Bates, Jonathan H. Lyman, John R. Goodnough, Guy Trumbull, Jonathan Smith, Wm. W. Partridge, Benj. Willard, John F. Judd, O. M. Stillman, Nelson Palmer, Wm. M. Weatherill, Josiah White, and James Hutchinson. Isaac C. Bates was first H. P.; J. H. Lyman, first K.; John R. Goodnough, first Scribe.

During the Morgan excitement the meetings were discontinued, and March 7, 1848, the charter was restored and the labors of the chapter resumed.

The following have served as High-Priest: Isaac C. Bates, 1825-27; Nelson Palmer, 1828; J. F. Judd, 1829; G. D. Peck, 1848-55; Wm. Parsons, 1856; G. D. Peck, 1857; B. E. Cook, 1858; David W. Crafts, 1859-62; S. W. Lee, Jr., 1863-64; W.

C. Robinson, 1865; J. H. Prindle, 1866-67; J. A. Prentiss, 1868-70; J. C. Williams, 1871-72; S. B. Fuller, 1873; R. R. Mayers, 1874; W. C. Pomeroy, 1875-77; H. Jones, 1878.

Northampton Commandery of Knights Templar.—This organization was instituted June 9, 1870, and worked under a dispensation for one year. The first officers chosen were D. W. Crafts, E. C.; C. S. Pratt, Gen.; Geo. S. Phelps, C. G.; J. H. S. Prindle, Prelate; J. C. Williams, S. W.; A. C. Barton, J. W.; A. Wright, Jr., Treas.; E. C. Crafts, Recorder; J. W. Wilson, Sw. B.; Smith Carr, St. B.; G. L. Manchester, War.

A charter was received from the Grand Commandery of Massachusetts and Rhode Island in 1871, and on the 12th of May the order was permanently established and the following officers chosen: D. W. Crafts, E. C.; C. S. Pratt, Gen.; G. S. Phelps, C. G.; S. B. Fuller, Prelate; J. C. Williams, S. W.; A. C. Barton, J. W.; A. Wright, Jr., Treas.; E. C. Crafts, Recorder.

Officers for 1872 and 1873.—J. H. S. Prindle, E. C.; J. C. Williams, Gen.; Luke Lyman, C. G.; S. B. Fuller, Prelate; W. C. Pomeroy, S. W.; H. W. Morgan, J. W.; A. Wright, Jr., Treas.; B. W. Peck, Recorder.

Officers for 1874.—J. C. Williams, E. C.; Luke Lyman, Gen.; W. C. Pomeroy, C. G.; S. B. Fuller, Prelate; H. M. Brewster, S. W.; G. W. Patterson, J. W.; Ansel Wright, Treas.; C. Rust, Recorder.

Officers for 1875.—J. C. Williams, E. C.; Luke Lyman, Gen.; W. C. Pomeroy, C. G.; J. H. S. Prindle, Prelate; G. W. Patterson, S. W.; W. B. Morgan, J. W.; A. Wright, Treas.; W. G. McIntire, Recorder.

Officers for 1876.—Luke Lyman, E. C.; W. C. Pomeroy, Gen.; S. B. Fuller, C. G.; J. H. S. Prindle, Prelate; W. B. Morgan, S. W.; Jas. Ellsworth, J. W.; A. Wright, Treas.; W. G. McIntire, Recorder.

Officers for 1877.—Luke Lyman, E. C.; W. C. Pomeroy, Gen.; S. B. Fuller, C. G.; H. Jones, Prelate; W. B. Morgan, S. W.; Jas. Ellsworth, J. W.; A. Wright, Treas.; V. E. Cleaveland, Recorder.

Officers for 1878.—Luke Lyman, E. C.; W. C. Pomeroy, Gen.; S. B. Fuller, C. G.; H. Jones, Prelate; W. B. Morgan, S. W.; Jas. Ellsworth, J. W.; A. Wright, Treas.; E. I. Clapp, Recorder.

Non-o-tuck Lodge, No. 61.—Feb. 5, 1845, F. P. Tracy, A. H. Bullen, S. S. Wells, W. A. Arnold, and J. W. Smith applied for a charter for a lodge of Independent Order of Odd-Fellows. The lodge was instituted March 11, 1845.

The Noble Grands have been as follows: F. P. Tracy, A. H. Bullen, J. W. Smith, S. S. Wells, Chas. T. Smith, Lewis Bliss, F. A. Clark, E. E. Denniston, C. M. Alvord, William C. Prentiss, J. B. Augur, James Thompson, La Fayette Clapp, William D. Clapp, J. L. Wells, J. D. Wells, Jabez French, J. C. Phelps, George B. Drury, J. H. Searle, and E. P. Williams. Several of the above served more than one term. S. S. Wells was Grand Master of the State Grand Lodge one year. The lodge surrendered its charter March 26, 1866.

Re-instituted Sept. 16, 1872. The Noble Grands since then have been C. C. Smith, V. W. Skiff, S. W. Clapp, A. G. Carley, A. L. Sessions, T. C. Cooley, J. M. Skiff, F. L. Clapp, R. B. Davis, Jr., F. O. Hillman, and M. H. Beales. The present officers are E. L. Thompson, N. G.; D. F. Cutting, V. G.; E. H. Wade, Rec. Sec.; E. P. Hall, Treas.; H. R. Rowley, Per. Sec.

INSTITUTIONS.

Smith Charities.—On the 22d day of December, 1845, Oliver Smith, a prominent citizen of Hatfield, died, leaving an estate valued at $370,000. He had resolved to bequeath his large estate to charitable purposes for the benefit of the towns of Northampton, Hadley, Hatfield, Amherst, and Williamsburg, in Hampshire County, and Deerfield, Greenfield, and Whately, in Franklin County. By the provisions of his will these towns were directed at each annual meeting to choose a person who should be called an elector, and these electors should choose three trustees, who were to have the charge and management of the entire fund.

The will provided that $200,000 should be managed by the trustees as an accumulating fund until it reached the sum of $400,000. This amount was then to be divided into three distinct funds, viz., $30,000 to found the Smith Agricultural School, at Northampton; $10,000, the income to be paid to the American Colonization Society, with certain provisions; and $300,000 for indigent boys, indigent female children, indigent young women, and indigent widows. The remainder of his property was constituted a contingent fund to defray expenses and keep the principal funds entire. He also provided that the agricultural school fund should be accumulated for a period of sixty years from his death,—1905,—when the school should be established within the town of Northampton.

The income of the fund of $10,000 for the Colonization Society was to be used in transporting persons of color from the United States to the colony of Liberia, or such other place as the society might select. There was a provision, however, that if the society should neglect to make due application for the fund for six months after having been notified that it was ready for distribution, they should forfeit their claim and the money should be incorporated with the agricultural school fund. The required notification was given by the trustees, but the society neglected to apply within the specified time, and the legacy was added to the school fund. The society brought suit to recover it, but the case was decided by the Supreme Judicial Court in favor of the trustees.

The remaining fund of $360,000 was called the joint or miscellaneous fund, and was divided so that one-half the income should be applied for the benefit of indigent boys, who, after having been bound out and served satisfactorily till twenty-one years old, should receive a loan of $500 for five years, to become a gift at the end of that time. The income of one-quarter of the fund was appropriated to the use and benefit of indigent female children. They were to be bound out till eighteen years of age, and at the time of their marriage were to receive the sum of $300 as a marriage-portion. The income of one-eighth part of this fund was appropriated to the benefit of indigent young women, in sums of $50 as marriage-portions. The income of the remaining one-eighth part was to be paid to indigent widows, in sums of not more than $50 to any one person in one year. The beneficiaries were to be confined to the eight towns above enumerated, but in case of there being at any time a surplus income, beneficiaries might be selected from any other towns in the county.

The heirs-at-law contested the will, and the case came before the Supreme Judicial Court, in this town, July 6, 1847. The objection to the will was that one of the attesting witnesses, Theophilus Parsons Phelps, was incompetent on account of insanity. Two days were occupied in the trial, Rufus Choate arguing the case for the heirs-at-law and Daniel Webster for the will. The court-house was crowded to overflowing, and ladders were put up to the windows, so eager were the people to see and hear the great orators. The jury brought in a verdict sustaining the will.

In May, 1848, the board of trustees was organized, and Osmyrn Baker was chosen president, which position he continued to hold till May, 1871, when failing health compelled him to resign, and Geo. W. Hubbard, who still holds the office, was chosen. The sum paid over to the trustees by the executor of the will, at the time of the organization of the board, was $419,221.16; of this, $214,000 composed the joint fund and $205,221.16 the contingent fund. The joint fund reached the required amount of $400,000, Oct. 1, 1859. The several charities under it were put in operation at that time, and have since continued to spread their blessings over the community.

The value of this bequest to the several towns does not consist wholly in the charity extended to their citizens, for it forms a constantly-increasing source of taxation. It was the desire of the testator that the property should not be taxed, and in the will he advised the incorporation of the charities, and requested the trustees to endeavor to obtain their exemption from taxation. The act of incorporation was granted at the session of 1849, but the Legislature refused to exempt the property from taxation. On the contrary, provision was made that the fund should be taxed equally by the interested towns. The fund is therefore divided into eight equal parts, each portion being taxed in accordance with the rate of taxation in the town to which it is apportioned. The act of incorporation was accepted by the trustees in April, 1849.

In 1865 the trustees decided to erect the building in which their offices are now located. It is 52 by 30 feet, built of Portland stone, is a handsome and commodious structure, and cost $30,000.

The magnitude of this system of charities may be seen in the increase of the funds, in the amounts paid for various purposes, and in the numbers of the different classes of our citizens who have been the recipients of the bounties disbursed. In October, 1848, the funds amounted to $419,221.16. During the thirty years which have elapsed since that time they have increased nearly 250 per cent. The report of the trustees for May 1, 1878, shows that the several funds of the institution have reached the sum of $1,061,979.30.

The agricultural school fund, on May 1, 1877, amounted to $94,521.41. In the year 1905, when the fund becomes available, it is but reasonable to expect, should the present rate of increase continue, that it will have reached the sum of $350,000. The testator has prescribed what sort of a school is to be established. He proposes that there shall be two farms, one as a "model" and the other as an "experimental" farm. On these farms are to be established a manufactory of "Implements of Husbandry," and a "School of Industry for the Benefit of the Poor," in which boys taken from the most indigent classes shall receive a good common-school education and be instructed in agriculture or mechanics. At the age of twenty-one years each boy is to receive $200. Here, it will be seen, is a system more comprehensive than any school of the kind yet in operation in this country. Here is another view in which this institution is of great value to this community, and that is in the fact that it always has money to loan. The business-man or mechanic who needs a little money to make him a home or extend his business can readily obtain a loan from the institution at a fair rate of interest, and numbers avail themselves of the privilege every year.

The following is an exhibit of the income, condition, and amount of the funds of the institution, as shown by the report of the trustees May 1, 1878:

Miscellaneous (or Joint) Fund.—The amount of this fund on the first day of May, 1877, was $589,720.99.

Its income during the past year has been from

Dividends on stocks.....	$1,633.50
Interest on loans.....	30,556.36
Profit and loss account.....	10.85
Total income.....	$35,200.71

The payments from the fund during the year have been as follows, viz.:

Indigent young women.....	$4,000.00
Indigent widows.....	4,000.00
Indigent boys.....	14,000.00
Indigent female children.....	3,670.00
Total payments.....	$26,670.00

This leaves a balance of income, to wit, $9130.71, to be added to the principal of the fund, which makes it amount to $598,851.70, invested as follows, viz.:

State, city, and government stocks.....	$74,000.00
Bonds and mortgages.....	454,051.00
Apprentices' loans.....	55,829.00
Cash.....	14,971.70
Total.....	$598,851.70

Twenty-seven apprentice boys have come of age and received loans of $500 each during the year, and the matured notes of 28 others have been surrendered.

Twelve of the girls formerly apprenticed have married during the year and received the marriage-portions to which they were entitled, and nine others of the same class have received allowances for sickness expenses.

Forty-five boys and 27 girls have been indentured within the year.

The whole number of boys under indentures at this time is 125; and of girls, 64.

Contingent Fund.—The principal of this fund, May 1, 1877, was $335,938.06. The income since has been from

Dividends on stocks.....	$701.75
Interests on loans.....	16,701.26
Total income.....	$17,403.01

The payments from the fund have been:

Taxes.....	$11,767.74
Expenses.....	5,059.85
Annuities.....	950.00
Indigent widows.....	2,650.00
Profit and loss.....	3,798.00
Total expenditures.....	$24,225.59

The principal of this fund is now $329,115.48, invested as follows, viz.:

Stocks.....	$52,040.00
Bonds and mortgages.....	262,390.00
Cash.....	14,685.48
Total.....	$329,115.48

The amount paid from both funds for the year to indigent widows is $7050.

Agricultural School Fund.—The principal of the fund on the first day of May last was $94,521.41. The income from New York City stock and loans the past year has been $5914.54. Deducting from this sum the contribution of the fund to the taxes and expenses of the institution, amounting to $1821.83, and adding the balance of the income, to wit, $4092.71, to the fund as reported last year, the principal of the agricultural school fund at this time amounts to $98,614.12, invested as follows, viz.:

New York city stock.....	$10,000.00
Bonds and mortgages.....	86,725.00
Cash.....	1,889.12
Total.....	$98,614.12

The amount of the several funds of the institution, with the building and lot occupied for the purposes of the corporation, is $1,061,979.30, divided among the several funds as follows, viz.:

Joint fund.....	$598,851.70
Contingent fund.....	329,115.48
Agricultural fund.....	98,614.12
Banking house and lot.....	35,398.00
Total.....	$1,061,979.30

The present trustees are Geo. W. Hubbard, Wm. H. Dickinson, and J. P. Felton.

The Clarke Institution for Deaf Mutes.—This humane institution was the first public establishment in the United States where the deaf were taught to read the lips, and the dumb to speak.

It was chartered in 1867, and was endowed by its generous founder, the late John Clarke, in the sum of $50,000. Immediately thereafter the school was established, and the system of instructing by articulation decided upon, and Miss Harriet B. Rogers, who had been successful in teaching this method, was chosen principal.

Mr. Clarke died in 1869, and made the institution his residuary legatee. The whole endowment of the school is derived from bequests, which now amount to over $365,000. The school was opened in what is known as the Gothic Seminary building, on Gothic Street, owned by L. J. Dudley. Here it was continued until the year 1870, when the Round Hill property, consisting of 11 acres, was purchased at a cost of $31,500, and in the fall of that year the school was opened. The old buildings were remodeled and new ones erected. Clarke Hall is used for recitations, Baker Hall for boys' dormitory, and Rogers Hall for the girls' dormitory and residence of the principal. There is also a large workshop, a laundry, a stable, and a cottage for the farmer.

In the matter of the system of instruction in this institution, it was said by the president of the institute in his first annual report: "Articulation is used as the means of instruction, because we believe it the best method for our pupils. The institution is not, however, pledged to any unchangeable system, but only to that, whatever it may be, which experience shall prove to give the best results." An experience of more than eight years has confirmed this opinion concerning the essential characteristics of the system, but modifications in its application have been made; and these modifications, with the causes which have induced them, it is our purpose now to present. In order to do this, it will be necessary to note some points in the history of the Clarke Institution, and also to mention the school which formed the germ of this,—a private class in Chelmsford, Mass.

In the fall of 1864 the present principal, Miss Harriet B. Rogers, took under her care a deaf-mute child, intending to teach it by means of articulation and lip-reading. This she knew had been done in Germany, though she had not learned the details of the system employed there. As the needs of her pupil demanded, she fashioned a system of her own, which, as later comparison showed, had many points of resemblance to the German method. She proposed also to employ the manual alphabet, during the first years of instruction, in the use of words which the child could not articulate. A brief trial of this combined method convinced Miss Rogers of the impossibility of attaining complete success in articulation and lip-reading unless these were employed as the sole means of communication; for the pupil, during his early instruction, finding it more difficult to read words from the lips than from the fingers, was in danger of becoming dependent on the latter rather than the former, and thus would be content with that which was intended only as an aid to the higher attainment of lip-reading. She therefore abandoned the manual alphabet, and retained only articulation and lip-reading, and the result exceeded her expectations. Encouraged in her success by the favorable opinions of several leading educators in Boston, she made further trial of this method with seven other pupils, three of whom were congenitally deaf.

When Miss Rogers became principal, in 1867, she brought with her her former pupils, and with them the system employed by her in the school at Chelmsford, which was the exclusive use of speech, lip-reading, and writing as means of instruction, without the manual alphabet or signs, except such natural signs as are used with all children. In the second annual report her views in regard to signs were expressed in the following words: "Believing that all signs on the part of pupils, and all on the part of teachers, except those few and simple ones used by intelligent mothers and nurses to explain the meaning of new words or phrases, are prejudicial to advancement in articulation, whatever their intrinsic merits, we do all in our power to prevent their use."

Articulation was taught by imitation. Hearing-children acquire it by the same process; the difference being that, among the deaf, sight and touch are to be educated to perform the functions of the lost sense in the production of articulate speech. As hearing and touch are educated to supply the lack of sight to the blind, so may sight and touch supply the lack of hearing to the deaf. It is by no means claimed that the highest development of these remaining senses can furnish an equivalent for the loss of hearing, since the avenue of sound is always open in the hearing-child, and speech is acquired without conscious effort, and often before the child seems capable of close attention; whereas, on the part of the deaf child, the closest attention must be given; and even this cannot compensate him for the loss of that constant tuition in speech enjoyed by every hearing-child, by which the meaning of the articulate and inarticulate sounds about him is made known, and by which, also, he is induced to imitate those sounds that express his emotions. Neither can any substitute be offered for the loss of hearing as a constant guide in speech. The deaf child is to be induced, through the senses of sight and touch, to attempt the imitation of each position and movement of the vocal organs necessary for the utterance of these sounds.

Without entering further into detail, it may truthfully be written that with Miss Rogers and the founding of this institution was ushered in an important era in the educating of deaf mutes. Similar institutions have sprung into existence in various parts of the country, and the articulation and lip-reading method has proved a great success and blessing.

The finances of the Clarke Institution, notwithstanding the critical condition of financial affairs for five years past, are on a sound basis, and the prospect for the future is good. The statement of the treasurer shows that the receipts from the fund during the year just closed were $15,738.42; from the State of Massachusetts, $14,250; from other States and from individuals, $3095. The school expenses, strictly speaking, have been about $25,000, the construction and furnishing expenses about $6500, and the other expenses about $3000. The net debt of the institution now stands at about $36,000, the personal property, including the fund, may be valued at $265,000, and the real estate at upward of $100,000. The debt has been but slightly reduced in 1878, but will be more rapidly diminished hereafter. More than half of it is owed to the fund itself.

During the past year there have been 49 pupils (27 boys and 22 girls) in the primary department at Baker Hall, while 23 pupils (8 boys and 15 girls) have been taught in the grammar-school department in Clarke Hall. At the present time (Oct. 8, 1878) the number in the primary department entered for the school-year 1878-79 is 56, of whom 31 are boys and 25 are girls; while in the grammar-school department there are 21 pupils (8 boys and 13 girls); and in both departments, 77 pupils (39 boys and 38 girls).

The following is a list of the officers of the Clarke Institution from its organization to the present time:

Presidents.—Gardiner Greene Hubbard, elected 1867; F. B. Sanborn, elected 1878.

Corporators by Act of Incorporation.—Osmyn Baker,* William Allen, Lewis J. Dudley, Julius H. Seelye, George Walker, Gardiner G. Hubbard, Theodore Lyman, Horatio G. Knight, Joseph A. Pond,* William Claflin, James B. Congdon, Thos. Talbot, elected 1867.

Corporators by Election.—Joseph H. Converse, Jonathan H. Butler,* Frank B. Sanborn, elected 1868; J. Huntington Lyman, elected 1870; Samuel A. Fisk, elected 1873; Henry Watson, elected 1875; Charles Delano, Edward Hitchcock, elected 1877.

Treasurers.—Osmyn Baker, elected 1867; Lafayette Matby, elected 1869.

Principal.—Harriet B. Rogers, elected 1867.

Associate Principal.—Caroline A. Yale, elected 1873.

Steward.—Henry J. Bardwell, elected 1870.

The State Lunatic Hospital.—The movement which resulted in the establishment of this institution was begun in 1854, when a committee was appointed by the Legislature to inquire into the condition and number of insane persons in this State. The committee recommended the founding of an asylum in the western part, and Northampton was chosen for the location.

* Deceased.

The erection of the building was begun in March, 1856, and on the following July 4th the corner-stone was laid by the Masonic fraternity, and July 1, 1858, it was opened for patients. The original cost, including furniture, was $343,000. The centre building is of brick, four stories in height, with wings on each side three stories high, and, with its extension in the rear, which is 190 feet deep, gives a front line of 512 feet, while the floors cover an area of four acres. The main or centre building is surmounted by an observatory, which affords one of the finest landscape-views in the Connecticut Valley. The centre one of the two wings on each side of the main building is also surmounted by a cupola.

Since the erection of the building various improvements and additions have been made. A large proportion of the floors have been relaid, a laundry has been added to the main building, also storehouses, carpenter-shops, etc. In the four years next following its opening the State appropriated for lands and outbuildings $15,550. Since 1867 the institution has not only been self-supporting, but has purchased land and erected buildings costing $76,625.31. The institution has cost at the present time $443,175.31.

The hospital-farm, which twelve years ago contained but about 190 acres, has been increased by various purchases to about 332 acres, and is now sufficiently large for the necessities of the institution. The site is admirably adapted to the purpose to which it is devoted, and a large proportion of the soil is available for tillage and pasturage. Somewhat more than 300 acres of the land is in one tract, nearly a mile in length from east to west, and varying from a quarter to half a mile in width from north to south. It is bounded on the north, for a distance of a little more than a mile and one-fifth, by Mill River; and on the south, through its whole length (a distance, including curves, of 6084 feet, or a fraction over a mile and 48 rods), by a public highway. Thus its situation is such that, although in the immediate vicinity of a pretty large town, it can be subjected to that seclusion and isolation which are important in the treatment of the insane, with but comparatively little inconvenience to the surrounding inhabitants. Its position, and the irregularities of its surface, combine to invest it with the possibility of becoming one of the most beautiful of estates. Nature has done her share of the work; and it now awaits the share of art, a portion of which it is from year to year receiving.

Although a State institution, this hospital has received no gratuitous assistance from the State since the spring of 1867. Since that time it has relied for its income solely upon the products of its farm, the board-bills of its patients, and the small sum of $10 each for the burial expenses of State patients who die in the hospital. The receipts from the last-mentioned source during the past year were $100.

For the entire support of State patients, including clothing and loss from breakage and all other kinds of destruction, the hospital receives $3.50 per week from the treasury of the commonwealth. This is the compensation fixed by statute law. Nearly one-half of the inmates belong to this class. During the past year the weekly average of them was 48.14 per cent. of the whole.

For town patients it receives $3.50 each per week from the town treasuries respectively for board, together with pay for clothing furnished by the hospital, and for damages suffered from them. Of town patients, the weekly average for the year was 39.75 per cent., or about two-fifths of the whole.

For private patients there is no uniform price. The average pay from all who were here Sept. 30, 1878, was $5.17³/₁₀ each per week. Clothing and damages are extra charges. The weekly average of these patients during the past year was 10.12 per cent., or a trifle more than one-tenth of the whole.

The average weekly pay per capita which the hospital received for ALL its patients, State, town, and private, in the course of the year is $3.70⁸/₁₀. Such are the only pecuniary resources of the hospital.

In April, 1865, the hospital was freed from debt, and the financial statement at the close of that month showed a balance of $302.04 in its favor. Between that time and the 1st of June, 1867, it received a direct bonus from the State of $5000, in two appropriations, for specific purposes,—one of $2000 and the other of $3000.

As an offset to the $5000 bonus, the hospital has purchased and paid for several lots of land, amounting to about 142 acres, the total cost of which was $22,565. The State, then, has been overpaid for its bonus in the sum of $17,565.

The amount paid by the hospital for repairs and improvements in the course of the thirteen years from Sept. 30, 1865, to Sept. 30, 1878, is $156,701.31.

The surplus of cash assets now on hand is $27,590.88, or $27,288.84 larger than it was on the 30th of April, 1865.

The purchased provisions and supplies, including fuel and stored clothing now on hand, are estimated to have cost $11,019.57. The amount of similar supplies on the 30th of April, 1865, was $2500. The increase of assets under this head is, therefore, $8519.57.

The value of household furniture in the hospital is, at a low estimate, at least $10,000 greater than it was on the 30th of April, 1865, at the same rate or standard of appraisal. To be certain, however, of no exaggeration, let it be called $8000. Collecting these several sums, the account of debit of the commonwealth to the hospital appears to be as follows:

Excess of cost of land over direct bonus.....	$17,565.00
Repairs and improvements	156,701.31
Excess of present cash assets	27,288.84
Increase of provisions and supplies.....	8,519.57
Increase of furniture.....	8,000.00
Total.....	$218,074.72

The necessary current repairs of the buildings may be estimated at $3000 annually. Deducting this sum for each of the thirteen years since Sept. 30, 1865,—a total of $39,000,—there is a remainder of $179,074.72. To this amount, then, has the hospital assisted itself to things for most of which it is generally expected that such institutions will rely upon direct appropriations from the treasury of the commonwealth.

The following table exhibits the deaths, and their ratios, from Sept. 30, 1858, to Oct. 1, 1878:

OFFICIAL YEAR.	Whole No. of Patients.	Daily Average No. of Patients.	DEATHS.			Per Cent. on Whole No. of Patients Treated.	Per Cent. on Daily Average No. of Patients.
			Men.	Women.	Total.
1858-59.....	313	229.55	7	12	19	6.07	8.27
1859-60.....	398	255.96	9	18	27	6.78	10.54
1860-61.....	434	314.26	15	15	30	6.91	9.54
1861-62.....	442	313.80	9	10	19	4.29	6.05
1862-63.....	470	355.28	19	7	26	5.53	7.31
1863-64.....	475	357.63	17	30	47	9.89	13.14
1864-65.....	469	342.40	17	24	41	8.76	11.97
1865-66.....	488	376.35	18	13	31	6.35	8.23
1866-67.....	543	401.03	23	24	47	8.66	11.71
1867-68.....	565	413.41	25	18	43	7.61	10.40
1868-69.....	590	405.10	13	12	25	4.23	6.17
1869-70.....	604	408.83	22	11	33	5.46	8.07
1870-71.....	616	421.90	16	12	28	4.54	6.64
1871-72.....	619	428.72	19	18	37	5.97	8.63
1872-73.....	614	437.23	13	8	21	3.42	4.80
1873-74.....	626	469.54	14	11	25	3.99	5.32
1874-75.....	629	475.35	23	18	41	6.52	8.62
1875-76.....	629	474.21	18	19	37	5.88	7.80
1876-77.....	603	476.16	21	21	42	6.96	8.82
1877-78.....	551	442.43	14	9	23	4.17	5.19

The proportion of deaths for the full period of twenty years, as calculated upon the whole number of patients annually treated, is 6.01 per cent.; as calculated upon the daily average number of patients in the hospital, it is 8.23 per cent.

The proportion of mortality of the first ten years was 25 per cent. greater than that of the last ten.

By either method of comparison the ratio of deaths for the year just closed is far below the average, not only of the whole period, but also of the latter half.

At the close of the official year, 1876-77, 475 patients remained in the hospital: 229 of them were men and 246 women. In the course of the year just ended 40 men and 36 women, a total of 76, have been admitted; hence the whole number under treatment within the official year was 551, of whom 269 were men and 282 women. The number discharged was—of men, 40; women, 59; total, 99. Of deaths there were 23; 14 of them being of men and 9 of women.

At the close of the year, Sept. 30, 1878, 215 men and 214 women, a total of 429, remained in the hospital. The largest number of patients on any day in the year was 476,—on the 26th of October, 1877; and the smallest number 429,—on each of four successive days in June, 1878. The average daily number for the year was a fraction over 442.

Of the 99 patients who left the hospital, 26 were recorded as recovered, 44 as improved, and 29 as unimproved.

Trustees of the Northampton Lunatic Hospital.

Name.	Residence.	When Appointed.	Service Ended.	From what Cause.
Charles E. Forbes.....	Northampton.....	1856	1857	Term expired.
Lucien C. Boynton.....	Uxbridge.....	1856	1858	" "
Eliphalet Trask.....	Springfield.....	1856	1875	" "
John C. Russell.....	Great Barrington.....	1856	1859	Resigned.
Horace Lyman.....	Greenfield.....	1856	1857	Removed.
Charles Smith.....	Northampton.....	1857	1890	Resigned.
Luther V. Bell.....	Somerville.....	1857	1859	" "
Zebina L. Raymond.....	Greenfield.....	1858	1859	" "
Franklin Ripley.....	Greenfield.....	1859	1860	Died in office.
Edward Dickinson.....	Amherst.....	1859	1864	Resigned.
Walter Ladin.....	Pittsfield.....	1859	1866	Term expired.
Silas M. Smith.....	Northampton.....	1860	1863	" "
Charles Allen.....	Greenfield.....	1860	1861	Resigned.
Alfred R. Field.....	Greenfield.....	1861	1864	" "
Edward Hitchcock.....	Amherst.....	1863	Still in office.
Silas M. Smith.....	Northampton.....	1864	" "
Edmund H. Sawyer.....	Easthampton.....	1864	" "
Henry L. Sablin.....	Williamstown.....	1866	1876	Term expired.
Adams C. Deane.....	Greenfield.....	1875	Still in office.
Henry W. Taft.....	Pittsfield.....	1876	" "

The institution was opened with W. H. Price, M.D., as superintendent, who remained until 1864, when Dr. Pliny Earle was appointed to the position, and is the present incumbent. Dr. Earle has ever manifested a deep interest in the institution, and much of its present success is due to the efficient manner in which he has watched over and guided its affairs. The present officers of the hospital are as follows:

Trustees.—Silas M. Smith, Esq., Northampton; Adams C. Deane, M.D., Greenfield; Henry W. Taft, Esq., Pittsfield; Hon. Edmund H. Sawyer, Easthampton; Edward Hitchcock, M.D., Amherst.

Resident Officers.—Pliny Earle, A.M., M.D., Superintendent; Edward B. Nims, M.D., First Assistant Physician; Daniel Pickard, M.D., Second Assistant Physician; Walter B. Welton, Clerk; Asa Wright, Farmer; Danford Morse, Engineer.

Treasurer.—Pliny Earle, Northampton.

Subordinate Officers.—Jeremiah E. Shufelt, Male Supervisor; Lucy A. Gilbert, Female Supervisor; F. Josephus Rice, Steward; Mary E. Ward, Seamstress; Nell Russell, Laundress; Charles Ziehlke, Baker.

The hospital is beautifully located on an eminence about one mile west of the village, and commands one of the most picturesque views within the bounds of the Connecticut Valley.

Shady Lawn Sanitarium.—A.D. 1874, Gothic Seminary becomes Shady Lawn Sanitarium.

After a considerable period of disuse this attractive establishment was, in the summer of 1874, selected for a work no less commendable and useful, and as profitable and honorable to the town, as had flourished within its precincts in its palmiest early days. Indeed, its celebrity can hardly have been as great or wide as at the present moment. In another division of this history we have given a sketch of Dr. A. W. Thompson, who devoted it at the time in question to the general uses of a private hospital for the wealthier classes of invalids, with especial reference, however, to insanity, to diseases peculiar to women, and to the alcohol and opium habits.

Success would seem to have been secure from the start of his enterprise. Patients were sent from great distances, and by the advice of the most eminent physicians. Canada, the Western and Southern States, California, and Cuba have contributed, as well as New England, New York, and the home vicinity, to the list of its cases. It is very plain to the visitor that Dr. Thompson has not solely relied upon either his own previous reputation with the public and his medical confrères, or upon the beauty of his grounds and the loveliness of nature at this spot, for the continuance and success of his business. He has poured himself out into the place. It is not too much to say that he has recreated it; and its new birth has completely adapted it to every want of its invalid guests. A liberal hand has supplied every modern convenience of gas, water, steam, and furniture. Billiards, exercises, horses, are made a free means, whether of diversion or needful prescription. A generous air of taste, conscientious care, skill, and liberality quite fills and invests the establishment; and we add our voice to the concurrent expression of visitors and writers who speak of Northampton men and institutions when we congratulate both the doctor and the town upon his success.

We conclude with the remark that we should suppose Shady Lawn would eminently meet the wants of invalid luxury-seekers, not only for the reasons given above, but because of its proximity, over easy walks, to the business-centre of a fine town,—to the opera-house, post-office, public library, railroad stations, and stores,—being only one block removed; and yet it is retired, within ample grounds, and remote from rumble and dust.

"Hasten slowly" is the motto of the house, which salutes one entering at the front.

Memorial Hall and Public Library.—The first circulating library of any extent of which any record can be found is that of Northampton Social Library. Following there was the High School Lyceum Library, and in 1834 the Northampton Young Men's Society was commenced, which established a library and reading-room, and the books of the Social Library were soon added to its shelves. In January, 1839, a book club was formed, which is still in existence, its members being limited to 20. The Young Men's Institute, for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a library and promoting public instruction, by lectures or otherwise, was organized in 1846. The first meeting of which there is any record was held on the 8th of January, 1846. The week following, on the 15th of January, the organization was completed, a constitution and by-laws adopted, and Henry Bright chosen President; Joseph Lathrop, Treasurer; W. O. Gorbam, Corresponding Secretary; and W. D. Whitney, Recording Secretary. It was reported that $312 had been contributed, and arrangements were made for a course of lectures. The books of the already existing libraries were probably given to the Institute, as a vote was passed on the 21st of October, 1846, authorizing J. P. Williston to "act with the principals of the high schools as a committee to choose books for the Social Library, according to the stipulation contained in the conditions on which that library was given into the charge of the Institute." For a number of years the library was kept in a room over the store of Nathan Dikeman, in Shop Row. Soon after the present town-hall was built, in 1850, the Institute asked and obtained of the town the free use of a room in the hall, and in the same year a reading-room was added to the library, but was discontinued in 1852. It was removed, in 1850, to the room in the town-hall at present occupied by the water commissioners. A few years afterward the library was moved across the hall to the two rooms now used by the school committee, and in them it was kept till its removal to the present building. In May, 1852, Otto Goldsmith and Jenny Lind Goldsmith presented to the Institute $700, the proceeds of a concert, which they desired should be "devoted to the purchase of standard works, well bound, such as are believed to be of permanent value." The letter accompanying the donation was, by vote of the Institute, framed and hung in the library. In November, 1852, the subject of forming a free public library, in accordance with a then recent law of the State, was put into the hands of a committee, who reported in its favor; but the subject was, after discussion at several meetings, indefinitely postponed. At a meeting held March 10, 1853, a committee was appointed to obtain an act of incorporation. On the 21st of April, 1853, an act was granted by the Legislature, naming Samuel A. Fisk, S. W. Hopkins, and Henry Dikeman as incorporators of the Northampton Young Men's Institute. This was accepted in July of the same year, and the Institute reorganized under it. The first catalogue of the library was printed in 1857, the second was issued in 1862, and the third, the present one, in 1874. Supplements have been printed at various times, as books accumulated.

On the 29th of February, 1860, the Institute voted to offer

Christopher Clarke, and M. M. French. Subscription papers were at once circulated, the sons of Northampton living abroad were appealed to, and many very liberal donations were obtained. The largest sum was that given by Mr. John Clarke, amounting in all to $7000, of which $5000 was donated to the building fund and $2000 to the Young Men's Institute. Mr. George Bliss, of New York, subscribed $5000, and Mr. E. H. R. Lyman, $3500. The private subscription was filled in the summer of 1871, and the committee at once proceeded to the work assigned them.

In July, 1869, occurred the death of Mr. John Clarke, who left by his will the "sum of $40,000 in trust to the town of Northampton, for the benefit of the public library in said town, for the erection of a suitable building, and the increase and maintenance of the library, and for no other purpose." In accepting the trust thus conferred upon it, the town, by a special vote, set apart the income of the fund for the purchase of books.

As soon as the subscription was completed the committee the use of the books to the town of Northampton, for a free public library, so long as the town should annually appropriate a sum not less than 40 cents for each of its ratable polls. At the annual meeting in that year the town accepted the proposition, and appropriated $500 for the increase and maintenance of the library. From that time the town has made annual appropriations, varying from year to year, the largest amount, $2500, being granted in 1873.

MEMORIAL HALL AND PUBLIC LIBRARY.

In 1867 measures were first taken toward obtaining a library building, and a committee was appointed by the Institute to act in reference to the matter. In 1868 the lot on which the building is located was purchased, donations for that purpose, of $1000 each, having been obtained from E. H. R. Lyman and Whiting Street. At the annual town-meeting in 1869 a vote was passed appropriating the sum of $25,000 for the purpose of erecting a memorial hall and public library building in honor of our fallen soldiers, whenever a like amount shall have been raised from other sources, and a committee of five persons appointed to carry out the vote. This committee consisted of Charles Delano, A. T. Lilly, Luke Lyman, in charge of the matter proceeded to obtain the necessary plans for the construction of the "Memorial Hall and Public Library Building." Consultations were had with some of the most noted architects in the country who had made public buildings and libraries a special study, and the present plan was offered. After obtaining bids for the erection of the building, it was found that it could not be built for the sum of money in the hands of the committee. A meeting of the town was called, and the alternative presented of reducing the size of the building or increasing the appropriation. It was announced that a further private subscription of $4000 had been made, on condition that the building should be erected in accordance with the original plan, and the sum of $16,000 additional was voted. The work was put under contract, and the building erected in 1872 and '73. The committee had not taken into account, in their estimate of expenditures, the cost of the heating apparatus nor the shelving for the books. The work was substantially completed in the fall and winter of 1873, and the committee, having expended all the appropriations, asked the town for money enough to put in the steam-boiler and pipes. At the first meeting the town refused an appropriation. A second meeting was afterward held, at which the sum of $4000 was voted for this purpose, and the committee proceeded at once to put in the heating apparatus. The library was removed to the new building in March, 1874.

The memorial hall and library building stands deservedly in the front rank of similar buildings in this country. The memorial hall, the most imposing portion of the building, constitutes the main entrance, and is 64 by 40 feet. The hall is 25 feet square, with bays on each side 5 feet deep. The floor is of marble, and the ceiling 20 feet high. It is cased in black walnut and ash, elaborately carved and highly finished. On each side, in the recesses, will be placed the tablets containing the memorial records of our fallen soldiers. In the rear of the hall is a building, 80 by 54 feet and two stories high, containing the library and reading-room. At the rear end of the memorial hall is a broad flight of steps ascending six feet to the library-room. At either side of this ascending entrance-way is a stairway descending to the reading-room. From the landing-place at the library-doors ascend steps on each side to the museum and art-room immediately above the memorial hall, and occupying the entire front of the building. The library-room is 79 by 51 feet, with a nave in the centre 26 feet wide and 27 feet high. The books are arranged in cases directly beneath the nave in the centre of the room, and inclosed in a neat iron railing, giving ample room outside for the use of visitors. The cases are 10 feet long and 7 feet high, and when the entire space is filled with them there will be ample room for 32,000 volumes. The entire capacity of the building is sufficient for three or four times that number of books. On the same floor with the library are four smaller rooms, two on each side of the memorial hall. Those on the west side are used, the larger as a general reception-room, and the smaller for books on art and costly volumes not to be taken from the building. These two rooms have been handsomely and luxuriantly furnished by L. B. Williams, Esq., of Northampton. The two rooms on the opposite side are used, the larger as a consulting-room, in which works of reference, to be examined only in the building, are kept, and the smaller as the librarian's private apartment. Directly below the library is the reading-room, which is 38 by 51 feet, with smaller rooms in the rear, used for storage, work-rooms, etc. Here is also a circular stairway leading from the cellar to the library-room, and two elevators for books and packages. There are two entrances to the reading-room, one on each side of the building, just in the rear of the memorial hall. In the front of the building and under the hall are cloak-room, lavatory, water-closets, etc. In the cellar, extending under the entire building, is the steam-boiler by which the whole is warmed. The total cost of building and grounds was $77,249.79.

The building was occupied in March, 1874, and the library rearranged, a new catalogue printed, and the whole opened to the public on the 30th of March, 1874. The books are classified and arranged on the shelves in a new and very convenient manner, devised by Rev. Wm. S. Leavitt, who, for the last half-dozen years, has efficiently and satisfactorily managed the affairs of the institution. The arrangement of the books is such that, however the library may be increased, each class can always be kept by itself in adjoining cases. The first figure is the number of a shelf; 1, 2, etc., up to 9, designate the class to which the books on that shelf belong. Thus all books whose shelf numbers commence with the figure 1 belong in the class of fiction or juvenile literature; all commencing with figure 2 belong under biography; figure 3, history, travel, voyages, and so on up to 9, which includes art, architecture, and illustrated works. There is a tenth class, comprising books of reference, which have no numbers attached to them, but are kept in the consulting-room, where any one is at liberty to examine them. For each shelf there is a little box, like a post-office box, bearing the number of the shelf, in which are placed the tickets given for the books which are drawn out from that shelf. These simple arrangements are found to facilitate, perhaps as much as possible, the task of finding any particular book on the shelves, or, if it is missing there, of tracing it to the person into whose hands it has gone.

The number of books on the shelves of the library is now not far from 12,000. At the publication of the previous catalogue, in 1862, the number of volumes was stated to be 4500. The increase within the last thirteen years has been about 7500 volumes. A large portion of this increase has been made within the last four years, and has been purchased with the income of the John Clarke fund. It cannot be expected, however, that the library will continue to increase as rapidly in the future, as no small portion of the income of the fund is now swallowed up in running expenses, the town having rescinded the vote dedicating the income of the fund to the purchase of books, and at the same time decreasing the amount of its annual appropriation.

The fund of $40,000, represented by $50,000 second-mortgage bonds of the Ohio and Mississippi Railroad, was among the securities stolen from the Northampton National Bank at the time of the great robbery in 1876, and have not yet been recovered. No income has been received from them for two years, while the road has been in the hands of a receiver.

For many years the duties of librarian have been performed in a most satisfactory manner by the present librarian, Miss C. S. Laidley, who was first chosen to that position when the library was first opened in the present town-hall. The increased labors incident to a larger circulation of books, and its removal to the new building, demanded other assistance, especially in the evenings, when six persons are usually busily employed.

The library is in a very prosperous condition, and reflects great credit upon the enterprise and intelligence of the citizens of Northampton.

BANKS.

NORTHAMPTON BANK.

The first banking institution established in this town was the old Northampton Bank, organized March 31, 1803, with the following directors: Ebenezer Hunt, Jonathan Dwight, Samuel Porter, Oliver Smith, Benj. Prescott, and Erastus Lyman. Levi Shepherd was the first president, and Levi Lyman the first cashier. The bank went into operation in the fall of 1803, when a new board of directors was chosen, at which Samuel Hensaw was chosen president, Mr. Lyman continuing as cashier. The institution was comparatively short-lived, continuing about a dozen years.

THE HAMPSHIRE BANK

was organized Aug. 15, 1813, with the following-named directors: Joseph Lyman, Ebenezer Mattoon, Seth Wright, Oliver Smith, and Ebenezer Hunt, Jr. Joseph Lyman was elected president, and Thos. Swan cashier. The capital stock was $100,000. This bank continued in operation about twenty years, with Hon. Joseph Lyman as president during the entire period.

THE NORTHAMPTON NATIONAL BANK.

The Northampton Bank, of which the National Bank is the successor, was organized April 13, 1833, with a capital of $100,000, which was increased in 1837 to $200,000. The first board of directors was constituted as follows: Eliphalet Williams, Thos. Napier, Lewis Strong, and John Hopkins, of Northampton; David Mack, Jr., of Amherst; Thos. White, of Ashfield; and Nathan Coolidge, of Hadley. Eliphalet Williams was chosen president, which position he held until 1850, when he resigned, and J. D. Whitney was chosen his successor. He remained in the office nine months, when Mr.

Williams was re-elected, and officiated until 1857, when he again resigned, and J. H. Butler was chosen to the position. In 1867, Mr. Butler resigned, and Mr. Williams was again made president, which position he occupied until his death, in 1874. Oscar Edwards has been president since. The first cashier of the bank was J. D. Whitney, who was succeeded in 1850 by Chas. White, of Brooklyn, Conn., who remained until 1861, when J. L. Warriner, of Springfield, was chosen. In 1874, Mr. Warriner resigned, and the present cashier, Mr. Whittlesey, became his successor. The bank was reorganized as the Northampton National Bank in 1865, and the capital increased to $400,000. The present directors are as follows: Oscar Edwards, Winthrop Hillyer, Geo. W. Hubbard, L. B. Williams, H. R. Hinckley, J. L. Warriner, Eleazer Porter, William Skinner, and George A. Burr.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK

is the successor of the Holyoke Bank, which was organized in 1848, with a capital stock of $100,000. The first board of auditors was as follows: John Clarke, Samuel Williston, Austin Smith, Joel Hayden, Oliver Edwards, Jed Allen, Luke Sweetzer, Charles Delano, and A. H. Bullen. The presidents of the bank have been as follows: John Clark, 1848-56; Samuel Williston, 1856-62; Joel Hayden, 1862-73; William B. Hale, 1873, present incumbent.

The following-named persons have served as cashiers from its organization to the present time, viz.: Thomas Green, 1848-55; Matthew B. Bartlett, 1855-63; Henry Roberts, 1863, present cashier.

The Holyoke Bank was chartered with a capital of $100,000, which was increased to $150,000 in 1849, and in 1850 to $200,000. The bank was reorganized as the First National Bank of Northampton, May 2, 1864, with a capital of $300,000. This was increased in 1865 to $400,000, and in 1869 to $500,000, its present capital. The bank was located in the second story of the building corner Main and Pleasant Streets until 1865, when the present fine banking building was erected, corner Main and King Streets, at a cost of $40,000.

The present board of directors is constituted as follows: S. M. Smith, W. B. Hale, E. H. Sawyer, M. M. French, M. A. Spaulding, H. F. Williams, A. L. Williston, Charles Cook, and P. M. Wells.

HAMPSHIRE COUNTY NATIONAL BANK.

This institution was organized in May, 1864, chiefly through the instrumentality of Luther Bodman, Esq., who had been for a long time president of the Conway Bank. It was chartered with a capital of $100,000. The first directors were as follows: Luther Bodman, J. C. Arms, Dr. James Dunlap, Deacon Wm. H. Stoddard, Wm. H. Dickinson, Hiram Nash, Josiah Allis.

Mr. Bodman was chosen first president, and still retains the position. The first cashier was W. C. Robinson, who was succeeded, in 1865, by the present cashier, Lewis Warner. The capital of the bank was increased to $200,000 in 1864, and in the following year to $250,000. The present bank building was erected in 1872, at a cost of $26,000. It is a brick structure, with iron front, and is one of the handsomest business blocks in Northampton. The present directors of the bank are as follows: Luther Bodman, Josephus Crafts, James Dunlap, Wm. H. Stoddard, Merritt Clark, Wm. H. Dickinson, and Hiram Nash.

THE NORTHAMPTON INSTITUTION FOR SAVINGS

was incorporated March 1, 1842. The incorporators were J. H. Butler, Samuel L. Hinckley, and Stephen Brewer. The first meeting was held Oct. 1, 1842, when the following officers were chosen: C. P. Huntington, President; John P. Williston and Benjamin Barrett, Vice-Presidents; John Clarke, Ansel Wright, Winthrop Hillyer, W. A. Arnold, N. A. Hawley, Joseph Lathrop, Trustees; J. H. Butler, Auditor; S. L. Hinckley, Secretary and Treasurer.

The presidents of the bank have been as follows: C. P. Huntington, 1842-50; Erastus Hopkins, 1850-53; Joseph Lathrop, 1853-57; Winthrop Hillyer, 1857-64; Benj. Barrett, 1864-67; J. H. Butler, 1867-68; Wm. Allen, 1868-76; S. T. Spaulding, 1876-77; H. G. Knight, 1877, present incumbent.

Treasurers, S. L. Hinckley, 1842-53; W. O. Gorham, 1853-54; Benj. Barrett, 1854-64; John Whittlesey, 1864-66; L. Maltby, 1866, present incumbent.

The present officers and trustees are as follows: H. G. Knight, President; Eleazer Porter and M. M. French, Vice-Presidents; L. Maltby, Secretary; W. Hillyer, O. Edwards, J. L. Warriner, D. Kingsley, C. B. Kingsley, M. Smith, F. Dickinson, F. H. Dawes, S. M. Cook, Elisha Hubbard, H. R. Hinckley, Merritt Clark, C. E. Lamson, T. G. Spaulding, Trustees.

The present elegant and spacious banking building was erected in 1877, at a cost of $26,000. Previous to this time the bank had occupied rooms successively in the office of the treasurer, over the store of O. A. Skilton, and in the second story of the Northampton Bank building. This institution is in a highly-prosperous condition, its assets amounting to $2,000,000.

THE HAMPSHIRE SAVINGS BANK

was organized in May, 1869. J. C. Arms was chosen president, Lewis Warner treasurer, and Luther Bodman secretary. In 1873, Mr. Bodman was chosen president, and still officiates in that capacity. This bank has had a successful career, and its deposits now amount to $473,852.91. The present officers are as follows: Luther Bodman, President; Wm. H. Stoddard, A. Wright, Webster Herrick, and Lewis Bodman, Vice-Presidents; H. A. Longley, W. T. Clement, L. B. Williams, James C. Arms, Josephus Crafts, James Dunlap, Solomon Alvord, Wm. H. Dickinson, Hiram Nash, E. H. Wood, E. A. Edwards, and W. A. Nash, Trustees; Lewis Warner, Secretary and Treasurer.

THE FLORENCE SAVINGS BANK

was organized April 5, 1873, and opened on the following month. Deposits are placed on interest quarterly. The amount of deposits Jan. 1, 1869, was $88,855.40. The institution is successful, and its present officers are as follows: A. T. Lilly, President; George A. Burr and Oran Storer, Vice-Presidents; A. L. Williston, Samuel Porter, A. G. Hill, H. F. Cutler, George P. Warner, H. H. Bond, S. A. Bottum, D. F. Ranney, Amos Eldridge, A. B. Clark, W. L. Wilcox, E. E. Wood, R. M. Branch, R. D. Wilson, J. B. Learned, and M. W. Bond, Trustees.

THE NORTHAMPTON BANK ROBBERY.

This quiet town was thrown into a state of great excitement Wednesday morning, Jan. 26, 1876, by the evidence that an attempt had been made to rob the vault of the Northampton National Bank. The news spread like wildfire, and throughout this whole region, and in fact all over the country, there was the most intense interest manifested to learn the details of the burglary, which, in brief, are as follows:

On the night of Tuesday, Jan. 25, 1876, seven masked men entered the house of John Whittlesey, cashier of the bank, and simultaneously took charge of the seven inmates, handcuffed and bound them, and forced the cashier to give the combinations to the locks on the vault-door, on the safe in the vault, and on the iron box inside the safe. At first refusing, he finally, after receiving severe personal injuries, gave the combinations. The burglars entered the bank after the bank watchman and night policemen had gone off duty, opened the vault and the safe, took about $12,000 in currency and nearly $800,000 in bonds, and decamped. The first alarm was given about a quarter before seven, but the general alarm was not given until an hour or more after. Even then, so skillfully did the burglars do their work that it was not known that any of the funds of the bank had been taken until the following night, when, a safe manufacturer having arrived from New York in answer to a summons, it was found that the robbery had been successful, and that $800,000 in money and bonds had been transferred from a place of supposed security to the possession of thieves.

It appears that the seven burglars went to the house of Cashier Whittelsey, on Elm Street, soon after twelve o'clock at night. They passed down the Paradise Road, went up the ravine nearly opposite J. C. Ward's house, and thence across the lots, approaching the house from the rear.

The house was occupied by Mr. Whittelsey's family, consisting of himself and wife, Miss Mattie C. White, of Williamsport, Pa., a niece of Mrs. W., and Kate Nugent, the kitchen girl; also by Mr. T. B. Cutler, a Hampshire Gazette printer, his wife, and Miss Benton, an invalid lady, making seven occupants of the house, whose sleeping-rooms were all on the second floor.

The burglars all wore masks on their heads and faces, and were dressed in overalls, with jackets or blouses of the same goods. One of them wore a linen duster. They wore rubbers while in the house. Two of them were rather tall and the others of medium height, but all were stout and stalwart men. Their masks were made by cutting off the legs of men's drawers and pulling them over the head, cutting holes for the eyes. One mask, however, was made of cambrie, and this was worn by the leader of the gang. They talked considerably while in the house, but used very little rough or profane language. Two or three of them seemed to be men of gentlemanly manners, as indicated by their conversation and the consideration and attentions shown to the ladies. They appeared to be under the direction of a leader, who gave orders directed to "number one," "number two," and so on. No names were spoken, but they had signs, one of which was a sort of hissing noise and another consisted of rapping. Their voices, with one exception, all seemed to be those of Americans; but one man spoke with a brogue.

Their seemed to be a simultaneous movement upon all the apartments, and, there being seven of the burglars, there was one for each inmate of the house. Two men entered Mr. Whittelsey's room, one going to his side of the bed and the other to the side occupied by Mrs. Whittelsey. One spoke sharply to Mr. Whittelsey, who was asleep, and that aroused him. Mrs. Whittelsey was awake then, and, instantly comprehending the object of the visitation, she told them it was of no use for them to get Mr. Whittelsey's key, as the bank-vault could not be opened without the other keys, which were in the possession of Mr. Warriner and Mr. Prince. The reply was, "We have them." Mrs. Whittelsey said this before the burglars made known the object of their visit. The man who entered Miss White's room was seen by her as he came in. He had a dark lantern, and wore a linen duster. She supposed it was Mr. Whittelsey in his dressing-gown, and that there was some trouble in the house or that the house was on fire. When she saw it was not him she screamed and sprang out of bed. He pushed her back and told her to keep still and she should not be hurt. She also comprehended the object of the visit.

Mr. Cutler heard Miss White scream, and quickly arose, stepped out into the hall, and inquired what the matter was. He at first supposed Miss Benton was in trouble. At the head of the stairs he met a man with a dark lantern, who at once placed his hand over Mr. Cutler's eyes and told him not to make a noise and he should not be hurt. He handcuffed Mr. C. and led him into Mr. Whittelsey's room and ordered him to sit on the bed. He, too, comprehended the situation as soon as the man placed his hand upon him. He knew that they were in the power of a gang of burglars.

Mrs. Cutler was not captured so easily. She supposed Miss

Benton was in trouble, and was going into her room, when she met a man with a dark lantern. She shut the door upon him, but he at once brought a sledge to bear upon it, and smashed out the panel. She had lighted a lamp, and that displeased the man, who extinguished the light and placed his hand upon her throat roughly, when she screamed; but, instead of saying to her to be quiet and she should not be hurt, he used abusive language. This man had very rough hands. Another man entered Miss Benton's room by breaking in the door with a sledge, and still another took charge of the Irish girl, Kate, who was by no means a willing captive. They were all told to keep quiet and they would not be hurt.

When all had been captured they were marched, handcuffed, into Mr. Whittelsey's room. Mr. W. was still in bed, under guard. He was told to get up and dress himself, and the others were also ordered to dress themselves, the robbers getting their clothes for them. Mr. Whittelsey was then taken down-stairs, and the others were secured and safely guarded. They were all told to put on two pairs of stockings, as they were to be bound, and would thus be more comfortable. Mr. Cutler was handcuffed and taken to his room and told to get on the bed quick; he was then strapped and lashed. His legs were spread out, a leather strap with an iron ring upon it put around each ankle, and a cord running under the bed and through the rings on the straps, drawn tightly, made him almost immovable. They very considerably placed a shawl under his feet when he was sitting in a chair before being lashed to the bed. They had a large carpet-bag, which contained their implements. Once an article was missed, and one of the number went to the ravine in the rear of the house to get it, but came back and reported that he could not find it. Mr. Cutler says they treated him very considerably, bringing him extra clothing to make him warm, and placing a pillow under his head.

Mrs. Cutler and Miss Benton were bound together by the hands with a cord of the size of a clothes-line, and also straps on their feet. They were placed on the bed in Mrs. Whittelsey's room. The hired girl was also bound and placed under guard. She was asked if there were blinds to the window, and, on being told that there were not, the man pulled down the curtain.

Mrs. Whittelsey and Miss White were bound together with handcuffs on their hands and straps about their feet. Their other hands were also fastened to each other by a cord running under the bed. Their feet were also lashed to the bed. In this position they were guarded until about fifteen minutes before six o'clock. More or less conversation passed between them and their guard, but he was not in the least rude and used no ungentlemanly language. This man wore a pair of leather or kid gloves, and was quite tall. The inmates of the house were bound in five separate rooms.

When the burglars went away they took one of Mr. Cutler's long-handled market-baskets, holding about half a bushel. They left many of their traps, among which were five sledgehammers, five pairs of handcuffs, five masks, five dark lanterns, two pairs of rubbers, ten leather straps, one pair of soft leather gloves with the finger-ends cut off, five large-sized ginlets, five gags, and some cord. They passed out of a rear door, having closed all the doors of the rooms in which the persons were confined. Their traps were left in Mr. Cutler's sitting-room and kitchen, where there was a coal fire.

Soon after four o'clock—the inmates of the house think it was about half-past four—three distinct raps were heard. Two other raps followed, and then some one said, "All doing well." This was probably a communication between the operators at the bank and those left in charge of the captives in the house, or between a spy at or near the bank and the main body at the house.

When the two men approached Mr. Whittelsey's bed, one of the first things they did was to put their hands under the pillows to ascertain if there was a pistol there.

Getting short of cord while lashing the captives to the beds, they asked the hired girl where the clothes-line was, and, on being informed, one of the men went and got it.

The burglars ransacked the house, opening every closet and all the bureau-drawers. They brought clothing for the ladies from the closets, and were so thoughtful as to hunt up and find a lot of extra stockings in a drawer, which they distributed among the persons who were to be bound. One of the burglars was asked if he was a married man. He said he was; but when asked how many children he had he seemed to be bothered for an answer.

The rooms were not much lighted by the dark lanterns, and the robbers could not be seen very distinctly. Once, when the light was favorable, Mr. Whittelsey looked closely at the man who was questioning him. This was noticed by the burglar, who ordered Mr. W. to keep his eyes away from him.

Mrs. Whittelsey was fortunate enough to save her gold watch, which was on the bureau, near Mr. Whittelsey's. She took it, and by a quick movement slid it under the bureau, where it found a safe resting-place.

When the inmates of the house were being marshaled together in Mr. Whittelsey's room, one and another of them made appeals in behalf of others, who were sick or feeble. Mrs. Whittelsey appealed to them not to treat her niece harshly. Mr. Cutler put in a plea for his wife. Mrs. Cutler spoke feelingly for the invalid Miss Benton. Miss White also appealed for kindness toward Miss Benton. The reply was very significant: one of the burglars said, "There was always some one sick on these occasions."

Cashier Whittelsey says the first knowledge he had of the presence of the burglars was the pressure of a man's hands on his throat. On attempting to speak, the burglar said, "Be quiet, and no harm will come to you." He was immediately handcuffed, but, unlike the treatment of the others, his hands were fastened behind him. He was kept in bed, and in that position he remained from half to three-quarters of an hour. When all the other inmates of the house had been secured, and were gathered in Mr. Whittelsey's room, he was directed to get up and dress himself. For that purpose they unshackled his hands, and assisted him in dressing. He told them he supposed their object was to get into the bank-vault, but he assured them they could not do so, as four keys were necessary. They replied that they would take care of that; that they knew more about bank-locks than he did, and that all they wanted of him was the combinations. Before he arose they examined his bed to see if there was a pistol in it. No pistol was presented to him until after he had dressed himself. They asked him if there was more than one safe in the vault, and he replied that there was not. (There were two.) They took him into the hall and sat him on a sofa. He thinks they did not enter the house as early as the other inmates say they did, for soon after he was attacked he heard a clock strike two. After that he could not keep the run of the time, as they took his gold watch and chain and stopped all the clocks in the house. They told him they were going to take him down to a stable in the rear of the bank, and that if he did not open the vault for them they should "make it hot for him." At about half-past three they took him down-stairs into the sitting-room. They asked him for the key to the bank-door. He replied that he did not have it, as they had rifled his pockets. One of them then produced a key, and asked him if it was the right one. He said it was. They doubted his word, and tried the key in the lock on the front door of the house. It fitted that, and they then accused him of lying, and began choking him. The house-key was soon after found on the floor, and they became satisfied that they had the right key.

In the sitting-room they sat by a table. Here they demanded the combinations. While this was going on one man stood with a pistol pointed at his head, and another with pencil and paper took his answers. There are three combinations, of three figures each, one to the vault-door, another to the safe inside the vault, and the third to the safety-box or steel-chest inside the safe. He gave them false answers. They ordered him to talk fast, and when he hesitated they prompted him by punching his chest with a large, sharp-pointed lead-pencil. Immediately after he had given the false combinations they ordered him to repeat them, and to do it quickly. That he could not do, and they then told him he had lied. They commenced choking him and pummeling his chest, putting him in great torture. They assured him it would be of no use for him to continue to keep from them the combinations, as they should force him to divulge. Their manner was very firm and decided; their movements and speech all indicated that they were fully prepared for the job in hand, and nothing was done which did not show that it had been previously considered and decided upon. Finally, after much suffering, Mr. Whittelsey gave them the correct combinations. They took them down, made him repeat them, ordered him to give certain figures in a particular combination, and in various ways tested him until they were satisfied that they had obtained what they wanted. Even with the correct combinations, Mr. Whittelsey did not believe they could get into the vault without the keys held by Mr. Warriner and Mr. Prince, and so told them; but they said that was their business, and they would take care of it. At about four o'clock they bound him firmly to the bed in the bedroom below. His hands were shackled behind him, his legs were secured by a strap and tied with cords to the side-rails of the bedstead, and strong cords bound his body to the bedstead. He was also gagged. In that position he lay about three hours,—and they were hours of fearful torture to mind and body. He was released at about seven o'clock, and as soon as possible went to the bank. His handcuffs were still on his hands, but they had been filed apart by one of his neighbors.

Mr. Whittelsey was told by one of the burglars that he had seen him at Watch Hill, two years before, while Mr. W. was there on his summer vacation.

At about four o'clock—the time when the watchman and night police went home—all but two or three of the burglars left the house and repaired to the bank, leaving behind a force sufficient to guard the prisoners.

Just before the last of the burglars left the house, they proceeded to gag each of the captives. For this purpose they were prepared with rubber gags. This gag consisted of a rubber ball, about the size of an egg, through which ran a small iron rod. The ball was perforated with three or four holes, so as to allow of breathing. To each end of the iron rod was fastened a strong cord, sufficiently long to reach around the neck. These gags were placed in the mouths of six of the captives, and, there not being another, Miss White was gagged with a handkerchief, a knot being tied in the centre to fill the mouth. When the gags were being tied to Miss White and Mrs. Whittelsey, they complained that they were hurt by their hair being drawn into the knots. The burglar then very carefully drew up their hair and placed the cord under it, where he tied it without injuring them. All the captives being gagged, the two or three burglars in charge of them after four o'clock left the house at about a quarter before six, which would give them just time enough to get to the depot to take the first train for Springfield.

The first to get released sufficiently to give an alarm were Mrs. Whittelsey and Miss White. They worked their hands free, and finally succeeded in raising a window. This was about half-past six. Their screams attracted Mr. James O. Mantor, Mr. Sydell, and one or two others, who were on their way to the hoe-factory. Mr. Charles J. Bridgman, living just across the street, also appeared at the same time. Mrs. Whittelsey was at the open window, screaming, under great excitement. She supposed that Mr. Whittelsey had been taken to the bank by the burglars, and directed the men to make all haste to find him. Mr. Mantor did so, but found the bank-door locked as usual, with no appearance of any trouble there. He then went to the station-house and aroused Policeman Richards, who hurried to the bank. Mr. Richards directed Mantor to go to the office of the deputy sheriff, Ansel Wright, where he would find him. He did so. It was 6.45 when Mr. Mantor notified him. He ran to the bank as quickly as possible, and found the door locked. He then hurried to the Mansion House, where Mr. Warriner, the vice-president and active manager of the bank, boarded, and aroused him. Taking the key to the bank, he ran back, and was the first to enter.

The outer door of the bank was found fastened as usual. The door of the vault was shut, the two dials were apparently all right, and, with the exception of two or three drawers found open, there was nothing to indicate that anybody had been in the bank since the officers left it the night before. On attempting to turn the dials, however, they were found to be loose, and easily came off. The burglars had wrenched them off, but had carefully replaced them, so as to create a favorable impression upon the first comers. There was not a scrap of paper on the floor or upon the counters, nor anything else such as the presence of a gang of burglars would be likely to create. The vault-door, with the exception of the loosened dials and the marks of a small wedge, showed no evidence of having been tampered with. The officers of the bank were at once summoned, and it was their first belief that the vault had not been opened. This belief was stoutly maintained by them and by many others during that day, but the great majority of people, after hearing how skillfully and successfully the burglars had planned and executed their previous work, had little doubt that they accomplished the object of their attempt. There was, however, enough of doubt hanging over the matter to make the suspense very great. The maker of the lock at New York was telegraphed to come up and open the door. He replied that a man would be sent by the first train, but he did not arrive until nine o'clock in the evening, when two men came. They at once went to the bank, and their first work was to replace one of the dials. This took considerable time. It was necessary to take the dial to Webster Herrick's machine-shop to have a hole drilled through it, so that a set-screw could be put in. The dial was thus connected with the spindle. It was then necessary to get the dial in a position to correspond with the position of the burglars' dial when that was removed from the lock. After trying 31 of the 100 points, the operator struck the combination, and in a moment the great bolts were thrown back. The operator's work being done he stepped aside, and Vice-President Warriner came forward and pulled open the door. This was fifteen minutes before twelve o'clock. It was about eleven o'clock when the dial was adjusted to the spindle. The burglars had locked the door on the same combination that was used by the bank-officers. If they had changed the combination, the door could not have been opened in less than four or five days,—that is, the man who put it on said so.

There were present in the bank when the door was swung open about a dozen of the bank-officers, sheriffs, and parties interested. The sight revealed by the opening of the vault was appalling. The door of the new safe in the vault was found to be wide open, also the door of the inner steel chest. One look was enough. It told the whole story. The contents of the safe were gone, and the success of the great burglary was complete.

The scene at this time was one of most painful interest. Up to the last moment before the opening of the vault, Mr. Warriner had stoutly maintained his belief that it had not been entered by the burglars. His confidence in the lock was unbounded, and his astonishment when the sight of the empty safe revealed the great reality was overwhelming. The excitement of the others present was equally intense. All were astonished and confounded. The excitement could not have been greater if an earthquake had opened the bowels of the earth near the bank. A million of dollars' worth of money, stocks, and bonds, the accumulations of half a century of toil, patient waiting, self-denial, and skillful financiering, had vanished. A few hours before, a deep sense of security pervaded the minds of all connected with or interested in the bank. With watchmen, vaults, safes, combination-locks, multiplied keys, and locks upon locks, it was felt that the treasures within were almost absolutely secure. But they were gone. The empty shelves, the rifled boxes, the plundered chest, how eloquent of the uncertainty of things earthly! Verily, "riches take to themselves wings and fly away."

On the floor of the vault there was found a jimmy, which the burglars left. It did not appear to have been used for any purpose, except to open the small trunks of the special depositors.

The office of the four keys, the absence of which Cashier Whittelsey relied upon to prevent the vault being opened by the burglars, was simply to disconnect the dials from the spindle or shaft which moved the machinery in the interior of the lock. This disconnection was properly made when the bank was closed Tuesday afternoon,—the bank-officers are certain of that. The burglars, therefore, could do nothing with the lock in that condition. A very reasonable suggestion is that they wrenched off the dials, taking note of their exact position, and put on a skeleton dial, which they had previously prepared, and which was arranged with a set-screw, by means of which it could be at once connected with the spindle. This is the way the expert opened the vault. He did just what the burglars probably did; but they had the advantage in knowing the position of the dials they took off, while he knew nothing of the position of their dial, which they took with them. He had to get a set-screw put in; they had it all ready at hand. He had to find the position of the dial taken off; they knew it exactly. He knew the combination; so did they. He unlocked the vault in forty-five minutes after connecting the dial with the spindle; they probably did it in two minutes. If we knew the time it took them to wrench off the two dials and put on one of their own, we could tell within five minutes the time it took them to open the vault and safe and gather up the money and bonds.

For several years the three banks in this town had employed a night watchman. His orders had been to go on duty at nine o'clock, and off at four in the morning. Each bank kept a gas-light in the banking-room during the night, and these the watchman would turn off just before leaving. He did so on the morning of the robbery, putting out the lights at about four o'clock. There were also two night policemen, hired by the town, who went on duty at nine and off at four. Why it happened that this force was permitted to retire at so early an hour is a mystery, and was one of the weakest points in all this terrible calamity. From four to half-past five o'clock during the winter season is as still as any hour of the night. It was probably this early retirement of the watch and police that tempted the burglars.

No event in this region, with the exception of the great reservoir disaster in 1874, caused so much excitement as this robbery. It created almost as great consternation as did the opening scenes of the Rebellion. Nothing else but the robbery was talked of. Conversation was all about banks, vaults, safes, money, bonds, stocks, robbers, burglars, masks, gags, combinations, cashiers, pistols, and so on, until every man heard enough on these subjects to make him a pretty good financier, if not a hero.

The Sequel.—The case was immediately placed in the hands of the Pinkerton Agency, and that astute and experienced detective and his assistants strained every nerve to ferret out the robbers. After the lapse of many months suspicion seemed to rest upon Robert Scott, James Dunlap, "Red" Leary, and William Connors as the real personnel of the gang. The burglars, however, upon discovering that they had taken over $1,000,000 in money and bonds, felt very secure, as they knew that the individual losers would be only too anxious to recover the stolen bonds, and that they would be safe even if suspected, and immediately negotiations for a compromise were begun. William D. Edson, a salesman for the Herring Safe Company, and the same person who opened the vault after the robbery was committed, began ostensibly to assist the bank-authorities in negotiating for the funds, and he was soon suspected of "having a hand in it," which proved true. Edson was one of the gang, and had been connected with the robbers a number of years while in the employ of the Herring Company as salesman and lock-expert, which readily gave him access to any bank using this company's safe. He was concerned with the gang in the attempt to rob a bank in Elmira, N. Y., Quincy, Ill., Saratoga, N. Y., Long Island, Covington, Ky., Rockville, Conn., Pittston, Pa., Wilkesbarre, Pa., Nantucket, Syracuse, and Northampton. In 1874 he superintended putting in the doors for the Northampton Bank, and later, under the pretense of fixing the locks, took them off and took impressions of them for the use of the robbers; but this scheme was never consummated.

As soon as Edson saw that he was suspected by the bank-authorities he made still more strenuous efforts to compromise, but to no effect. Mr. L. B. Williams, of Northampton, visited New York several times, and had interviews with Wm. Connors, the negotiator, but no satisfactory terms could be agreed upon. At last Edson was charged with being an accomplice, and for a sum of money—said to be $10,000—went to Pinkerton's Agency and gave a detailed history of the robbery, which led to the arrest of Scott, Dunlap, and Connors, and to the flight of "Red" Leary. The real cause, doubtless, which led to the revelation by Edson was his unsuccessful attempts to secure what he deemed to be his portion of the plunder, as they had attempted only a short time before to cheat him out of his fair proportion of the spoils of the Quincy robbery. Connors escaped from the Ludlow Street jail, but Scott and Dunlap were brought to Northampton, tried, convicted, and sentenced to twenty years in the State-prison. It seems that many attempts were made to compromise with Scott and Dunlap almost to the hour of sentence, but to no effect; the men are serving out the sentence for their crime, and the funds are still in the possession of the robber gang.

There is only one more phase of this robbery that will be of interest to the general reader, and that is, Where were the securities hidden and when were they removed? Immediately after the robbery the intelligence was given to Edson that the "plunder" was secreted in Northampton, and as soon as he was in a position to communicate this intelligence to the bank-authorities he did so. The excitement then became intense. About two hundred men patrolled the roads, avenues, and lanes in and about Northampton, and seemingly every possible spot was searched for the hidden treasure, but the search was useless. At last Messrs. Scott and Dunlap evidently suspected Mr. Edson of treachery, and notified him that the securities had been removed to New York. Knowing Scott's consummate ability to plan and organize, and Dunlap's ability to execute, he readily believed it, and immediately communicated the information to the bank-people, who in turn did not for a moment question its truth, and the large body of men—about two hundred—who had been guarding the town at no little expense were withdrawn, and probably that very night, or soon thereafter, Dunlap, who had been on the watch to witness the operation of this ruse, walked over from Amherst, and, entering the school-house* on Bridge Street, tore up a little step which was fastened to the floor under the blackboard, removed the securities, and, dumping them in a bag, he "shouldered" it, and in the stillness of the night marched out of the quiet town of Northampton with the million dollars of securities to Amherst, where he boarded the train, and a few hours more found him with his plunder safe in the metropolis.

CONFLAGRATIONS.

Northampton, as well as other towns, has not escaped the march of the fire-fiend, but up to the year 1870 was accounted fortunate, inasmuch as no disastrous conflagrations had occurred. In that year, however, it was visited by two fires, which desolated the central part of the village. The first occurred on the night of May 19, 1870, when the Hunt building and the Edwards church were destroyed, the loss estimated at $52,000; insurance, $28,250.

Just two months, lacking one day (July 18), from this disaster the old Warner House, Warner House Block, and Lyman Blocks were burned, which was the most disastrous conflagration that ever occurred in the town. This fire originated in the kitchen of the hotel and rapidly spread, communicating the flames to the adjoining buildings. The fire raged four hours, and completely destroyed the buildings. The Warner House was owned by Charles F. Simonds, J. C. Orcutt, proprietor. The Warner House Block was owned by Wm. H. Todd, the Lyman brick block by the Fitch Brothers, of Hatfield, who also owned the Lyman wooden block. A small building west of the Warner House, and a barn and ice-house in the rear of the Lyman Block, were also burned. The total loss was $100,000, insured for $84,600.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The people of Northampton evidently early manifested an interest in the matter of extinguishing fires, as a fire company was in existence at an early day, but its history and the names of the persons composing it are lost in oblivion. The first records which we have been able to secure date back to 1854, at which time a series of by-laws were adopted, and the following "engineers of the fire department" were appointed by the selectmen: A. H. Bullen, Ebenezer Strong, Samuel L. Parsons, Lucius Lewis, Luman Bartlett, Oscar Edwards, W. C. Prentiss, A. D. Wade, Justin Thayer, Thomas Musgrove, and Lewis Wright. At a "meeting of the engineers," held April 13, the following officers were chosen: A. H. Bullen, Chief-Engineer; Luman Kingsley, First Assistant; Ebenezer Strong, Second Assistant; Oscar Edwards, Clerk and Treasurer.

The following have been chief-engineers from that time to the present: Ansel Wright, 1855; Benjamin E. Cook, 1856-57; H. I. Hodges, 1858-60; Webster Merrick, 1861 (declined); C. W. Bramin, 1861-63; S. M. Smith, 1864-67; C. W. Bramin, 1868; Mark H. Spaulding, 1869-70; Samuel I. Parsons, 1871-73; Watson L. Smith, 1874; E. V. Foster, 1875-76; Lewis Warner, 1877-79.

The present organization of the fire department is as follows:

Lewis Warner, Chief-Engineer; Levi I. Clark, Joseph Jewett, George H. Smith, Thomas Rowland (Bay State), George S. Graves (Florence), Charles S. Warner (Leeds), Assistant Engineers; John Metcalf, Secretary. No. 1 Hose Company, 12 men, 550 feet hose; George Hunt, Foreman. No. 2 Hose Company, 12 men, 350 feet hose; Vetile Francis, Foreman. No. 3, Spare Reel, 350 feet hose; I. N. Taylor, Foreman. No. 5 Hose Company, 12 men, 550 feet hose; George I. Abbott, Foreman. Hook-and-Ladder Company, 15 men; Calvin B. Kingsley, Foreman. Bay State Hand-Engine and Hose Company, 12 men; Daniel Cairn, Foreman. Nonotuck Hose and Extinguisher Company, 16 men; George E. Ballou, Foreman. Florence Hose and Extinguisher Company, 16 men; Albert Shumway, Foreman. Leeds Hand-Engine and Hose Company (Leeds), 12 men; Ansel Wright, Foreman. One

* The attic of the school-house had been used as a rendezvous for the robbers previous to the burglary.

Steamer, John Tappan, No. 1. Hose,—Centre, 2500 feet; Bay State, 500 feet; Florence, 1500 feet; Leeds, 500 feet.

WATER-WORKS.

The first movement to furnish this town with a water supply was made in 1867, in an attempt to organize a company. The requisite amount of stock, however, could not be obtained, and the project was abandoned. The disastrous fires of 1870, noted above, again brought the matter prominently before the citizens of the town, and at a meeting held July 26th of that year a committee, consisting of D. W. Bond, J. S. Lathrop, M. M. French, Lucius Dimock, and Luke Lyman, was appointed to investigate various plans for supplying Northampton, Florence, and Leeds with water, and to report at a future meeting; and $1000 was appropriated to defray their expenses. The report of the committee was made in October, and adopted by the town on November 5th. An issue of $200,000 of town bonds was authorized, and the committee were chosen as a board of water commissioners; and in 1871 an act of incorporation was obtained. Work was begun on the reservoir in May, 1871, and on September 11th the reservoir was filled. It covers an area of between three or four acres, and has a capacity of 4,000,000 gallons. The reservoir is fed from various mountain streams in the towns of Northampton, Westhampton, Chesterfield, and Williamsburg, and the water is very pure. The fall of water is all that could be desired, even for fire purposes; it has a fall of ninety feet in Florence, two hundred and twenty feet in the centre of the village of Northampton, and two hundred and forty feet at the Connecticut River depot.

The works were completed in the autumn of 1871, and December 7th, same year, were tested. At Florence a stream was thrown perpendicularly to the height of seventy feet, and eighty feet horizontally. In the centre the stream reached the height of one hundred and fifty feet, and was forced one hundred and eighty feet horizontally.

The last report of the water commission gives the number of miles of pipe laid as $21\frac{2}{3}\frac{2}{3}\frac{2}{3}\frac{2}{3}\frac{2}{3}$; number of gates, 84; and number of hydrants, 123.

The total cost of the works up to February, 1879, had been $208,836.24. The gross income for the year ending Feb. 1, 1879, was $16,611.05, $4000 of which was paid by the town.

The present board of water commissioners is constituted as follows: J. S. Lathrop, Luke Lyman, J. L. Hartwell, Oscar Edwards, Lucius Dimock, Geo. A. Burr. J. S. Lathrop is President; Oscar Edwards, Treasurer; Luke Lyman, Clerk; and Jonas M. Clark, Superintendent.

THE NORTHAMPTON BRIDGE.

The old town records show that in April, 1658, it was voted that as a means of crossing the river a ferry-boat should be built for the common use of the people. Robert Bartle was chosen keeper; and "if any person or persons have occasion to use the said boat they shall demand the key of Robert Bartle, and that all such person or persons, after that they have had the key delivered to them, shall stand to the hazard of the boat till the key be delivered to the proper keeper." It was also voted that "no person or persons that carry over the boat over the river shall not retain it there above one hour and half." The key was also to be returned within an hour and a half, under a penalty of 2s and 6d.

Clark's ferry and Goodman's ferry were subsequently established, and answered the purposes of the people until the beginning of the present century, when a movement was started for bridging the Connecticut at this point.

In 1803 a company was incorporated for the purpose of building a bridge across the Connecticut, under the name of the "Proprietors of the Northampton Bridge," and the following-named persons were the incorporators: Ebenezer Hunt, Levi Shepard, Jos. Lyman, Jr., Asahel Pomeroy, John Taylor, Samuel Henshaw, Samuel Porter, Benj. Parsons, Eleazer Clark, Ebenezer Liane, Samuel Hinckley, Josiah Dickinson, John Breck, Benj. Prescott, Benj. Tappan, Enos Smith, Elisha Dickinson, John Smith (2d), Lemuel Warner, Jonathan E. Porter, Eleazer Porter, John Hopkins, Wm. Porter, and Windsor Smith.

The project remained quiet until 1807, when an estimate was made for building a "trussell-bridge" at Clark's ferry. In February, 1808, the proprietors voted to build a bridge, which was built during the summer, and on the 27th of October of the same year was opened. This event was duly celebrated, as will be seen by the following notice, which appeared in the Hampshire Gazette, of Nov. 2, 1808:

"On Thursday last the completion and opening of the Northampton Bridge was celebrated in this town by the proprietors, and an immense concourse of people assembled for the purpose. At 11 o'clock a procession was formed at the house of Mr. Jonas Clark, and moved in the following order:

" Marshal, Gen. Potter, on horseback.

" Music.

" Capt. Breck's Company of Artillery.

" Citizens and Strangers.

" Workmen at Bridge.

" Contractors.

" Two Standards borne by two Lieutenants.

" Members of the Corporation.

" Directors.

" President and Clergy.

" Deputy-Marshal, Maj. Chapman, on horseback.

" In this order the procession passed and repassed the bridge under the salute of minute-guns, which were alternately discharged from the opposite banks of the river. In the centre of the bridge a temporary arch was erected, elegantly decorated with evergreens, over which three United States standards were tastefully arranged.

" From the bridge the procession marched to the meeting-house, where an ingenious, elegant, and truly appropriate sermon was delivered by Rev. Mr. Willard, of Deerfield, from these words: 'Hath not mine hand made all these things?'

" After divine service, a large party, consisting of the corporation and numerous civil and military guests, repaired to Mr. Billings', where an elegant entertainment was provided."

This bridge was built by Jonathan Wolcott and Peleg Kingsley, at a cost of $13,000. It was an open bridge, and in 1817 was rebuilt on plans made by Capt. Isaac Damon, who, with Capt. Salmon Graves, of Whately, were contractors. In 1824 the bridge was swept away with a freshet, and it was superseded by a structure costing $33,333.99, built by Capt. Isaac Damon and a Mr. Town, in 1826. The eastern portion of this bridge was carried away by a freshet in 1859. The contract to rebuild was let to Messrs. Harris & Briggs for $20,000; the old half was also raised at a cost of $1075. In 1871 the charter of the bridge company was extended for twenty years; provided, also, that in case either of the towns of Northampton or Hadley should make application for a free bridge, a commission should be appointed to determine the amount to be paid by the respective towns interested and Hampshire County. Nothing was done in this direction until 1875, when the town of Hadley made application for a free bridge. The commission appointed to determine and award the amounts to be paid consisted of Henry Morris, of Springfield; C. C. Conant, of Greenfield; and M. B. Whitney, of Westfield, who adjudged the bridge company's rights and interest at $25,000, to be paid as follows: $7000 by Northampton, $4000 by Hadley, $3000 by Amherst, and $11,000 by the county of Hampshire. These sums were paid during the year 1875.

The first toll-gatherer was Jonas Clark, appointed in 1808, who, with his son, Spencer Clark, officiated in this capacity until about 1858. Others have been Robert B. Graves, Edward Clapp, and Hiram Day. The latter served about eleven years.

The amount of tolls received were as follows: in 1850, $4364; in 1855, $3725; in 1862, $3700; in 1866, $5150; in 1871, $5491; in 1873, $4523; and in 1874, $5118.

June 14, 1877, the bridge was destroyed by a whirlwind, and it was decided to build an iron structure, and the contract for the same was let to the Canton Wrought-Iron Bridge Co., of Canton, Ohio. The bridge was subjected to a severe test October 31st and November 1st, and on the 3d of November was accepted by the selectmen and opened to the public, in ninety-three days from the day the contract was signed. It is a beautiful and substantial structure, and was erected at a cost of $33,526.36.

GAS COMPANY.

The Northampton Gas-light Company was incorporated in 1853, by Wm. H. Stoddard, Samuel A. Fish, and Daniel Kingsley, with power to hold real estate amounting to $50,000. In 1855 the company was organized, and the construction of the works begun by the contractors, Sabutton & Co., of Middletown, Conn. The works were completed in 1856, at a cost of $35,000. Dec. 12, 1856, the first building was lighted; this was the restaurant of L. B. Edwards. The first president of the company was Joseph Lathrop, and the first superintendent, J. A. Shepherd.

The charter of the company was subsequently amended, allowing them to increase the capital to $100,000, the object of which was to lay mains to the neighboring village of Florence. This plan, however, failed. The two gas-meters now in use by the company have a capacity of 45,387 feet. Location, River Street.

THE MINING BONANZA OF 1679.

In the year 1679 the inhabitants of the little settlement were startled with the report that Robert Lyman had discovered a lead mine within the town, and at a meeting held July 27, 1679, a letter was read setting forth the enterprise, and the records state that "after much discourse and agitation" it was voted that the town have a general interest in opening the mines.

The interest in the discovery of this hidden wealth was not allowed to wane, and "at a legal meeting, Oct. 16, 1679, they then having further Conference about the lead mine which Robert Lyman found out, they then voted that all such persons as would join in the Carrying on of that design, Should meet on the 23d of this Instant at Sun one hour high at night, then to give in a list of their names, and to them or to those persons that shall then appear. The Town do hereby give up all their right in that mine, lying about six miles off, at the west side of the Town."

The "Mineral Company," formed in 1679, was composed of the following persons: William Clark, Sr., John Strong, Samuel Davis, Israel Rust, Joseph Parsons, Sr., Robert Lyman, Joseph Hawley, John King, Joseph Parsons, Jr., Preserved Clapp, John Lyman, Sr., Martyn Smith, Sam'l Bartlett, Richard Lyman, and Medad Punroy."

This company, however, failed to develop the "mines," and the excitement incident to their discovery soon died out. Companies, mushroom-like, have sprung into existence at various times for the purpose of working them, but have as suddenly failed, and the "hidden wealth" still lies buried in the bosom of mother-earth.

THE TOWN-HALL.

For many years after the settlement of the town the good people transacted the town's business in the "meeting-house," and subsequently in the court-house. The movement for the erection of a town-hall was begun in 1819, but it was not until 1823 that the building was erected. It was located on the corner of Main and King Streets, and was built by Capt. Isaac Damon, to whom the town for a number of years paid an annual rental of $175. It was subsequently purchased by the town, and used until 1849, when a new location was secured, and the present building erected. It was dedicated in 1850.

THE CEMETERY.

The people of Nonotuck evidently early manifested an interest in a burial-place for the dead, and until 1661 they were interred near the church on "Meeting-house Hill." In that year the present cemetery was selected, which has been enlarged and beautified from time to time until it is now one of the most attractive rural cemeteries in New England.

EDUCATIONAL INTERESTS.

Not only did the pioneers of Northampton manifest an interest in religious matters, but the schools also claimed their early attention, and in 1663 the old town records show that it was "voted to give Mr. Cornish six pounds toward the school and to take the benefit of the scholars, provided that he teach six months in the year together."

In 1666, William Jeanes was hired by the town to teach school one year, and for his encouragement and satisfaction for his attendance upon that work the town and himself came to this conclusion and agreement:

"1ly. For the year he is to have out of the Towne Stock Ten Pounds, which the Townsmen promise to pay.

"2ly. Four pence per week for such as are in the primer and other English books.

"3. Six pence per week to learn Audience-writing, casting accounts.

"4. In case there be a neglect that they do not come constantly, 3 days shall be accounted a week."

It is evident that in 1668 the schools were not yet an established institution of the town, as the records of that year show that it was "voted by the town that they are willing to have a schoolmaster for the year ensuing."

In 1670 one hundred acres were appropriated, or "sequestered," as it was called, for schools, and in the following year the "town voted and agreed to give the schoolmaster 30 pounds a year, provided that one can be procured fit for such an employment."

Warham Mather and Joseph Hawley were employed to teach the school in 1686, the former to receive forty pounds.

Under date of July 16, 1712, it was voted that the town would maintain a grammar school in its town for the next coming twenty years.

In 1783, Major Joseph Hawley, a prominent citizen of that period, bequeathed certain lands to the town for the use of schools, which were subsequently sold, and a fund known as the "Hawley fund" established, the income of which has since been devoted to the use of the schools. This fund now amounts to $2906.87.

The first school committee, consisting of four persons, was appointed in 1799, and from this time to the present the schools of Northampton have ever kept abreast with the rapid march of educational progress in this State.

Northampton manifested a lively interest in the establishment of high schools, and April 13, 1835, the boys' high school was established. The brick school edifice on Centre Street was erected on lands donated by Hon. Joseph Lyman. In 1836 it was voted by the town that $3500 be expended for the purchase of land and erection of a building for a girls' high school, and in that year the girls' high school building, on Main Street, was erected. The schools were long continued separately, but in 1852 the higher branches were united.

In 1863 the present fine school building at Florence was erected by Samuel L. Hill, at a cost of $33,000, he generously donating the entire sum except $2000, voted by the town. In the year 1864 the present commodious high-school building was erected, at a cost of $36,647.98, $8000 of which was contributed by the late J. P. Williston, through whose efforts the movement was started and finally brought to a successful completion. Not content with the generous contributions he had already made, he expended about $6000 in 1864 on the present building on Centre Street.

PRIVATE SCHOOLS.

Various private schools have flourished from time to time in Northampton, the most prominent, perhaps, being the school known as the Round Hill School, which was established by George Bancroft, the celebrated historian, and J. G. Cogswell, in 1824. For many years it was one of the leading educational institutions of its class in this State, but was discontinued in 1830.

The Gothic Seminary, on Gothic Street, was built in 1835, and opened the same year, by Miss Margaret Dwight, as a young ladies' seminary, and was exceedingly prosperous until the death of Miss Dwight, in 1846, when it was discontinued.

The Northampton Collegiate Institute was established in the defunct Gothic Seminary, mentioned above, by Lewis J. Dudley, in 1849, and for many years was continued in a flourishing condition. It was discontinued in 1862, and the building was subsequently occupied by the Clark Institution for Deaf Mutes. It is now occupied by Dr. A. W. Thompson's Medical Home for Invalids, and is known as Shady Lawn.

A law school was also established here in 1821 by Elijah H. Mills and Samuel Howe, in what was formerly known as the Lyman brick building. Mr. Mills was succeeded, in 1824, by J. H. Ashmun. In 1822, Mr. Howe was appointed judge of the Court of Common Pleas, but remained connected with the school until his death, in 1828. Mr. Ashmun was soon after appointed law-professor in Harvard College, and the school was discontinued.

SMITH COLLEGE.

The grand old commonwealth of Massachusetts has ever been famous for the number and excellence of its educational institutions, and there is no point, even in this State, or the union of States, around which are grouped such a galaxy of literary institutions as Northampton. Clustered within a radius of ten miles are Amherst College, with its extensive art and scientific collections, the Massachusetts Agricultural College, Mount Holyoke Seminary, and Williston Seminary. A new constellation was added to this galaxy, and one whose brilliancy has already been recognized in the literary world, when, in 1875, Smith College was dedicated.

This institution was founded through the liberality of Miss Sophia Smith, of Hatfield, who died June 12, 1870, aged seventy-four years. Miss Smith's charities seemed to be almost boundless, and her donations to various educational institutions during her lifetime were large. It seems that the absence of institutions for women where they might receive the same advantages afforded by the various colleges to men caused her to resolve that a large portion of her wealth should be donated to the founding of a female college which should be equal in all respects with the highest educational institutions in the land. The estate, at her decease, amounted to $475,000, all of which, except $91,400, with accrued interest, by the provision of her will, was devised to the founding of a female college in Northampton, provided the town would raise $25,000 additional. This sum was voted in 1871, which made the fund of the college $411,608.29. By a provision of the will, the expenditure for buildings and real estate is limited to one-half the total amount of the fund. When Miss Smith's will came before the Probate Court for action, objection was made by one of the heirs-at-law and the town of Hatfield, on the ground that she was unduly influenced in locating the college in Northampton; but the evidence was deemed insufficient and the will admitted to probate.

In 1871 the college was chartered, and the first move was made toward the location of the college in the purchase, by the trustees, of the Judge Dewey estate and the adjoining estate of Judge Samuel F. Lyman, consisting of twelve and a half acres of land, at a cost of $51,000.

In June, 1873, Prof. L. Clark Seelye, of Amherst College, was chosen president, and the work of clearing the grounds and laying out the plans for the buildings was immediately begun. The erection of the first college building and the president's house was begun in 1874, and in May the following year the latter was completed, and on the 14th of the following July the college proper was dedicated and President Seelye inaugurated. The dedicatory exercises were of a very interesting character. Addresses were made by Prof. W. S. Tyler, D.D., LL.D., President Seelye, Rev. J. M. Green, Gov. Gaston, and Rev. A. P. Peabody, D.D.

In regard to the construction of the building, its architectural design, etc., we clip the following from Scribner's Monthly:

"To carry out this wish of the founder, the trustees determined to inaugurate a new departure with reference to college buildings. Instead of the immense caravansaries, four or five stories high, in which are gathered recitation-rooms, kitchen, dining- and sleeping-rooms, it was determined, in order to realize both an academic and a home life, to erect one central building for strictly collegiate purposes, and to group around it smaller dwelling-houses which should furnish homes for the students. These residences were to accommodate about twenty-five students, and at the head of each household there was to be a lady who should sustain to it a relation similar to that which a lady in an ordinary home holds to her own family. She should preside over it and give direction to its social and domestic life. Each household should form by itself a separate establishment, and yet all should be connected by similar interests and pursuits as a literary community. The lady teachers might also live in these different families, and by their society and influence contribute to the general welfare and interest. None of the buildings were to be more than two stories and a half high, in order to avoid numerous staircases. These plans have thus far been strictly adhered to, with gratifying results. The beneficial effects of the home-like life are very apparent both in the health and manners of the students. The nervous tension and excitement which must necessarily arise where great numbers are gathered together, and regulations multiplied, are avoided, and the quiet and freedom of a smaller family are secured.

"Personal peculiarities can also thus be more satisfactorily studied, and refining influences more successfully exerted. Instead of formal lectures on decorum and social proprieties, the aim is, through the natural daily intercourse of a well-ordered family, to develop the best social characteristics.

"In these different homes the young ladies receive their friends, enjoy their games and festivities, and their smaller sociables from time to time, while in the larger hall in the college building they also frequently meet, with invited guests, for various entertainments. Instead of being shut up entirely to their own society, they are thus made acquainted with intelligent and refined people of many different classes. Musical concerts and readings are interspersed to give variety to their life.

"The private rooms of the young ladies are designed to suit different tastes. Some of them are for two persons, with study and bedroom; some are arranged as single rooms; all are well ventilated and comfortably furnished.

"The style of the main collegiate building is secular Gothic. It is built of brick, trimmed with stone, and the interior is elegantly finished in unpainted native woods. On the lower floor are the recitation-, reading-, and dressing-rooms. A large, well-furnished laboratory is finely arranged in a single story, sufficiently disconnected from the main building to prevent any annoyance from gases.

"On the second floor there are the large social hall, cabinets, art-gallery and art lecture-rooms, and offices. The main rooms of the second story are so arranged that they can all be thrown together whenever it is desirable for literary or social entertainments, and other purposes. The social hall, also used as a chapel, affords a striking combination of elegant architecture and beauty of finish. The art-gallery, even unfurnished, would delight the eye of an artist. This gallery is divided into alcoves by an ingenious arrangement of Gothic screens, which are covered with several hundred autotype copies of representative paintings of the Italian, Flemish, Dutch, German, and Spanish schools. The ends of these screens are finished to form effective backgrounds for casts representing noted statues. There are also oil copies of celebrated paintings of the different schools. The art lecture-room has its walls covered with illustrations of the French school, and an adjoining room is to be devoted to the English school of art."

The following extract from Miss Smith's will gives a general idea of the scope and aim of the institution:

"Sensible of what the Christian religion has done for my sex, and believing that all education should be for the glory of God and the good of man, I direct that the Holy Scriptures be daily and systematically read and studied in said college, and, without giving preference to any sect or denomination, all the education and all the discipline shall be pervaded by the spirit of evangelical Christian religion; I direct also that higher culture in the English language literature be given in said college; also in Ancient and Modern Languages, in the Mathematical and Physical Sciences, in the Useful and Fine Arts, in Intellectual, Moral, and Aesthetic Philosophy, in Natural Theology, in the Evidences of Christianity, in Gymnastics and Physical Culture, in the Sciences and Arts which pertain to Education, Society, and Government, and in such other studies as coming time may develop or demand for the education of women, or the progress of the race. It is not my design to render the sex any the less feminine, but to develop, as fully as may be, the powers of womanhood, and furnish women with the means of usefulness, happiness, and honor, now withheld from them."

The diploma of Smith College covers as high a degree of literary merit as that of Harvard, Amherst, or Williams. The following is an outline of the course of study:

The course of study will extend through four years. During the first year the same studies will be required of all the regular students. After the first year elective courses have been arranged, designated, respectively, classical, literary, and scientific.

The classical course is distinguished from the others by the greater attention given to Greek and Latin; the literary, by the greater attention given to the modern languages, and especially to the English; and the scientific, by the greater attention given to mathematics and the natural sciences.

Optional studies in art and music are arranged in connection with all these courses. Any student may also, under the direction of the faculty, vary the optional courses by selecting from them those studies which best suit personal tastes or acquirements.

Enough, however, of the characteristic studies of a collegiate course will be required of all the students to secure a culture as thorough and complete as that demanded in our best New England colleges.

The college is now in a prosperous condition, and the estimated value of the real estate and the productive funds is $525,000.

The faculty is as follows: Rev. L. Clark Seelye, D.D., President, and Professor of English Literature; Rev. Henry M. Tyler, M.A., Professor of Latin and Greek; M. Stuart Phelps, M.A., Ph.D., Professor of Moral and Mental Philosophy; John H. Stoddard, M.A., Ph.D., Professor of Physics and Higher Mathematics; Samuel A. Fiske, M.A., M.D., Lecturer on Physiology and Hygiene; Edward P. Crowell, M.A., Lecturer on Latin Literature; Richard H. Mather, M.A., Lecturer on German Literature; William C. Esty, M.A., Professor of Astronomy; Benjamin K. Emerson, M.A., Ph.D., Professor of Geology; Herbert B. Adams, M.A., Ph.D., Professor of History; Rev. John W. Churchill, M.A., Lecturer on Elocution; J. Wells Champney, Professor of Drawing and Painting; Benjamin C. Blodgett, Professor of Music; James Labor, Professor of Vocal Music; Louis C. Stanton, Assistant Teacher of Music; Miss Bessie T. Capen, Teacher of Chemistry; Miss Maria Whitney, Teacher of French and German; Miss Eliza H. Lord, Teacher of Mathematics; Miss Heloise E. Hersey, Teacher of English; Miss E. Harriet Stanwood, Teacher of Latin; Miss Lucy D. Hunt, Teacher of Gymnastics; Mrs. Elizabeth J. Hopkins, lady in charge of the Dewey House; Mrs. E. B. Richards, lady in charge of the Hatfield House; Miss Mary Fosdick, lady in charge of the New House.

The present board of trustees is as follows: Rev. L. Clark Seelye, D.D., President; Rev. William S. Tyler, D.D., LL.D., Professor at Amherst; Rev. Julius H. Seelye, LL.D., President of Amherst; Hon. William B. Washburn, LL.D., of Greenfield; Rev. Edwards A. Park, D.D., Professor at Andover; Hon. Joseph White, LL.D., of Williamstown; Hon. Birdseye G. Northrop, LL.D., of New Haven; Hon. Edward B. Gillett, of Westfield; Hon. George W. Hubbard, of Northampton; Rev. Andrew P. Peabody, D.D., LL.D., Professor at Cambridge; A. Lyman Williston, Esq., of Northampton; Rev. Robert M. Woods, of Hatfield; Rev. William R. Huntington, D.D., of Worcester; Rodney Wallace, Esq., of Fitchburg.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

FIRST CHURCH AND PARISH.*

First Meeting-House.—In the original document asking permission to plant a new settlement on the "Conetiquot" River, the petitioners described Nonotuck as a suitable place for "propagating the gospel, . . . whereby they might live and attend upon God in his holy ordinances without distraction." Accordingly, the first public act of the early settlers was the erection of a house of worship. They arrived in October, 1654, and in April, 1655, the building was completed. The contract for this house is as follows:

"William Holton
Richard Lyman
Joseph Parsons
John Lyman
Edward Elmore

They are to build a house for the Towne of Northampton, of Sawen Timber, 26 foot long & 18 foot wide, 9 foot high from the lower pt of ye cell to the upper part of the raisens.

"And to frame the Roofof of Sawen Timber 4 pair of Rafters with Coller beams, 7 great laths 5 inches broad 3 inches wide, the Spars 6 inches one way & 5 the other, with the punching for the gable ends 5 below the coller beams, one above. Two chimney-peeeces, 4 braces for the roofoe nailed on, only the Towne must find ye nails & help to raise ye roofoe. Two halfe Somers & one Somer & Mortis, the Somers for the joyce & to make a doorway, two window places, the peeeces 8 inches thick below & 6 above this, to be done by the middle of April next, under the same forfeit which the Towne agree for their part, for which the said partyes are to have £14 of the Towne & ye foresaid partyes must out of this pay their rates to the house, & the rest of the £14 the Towne is to pay in worke or corne as they shall agree upon by the middle of April next, 55."

This instrument has no date; there is no intimation that the house was intended for religious purposes, and no entry on the town records of any vote authorizing such a building. That it was so used, however, there can be no doubt, for in 1658 the burying-place is fixed upon "Meeting-House Hill," which would not be thus designated unless a meeting-house stood upon it, and in 1661 a vote was passed to erect a "new meeting-house." The location of this building is not known other than it was upon Meeting-House Hill, and upon that elevation a house dedicated to the worship of God has ever since occupied a prominent position.

First Minister Called.—When this house was completed no church had been formed, and two years elapsed before a minister was called. Religious services were undoubtedly observed on the Sabbath, probably conducted by persons who had held the office of deacon before removing to Northampton, but there is no record concerning them. The congregation was small, the settlement containing at the commencement of its fourth year but thirty-eight able-bodied men. The first record of any action relative to securing a minister was that of a meeting held March 18, 1657. William Holton was then chosen agent, with instructions to "Sollicit the general Court" with reference to several town matters and endeavor to obtain a minister. He was also "to desire advice what course to take about the preventing of excess of liquors in coming to our Town and of Cider." Mr. Holton attended to his duties,—at least, so far as the ministerial question is concerned; for at the session of the court held on the 26th of May, 1658, the "condition" of the Northampton petitioners, "in relation to a minister," is "forthwith commended to the reverend elders." Under the same date is to be found the following record:

"This Court being solijcted by one of the inhabitants of Northampton, in the name of the rest, to comend their condition—wanting an able minister of the gospel to administer the things of God vnto them—to the reuerend elders, wch this Court take themselves bound to further what lyeth in their power, and vnderstanding that some of the said inhabitants haue an eye vnto Mr. Eliazer Mather as a fitt man to administer the things of God vnto them, this Court judgeth it meete to declare yt in case God so incljnes the hartes of those who are concerned therein, yt Mr. Mather goe vnto North Hampton to minister vnto the inhabitants there in the things of God, they both approve thereof and shall be ready at all times to encourage him in that service, as there shall be occasion, in whatsoever may rationally and meetyly be expected."

At a meeting held June 7, 1658, the town "agreed by unanimous consent to desire Mr. Mather to be a minister to them in a way of trial in dispensing his gifts." This invitation was accepted, and Mr. Mather came at once. In October the town voted to pay him £25 for half a year, in "good merchantable pay in wheat," to be "levied on every inhabitant according to his due proportion." Another vote was passed in the following December to raise £100 for building a "minister's house," and in June of the next year "the five town's men" were instructed to contract for building the house and to see that the appropriation of £100 for that purpose was levied upon the inhabitants. Several persons having signified their intention of removing from Dorchester to Northampton with Mr. Mather, a portion of land, to be laid off in lots, was donated for their use by those who had already received grants. For this purpose 163 acres were given by 37 settlers—probably every owner of a house-lot then in town—in lots containing from two to ten acres. The name of each contributor and the number of acres given by him are recorded in the book of "Proprietors' Records." The whole was laid off together at the upper end of "Munhan Meadow," probably in the vicinity of what is now South Street.

* By J. R. Trumbull.

"April 10th, 1660, It was voted and agreed at a Town-meeting that Joseph Parsons, Robert Bartlett, and William Jeanes were chosen by the Town and empowered to measure out Twenty-nine acres of land in the Middle meadow, and Twelve acres of land more at the end of the Second Square, lying at the rear of the Venture's field; and this 41 acres aforesaid is Sequester'd for a perpetual standing lot for the ministry, and never to be alter'd, but to continue successively to that function for the encouragement of the ministry in the Town of Northampton. Considering the absolute necessity of the promoting God's Honor and the good of Posterity, it is further voted and agreed that William Jeanes, Robert Bartlett, and Joseph Parsons are to take care to see that the aforesaid 41 acres of land be recorded according to the true intent of the Grant aforesaid."

That tract, as originally laid out, is still in the possession of the parish, and the yearly income of the "meadow land" is devoted to the payment of parish expenses. For the year beginning April 12, 1660, a salary of £80 was voted to Mr. Mather. The home-lot of four acres and the house built upon it, together with forty acres of meadow land, were also granted to him, in case he should remain in town four years; the property, should he die within that time, to go to his heirs. This grant to Mr. Mather places his homestead, according to the boundaries of the original deed, at the corner of Main and Pleasant Streets, including the homestead of Maj. Kirkland and the sites of several stores on Shop Row and Pleasant Street.

Mr. Mather preached three years before a church was organized. During that time a controversy seems to have arisen relative to the manner of conducting services on the Sabbath in the absence of the minister. So great was this disagreement that a petition to the General Court concerning it was deemed necessary. At the session of May 28, 1659, the following vote was passed:

"And in relation to their carrying on the duty of the Saboath in Mr. Mather's absence, wherein the doe so much disagree, that though in some cases private men may exercise their gifts, where there are such as are knowne, able, approved, and Orthodoxe, yet for present, as things as are circumstanced wth them, the Court judgeth it their best, safest, and most peaceable way, in the absence of their minister, to assemble all at one place, and to spend the Saboath together, besides praying and singing, in reading and repeating of knowne godly, Orthodoxe bookes and sermons."

It can readily be imagined how such a question should arise. For three years they had carried on Sabbath services among themselves. When the minister came—investing as they did his office with reverence and awe—they would naturally scrutinize with care the qualifications of any who should presume to take his place in the pulpit or in conducting religious exercises, especially before the formation of a church.

Organization of the Church.—Seven years elapsed after the arrival of the first settlers before a church was established. The meeting-house had been built and the minister called by vote of the town. The people, fearing God and planting themselves in the wilderness for the purpose of worshiping him "without distraction," had attended faithfully all these years upon the ministrations of their chosen pastor, readily granting from their slender resources all that was needed for his encouragement. Now the time had come for the establishment of the visible church, and on the 18th of June, 1661, that work was accomplished. The original entry on the records of the church is as follows:

"The Church was gathered at Northampton, 18, 4, 1661.

"The persons that begun that worke were in number 8, viz.: Mr. Eleazer Mather, David Wilton, William Clarke, John Strong, Henry Cunliffe, Henry Woodward, Thomas Roote, Thomas Hanchett. Messengers that were present were from 4 Churches. Mr. Peletiah Glover, Deacon Clap, Thomas Tilstone, from the Church of Christ, at Dorchester; Mr. John Eliot, Sen., Goodman Williams, from the Church of Christ, at Roxbury; Capt. John Pynchon, Deacon Chapin, from the Church at Springfield; Mr. John Russell, ye Pastor, Mr. Goodwin, Goodman White, from the Church of Christ, at Hadleigh. And at the same day, after they had entered into Covenant, they chose Mr. Eleazer Mather to the office of a Pastor, which they had concluded to doe before, and desired Reverend Mr. Eliot and Reverend Mr. Russell to ordain him, which accordingly was done."

Annexed is the covenant adopted at that time, and the names of those by whom it was signed:

"The forme of worles expressing the Ch. Covenant entered into the 18 of the fourth, 1661, by those that then begun that worke, and afterward by such as were admitted into Ch. estate and subscribed their names thereunto.

"Disclaiming all confidence of and any worthinesse in ourselves, either to bee in Covenant with God or to partake in the least of his mercyes, and allose all strength of our owne to keepe Covenant with him, or to performe the least spirituall duty any further than hee by his free spirit shall assist, But relying vpon the tender mercy and gracious assistance of the Lord, through Jesus Christ, wee doe promise and Covenant in the presence of the Lord, the searcher of all hearts, and before the holy Angells, and this Company, first, and chiefly, to cleave forever vnto God with our whol hearts, as our chiefe, best, yea, and only good, and vnto Jesus Christ as our only Saviour, Husband, and lord, and only High-Priest, Prophet, and King. And for the furthering of this holy communion with God, the father, and Christ Jesus, his sonne, we promise and engage to observe and maintaine according to of place and vtmost power all the holy institutions and ordinances which hee hath appointed for his Church, bewaileing the neglect thereof, and the sinful defilements of the same with the inventions and corruptions of men. . . . And as for this particular company and society of Saints, wee promise and engage in the presence of the lord that wee will cleave one vnto another in brotherly love, and seeke the best spirituall good, each of other, by frequent exhortation, reasonable admonition, and constant watchfulness, according vnto the rules of the Gospell, and to performe each vnto other all duties that the Lord in his word doth require of us as brethren in Christ, and as fellow-members of the same individuall body of Christ, as long as the Lord shall continue our Church relation each to other. . . . And allose wee promise and engage mutuall subjection one to another in all the Administrations and Dispensations, according vnto God, of all those duties which by our covenant to God, and one to another, wee are bound to the performance. . . . These things wee all promise in the sincerity of our hearts as before the Lord, the examiner and tryer of all hearts, beseeching him soe to blesse vs as wee shall truly endeavour by his grace the faithfull observation of the same, and when wee through weaknesse shall faile, then to waite and rely vpon the Lord Jesus Christ for pardon, acceptance, healing, for his name's sake. To this covenant, and every part of it, wee willingly and sincerely ingage ourselves, and subscribe our names thereunto.

"NORTHAMPTON, 8th, 4, 1661.

"Samuel Wright, John Marsh, Thomas Woodford, Rathbern Wilton, Abigaile Strong, Margaret Wright, Arthur Williams, Mary Alford, Sarah Bridgman, George Allexander, Isaac Sheldon, Mary Sheldon, Allexander Edwards, William Hanum, Nathaniel Phelps, Rathbern Williams, Ann Bartlet, Deliverance Hanchet, George Langton, Esther Mather, Darius Lyman, Ruth Baker, Hannah Langton, Honor Hanum (these two were added to ye Ch. 18 of 6, '61), Aaron Cooke, William Holton, Joane Cooke, Mary Holton, Sarah Clarke, Susan Cunleife, Elizabeth Woodward, Alice Hutchinson, Susan Allexander, Richard Lyman, Hepzibah Lyman, John Lyman, John King, John Ingersoll, Mary Burt, Sary King, Abigail Strong, Josias Ducey, Mary Strong, John Stibbins, Eleazer Mather, David Wilton, William Clarke, John Strong, Henry Cunliffe, Henry Woodward, Thomas Roote, Thomas Hanchet, William Jeanes, Thomas Bascom, William Hulburd, Avis Bascom, Aan Hulburd, Elizabeth Curtis (these six last were added vnto the Ch. 14th, 5 m., '61), Joseph Eliot, Clemente Mason, Elizabeth Phelps, Robert Bartlet (excommunicated; readmitted), Richard Weller, Sarah Smith, Joseph Leeds, Ffreedom Strong, Sarah Hanum, Sarah Allin, Samuel Smith, Mary Smith, Joseph Parsons."

Such was the foundation on which was established the First Church of Christ in Northampton, 219 years ago. Many of the persons whose names are appended to the covenant were ancestors of the present inhabitants bearing the same family name living in this and neighboring towns. In 1668 a Confession of Faith containing 46 articles was adopted, together with an amended and enlarged covenant. The population of the town, when the church was organized, was probably not far from 300. In 1663, 78 settlers had arrived, and as all or nearly all of them had families, it may be supposed that the number was more rather than less.

Mr. Mather officiated about a year after the formation of the church without assistance. In December, 1662, it was voted that two teaching officers should be appointed, and "that it was the duty of every Ch. to doe what lyst in them that they may bee furnished with two teaching officers." . . . "It was then also declared, by vote of all unanimously, that this church had neede of another teaching officer, to bee joyned to their Pastor." This vote seems to have been soon supplemented by town action, the people voting in January to invite Mr. Joseph Eliot to settle among them as teacher. About this time the church voted to choose a ruling elder and a deacon. Brother John Strong was chosen to the former, and Brother William Holton to the latter, office. On the 13th of May, 1663, these two persons were "ordained," the elder "by the imposition of y^e hands of Pastor and Mr. Russell, Pastor of Hadleigh. The Deacon afterward by the imposition of the hands of Pastor and Elder." Messengers were present at this ceremony from churches in Hadley and Springfield, the right hand of fellowship being given by Mr. Holyoke, of the latter place.

In accordance with the Cambridge platform, the offices of pastor and teacher were distinct. Preaching and exhortation were the special work of the pastor. The duty of the teacher was to explain and enforce the doctrine. The ruling elder was to join with the pastor and teacher in acts of spiritual rule, in admitting members, ordaining officers, and excommunicating offenders. This distinction of offices had then been generally adopted in the colony, but it gradually declined, and soon after entirely ceased.

In 1666 it was "Voted and unanimously agreed by this Ch. that each person will contribute toward defraying the charge of the Sacrament three pecks and halfe of wheate for a yeare, this to bee paid in to the Deacon about the last of September, when hee shall call for it."

In 1668, Thomas Hanchet was chosen deacon.

Second Meeting-House.—The first meeting-house was used for public worship about seven years, and but one settled minister occupied its pulpit. It had no steeple, no bell, and there was little except location to distinguish it from the rude log houses of the settlers. In 1663 it was converted into a school-house. So rapidly did the plantation increase in population that a new meeting-house soon became necessary, and on the 12th of July, 1661, about a month after the organization of the church, the town voted to build. The vote specified that the "Inhabitants of this Town would build a new meeting-house of 42 feet square, and that they will lay out about £150." Six persons were "chosen and empowered to carry on and finish this work," viz., William Holton, Ensign Milton, Robert Bartlett, Joseph Parsons, John Stebbins, and William Clark. The location of this building is unknown, except that it stood on Meeting-House Hill. The house was square, with roof rising from each side to a point at the centre, and was surmounted by a cupola for the bell. The bell-rope hung down in the broad aisle, where the ringer stood. Though the town voted to spend "about £150" for the new meeting-house, it is not probable that so much was needed. In the statement of town taxes for 1663, the sum of £115 8s. 9d. is named as the rate to be assessed for the new meeting-house. No additional sum is afterward recorded as having been raised for that purpose, and that was probably its cost. The same year £70 9s. 2d. were raised for Mr. Mather and £50 for Mr. Eliot. The pews being owned by the town, it became necessary that the seats in them should be assigned to the members of the congregation. Accordingly, a committee of seven persons was chosen in 1664 for that purpose, and this is the first record of seating the meeting-house in the annals of the town. This committee was instructed to consider "age, estate, qualifications, only respecting commissioned officers and impartiality." In 1670 side-galleries were put in, and in 1680 a gallery was built upon the "front side" of the meeting-house. In 1677 the Indians were troublesome, several settlers having been killed and their houses burned. The year previous palisades had been erected about the town, but the Indians succeeded in breaking through them. For better security, and as a place of refuge in case of a similar disaster, in 1677 the meeting-house was fortified. Up to that time there had been no bell, the drum or trumpet serving to call the people together. In 1677, 1678, and 1679, Jeddiah Strong was paid 18s. a year for blowing the trumpet. The town voted in 1682 to procure a bell, and ordered the selectmen "to labor to purchase a good bell that might be heard through the town." It was obtained in accordance with the vote, but there seems to have been some "irregularity" concerning the transaction, for at the March meeting in 1688 the town empowered Enos Kingsley "to sue for the wheat sent down by Mr. Stevens [to pay for the bell], which he pretends was spoiled, and so gives no account of it." At the same time the selectmen were instructed to raise a rate in money sufficient to pay what was due on the bell.

Fall of the Gallery.—A very remarkable accident occurred in this house in 1737. It is thus described in a letter written by Rev. Jonathan Edwards:

"NORTHAMPTON, March 19, 1737.

"We in this town were, the last Lord's day [March 13th], the spectators, and many of us the subjects, of one of the most amazing instances of Divine preservation that perhaps was ever known in the world. Our meeting-house is old and decayed, so that we have been for some time building a new one, which is yet unfinished. It has been observed of late that the house we have hitherto met in has gradually spread at the bottom; the sills and walls giving way, especially in the fore-side, by reason of the weight of timber at top pressing on the braces that are inserted into the posts and beams of the house. It has done so more than ordinarily this spring, which seems to have been occasioned by the heaving of the ground through the extreme frosts of the winter past, and its now settling again on that side which is next the sun by the spring thaws. By this means the underpinning has been considerably disordered, which people were not sensible of till the ends of the joists which bore up the front gallery were drawn off from the girts on which they rested by the walls giving way. So that in the midst of the public exercises in the forenoon, soon after the beginning of the sermon, the whole gallery—full of people, with all the seats & timbers, suddenly & without any warning—sunk and fell down, with the most amazing noise, upon the heads of those that sat under, to the astonishment of the congregation. The house was filled with dolorous shrieking & crying; and nothing else was expected than to find many people dead or dashed to pieces.

"The gallery, in falling, seemed to break or sink first in the middle, so that those who were upon it were thrown together in heaps before the front door. But the whole was so sudden that many of those who fell knew nothing what it was at the time that had befallen them. Others in the congregation thought it had been an amazing clap of thunder. The falling gallery seemed to be broken all to pieces before it got down, so that some who fell with it, as well as those who were under, were buried in the ruins, and were found pressed under heavy loads of timber, and could do nothing to help themselves.

"But so mysteriously and wonderfully did it come to pass that every life was preserved; & though many were greatly bruised & their flesh torn, yet there is not, as I can understand, one bone broken, or so much as put out of joint, among them all. Some, who were thought to be almost dead at first, are greatly recovered; and but one young woman seems yet to remain in dangerous circumstances, by an inward hurt in her breast; but of late there appears more hope of her recovery.

"None can give an account, or conceive, by what means people's lives & limbs should be thus preserved when so great a multitude were thus imminently exposed. It looked as though it was impossible but that great numbers must instantly be crushed to death or dashed in pieces. It seems unreasonable to ascribe it to any thing else but the care of Providence in disposing the motions of every piece of timber, and the precise place of safety where every one should sit & fall, when none were in any capacity to care for their own preservation. The preservation seems to be most wonderful with respect to the women & children in the middle alley, under the gallery, where it came down first and with greatest force, & where there was nothing to break the force of the falling weight.

"Such an event may be a sufficient argument of a Divine providence over the lives of men. We thought ourselves called on to set apart a day to be spent in the solemn worship of God, to humble ourselves under such a rebuke of God upon us, in time of public service in his house, by so dangerous & surprising an accident, & to praise his name for so wonderful, & as it were miraculous, a preservation. The last Wednesday was kept by us to that end; & a mercy in which the hand of God is so remarkably evident may be well worthy to affect the hearts of all who hear it."

This meeting-house stood seventy-seven years, and three settled ministers preached in it,—Rev. Eleazar Mather, Rev. Solomon Stoddard, and Rev. Jonathan Edwards.

REV. ELEAZER MATHER was born at Dorchester, May 13, 1637. He was the son of Richard Mather and elder brother of Rev. Increase Mather. At the age of nineteen, in 1656, he was graduated at Harvard College. He became seriously impressed quite early in life, and devoted himself to the Christian ministry. Having commenced preaching with favorable prospects in 1658, he received a call from the people of Northampton, as has already been narrated.

In 1662 the town requested Mr. Joseph Eliot (son of Rev. John Eliot, of Roxbury) to settle as a teacher and to assist in the ministry. He was voted a home-lot and £80 to build a house. Mr. Eliot's salary was £60, and Mr. Mather offered to contribute £10 toward it, provided he (Mr. Mather) should be "free of his rates for a year." Mr. Eliot assisted in the ministry for several years, but was never formally settled as a teacher.

The labors of Mr. Mather were abundantly rewarded, and many names were added to the church. He was not only a very zealous preacher, but a most exemplary man. Just previous to his death he preached several sermons having special reference to the spiritual interests of the rising generation, which were published in 1671. Mr. Mather married the daughter of Rev. John Warham, of Windsor. He left one daughter, who married Rev. John Williams, of Deerfield, and was killed by the Indians when that town was destroyed by them in 1704. Though 71 names are appended to the covenant adopted by the church at its organization, not all of those persons were in full communion. The church records at the time of the death of Mr. Mather contain the names of but 76 persons who are classed as full communicants, though there are 174 other names registered as having been "admitted with parents, baptized, or personally taken the covenant."

Mr. Mather died July 24, 1669, at the age of thirty-two, having been a resident of the town about eleven years. During the last years of his life he suffered from ill health, probably to an extent that interfered with his pastoral duties, for in March, 1669, the town passed a vote inviting his successor.

Settlement of the Second Minister.—The second minister settled over the church in Northampton was Rev. Solomon Stoddard. At a meeting held March 4, 1669, the town voted unanimously to give him a call. He was offered £100 per year, £100 for building a house, and within five or six years twenty acres of land "within our fenced field, fit for plowing and mowing." Mr. Stoddard responded favorably, and commenced preaching the same year, but did not at once accept the terms offered, for the next year a committee of nine persons was "empowered to act in all matters in reference to the settlement of Rev. Solomon Stoddard." They determined to offer him £100 worth of meadow-land, £100 a year "for his maintenance," £100 to build a house in two or three years, and the use of £100 worth of the sequestered land till it is paid, and also "a home-lot of four acres if he pleases." These terms were on condition "Mr. Stoddard doth settle and abide amongst us." A satisfactory arrangement based on these conditions was made, though the installation did not take place till two years after. The church record of his ordination is as follows:

"Sept. 11, 1672.—Solomon Stoddard was ordained Pastour to the Church at North Hampton by Mr. John Strong, Ruling Elder of that church, & Mr. John Whiting, Pastour to the second Church in Hartford, & Mr. John Russel, Pastour of the Church at Hadley, gave the Right hand of fellowship in the name of the second church at Hartford, the churches of Gilford, Farmington, Winsor, Hadley, Springfield, & Hatfield, whose messengers were present."

On the 5th of the following November the church passed this vote:

"Voted & consented unto by the Elders & Brethren of this church, that from year to year such as grow up to adult age in the church shall present themselves to the Elders, & if they be found to understand & assent unto the doctrine of faith, not to be scandalous in life, & willing to subject themselves to the government of Christ in this church, shall publicly own the covenant & be acknowledged members of this church."

REV. SOLOMON STODDARD was born in Boston in 1642, and was the son of Anthony Stoddard, who was prominent in the early history of the colony, having been a member of the General Court from 1665 to 1684. Having been graduated from Harvard College, in 1662, he was appointed a "Fellow of the House," and held the position of librarian (the first who ever held it) from 1667 to 1674. Intense mental application having impaired his health, he went to Barbadoes, as chaplain to Gov. Serle, where he remained two years. A short time before the death of Mr. Mather he returned to this country. One of the Boston ministers, having been requested by some person belonging in Northampton to recommend a successor to Mr. Mather, mentioned Mr. Stoddard as better qualified than any other within his knowledge. Mr. Stoddard had determined to go to England, had engaged his passage, put his baggage on board the vessel, and was expecting to sail the next day, when the town committee applied to him. Owing to the intercession of the gentleman who had recommended him, he decided to relinquish his voyage and go to Northampton.

Mr. Stoddard was a man of great learning and piety, and probably possessed more influence than any clergyman in the province during a period of thirty years. Timothy Dwight, president of Yale College, a native of Northampton, who traveled through New England in 1796, says of him, in a series of letters afterward published: "The very savages are said to have felt toward him a peculiar awe. Once when he was riding from Northampton to Hatfield, and passing a place called Dewey's Hole, an ambush of savages lined the road. It is said that a Frenchman, directing his gun toward him, was warned by one of the Indians, who some time before had been among the English, not to fire, because 'that was the Englishman's God.' A similar adventure is reported to have befallen him while meditating, in an orchard immediately behind the church in Deerfield, a sermon which he was about to preach. These stories, told in Canada, are traditionally asserted to have been brought back by English captives."

During his long pastorate of fifty-seven years, Mr. Stoddard enjoyed the respect, confidence, and love of his people. Having reached an advanced age, and finding himself inadequate to discharge the whole duty of a minister, he requested the assistance of a colleague, and in 1727 his grandson, Jonathar Edwards, was associated with him in the pastoral office. He lived two years after this event, and died, Feb. 11, 1729, aged eighty-six. He married Esther, widow of his predecessor, Rev. Eleazer Mather. She died in 1736, aged ninety-two. One of their sons, Anthony, was graduated at Harvard College, and was minister of Woodbury, Conn. Another son, John, well known in town affairs as Col. John Stoddard, became eminent as a civilian, and possessed great influence throughout the province.

A spirited controversy concerning qualifications for church membership sprang up between Mr. Stoddard and Dr. Increase Mather, of Boston, in the year 1700. At that time many of the churches throughout the province regarded the sacrament of the Lord's Supper as a converting ordinance, and believed that all baptized persons, not scandalous in life, might lawfully approach the table, though they knew themselves to be destitute of true religion. This belief and practice Dr. Mather assailed in a sermon, "The Order of the Gospel," published in 1700. To this Mr. Stoddard replied in an earnest and convincing manner. The controversy was resumed in 1708 and 1709, and prosecuted on both sides with vigor and ability. A few years later this same conflict of opinion became the ostensible reason for the dismissal of his colleague and successor, Rev. Jonathan Edwards. The biographers of Mr. Edwards assert that Mr. Stoddard changed his views on this subject after he had been thirty-two years minister at Northampton. It is charged that without the sanction of the church he introduced this change, making it the rule of procedure, and prepared, in conformity to his own opinions, "a short profession" for persons to make on admission to membership. This is incorrect. The vote of the church at the ordination of Mr. Stoddard (quoted above) proves that he had no need to change his sentiments. The church believed as he did when he accepted the pastorate, and it was only to defend his own life-long convictions and the thirty-two years' practice of his church that he replied to Dr. Mather.

Mr. Stoddard, though a close student and an able and faithful preacher, was a man of action, and took a deep interest in all the affairs of the town. In connection with Joseph Parsons he obtained a grant for the site of the first saw-mill ever erected in town, though he afterward relinquished his claim to Mr. Parsons. In those days the only route to Boston was a bridle-path through the wilderness, and a week was consumed in the journey. Mr. Stoddard first proposed that change in it which subsequently reduced the time to two days, and resulted in the construction of the famous "Bay Road," so called because it led to Massachusetts Bay. He had an influence in all the important ecclesiastical bodies of the State that was not usually contested, and that earned him the title of "the Pope of his time." He was a faithful and successful minister. Extensive revivals of religion took place in 1679, 1683, 1712, and 1718. During the fifty-seven years of his ministry 630 persons were admitted to the church. Held in a high degree of reverence by members of the church, the inhabitants of the town, who had grown up under his ministry, venerated and respected him as a father. Mr. Stoddard was a voluminous writer, having published twenty-two sermons and pamphlets. Specimens of his manuscript exhibit a very minute handwriting; so small are the letters that it is impossible to read them without the aid of a magnifying-glass. On a page and a half of small-sized note-paper were written all his notes for an elaborate sermon. One hundred and fifty of his discourses are contained in a small 12mo manuscript volume. His home-lot was set off in the vicinity of Round Hill, and he resided on the homestead now occupied by Mr. H. R. Hinekley. The town gave Mr. Stoddard in all about 33 acres of land.

Third Meeting-House.—After seventy-four years of constant use the second meeting-house became somewhat dilapidated and much too small for the growing congregation. In November, 1735, the town voted, by a "very great majority," to build a new meeting-house, "get the timber, frame it, raise, and cover it by the end of the summer." Another vote provided that the house should be about 70 feet long, 46 to 48 feet in width, with a "steeple or balcony" at the end, leaving the exact dimensions with the building committee. It was also voted to raise by taxation £100 toward buying nails and glass for the building. An attempt was made at a meeting held in August, 1736, to change the location of the house and place it on the "sand hill between Moses Lyman's and Jonathan Wright's." The town, however, refused to authorize the change, but voted that the house should be set "partly on the northwest side of the present meeting-house, and partly from thence northeastwardly, on the ridge of land where Edward Baker's fence now standeth." Three weeks afterward the town reaffirmed the above vote as to location. The following record of the raising of this meeting-house is from a private diary of Deacon Ebenezer Hunt, great-grandfather of Mr. Seth Hunt:

"In November, 1735, we passed a vote to build a new meeting-house seventy feet in length, forty-six feet in breadth, and proceeded to get the timber the winter following; and in the summer of 1736 we framed it, and on the 16th day of September we laid the eills, it being on Thursday, and appointed to begin to raise on the Monday following, but that proved a wet day; so the town met together and agreed to hire sixty men to raise the meeting-house, and to give them five shillings the day, they keeping themselves, excepting drinks, and on Tuesday morning they began to raise, it being the 21st day of said September, and they raised all the posts in the length of the house, excepting two of a side; and on Wednesday, the 22d, they finished the body of the house, and put up two beams; and on Thursday, the 23d, we put up all the beams and made some preparations for the raising of the upper part of the bellfree; and on Friday, the 24th, we finished the scaffolding and raised one-half of the bellfree; and the next day, the 25th, it rained till noon, and in the afternoon they finished the body of the bellfree; and on Monday, the 27th of said month, we finished the raising of said house; and we have abundant cause to take notice, with thankfulness, of the kindness of God to us in protecting and preserving the lives and limbs of all those that were active in the building of the house, for except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it.

"On Thursday, the 21st day of July, 1737, the spire of our meeting-house was raised, with good success, for which we have cause to be thankful. On Friday, the 5th day of May, 1738, we pulled down our old meeting-house, without hurt either to any man or to the new house."

The building committee consisted of Col. John Stoddard,

Ebenezer Pomeroy, Capt. John Clark, Capt. Preserved Clapp, Ens. Ebenezer Parsons, Ens. Ebenezer Clark, and Joseph Wright. This house stood in the present highway, facing eastwardly. The steeple was nearly on a line with the present edifice, in the centre of the eastern gable. This was the first meeting-house that had a steeple. There were entrances on three sides. When erected it was a plain, unpretending structure, standing in the middle of the street. Additions and alterations were made, however, as the needs of the community required. In 1769 porches were placed over the southern and western entrances, and the gallery-stairs removed to the belfry and one of the porches, in order to enlarge its seating capacity. The pulpit was at the centre of the north side of the audience-room, canopied by a "sounding-board," on which were the figures "1735." The pews were all high-backed and nearly square, with seats on three sides, made to turn up to enable worshipers to lean on the top of the pew during prayer-time. In the upper part of the high-backs were nicely-turned little balusters, which children were fond of handling. In 1808 there were 49 pews on the ground-floor, 14 pews and 14 long seats in the gallery. The schedule for seating prepared in that year by the selectmen contains the names of 1036 persons to whom seats were assigned. The building, however, could not accommodate that number of people, and undoubtedly many names were afterward added as changes occurred in the population, though none seem to have been erased.

At a town-meeting held Feb. 11, 1737, the following votes were passed:

"Voted, to accept of the meeting-house account presented by the committee, with that limitation that the committee reduce those days work or that work that was done in the fall of the year to a proportion as near as may be to the work done in the summer season.

"Voted, that the selectmen or assessors raise money to defray what charge hath arisen, and to pay for what hath been done toward building the meeting-house and other small incident charges.

"Voted, that the meeting-house be completed and finished next year, and that a committee be chosen and appointed to provide materials, and agree with workmen to prosecute that design.

"The committee nominated and chosen to manage that affair were Timothy Dwight, Esq., John Stoddard, Esq., Ebenezer Pomeroy, Esq., Ens. Ebenezer Parsons, Ens. Ebenezer Clark, Sergt. Nath'l Courtis, and Ens. Samuel Clapp.

"The meeting was adjourned an hour and a half, and then the town met and proceeded, and voted that the throat-braces already provided for said meeting-house should be put into their places for which they were provided and made, and proceeded to consider what shall be done with respect to the spire or steeple; and the town voted to leave it with the committee aforesaid to advise with some workmen with respect to the height, manner, and method of building the same, and to act in that affair as they think proper.

"Voted, that in the meeting-house now building there shall be pews made round the meeting-house, and only seats on both sides the alley. It was also voted with respect to what remains to be done toward the meeting-house, and the finishing the same, to leave it with the committee aforesaid to do and act as they think convenient and proper in all things respecting the same.

"It was also voted that the selectmen or assessors raise three hundred pounds, besides the town debts, toward finishing the meeting-house."

The exact cost of this meeting-house cannot now be ascertained. As has already been stated, £100 were voted in 1735, and £300 more appropriated in 1737. In January of the succeeding year the building committee presented their account to the town, and the assessors were ordered to raise money to pay what was due on it. No sum was named, but the town treasurer's account-book shows an expenditure of £3014 0s. 2d. for the new meeting-house, for which taxes were laid. The £100 first voted for glass and nails were used in the following manner:

	£	s.	d.
"Seth had £63, with which he bought ten Hundred of rods & 22,000 of 64 nails.....	63	00	00
Carriage from Hartford, 50/.....	02	10	00
To 40,000 of Lath nails & 2000 of 104 nails.....	20	16	06
To 8000 of 64 nails bought at Hadley.....	08	16	00
To my time, care, & trouble in buying them.....	01	04	00
To 45 1/2c. 1 Paid Raisers, viz., Cotton, Sheldon, and Brown.....	05	12	00
	101	18	06"

Ebenezer Pomeroy was treasurer, and the Seth mentioned was probably his brother, Col. Seth Pomeroy. Several accidents occurred during the erection of this building. The town paid Jonathan Strong £3 for "setting his bone, broken while working at ye meeting-house," and £3 10s. to "To ye bone-setter for setting Ebenezer Burt's thy." The sum of £8 was "paid Stebbins for 20 gallons of rum."

There is no record of any formal dedication of this house. It was used for public worship in 1737, though not fully completed till 1739. In those days the sexes were not allowed to sit together in public, and when the new meeting-house was first occupied the males were seated at the south and the females at the north end. Special votes were passed in 1737 forbidding "men and their wives" being seated beside each other, though the committee were afterward instructed to allow it "when they incline to sit together." The seating committee at this time were instructed, "1st, to have respect principally to men's estate; 2d, to have regard to men's age; 3d, that some regard and respect be had to men's influence, but in a lesser degree."

A new settlement, afterward Southampton, commenced some years before, had so far progressed when the new meeting-house was built as to have employed a preacher of its own for several years. The proprietors organized the district in 1730, and in 1733 the town "voted to repay five pounds to those persons who advanced the same in recompense for divers ministers who preached at the new settlement over Munhan River." From that time till 1741, when the Second Precinct was incorporated, the town voted yearly to remit to the people at the new town their proportion of the town tax in order that it might be applied for the support of a minister there, the overplus to be used for building a meeting-house. The old meeting-house was taken down in 1738. Some of the pews were put into the galleries of the new one, a portion of the materials used in building a new town-house, and the pulpit and seats remaining were given to the new settlement.

As the town increased in population, and the outlying farm-lands were occupied, those persons living remote from the meeting-house found it necessary to shelter their horses during the long Sabbath services, and horse-sheds seem to have been erected wherever there was a vacant spot. Several votes are on record giving individuals permission to occupy portions of the highway near the meeting-house for this purpose. Horse-blocks were placed at each of the three entrances in 1773. Various alterations increasing the seating capacity of the house, and many suggestions for its enlargement, were made from time to time. In 1773 came the proposal for building a new meeting-house. A committee was appointed to consider the matter, but no evidence that any report was ever made can be found. The subject came up again in 1792, and was frequently before the town from that date till the final decision to build in 1811.

The thirty years following the building of the third meeting-house witnessed great changes in the town. Population had largely increased, one new town been established, and the nucleus for another gathered. In 1769 the "Inhabitants dwelling at Pashomuck and the farms adjacent, and at Bartlett's Mill and the farms adjacent," petition that "they may, by some means agreed to by the town, be brought under more convenient circumstances for attending the public worship of God." A committee to which this subject was referred reported in favor of the appointment of a committee to inspect the premises with a view to "pitch upon a spot for a meeting-house to accommodate such farmers and out-settlements," and to see what number would consent to assemble there provided the town would "set up a meeting-house at said place" and defray the expense of winter preaching. The report was accepted, and a committee appointed in accordance with its recommendations, but no further action seems to have been taken. This settlement, afterward embraced within the limits of Easthampton, was formed into a new district within a few years.

The bell purchased in 1682 did good service for many years, but in 1760 it was deemed insufficient, and a new one ordered, the purchasing committee being instructed to sell the old one to Southampton, if possible. The new one was obtained at once, but was soon after broken, and the town was called together to decide about replacing it, and "prosecuting those persons who were active or instrumental in breaking it." The bell was ordered to be sent to the founder at Fairfield, to be mended or recast, and if recast the committee were authorized to receive subscriptions "toward the expense of it," and "to increase and enlarge it in weight as much as they may receive subscriptions for, not to exceed 1000 lbs." The old bell was not sold to Southampton, as there was further town action relative to its sale some two years afterward. It was finally disposed of to the Congregational Society in Northfield, and in use there in 1824. The new one proved unsatisfactory, and attempts were made in a few years to increase its capacity by enlarging the tongue, a vote to that effect having been passed in 1768. The meeting-house bell was used not only for calling the people together on the Sabbath and for other religious services, but for warning town and other meetings, and always for fire-alarms. In many places the bell was rung at noon (twelve o'clock) and at nine o'clock at night. This latter practice prevailed in this town till 1876, the bell of the First Parish being used for that purpose. It was discontinued when the meeting-house was burned, and has not been resumed.

There was a clock in the steeple of this meeting-house, but no record of its purchase or presentation can be found. In 1753, 3£ 12s. were voted to Saul Alvord for his care of the "meeting-house and clock" as sexton the current year. This is the first intimation that there was a clock in the building. This clock was wound by drawing up the weights, hand over hand, the winder standing directly beneath the weights. The length of cord attached to the weights was not less than 40 feet. It is related that an apprentice of Mr. Nathan Storrs, in 1806, while winding this clock, was killed by the falling weight, the rope breaking when the weight was nearly at its proper height. In 1790 a committee reported in favor of purchasing a new clock, as being better policy than to repair the old one, stating that a new one would cost £30. No action was taken on this report, and the old clock remained in use while the meeting-house stood.

The trial of Dominic Daly and James Halligan for the murder of Marcus Lyon, at Wilbraham, was held in Northampton, before the Supreme Judicial Court, in April, 1806. This trial caused much excitement throughout all this region, and was attended by great crowds of people. The court-house was found insufficient to hold all the spectators, and the trial was adjourned to the meeting-house. It was filled to overflowing. The crowd was so dense in the galleries that it was feared they would fall. The cry was raised that they were falling; a panic ensued, and some persons attempted to escape from the upper windows. No damage resulted, however. Quiet was soon restored, and the trial proceeded.

The third meeting-house was used for public worship about seventy-five years, having been torn down in 1813. Its pulpit was occupied by three settled ministers,—Rev. Jonathan Edwards, Rev. John Hooker, and Rev. Solomon Williams.

In 1813, after the completion of the fourth meeting-house, the previous one was sold to Josiah Dwight, who proposed to remove and fit it up for stores or tenements. It was first necessary to take down the steeple. This was built with an open space about the "bell-deck," resting at that point upon eight columns. These supports were partially sawn asunder and ropes attached to the spire, by which it was pulled over. It is said that the schools were allowed a holiday when this occurred. A gray-haired citizen of the town well remembered helping, with other boys, in the work of bringing it to the ground. Mr. Dwight then began to move the building. His intention was to place it at the corner of Main and South Streets, on the site of Hillyer's Block. When he had moved it about half the distance, the popular feeling against its proposed location became so great that a subscription was raised sufficient to indemnify Mr. Dwight in part, and the old meeting-house was taken down and the material disposed of in various ways.

First Precinct.—While but one religious society existed in town there was no occasion for the establishment of a parish. All the inhabitants attended the same ministrations on the Lord's day, and all business was transacted in town-meeting. As the limits of the town expanded year by year, the need of more convenient places of worship became apparent, and wherever settlers gathered sufficient in number to bear the expense a new church was formed. Allusion has already been made to the "new settlement over Munhan River." It was first named on the town records as the "Second Precinct," in 1739, but was not regularly incorporated till two years afterward. When this occurred the remainder of the township became the First Precinct. The earliest record of a meeting of the First Precinct is dated Feb. 10, 1741-2. Col. John Stoddard was chosen moderator; the selectmen and assessors of the town were made assessors for the precinct, and empowered to call precinct-meetings. Samuel Mather was chosen clerk, and Ebenezer Pomroy treasurer. Parish business was transacted in the name of the First Precinct till September, 1753. Southampton being incorporated as a separate district in that year, the precinct organization disappeared, the town again became the parish, and so continued till the establishment of the Second Congregational (Unitarian) Society, in 1826.

When the Second Precinct was set off, Rev. Jonathan Edwards was pastor of the First Congregational Church. The principal parochial business then, as well as at the present time, was to vote and raise supplies for the ministry and care of the meeting-house. The bitter controversy with the pastor that soon after occurred, however, brought in a new element, and its frequent meetings were enlivened with earnest and animated discussions. It appears that at this time no permanent salary for the minister had been decided upon; the amount was subject to the yearly vote of the parish. For many years £350 (old tenor), the improvement of one-half the sequestered land, and firewood was regularly voted. The price of wood per load was fixed upon by the meeting, and a committee appointed to see that the wood was furnished, and to "estimate the loads in proportion to the price fixed upon for an ordinary load." The price of wood varied from year to year, increasing from 12s. in 1743 to 25s. in 1748. During this period Mr. Edwards endeavored to obtain from the parish a fixed and permanent salary, presenting his petition each year, but without effect. There was difficulty nearly every year relative to firewood, the price per load in many instances having been increased before the required amount was furnished. In 1746 a vote was passed to give him eighty loads, at 18s. per load. The fluctuating and uncertain value of the bills of credit in which the salary was paid, the constantly increasing price of all necessaries of life, rendered imperative an augmentation of salary, and in 1746 an addition of £150 was granted. The next year the precinct voted to establish a permanent salary, appointed a committee to confer with Mr. Edwards, and gave him £600, the use of parish-land, and firewood for that year. The salary mutually agreed upon and adopted in 1748 included the improvement of the sequestered land, £150 for firewood when the price per load should be 25s., and more or less in proportion as the price varied from year to year, and £700 in bills of public credit (old tenor). The value of the bills of credit was based on the price of wheat, rye, Indian corn, pork, and beef. Wheat was rated at 30s. per bushel, rye at 20s., corn at 12s., pork at 2s. per pound, and "beef" at 12d. per pound. In case of change of price in these articles, it was provided that there should be a proportionate increase or diminution of salary. "For instance, if each of those five articles should rise in their price one-eighth, that then an eighth be added to the £700; and if two of them should rise one-quarter and one rise one-eighth, and the other two remain at the same price, that then there should be an addition of one-eighth to the £700; and so if the price of those necessaries should be lowered in like manner, that the sum be lowered in like proportion." This amount was to be paid to Mr. Edwards annually, so long as he continued "in the ministry amongst them."

For some years the influence of Mr. Edwards had been sensibly declining, and the causes which eventually led to his dismissal were already at work when the above liberal salary was granted. An unfortunate attempt on the part of the pastor to correct certain alleged immoralities among the youth of the congregation, in which he was not seconded by the church, eventually estranged him from his people. Emboldened by the lukewarmness of their parents, the young, losing all reverence for sacred things, behaved so "irreverently and disorderly" on the Sabbath that in 1748 it became necessary to appoint a special committee to "inspect the behavior of the young people and children in the time of public worship," with instructions to prosecute those who were above sixteen years of age before a justice of the peace, and all under that age who did not behave were to be set before the deacon's seat as a public example. About this time Mr. Edwards announced his views on the qualifications for church membership, and, soon after, his book on that subject appeared. These sentiments were contrary to the practice of this church, and not in accordance with the usage of the churches in this region. Consequently, there was great excitement throughout the town. Many demanded the immediate dissolution of the pastoral relation, and little inclination was manifested to ascertain or thoroughly understand his principles. From March, 1748, to May, 1750, twenty-two precinct-meetings are recorded in which the questions in agitation between pastor and people were under discussion. Finally both parties agreed to call a mutual council, and at the May meeting it was voted to pay the expense of the ecclesiastical council and authorize the church committee to procure at the charge of the precinct a minister or layman to assist them "in the managing the cause on the part of the Brethren of the church before said Council." In November following it was voted "That Dan Shelden be allowed thirty pounds, old Ten^r, and as much more as he deserves, for his extraordinary service by ringing y^e Bell for church-meetings and extraordinary Parish meetings, and any extraordinary sweeping occasioned by such extraordinary meetings."

Three years elapsed after Mr. Edwards was dismissed before another minister was settled. The disagreement was too great to be readily adjusted, and members of both church and parish speedily showed their dissatisfaction with the result of the council. It became so marked that the precinct finally voted not to procure a candidate till measures had been taken by the church to settle the difficulties "with those who call themselves the aggrieved brethren." A vote was also passed desiring the church to appoint a committee to receive "the papers called the church's remonstrance" and give the dissatisfied persons a hearing. A settlement was early agreed upon, for within two months both church and precinct united in an invitation to the Rev. Daniel Farrand, of Canaan, Conn. Mr. Farrand had already preached for some time, and seems to have given good satisfaction. He declined, however, and the next year Rev. Judah Champion received a call to the pastorate, but did not accept. As has already been stated, precinct and town were again merged when Southampton was incorporated. The last precinct-meeting was held Jan. 18, 1753, and the final record of business was an invitation to Mr. Champion.

The meeting-house was struck by lightning in 1751, and the belfry, steeple, and weathercock injured. The damage was repaired at a cost of about £10, and a new weathercock procured.

REV. JONATHAN EDWARDS was born at East Windsor, Conn., Oct. 5, 1703. His father, Rev. Timothy Edwards, was for sixty-four years pastor of the Congregational Church at that place. His mother, Esther Stoddard, was a daughter of Rev. Solomon Stoddard. The families of Edwards and Stoddard were both of English descent, and both "distinguished for several generations for piety, intellectual vigor, and commanding influence in their respective spheres of duty." Rev. Timothy Edwards was noted for eminent piety, commanding talent, and as a finished scholar. The historian gives Esther Stoddard a character above that of ordinary women of her time. She was noted for her piety, distinguished for her strength of mind, of superior education, and fond of reading. Jonathan Edwards was the fifth of eleven children, and an only son. Each of his sisters, it is said, was six feet in stature; hence the statement of a distinguished divine, who married one of them, that he was allied to a family in which there were "sixty feet of daughters." Under the direction of his father, young Edwards commenced the study of Latin at the age of six years. He was early habituated to the use of the pen, taught to study with it in his hand, and continued the practice throughout life. At the age of thirteen he entered Yale College, graduating at seventeen, when he received not only the first, but almost the sole and accumulated, honors awarded to the class. His first religious impressions occurred about the eighth year of his age. In the latter part of his collegiate course these impressions were strengthened, and from that time he dated the commencement of his religious life.

After graduation he spent two years diligently prosecuting his theological studies. In 1722, a few months before the completion of his nineteenth year, he was licensed to preach, and for a few months presided over a small Presbyterian Church in New York City. About this time he formed a number of resolutions for the government of his own heart and life. They were seventy in number, and were all committed to paper before he was twenty years of age. Ever afterward he made it a point to read them over once each day. In 1723 he obtained the degree of master of arts, and was at the same time elected tutor in Yale College. About this time he received several invitations to settle as pastor, but declined them all. In June, 1724, Mr. Edwards commenced his tutorship. Having discharged the duties of this office about two years, he received, in 1726, a pressing invitation to become colleague pastor with his grandfather Stoddard in this town. On the 15th of February, 1727, in the 24th year of his age, he was ordained to the work of the gospel ministry, and installed as co-pastor of the church here. He applied himself to the duties of his charge with seriousness and diligence, and won the esteem and regard of all. At this time his habit was, when in ordinary health, to spend thirteen hours every day in his study. His favorite exercise was horseback-riding, always carrying pen and paper, and often dismounting to write down thoughts that suggested themselves.

When Mr. Edwards was settled the town voted to give him ten acres of land for a pasture and forty acres in Munhan meadow; also £300 to buy a homestead, and, if that was not enough, to increase the amount. A salary of £100 a year was voted, with a promise of more if needed. Afterward, when Mr. Edwards purchased a house and lot, £80 more were added. The ten acres of pasture-land were set off on Slow (Slough) Hill. His salary was increased from time to time until it reached £350, remaining at that figure for some years, and was permanently fixed by vote of the First Precinct, as already narrated.

On the 28th of July, 1727, Mr. Edwards married Miss Sarah Pierrepont, daughter of Rev. James Pierrepont, pastor of a church in New Haven. Mrs. Edwards was a most remarkable woman. With an intellect of more than common brilliancy, cultivated and enlightened by an education the best the country afforded, fervent in piety, and possessing an uncommon share of prudence, dignity, and polish, she adorned and honored the position in which her union with Mr. Edwards placed her. She was a woman of more than ordinary beauty, and of great firmness and energy of character. Soon after her marriage she took upon herself the whole management of the farm, as well as the more domestic duties of the family.

In February, 1729, his venerable colleague, Mr. Stoddard, died, and the whole care of the large congregation devolved upon the youthful pastor. Such was his fidelity and success that in 1733, '34, and '35 the town was favored with a revival of religion so extensive and powerful as to constitute a memorable era in the history of the church. At the request of eminent English divines, Mr. Edwards prepared an account of the work of grace here, which was published in England, and in 1738 re-issued in Boston, in connection with five of his discourses preached during the revival.

The history of the ministry of Mr. Edwards in this place abounds in instances of the outpouring of the grace of God, which, abundantly interesting though they are, cannot be condensed within the limits assigned to this sketch. He co-operated with Whitefield, inviting him to preach in Northampton, and contracted a friendship with this celebrated man that continued through life. During this time he became acquainted with David Brainerd, the missionary, assisted him with counsel, ministered to his necessities, and finally closed his eyes in death under his own roof. He afterward published an extended memoir of that devoted man.

Until the year 1744, Mr. Edwards seems to have retained a firm hold upon the confidence and affections of his people. During that year were sown the seeds that ripened into the open hostility that finally led to his dismissal. He learned that a number of the younger members of his church had in their possession licentious books, which they were using for immoral purposes. Satisfied of the fact, he prepared and delivered a sermon against the sin. After service he laid the matter before the church, which voted to investigate the subject, and appointed a committee to co-operate with the pastor in making the inquiry. Mr. Edwards then read to the church a list of the names of such as he desired should meet the committee, and when it was found that the youth of many of the most respectable families in the place were implicated, the current of public opinion changed, and the matter was suffered to drop. Many of the young people were thus disaffected toward the pastor; the parents sympathized; church discipline was openly set at defiance; and the after-ministry of Mr. Edwards was attended with but little success. This unhappy difference was soon followed by another. It had become customary for all persons not scandalous in life to join the church; not to be a communicant was a public stigma, and church membership came to be considered an indispensable qualification for civil office. Mr. Stoddard taught that the Lord's Supper was designed to be a converting ordinance, and that genuine piety was not necessary in order to approach it. Mr. Edwards acquiesced in this doctrine because he found it adopted and in practice, not from belief in its truth. He always doubted it, and in 1749 published a work setting forth his views in opposition to it. This was made the ground of a most bitter and unrelenting controversy. Great efforts were made to prevent the circulation of the book. The precinct voted to apply to several clergymen to answer it, but without success. Mr. Edwards proposed to speak upon the subject from his own pulpit, but his people would not allow it. Afterward, when he decided to discuss the question at issue in a series of weekly lectures, his society sent a committee, asking him to relinquish the project. He persisted, however, but the lectures were very thinly attended by his own people. Then followed the attempt on both sides to gather a council. Differences in regard to its composition prevented unity of action for some months, and it was not till the 22d of June, 1750, that the council met. This body decided by a majority of one that the pastoral relation ought to be dissolved, and accordingly it was dissolved.

He remained in town for some time after this action, and was occasionally invited to preach. The biographers of President Edwards, however, state that the committee for supplying the pulpit, in consequence of the dissatisfaction manifested, called the town together for instructions, and a vote was passed that "it was not agreeable to their minds that he should preach among them!" The position of Mr. Edwards elicited great sympathy from churches and pastors on both sides of the Atlantic, and he received an invitation from Dr. Erskine to take charge of a church in Scotland, but declined. In May, 1751, a council was called to take into consideration the formation of a new church. This was done at the earnest solicitation of his friends, but in opposition to his own better judgment. The council decided against the formation of another church, in accordance with the views of Mr. Edwards, and advised him to leave Northampton. For the support of his large family of eight children Mr. Edwards was entirely dependent on his salary, which was the largest then paid by any congregation in New England, and his friends, both in this country and in Scotland, contributed toward his expenses.

In December, 1750, he received proposals from the church in Stockbridge, and about the same time the "commissioners at Boston," acting in the name of the London Missionary Society, offered to employ him as missionary among the Housatonic Indians at the same place. He accepted both propositions, and removed to Stockbridge in the spring of 1751. His labors here were arduous in the extreme. In June, 1754, he was seized with a severe fever which greatly enfeebled his constitution. Twice a week he preached to the white inhabitants of the town, once by an interpreter to the Indians, and acted also as instructor to the children. While residing in Stockbridge he published his most important works. In 1754 appeared his far-famed treatise "On the Freedom of the Will," and in 1758 that on "Original Sin."

He remained at Stockbridge till January, 1758, when he removed to Princeton, N. J., having been elected president of the college—Nassau Hall—at that place in September, 1757. The former president of the college, Rev. Aaron Burr, married Esther, third daughter of Mr. Edwards, in 1752. He had presided over the college ten years, but died very suddenly in the autumn of 1757, two days before commencement. The trustees immediately made choice of Mr. Edwards as his successor. On the 16th of February, 1758, Mr. Edwards was inaugurated as president of the college. At that time smallpox existed in Princeton, and President Edwards and his daughters were inoculated. He appeared to have the disease favorably, and it was thought that all danger was over, when a secondary fever supervened, and he died on the 22d day of March, 1758, in the fifty-fifth year of his age, and just five weeks after assuming his official duties as president of the college. Mrs. Edwards did not long survive her husband, but died at Philadelphia, Oct. 2, 1758.

In person Mr. Edwards was tall and slender. He was a little above six feet in stature, and his countenance was strongly marked with benignity and intelligence. His voice, in public speaking, was rather feeble, and he made very few gestures. He was the father of eleven children,—three sons and eight daughters. President Edwards resided, while in this town, on King Street, the house standing near that belonging to the heirs of the late J. D. Whitney, Esq. In front of that mansion are two magnificent elm-trees, the largest of which is said to have been planted by the eminent divine with his own hands. President Edwards attached great dignity to the pastoral office, and always visited his parishioners in the canonical dress of his time. During his pastorate of twenty-three years, 495 persons were admitted to the church.

Installation of the Fourth Minister.—In 1753 the town united with the church in an invitation to Rev. John Hooker, offering him £266 13s. 4d. as a settlement. The salary was fixed at £80 for the first year, and an increase of £5 per year for four years; £100 to be the permanent sum. In addition, £6 13s. 4d. were voted for firewood. Mr. Hooker accepted the call, but expressed his dissatisfaction with the amount allowed for firewood. The articles of agreement specified that the salary should be paid "in silver of sterling alloy at six shillings and eight pence by the ounce, or in Spanish milled pieces-of-eight, at six shillings by the piece."

Mr. Hooker was ordained on the 5th of December, the town having appointed a committee of six persons to order and direct the sittings of the people in the meeting-house on the day of ordination, and provided that the services should commence at ten o'clock A.M. The council consisted of ten ministers and delegates, viz.: "Rev. Mr. Williams, of Longmeadow, moderator, who made the first prayer at the imposition of hands and gave the charge; Rev. Mr. Hopkins, of Springfield, who made the prayer after the imposition of hands; Rev. Mr. Reynolds, of Enfield, who made the prayer before sermon; Rev. Mr. Woodbridge, of South Hadley; Rev. Mr. Parsons, of East Hadley, who preached the sermon; Rev. Mr. Ashley, of Deerfield; Rev. Mr. Breck, of Springfield, who gave the right hand of fellowship; Rev. Mr. Ashley, of Sunderland; Rev. Mr. Woodbridge, of Hatfield; Rev. Mr. Judd, of Southampton."

The expenses of ordinations were always paid by the town, and ordination dinners provided. At the settlement of Mr. Hooker the town paid $21.43 for expenses, including nine shillings for wine.

REV. JOHN HOOKER was born in 1729, at Kensington, Conn., now a parish in the town of Berlin. He was great-grandson of Rev. Thomas Hooker, one of the founders of the colony of Connecticut, and first minister of Hartford. Graduating at Yale College in 1751, he came to Northampton two years afterward, and remained pastor of the church till his death, which occurred in 1777. He was married, Dec. 5, 1753, to Sarah Worthington, sister of Col. John Worthington, of Springfield, one of the most eminent lawyers in Massachusetts. His ministry, following the stormy and tempestuous close of Mr. Edwards' pastorate, was quiet and peaceful. The asperity and bitterness of both parties were speedily merged in a mutual and common attachment to the new pastor. He seemed eminently fitted for the peculiar condition of affairs then existing here. "The gentleness of his deportment, his sound discretion, and instructive discourses in the pulpit, secured to him to such an extent the love and respect of his people that they were always satisfied to hear him, and did not care to hear anybody else." He particularly endeared himself to the youth of the congregation, and is represented as a man of most condescending, familiar, and winning manners. As a preacher he was earnest and attractive, stating the truth with simplicity and directness, and free from everything that had a semblance of affectation. His death, from smallpox, occurred Feb. 6, 1777, at the age of forty-eight. Only two of his sermons were published. Mr. Hooker was pastor of the church twenty-three years, and during that time 409 members were added. At a meeting held November, 1787, the selectmen were instructed to "procure a decent monument to be erected to the memory of the late Rev. Mr. John Hooker, at the cost of the town."

Fifth Minister Called.—The church and society did not long remain without a pastor after the death of Mr. Hooker. At a meeting of the town, held in March of the succeeding year, the committee to provide preaching were directed to apply to Rev. Mr. Williams to know whether he was willing to have a church-meeting called relative to a settlement here, and desire him to preach and lecture the next week. On the 30th of March, 1778, the town voted—192 to 2—to concur with the church in the choice of Mr. Williams as pastor. In May he accepted the call and £300 were voted for a settlement, to be paid in three annual installments. His salary was to be £100 for the first year, with an increase of £5 per year till the sum should reach £120. As in other similar cases, the salary was based on the current price of wheat, rye, and corn, and varied in accordance with the price of those commodities. Firewood was also furnished, and nothing in the vote was to be understood as debarring payment in gold or silver. Mr. Williams was ordained June 4, 1778. The council was composed of Rev. Eliphalet Williams, of Hartford; Rev. Richard Salter, of Mansfield; Rev. Timothy Kine, of Goshen; Rev. Jonathan Judd, of Southampton; Rev. Samuel Hopkins, of Hadley; and Rev. Joseph Lyman, of Hatfield. The customary ordination dinner was provided, and 103 pounds of beef, pork, and veal furnished, but the town paid for no liquor.

REV. SOLOMON WILLIAMS was the son of Rev. Eliphalet Williams, of East Hartford, Conn., at which place he was born July 25, 1752. The family of Mr. Williams is of Welsh origin, and came from Norwich, England. It has probably furnished more ministers than any other family in this country. Mr. Williams was the sixth in descent from the original settler, all but one being ministers. It is a remarkable fact that four of these ministers—the great-grandfather, the grandfather, the father, and the son—should each have preached a half-century sermon from the time of his settlement. Mr. Williams spent his youth with his grandfather, Rev. Solomon Williams, of Lebanon, Conn. He was graduated at Yale College in 1770, appointed tutor in 1773, and in 1778 ordained as successor to Mr. Hooker, whose daughter he married. He died Nov. 9, 1834, at the advanced age of eighty-two. His success as a preacher was quite remarkable, and during his pastorate more than 900 were admitted to the church. After preaching thirty-eight years, when sixty-four years of age, it became necessary, owing to the infirmities of the pastor, to provide him an assistant, and the town authorized the selectmen, in 1816, to hire a preacher to aid Mr. Williams whenever, in their opinion, the good of the town required. Three years after, a vote was passed to settle a colleague and invite Rev. Samuel P. Williams to assist the pastor. Mr. Williams was first employed in 1816, and from year to year for three or four years, but was never settled as colleague. In 1820 he had a salary of $500, and the same year $200 was added to the salary of Rev. Solomon Williams, making his compensation $700. It was not till 1824 that a colleague was actually settled. In that year Rev. Mark Tucker was installed to that office. At this time but one religious society existed; elements of dissatisfaction, however, had appeared when Mr. Tucker was settled. The town voted unanimously, in extending an invitation to Mr. Tucker, that this society are willing that the colleague who may be settled "should exchange with, or invite to preach in the desk, any pious clergyman of any denomination of Christians," and Mr. Tucker endorsed this action. He afterward declined to invite Unitarian clergymen to preach, and the second society was formed. At the March meeting, 1824, the town, "in consequence of the great pressure of their pecuniary concerns at this time," voted to accept the offer of Mr. Williams to relinquish $200 of his salary toward the maintenance of a colleague. Mr. Tucker's salary was fixed at $1000. The Second Congregational (Unitarian) Society was formed Feb. 22, 1825. Separate religious worship was held, however, Dec. 5, 1824, when Rev. Mr. Peabody, of Springfield, preached. Within the following ten years were formed the Episcopal, Baptist, and Edwards churches.

Rev. Solomon Williams was a man of medium stature, in manner plain and unpretending, and never addicted to display. His style of preaching was highly scriptural, his sermons well studied, perspicuous, polished, and searching. As a pastor he was untiring in his duties,—always ready to visit the sick, and peculiarly happy in prayers, which were short, comprehensive, and appropriate. He was highly esteemed during his long pastorate of fifty-six years, and his memory is still cherished with veneration and respect. Quite a number of his sermons were published, among them a historical sketch of the town, in 1815. That sermon is now quite rare and very valuable, a copy having sold in New York within a few years for $12.50. He resided on King Street, in the house so long occupied by his son, Hon. Eliphalet Williams.

REV. SAMUEL P. WILLIAMS, mentioned above, was a descendant of Rev. Solomon Williams, of Lebanon. He was born in 1780; preached here as assistant to Mr. Solomon Williams from 1817 to 1820. He afterward removed to Newburyport, where he died in 1826, aged forty-six. Mr. Williams was probably hired by the selectmen, under the vote of 1816, though his name is not on the town records till 1819. He is spoken of as an eloquent preacher.

First Five Ministers.—The church, since the settlement of the town, as in all New England villages, has borne a prominent part in the development. The pioneers of this region, allured by the fertile meadows, still valued above all tillable lands, intent "that the glory of God might be furthered," fostered, protected, cherished, and obeyed those divine precepts which formed the groundwork of their faith and the bulwark of their religion. The ministers in the original plantations of Massachusetts Bay were all men of superior education and great piety, very many of them possessing business talents of no inferior order. They were not only the spiritual, but oftentimes the secular, leaders of the communities in which they resided. Then ministers were settled for life. The pastoral relation was considered too sacred to be readily severed. When the pastor became old and infirm—unable to perform all his duties—a colleague was provided. The lives and labors of the first five ministers of Northampton are so interwoven with the history of the church and the town that the recital of the one is but a repetition of the other. They led the people through the early struggles of the plantation, assisted its growth and expansion to a town, suffered with them the privations of frontier life, the dangers of savage warfare, the anxieties and perils of the Revolution, and saw the new republic fairly launched on its career of success and prosperity.

Mather, the pioneer, laid broad and deep its foundations in the midst of the wilderness, when the unbroken forest stretched eastward to Worcester, northward to Canada, and westward to the Hudson. We can imagine with what fervid eloquence he spoke to the meagre congregation gathered in the rude log meeting-house, built before a church was formed or even a minister provided. The purity and earnestness of his daily life supplemented, illustrated, and enforced the religious principles inculcated from the pulpit. He it was that comforted the afflicted, encouraged the faint-hearted, and uttered words of assurance and courage when the savage foe hovered about the defenseless settlement.

Then followed Stoddard, the leader, business-man as well as preacher. A man of strong convictions, powerful in argument, impatient of opposition, and stalwart to stand up for the truth, he was just suited to the times in which he lived. Imperious as a thinker, uncompromising as a reasoner, relentless as an opponent, he won an influence second to none in all this region. To that reverence exacted by his sacred calling there was added that respect commanded by business talent, that reliance challenged by sound judgment, and that faith born solely of high endeavor. During the devastations and cruelties of King Philip's war he sustained and sympathized with his people, and never hesitated or faltered in his good work though an Indian musket gleamed in ambush from every thicket. The influence that he exerted has been continued through a long line of descendants, whose names are closely interwoven with every period of the town's history, even to the present generation.

Closely connected by family ties, and for years contemporary and colleague with him, was Edwards, theologian, metaphysician, missionary, president. Greatest of all and still without a rival, he made an impression for good upon the community that will never be effaced. The humble pastor of a village church, he has left a name that is honored and revered wherever the Christian religion is recognized. Conferring by his talents a lasting renown upon the church and congregation that drove him from their pulpit, he stands foremost among the clergy of his own or any other age. The immediate results of his labors during seventeen years of his pastorate here have seldom if ever been surpassed by any clergyman in a similar field. Bitter strife and dissension, however, soon after severed the pastoral relation,—the first that had been dissolved in this community except by death,—and when he left the elements of discord were seething and boiling in unabated fury.

After him came Hooker, the peacemaker. By suavity of temper, gentleness of demeanor, and ability as a preacher, he calmed the tempest and assuaged the troubled waters of controversy. To the young he rendered himself peculiarly attractive, and soon won the love and esteem of all parties. He labored through the years preceding the Revolution, and helped kindle those fires of patriotism that burst into flame in 1776. He lived only through the first year of the struggle, but his noble words and bright example remained, influencing his people through all those years of strife.

Williams, fifth in order, took up the burden, and nobly carried it through fifty-six memorable years. His fervor, faith, and piety supported the drooping spirits of his townsmen through the long struggle with Great Britain. During the succeeding years of destitution and poverty he bore with his people without complaint all the hardships of the time, and rejoiced with them in the return of prosperity. To education and the schools he gave his best energies. His memory is still venerated in this community, and the outpourings of the Holy Spirit vouchsafed to his labors are still remembered.

It is seldom, perhaps, that such continued family ties among its pastors have prevailed in any community as have existed here. The first three ministers were all connected in close relationship. Mr. Stoddard married the widow of his predecessor, and the father of Mr. Edwards was son-in-law to Mr. Stoddard. Mr. Williams married the daughter of his predecessor, Mr. Hooker, and the present pastor, Rev. Mr. Leavitt, is grandson to Mr. Williams.

Fourth Meeting-House.—The third meeting-house, after an existence of nearly seventy years, became not only old and dilapidated, but ill suited to the wants of the now large and prosperous town. The question of building a new one was in agitation many years. There was a large minority in favor of it, and the subject was repeatedly presented in town-meeting. The times, however, were not propitious for such an undertaking. Trade was depressed, business dull, and foreign affairs complicated and threatening. It is not strange, then, that a town with but 2631 inhabitants should long hesitate before committing itself to an expenditure of from $15,000 to $20,000. In 1806 a committee reported in favor of a new meeting-house, but the town refused to accept the report, and the next year voted down a similar proposition. The need of a new house became so imperative, and the determination to procure one so fixed, that in 1809 the town was requested to give the old house to any individuals who would engage to build a new one and convey part of it to the town. After long and animated debate on this proposition it was decided to erect a new meeting-house, and pay for it by a tax upon polls and estates. A committee of fifteen was subsequently appointed to devise suitable measures for carrying this vote into effect. This committee reported at a meeting held Jan. 7, 1810, and its recommendations were discussed paragraph by paragraph. A vote was passed first to reconsider the former vote assessing the cost upon the tax-payers, and then to build after a plan already prepared by Mr. Asher Benjamin, provided $16,000 worth of pews should first be sold. Labor and any articles useful in the building were to be accepted in payment, at fair cash prices. A committee of three persons was also appointed to sell the pews, who were put under bonds of $20,000 for the faithful performance of their duty. This committee afterward reported, April 2, 1810, that they had disposed of two-thirds of the pews for $16,000 and located the house on land partly owned by Dr. Hunt, for which they had agreed to pay $3000, of which sum $1800 had been subscribed by citizens, and $1200 was to be paid by the town. They had also contracted for about three-fourths of the foundation-stone, and asked of what material the house was to be constructed. The town voted to appropriate and assess $1200 for the purchase of the land, and gave the committee full power as to material.

This purchase from Dr. Hunt embraced all the land from Main Street to what are now State and Park Streets. The upper portion of this lot, extending ninety feet beyond the rear of the meeting-house that was to be built, was deeded to the town in consideration of the payment of $1200. The residue of the land was conveyed to Judge Joseph Lyman, and that portion of it on which the town school-house stands on Centre Street was given by him to the town for school purposes in 1835.

The next week, April 9th, at a meeting called expressly for the purpose, and after a lengthy debate, the town voted to reconsider and annul all votes heretofore passed upon the subject of building a new meeting-house. Such a vote, after the town had so far committed itself, was no doubt quite unexpected, and shows that there was yet strong opposition to the measure. In November it was voted not to choose a committee on the subject of a new meeting-house, and the town-clerk was directed to deliver up the bonds of the former committee and return the notes given for pews.

In December the subject was again brought up, and referred to a committee of eleven persons. This committee made a report agreeing substantially with the action already taken by the town, and annulled with reference to selling pews, purchasing land, locating the building, and raising such sums as should be needed by taxation. The report was accepted by a vote of 116 to 50. On the 7th of January, 1811, the town treasurer was authorized to pay $245 toward the purchase of the Hunt lot, receive a deed for the same, and give a note of $1200 in payment therefor. The committee to sell pews were instructed to appraise them at a rate not less than ten per cent. below the appraisal of the previous year. This committee reported in 1812 that they had sold pews to the amount of $13,068, and that there remained unsold pews to the value of $576. A building committee, consisting of Joseph Cook, Abner Hunt, and Oliver Pomeroy, was chosen by ballot, and instructed to give bonds in the sum of $20,000.

The fourth meeting-house was located partly on what was then a highway, and partly on land purchased of Dr. Hunt. At that time there were no houses from Pomeroy's tavern (Warner House) to the Whitney building (Northampton Institution for Savings). The house of Samuel and Eli King was near the intersection of Court and Gothic Streets, but farther down the hill. A barn of Mr. Hunt stood near the highway, in the rear of the old meeting-house, and another, belonging to Asahel Pomeroy, quite near it, so that it became necessary to remove both before locating the new house. The building stood on the spot now occupied by the stone meeting-house erected in 1877.

A contract was made with Mr. Peleg Kingsley, of Brattleboro', to build the house above the foundations for $16,000, according to the plans of Mr. Benjamin, and he was put under $30,000 bonds for the faithful performance of the work. The foundation-stones were furnished by citizens of the town at a specified price. The dressed stone for the underpinning was supplied by Moses Burt and Pynchon Bliss, of Wilbraham.

The timber and lumber were obtained in Vermont and New Hampshire, and floated in rafts down the Connecticut River to the Hadley bridge, thence transported to the common near the cemetery on Bridge Street, where the framing was done. The foundation and stone-work were laid during the summer, and on the 24th of September, 1811, the work of raising the frame was commenced. Raising a building in those days was an important occasion, and, of course, in raising the meeting-house the whole town would be interested. The business centre of the village presented a holiday appearance. Flip, the popular beverage on such occasions, circulated freely. Mr. Asahel Pomeroy, who kept the tavern afterward known as the Warner House, spread a table free to all. A little more than a week was occupied in raising the body of the house. In November, when the building was well under way, another contract was made with Mr. Isaac Damon, which superseded that previously made with Mr. Kingsley, and Mr. Damon completed the building. A few changes were made relative to finishing the interior, and the sum agreed upon with him was $12,000. The cost of this meeting-house was much greater than had been anticipated, considerably exceeding the architect's estimate. In 1813 a committee were appointed to examine the accounts and report the expense of the new meeting-house. This report contains a complete list of all payments, shows who were employed, who furnished lumber and other material, and the prices paid for everything. In summing up they reported $3053 as expended under direction of the building committee; $16,000 paid Kingsley and Damon; $1169.84 extras paid Damon, making the "whole cost of the new meeting-house itself, without the land on which the same is erected, or charges of the building committee for their services, $20,223.43." Of this sum the purchasers of pews paid $13,115; the remainder—$7108.43—was raised by taxation. To the above amount there is to be added the sum of $1200 paid by the town for the land, and $740.50 paid to the building committee for their services, making the entire cost of the new structure $22,173.93.

The house was completed within the time stipulated in the contract, and dedicated Oct. 28, 1812. The dedication sermon was preached by Rev. Mr. Williams, from the text Genesis xxviii. 17: "And he was afraid, and said, How dreadful is this place! It is none other than the house of God and the gate of heaven." The first prayer was made by Rev. Jos. Lyman, of Hatfield, and the last prayer by Rev. David Parsons, of Amherst. Although the day was stormy, 1400 persons were present.

The old and new meeting-houses stood so near each other that the bell was moved from the old to the new steeple by means of a scaffold erected between them. This was the bell purchased in 1760. It was used till 1824, when it was accidentally fractured. A new bell was purchased in that year. It weighed 1500 pounds, and was first used Aug. 1, 1824. The old bell had been in use sixty-four years. It had summoned people to the house of God more than three thousand Sabbaths, and its solemn notes had been heard at the burial of sixteen hundred persons. The selectmen obtained the bell of Mr. Revere, of Boston, on trial, and the town voted not to accept it, but ordered another "of a tone resembling the old one as near as possible." In November the selectmen were instructed to return the new bell (now broken) to Mr. Revere and procure another. There is no record of the cost of this bell, except that in the estimate of expenses for 1825 appears an item of $200 for transportation and hanging the new bell. The parish, in 1826, at its first meeting after organization, to complete the payments for it, voted to raise $200.

In 1812 a new clock was purchased, the expense to be defrayed by the sale of the old meeting-house, or of the five unsold pews in the new one. For sixty years this clock did excellent service. In 1872 a new one was purchased by the town and placed higher in the steeple, in order to show four instead of three faces. To accomplish this the bell was carried higher up and the steeple strengthened. The cost of the new clock, including the expense of changes in the steeple, was $1200.

Our fathers were compelled to listen to their Sunday sermons in the cold. No heat was to be had in the meeting-house except what was afforded by small stoves, containing a handful of glowing coals, used by the women for warming their feet. In 1820, John Tappan, Esq., of Boston, presented the inhabitants of the town with "two large and valuable church stoves."

Church music in early times was congregational. The singers were scattered throughout the congregation, the pitch was given by a chosen leader, and all joined in the singing. Choirs were afterward formed, the young of both sexes considering it quite an honor to become members. In 1816 the selectmen recommended the formation of a musical society of not less than thirty singers of both sexes, to occupy the front seats in the meeting-house. Instrumental music followed the formation of choirs, the flute being the first instrument used. The first record of town action concerning a musical instrument was in 1810, when the selectmen were instructed to "purchase the Bass Viol now in use in public worship, provided the expense do not exceed $15." In 1823 a committee were appointed to hire a bass viol. They reported that they could not hire the bass viol then in use, but that Mr. White would sell it to the town for $50, and the town voted to purchase it.

In 1825 a tax of $1500 was voted in town-meeting for the support of religious worship. This was the last tax laid by the town for that purpose. The next year the Unitarian society was formed, and the first parish established. The town of Northampton, from its first vote to raise money, or its equivalent, to pay Mr. Mather, to its last vote on that subject in 1825,—a period of one hundred and sixty-seven years, with exception of about twelve years, when two precincts existed,—raised yearly by taxation a sum sufficient to generously sustain the gospel ministry. During that time it built as a town four meeting-houses, the fourth, when erected, being the largest in this section of the State. At this time there was not in New England another congregation so numerous as that which usually assembled for public worship at the meeting-house in this town. The number frequently exceeded 1500, and seldom fell below 1200.

First Parish.—From 1753, when Southampton was incorporated, the town and parish were identical. It became necessary, however, in 1826, soon after the formation of the Second Congregational Society, to organize a parish. The meeting for that purpose was called under the statute law of the State, and held at the town-hall, April 3, 1826. Twelve names were appended to the application to Levi Lyman, Esq., justice of the peace, to issue a warrant for the meeting. These signers were Benj. Tappan, Chas. Starkweather, Asahel Pomeroy, Timothy Jewett, Cecil Dwight, Nathan Storrs, S. Stoddard, Jr., Jonathan Stroug, William Clark, Asahel Lyman, Oliver Warner, and David Strong. The first warrant was issued to Cecil Dwight. Lewis Strong was chosen Moderator, D. S. Whitney, Clerk; and from that time the First Parish of Northampton had a legal existence, and, of course, became owner of all the parochial and church property. At this first meeting a vote of thanks was given to Mr. John Tappan, of Boston, for a present of "18 handsome lamps, to be placed and used in the meeting-house." These lamps were in use till gas was introduced, in 1857.

The subject of procuring a parsonage came up in 1829, but no action was taken till 1836, when the homestead on Bridge Street, since used for that purpose, was purchased for $2500. A new parsonage was erected in 1867. The old house was sold and removed to the corner of Bridge Street and Lincoln Avenue, and the new one built upon its site. The cost of the new building was $8300.

Parish-meetings were held in the town-hall and religious meetings in the church previous to 1842. In 1840 the parish voted to unite with the Centre School District in the erection of a building to be used jointly for schools and for parish purposes. The vestry was built in 1841, and first occupied for the annual meeting in 1842. The parish paid its proportion of the cost by the sale of pews in the church, the amount of such sales, in 1841, reaching $1450. This building is now occupied by the Gazette and Courier newspaper as a printing-office. During its joint ownership the parish occupied the basement and the schools were in the upper rooms. The arrangement was satisfactory to all parties till 1856, when the decision was reached to build a chapel. Efforts had been previously made by both owners to buy or sell, but without success. The parish sold its right in the building to Mr. J. P. Williston for $800, raised $1600 by taxation, and Mr. Williston contributed $2250 more, making the entire cost of the new chapel $4650. It was located in the rear of the meeting-house, with entrance tower at its east end. A narrow road, a continuation of Court Street, separated it from the meeting-house. Mr. Williston subsequently purchased of the school district its part of the old building and sold it to the proprietors of the Gazette and Courier. After the destruction of the meeting-house it was found necessary to remove the chapel, and it was sold to Mr. Porter Underwood, of Holyoke, for $405. He moved it to his lot adjoining the parish lands, encased it with brick, and converted it into a public hall.

The subject of purchasing a church organ was first agitated in 1832. For fourteen years the matter was frequently before the parish, and various votes are on record concerning it. The final decision to purchase was not reached till 1856, when the sum of $3100 was appropriated for that object. A contract was made with Mr. Johnson, of Westfield, and a very fine instrument—at that time one of the very best in this part of the State—was put into the meeting-house.

The meeting-house remained without much alteration for thirty-six years. At a meeting held June 27, 1848, the parish voted to alter the pews and repaint the interior of the edifice. This house differed from its predecessors in the arrangement of the pews. The old square pew was discarded and the long and narrow slip substituted; but the old-fashioned, upright back was retained. In carrying out this vote, the entire interior of the house was remodeled and the pews modernized. The expense of changing the pews was contributed by Mr. John Tappan, of Boston. In 1850, Mr. Eliphalet Williams presented to the parish an elegant chandelier. Seven years afterward gas was put into the meeting-house and the chandelier refitted for its use. Stoves were used for heating the house till 1852, when two furnaces were purchased, Mr. Eliphalet Williams contributing $200 toward the expense. In 1860 extensive repairs were made. Slates were substituted for shingles upon the roof, the walls were frescoed, the interior repainted, and the pulpit lowered three feet. Originally the pulpit was quite high, approached by narrow, circular stairs from each side. The cost of these improvements was $2000. No change of importance was afterward made in the building. Hon. Eliphalet Williams, son of Rev. Solomon Williams, who died in 1874, bequeathed the sum of $5000 to the parish for the purpose of paying its debt. This debt had been incurred mainly for building the new parsonage.

The parish for many years followed in the accustomed way of taxing the members for its expenses. New societies were formed and its numbers reduced. At last this method of taxation became burdensome, and, as in all religious societies, the question of ways and means became more and more perplexing. The pews in the meeting-house were mostly owned by individuals, some of them not members of the parish. From taxation of property to taxation of pews was but a step. Both were tried, and neither proved satisfactory. Then a system of voluntary assessments was adopted, in which each member named the sum upon which he was willing to be taxed, based upon the pledge of a certain amount in the aggregate. This system worked well for a few years, but finally it was found difficult to obtain the requisite aggregate, and the taxation of pews was again resorted to. Measures were in progress for the purchase of the pews by the parish for purposes of rental, when the fire occurred.

Destruction of the Fourth Meeting-House.—This meeting-house,—known as the "Old Church" far and near,—celebrated in all this region for its bold front and fine proportions, was 100 by 76 feet in dimensions. The steeple in the centre of the front was about 140 feet in height. After the repairs in 1848 it contained 147 pews on the lower floor capable of seating six persons each, and 38 in the gallery, giving it a seating capacity of about 1000. Ten pews were at different times removed to make room for stoves, furnaces, and the organ.

This building, after serving town and parish as a place of worship sixty-four years, was totally destroyed by fire on the afternoon of Tuesday, June 27, 1876. The fire originated near the gas-meter, and is attributed to the carelessness of workmen who had been making repairs upon it during the day. The flames spread with wonderful rapidity, soon enveloping the steeple. Many eyes watched their progress with painful interest. It was feared that the steeple would fall outward, in which event damage to some other building was sure to follow. Fortunately, however, the fire burned out the supports, and the spire fell back upon the burning mass. The fire caught at half-past five, and the steeple fell at fifteen minutes past six o'clock. The house was partially cleared of its movable contents. The pulpit furniture, nearly all the carpets in the aisles, the Sunday-school library, the cabinet-organ, and about half the cushions were saved. During the conflagration the wind suddenly changed, and to this fortunate circumstance may be attributed the safety of the chapel and adjoining property. The meeting-house and contents were insured for $27,500. The clock, owned by the town, was insured for $1000.

The Ministers.—Nine of the thirteen pastors who have been settled since the church was established preached in this meeting-house,—Solomon Williams, who was the pastor when it was built; Mark Tucker, from 1824 to 1827; I. S. Spencer, from 1828 to 1832; Joseph Penny, from 1833 to 1835; Chas. Wiley, from 1837 to 1845; E. G. Swift, from 1845 to 1851; J. P. Cleaveland, from 1853 to 1855; Zachary Eddy, from 1858 to 1867; William S. Leavitt, from 1867 to the present time.

In 1828, when Mr. Tucker was dismissed, the parish extended a call to Rev. John Wheeler, of Windsor, Conn., to become colleague with Mr. Williams. Mr. Wheeler declined, and Rev. I. S. Spencer was installed. After the retirement of Dr. Penny, in 1836, Rev. Mr. Condit and Rev. Mr. Childs, of Pittsford, Vt., were invited, but declined, and Rev. Chas. Wiley was settled. In 1845, after the dismissal of Mr. Wiley, the parish voted to invite Rev. Walter Clark, of Canterbury, Conn., to become its pastor. He declined, and Rev. E. G. Swift, of Chillicothe, O., was called. In 1852, after the removal of Mr. Swift, Rev. Dr. R. Cady, of Westborough, was invited to a settlement. He did not accept, and in 1853 Rev. Dr. Cleaveland, of Providence, R. I., was installed. Since 1845 the salary had been $1000; in 1853 it was raised to $1350. Dr. Cleaveland was dismissed in 1855, and in 1856 Rev. Oliver E. Daggett, of Canandaigua, N. Y., was invited to become the pastor, at a salary of $1500. Dr. Daggett declined, and an invitation was extended to Rev. E. B. Foster, of Lowell, and in 1857 to Rev. Wm. S. Karr, of Brooklyn. Both declined, and in 1858 Rev. Zachary Eddy, of Birmingham, Conn., was installed. In 1860, $500 were added to the salary of the pastor, making it $2000. In 1867, Rev. William S. Leavitt, of Hudson, N. Y., was installed, and in 1868 the salary was increased to $2500. In 1876, Mr. Leavitt voluntarily relinquished $500 of his salary, and it has remained at $2000 to the present time. Annexed are sketches of the several pastors who have officiated since the ministry of Mr. Williams.

REV. MARK TUCKER, D.D., was born at Whitestown, N. Y., June 7, 1795. He graduated at Union College in 1814, studied theology under President Nott, and was ordained at Stillwater, N. Y., Oct. 8, 1817. As has already been narrated, Mr. Tucker was invited to become colleague pastor with Mr. Williams in 1824, and installed March 10th of that year. At the installation services Rev. Mr. Hale, of Westhampton, made the introductory prayer; Rev. Dr. Nott, president of Union College, preached the sermon from 2 Cor. v. 20; Rev. Dr. Lyman, of Hatfield, made the installing prayer; Rev. Mr. Williams, senior pastor, gave the charge; Rev. Mr. Wisner, of Boston, gave the right hand of fellowship; and Rev. M. Williston, of Easthampton, made the concluding prayer. The town voted $500 toward removing his family, and gave him a salary of $1000. The controversy which resulted in the establishment of the Unitarian Society commenced when Mr. Tucker was settled, and culminated soon after in the establishment of the new society. Mr. Tucker, it seems, gave offense in not inviting Rev. Mr. Peabody, of Springfield, to officiate after the latter had made proposals to him. Dr. Tucker was dismissed Aug. 16, 1827, after a ministry of three years. Oct. 31, 1827, he was installed as pastor of the Second Congregational Church in Troy, N. Y. His labors there were blessed by the conversion of hundreds. He remained at Troy till 1837, when, declining a call to the Park Street Church in Boston, he became colleague pastor with Rev. James Wilson over the Beneficent Church, Providence, R. I., and was installed June 30th of that year. He was dismissed Sept. 24, 1845. During this time 237 were added to the church. He was installed at Weathersfield, Conn., Oct. 15, 1845; dismissed March 24, 1856. April 15, 1857, he was installed over a church in Vernon, Conn., where he remained five years, being dismissed April 1, 1863. He lived at Ellington and Old Saybrook, Conn., without charge until 1865, when he returned to Weathersfield, where he resided until his death, which occurred March 19, 1875, at the age of eighty years. The degree of D.D. was conferred upon him by Williams College in 1831.

REV. ICHABOD S. SPENCER, D.D., was born at Rupert, Vt., July 23, 1798, studied at Salem Academy, and graduated at Union College in 1822. While teaching school at Schenectady and Canandaigua, N. Y., he studied theology under the direction of Dr. Andrew Yates, of Union College. He was first settled in the ministry in this town as colleague with Mr. Williams, Sept. 11, 1828. Here he remained but three and one-half years, but his labors were abundantly rewarded, 200 persons having been added to the church during that time. In February, 1832, he asked a dismissal, which was granted with reluctance by the church and society, and his connection with it was dissolved March 12, 1832. He accepted a call to the Second Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., during the same year, where he remained till his death, which occurred Nov. 23, 1854, at the age of fifty-seven. He published two volumes of pastoral sketches, which were quite popular. In 1855 appeared two volumes of his sermons, with portrait and sketch of his life, by Rev. J. M. Sherwood.

REV. JOSEPH PENNY, D.D., was born in Ireland, in 1790, educated in Dublin and Glasgow, and came to this country in 1819. He resided a brief time at Jamaica, L. I., and was installed over the First Presbyterian Church in Rochester, N. Y., April 3, 1822. After a pastorate of eleven years, he was dismissed April 16, 1833. He was installed here June 5, 1833, and dismissed Nov. 23, 1835. After leaving this town he became president of Hamilton College, Clinton, N. Y., where he remained four years. Afterward, after temporarily residing at Nyack, N. Y., and at Grand Rapids, Mich., he returned to Rochester, N. Y., where he died March 22, 1860, aged seventy. He received the title of D.D. from Union College in 1831.

REV. CHAS. WILEY, D.D., was born in New York. He studied at Nassau Hall, from which institution he received his degree of D.D. in 1846; was settled in Northampton in 1837, where he remained till 1845. He was in charge of the Reformed Dutch Church of Utica, N. Y., from 1846 to 1850. Afterward he was employed as teacher in Milwaukee, in 1857; was at Birmingham, Conn., from 1858 to 1859; as stated supply at Lafayette, Ind., in 1859; was installed pastor over the Reformed Church in Geneva, N. Y., in 1860, and remained there till 1865, since which time he has been engaged in teaching, mainly at Orange, N. Y., at which place he died in 1877.

REV. E. Y. SWIFT was born at Fairfax, Vt., Jan. 16, 1815, graduated at Middlebury College, Vt., in 1839, and at Andover Theological Seminary in 1842. He was in the service of the American Tract Society about a year and a half, and preached for the Second Presbyterian Church in Chillicothe, Ohio, for about eighteen months. He was installed pastor over the First Church in this town Nov. 19, 1845, and dismissed Sept. 22, 1851. At the close of a pastorate of about six years he removed in the fall of 1851 to South Hadley, Mass., where he officiated as pastor for a little more than six years. Thence he removed to Clinton, N. Y., where he preached about four and a half years, when he accepted a call to the Congregational Church in Williamsburg, Mass., where he remained about six years. He was afterward settled at Denmark, Iowa, where he still resides, having entered upon the tenth year of his ministry there.

REV. JOHN P. CLEVELAND, D.D., was born at Byefield, Mass., July 19, 1799, graduated at Bowdoin College in 1821, and at Andover Theological Seminary, 1824. He was ordained pastor of the Tabernacle Church, Salem, Mass., Feb. 14, 1827, and dismissed April 1, 1834. He was pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Detroit, Mich., from June 15, 1835, to Nov. 1, 1838; president elect of Marshall College, Michigan, and partially acting pastor there, from Nov. 1, 1838, to Nov. 1, 1843. Pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, Cincinnati, Ohio, from Jan. 10, 1844, to Jan. 20, 1846, and pastor of the Beneficent Church, Providence, R. I., from April 22, 1846, to March 30, 1853. He was installed pastor of the First Church in this town April 20, 1853, and dismissed July 11, 1855; pastor of Appleton Street Church, Lowell, Mass., from Oct. 2, 1855, to Jan. 15, 1862, and chaplain of the 30th Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers from January to August, in 1862. He acted as stated supply at Park Street and Salem Street Churches, Boston, from Aug. 1, 1863, to July 1, 1864. After that he was at Mattapoisett, Mass., from Jan. 1, 1865, to June 7, 1867, and at Bellerica, Mass., from 1867 to 1869. He resided, without charge, first at Ipswich, and afterward at Newburyport, till his death at the latter place, March 7, 1873, aged seventy-three. He was a man of marked character and a strong advocate of temperance and anti-slavery. He gained many warm friends while a resident of this town.

REV. ZACHARY EDDY, D.D.—Dr. Eddy was born in Stockbridge, Vt., Dec. 19, 1815. He was the son of Rev. Isaac Eddy, and the seventh in descent from Rev. William Eddy, vicar of Cranbrook, Kent, England, 1589-1616. From the age of two years he resided in Western New York. His education was private, irregular, defective. At the age of eighteen he was licensed to preach by the (Cumberland Presbyterian) Presbytery of Pennsylvania, and ordained by that body in 1835. For several years he acted as home missionary in Western New York and Wisconsin. He was pastor of the Congregational Church at Warsaw, N. Y., from 1850 to 1855; of the Congregational Church at Birmingham from 1855 to 1857; of the First Congregational Church, Northampton, from 1857 to 1867; of the Reformed "Church on the Heights," Brooklyn, from 1867 to 1871; of the Central Church in Chelsea from 1871 to 1873; has been pastor since 1873 of the First Congregational Church, Detroit, Mich. The honorary degree of A.M. was conferred upon him by Brown University, and that of D.D. by Williams College. Besides many occasional sermons and pamphlets, he published, in 1868, "Immanuel, or the Life of Jesus Christ." He was the principal compiler and editor of "Hymns of the Church" (Reformed), 1869, and was associated with Drs. Hitchcock and Schaff in preparing "Hymns and Songs of Praise," 1873. In 1877 he was selected to preach the annual sermon of the American Home Missionary Society. The discourse, "The Evangelization of our Country," was preached in the Broadway Tabernacle, May 6th, was afterward printed, and has had a very large circulation. The same year he preached the opening sermon of the National Triennial Council, which was ordered printed.

REV. WILLIAM S. LEAVITT.—Mr. Leavitt was born at Putney, Vt., in 1822. Graduated at Yale College in 1840. Studied law in New York one year. Afterward studied theology four years, mainly in Union Theological Seminary, New York City. Ordained and installed pastor of the Eliot Church, Newton, Mass., Dec. 2, 1845. In November, 1853, he was dismissed to accept a call from the First Presbyterian Church in Hudson, N. Y., and installed there the same month. He was dismissed in April, 1867, to accept the call of the First Parish and Church in Northampton, and was installed here April 30th of that year. Mr. Leavitt is son of the late Dr. Joshua Leavitt, of New York, and a direct descendant of Rev. Solomon Williams, of Lebanon.

Fifth Meeting-House.—In July, 1876, as soon as practicable after the destruction of its meeting-house, the parish was called together, and voted unanimously to rebuild upon the old site, either of stone or brick, and at a cost not exceeding $50,000. A committee of fifteen was appointed to procure plans. Proposals were invited from architects, and on the 10th of August twenty-seven plans were presented. Four of these were recommended to the parish, but it was found that none of them could be built for the sum named, and a building committee of five persons was chosen, with full power to act in the matter, being restricted only as to cost. A committee to solicit subscriptions as well as a finance committee were appointed, and it was voted not to include bell, organ, furniture, heating apparatus, and architect's commission in the estimated cost of the building,—$50,000. In accordance with a petition authorized by the parish, the county commissioners discontinued the road between the old meeting-house and chapel. The latter was sold and moved away, as previously stated. The building committee consisted of J. S. Lathrop, H. K. W. Dickinson, Webster Herrick, Rev. L. C. Seelye, and H. R. Hinckley.

This committee engaged Messrs. Peabody & Stearns, of Boston, to make the plans and supervise the erection of the building. The committee intimated to them what was wanted, and the architects elaborated the design and perfected the building that to-day adorns the village with its graceful proportions and elegant interior. In general style it is Gothic, the break in the roof and the dormer windows giving all the effect of the clerestory, and at a much less cost. The exterior of the building is constructed entirely of stone, with slate roof. The foundations are of granite, and above the water-table the walls are of Longmeadow brown stone, ashler work on horizontal beds. The tower and spire are built from foundation to apex entirely of stone. The walls are backed by eighteen inches of brick throughout, and the tower, in its lower story, has a backing of three feet of brick. The contract was awarded to Mr. P. B. Johnson, of Springfield, who commenced work on the 1st of May, 1877, and completed the house April 20, 1878. The building was located on the site of its predecessor, but ten feet farther back from the street.

The corner-stone was laid with the usual ceremonies on the 12th of July, 1877. It consists of a block of brownstone taken from a corner of the meeting-house destroyed in 1876, and beneath it was deposited a box containing sundry documents appropriate to the occasion. The day chosen was most suitable, as it was on the 12th of July, 1661, two hundred and sixteen years previous, that the town of Northampton voted to erect its second meeting-house.

The new house extends 76 feet on Main Street by 113 on Centre, with a chapel 35 by 76 feet adjoining it in the rear. The edifice faces the south, with a tower at the southeastern corner. The tower is 18 feet square at the base, and rises 190 feet above the sidewalk. The main audience-room is 104 by 72 feet, with 126 pews, capable of seating six persons each. The floor is "bowled," rising two feet from pulpit to vestibule, and the pews are placed on a curve, commencing on a radius of 100 feet and decreasing as they approach the pulpit. The gallery extends across the front of the building over the vestibule, and contains 29 pews. About 1000 persons can be seated comfortably within the audience-room. The preacher's platform, with desk, is at the rear end of the building, rising three feet from the floor. The whole interior of the meeting-house is handsomely finished in ash. Directly back of the pulpit is the organ, which presents a full front of displayed pipes finely decorated. It has 2126 pipes, with a full variety of stops. The choir-gallery has accommodations for about 20 persons, and is about one foot higher than the pulpit-platform. The building is lighted by gas, requiring 350 burners. The bell weighs 3179 pounds, and is upon the key of D. The clock is one of the best that modern science affords, and was put in by the town.

The entire cost of the building, including furniture, fixtures, and bell, was $62,900. The sum of $51,000 was appropriated by the parish for building and heating apparatus. The committee expended for these purposes $50,000, or $100 less than the appropriation. The whole sum has been raised by private effort, with the exception of $27,250 received from insurance. The full amount was provided before the building was dedicated.

The first service in the new meeting-house was held on Sunday morning, May 5, 1878. It had been intended that the communion should be the first service held in it, but circumstances rendered it necessary that the exercises should be mainly financial. After closing up the building-accounts as far as possible, it was found that $5000 would be needed to pay all expenses and relieve the society from the burden of debt. Since the burning of the meeting-house the congregation had occupied the town-hall for religious meetings, and it had been determined to make an effort to obtain the requisite amount at the last meeting held in the hall, on Sunday, April 28th. That day, however, was so stormy and the attendance so small that the matter was postponed. Hence it was brought up at the first meeting in the new house of worship. Appropriate remarks were made by the pastor and various members of the congregation. Subscription-papers were circulated, and in a short time it was announced that the desired amount had been pledged.

The dedication services were held on Sunday evening, May 5th. The house was crowded, every pew was closely packed, the aisles were filled with chairs, and many persons were standing about the doors in the vestibule. The audience numbered at least 1500 persons. The pastors of the Edwards, Unitarian, Baptist, and Florence Congregational Churches occupied seats upon the platform. The exercises were opened by a voluntary upon the organ by J. L. Warriner, followed by the singing of the Doxology by the choir and the audience. The divine blessing was invoked by Rev. C. B. Ferry, pastor of the Unitarian Church; a select passage of Scripture was read by Rev. Gordon Hall, D.D., pastor of the Edwards Church; the anthem, "Te Deum Laudamus," was announced by Rev. Mr. Jefferson, pastor of the Baptist Church, and finely rendered by the choir; a statement from the building committee was read by President Scelye, of Smith College; the choir then sang the sentence, "The Lord is in his holy temple;" prayer was offered by Rev. E. G. Cobb, pastor of the Florence Congregational Church; an anthem was then sung by the choir; then followed the dedication sermon, by Rev. Wm. S. Leavitt, pastor of the church; the dedication anthem was rendered by the choir; the prayer of dedication was offered by Rev. Mr. Leavitt; the hymn, "Jesus shall reign where'er the sun," was sung by the choir and the congregation; and the whole closed by the benediction, pronounced by Dr. Hall.

The meeting-house was dedicated before the grading was completed or the walks laid about it. The parish accordingly voted in 1878 to appropriate $1700 for grading, curbing, fencing, and laying walks, and appointed a committee for that purpose. This work was accomplished during the summer of that year, for a trifle less than the appropriation; thus completing the whole and finishing the meeting-house within and without for the sum of $64,532. The building as a whole gives general satisfaction. It is a spacious, commodious, elegant structure, and will compare favorably with any of the more costly church edifices in this part of the State. The parish is to be especially congratulated upon obtaining so fine an edifice at such a reasonable cost, and, more than all, that it has been wholly paid for. The entire work has been carried through, from beginning to end, without accident to any person connected with it.

Other Churches.—Six churches have been organized by members from the First Church since its formation. All the churches in the several towns that have been incorporated within the limits of the original plantation have been offshoots from this. The first, Southampton, was composed of 32 members, who took letters of dismission and recommendation for that purpose from the First Church. It was established June, 1743. The second, Westhampton, was formed by 27 members, who were dismissed from this church with the design of being organized into a separate body. This church was formed Sept. 29, 1779. On the 13th of November, 1785, 47 members of the First Church, having been regularly dismissed for that purpose, in connection with 25 members from other churches, organized a separate church at Easthampton. A few members of the First Church, including one of the deacons, together with members of other churches in this vicinity, were, on the 23d of March, 1831, organized into a separate church, by the name of the "Hampshire Colony Church," to be located on the Bureau River, in the State of Illinois.

When the fourth meeting-house was erected in 1812 many members of the church were desirous of building two houses of worship and organizing a second Congregational society. The majority, however, preferred the erection of a large house, with the hope of retaining the whole population under the ministry of one clergyman. This expectation, however, was not realized, for in 1826, as has already been stated, the Unitarian Society was organized. In the summer of 1831 the parish numbered about 2800 souls, and the necessity for a division became apparent. Much discussion ensued, and Rev. Mr. Spencer, colleague pastor with Mr. Williams, strongly urged the measure. In 1832, 37 members obtained the consent of the First Church, were dismissed from it, and proceeded to organize a new society under the name of the "Edwards Church."

Sunday-school.—The Sunday-school was established in 1815. The first meetings were held in the old town-hall, which stood east of the court-house. Mrs. Daniel Stebbins was the first superintendent, and for many years there were none but lady teachers. The school was held only in the summer, and was composed of pupils of both sexes, twelve years old and under.

At the close of the summer session each scholar received as a present a small book. In a few years the school became quite popular. It was then reorganized under a male superintendent, older pupils were admitted, and teachers of both sexes employed. About the same time the school was transferred to the meeting-house. There are no records of the Sabbath-school previous to 1834; if any existed prior to that date they have been lost. In 1853 the school was reorganized, and a constitution and by-laws adopted. It was then named the "Sabbath-school Society of the First Parish." A library has been connected with the school for many years, though the date of its commencement is not known. The parish makes an annual appropriation for its maintenance, and it now numbers, 804 volumes. In 1858 there were 315 members, with 41 teachers, in the school. During the year 1878 the whole number of scholars was 275, and the number of teachers 31.

The officers of the school for the ensuing year are Deacon Geo. L. Wright, Superintendent; Mrs. J. H. Butler and Mrs. J. H. Searl, Assistant Superintendents; J. H. Searl, Secretary and Treasurer; E. P. Copeland, Librarian and Chorister; Deacon Daniel Kingsley, Mrs. J. H. Butler, and Mrs. J. H. Searl, Directors.

The following is a list of the elders and deacons since the organization of the church:

Elders.—John Strong, Preserved Clapp, Ebenezer Strong.

Deacons.—William Holton, Thomas Hanehett,* Medad Pomeroy, Jonathan Hunt, Nathaniel Phelps, John Clark, Thomas Sheldon, Ebenezer Wright, Samuel Allen, John Clark, Noah Cook, Ebenezer Pomeroy, Stephen Wright,† Ebenezer Hunt, Supply Kingsley, John Hawley, Jonathan Hunt, Aaron Cook, Josiah Clark, Elijah Clark, Moses Kingsley,‡ Enos Wright, Solomon Allen,§ Israel Clark, Luther Clark, Ebenezer S. Phelps,|| Enos Clark,|| Eliphalet Williams, Lewis Strong,|| David S. Whitney, John P. Williston, Aaron Breck, Jared Clark, Daniel Kingsley, Haynes K. Starkweather, Charles B. Kingsley, W. P. Strickland, Wm. H. Nowell, Geo. L. Wright.

The number of church members, July, 1677, was 76; September, 1706, 93; November, 1736, 620; January, 1832, 728; April, 1843, 515; June, 1860, 485; May, 1866, 508; April, 1875, 421.

THE EDWARDS CHURCH, NORTHAMPTON, originated from a desire to strengthen the cause of evangelical religion in the town. Its originators were urged by two successive pastors of the First Church to commence this enterprise as a matter of duty. The town was growing, the parish church had become too large for the care of one pastor, and another organization of the same faith was imperatively demanded. Such was the argument used to induce certain members of the First Church to separate and form the Edwards Church.

Accordingly, 93 members (42 males and 51 females) applied for letters of dismission, which were granted in a Christian spirit, and they were organized into a church by a council convened Jan. 29, 1833, of which council Rev. Solomon Williams, pastor of the First Church, Northampton, President Humphrey, of Amherst College, and Dr. Hawes, of Hartford, were members. The name Edwards Church was adopted in memory of the distinguished Jonathan Edwards, whose preaching and theological writings gave fame to Northampton in this country and in Europe.

Before the close of the year the Edwards Church had erected for their house of worship a brick edifice, 83 feet in length and 54 in width, at a cost, including site, of $13,200. While this

* Removed to Westfield.

† Removed to 2d Precinct, now Southampton.

‡ Removed to Chesterfield in 1794.

§ Became a minister, and removed to New York in 1804.

|| Removed to Illinois in 1831.

¶ Dismissed to Edwards Church.

 Removed to California in 1876.

was in process of erection, the new society were kindly invited to occupy the Baptist church edifice.

The Edwards Society were afflicted by the loss of their house of worship, May 19, 1870, when a fire from a burning building adjacent communicated to it, and the ruin was complete. Under the necessity of building anew, the society removed from the corner of Main and South Streets to a location farther west on Main Street, corner of State, near to where the college buildings have since been erected. The new church was built in Romanesque style, brick, with stone trimmings, containing an audience-room 72 feet by 64, 36 feet in height, capable of seating 940 persons. In the rear of the audience-room, and on the same level, is the chapel, 30 feet by 64, and 15 in height, over which are spacious and commodious parlors and other rooms for social purposes. The church is surmounted by a spire 184 feet in height. The tower on the corner is, at the base, 24 feet square, and in the second story is a room finished off and frescoed for a pastor's study. An organ was purchased of Steer & Turner for the audience-room, at an expense of $4850. The entire cost of the building complete, with furniture, organ, etc., at a time when labor and material were very expensive, was $82,152.

The first pastor of the Edwards Church was Rev. John Todd, D.D., afterward so well known in his connection with Pittsfield, and as an author of books for the young. Dr. Todd's pastorate was from Jan. 30, 1833, to Sept. 26, 1836. The second pastor was Rev. John Mitchell, installed Dec. 8, 1836, and dismissed Dec. 20, 1842, since deceased. The next pastor was Dr. E. P. Rogers, installed May 17, 1843, and dismissed Nov. 24, 1846, at this date (1879) pastor of a Dutch church on Fifth Avenue, New York City, where he has ministered many years. The fourth pastor was Dr. George E. Day, installed Jan. 12, 1848, and dismissed May 7, 1851. Dr. Day has for a number of years been connected with Yale Theological Seminary as Professor of Biblical Literature. The present pastor, Dr. Gordon Hall, was installed June 2, 1852, and is consequently near completing the twenty-seventh year of his ministry with this people.

This church has been favored with long and useful deaconships. The office was held by Thomas Napier from 1833 to 1845; Enos Clark, from 1833 to 1864; James Hibben, from 1834 to 1871; Lewis S. Hopkins, from 1841 to 1865; Chauncey Colton, from 1847 to 1871; J. Huntington Lyman, from 1864 to 1877. The present deacons are five: Wm. H. Stoddard, who has held the office since November, 1841; A. J. Lincoln, since July, 1864; S. E. Bridgman, Dr. Wm. H. Jones, and George Tucker, since January, 1876.

Mr. S. E. Bridgman has been superintendent of the Sabbath-school for fifteen years. The present membership of the church is 380.

THE FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH.

A society for the support of the Baptist faith in Northampton was organized April 30, 1824, with 11 members. Previously, however, considerable missionary work had been done by Rev. Mr. Rand, of West Springfield, and other Baptist clergymen. As early as 1822, when there was no Baptist church within twelve miles, Mr. Benj. Willard, a graduate of Brown University, came here under the auspices of the Massachusetts Baptist Missionary Society. From that time he made frequent visits, during which he preached in different neighborhoods, with tokens of divine favor. Many attended upon his ministry, and several were converted and united with the church in West Springfield. When they were baptized more than a thousand persons assembled at the river-side, who probably had never witnessed the administration of gospel baptism.

Nov. 12, 1823, Mr. Willard received ordination. The services were held in the First Congregational Church, then the only one in the place. The next year—April, 1824—he removed with his family to town. The following winter, under the smile of God, they resorted to their Jordan several times, until the number here baptized increased to 10. Other additions from various sources were made at different times, till it was considered proper and desirable to organize a Baptist Church. For this purpose a meeting was called April 25, 1826, and there were present 12 brethren and 14 sisters, members of Baptist churches. They proceeded to adopt a declaration of faith and a church covenant, and chose two brethren to serve as deacons. Appropriate measures were immediately inaugurated to secure their public recognition as a church. Accordingly, an ecclesiastical council convened at Mr. Willard's house July 20th, which, after careful examination of their articles of faith and covenant, voted unanimously to receive them into the sisterhood of the churches. The council also, after examination, by prayer and the imposition of hands, set apart J. Pomeroy and E. Ensign to the office of deacons. In the first letter to the Westfield Association this church reported 40 constituent members and 3 additions,—1 by baptism and 2 by letter. It asked for admission, and was received.

In bringing up the Baptist cause in Northampton to this state of progress, Mr. Willard and his associates encountered great opposition, not to say persecution. Instead of the fervent, hospitable embrace of Christian love, they were assailed by a bigoted, intolerant spirit at every point, and so strong and formidable was the opposition, at times, it threatened the extinction of the Baptist faith in the town. Their cause was so unpopular, and its supporters treated with such disrespect and obliged to hold their meetings in private houses, it was difficult to gain in members or pecuniary means. No person of any considerable wealth or social standing dared to join their ranks.

In 1828, in the absence of a suitable place for worship, special efforts were made to secure funds to erect a meeting-house. Several thousand dollars were raised by subscriptions and loans from friends abroad, and a building committee was appointed. Having procured a site, they erected a brick house at a cost of some $6000, which was dedicated July 8, 1829. A large audience assembled, 14 ministers, several of whom participated in the services. Prof. Chase, of Newton Theological Institution, preached the sermon.

In 1830, 14 members were received into the church from Amherst, with the understanding that they be a branch, having power to receive, discipline, and dismiss members, support public worship, and administer the ordinances, always returning to this church a statement of their proceedings when desired. In 1832 these members and others were dismissed, to constitute an independent church.

Mr. Willard resigned his pastorate Feb. 25, 1838, having served the church more or less fourteen years. During this period he was often absent, rendering missionary service, for months at a time. While he was away the house was seldom opened for worship. In 1833 it was occupied nearly a year by the Edwards Church.

Just how many accessions were made under Mr. Willard's ministry cannot be ascertained. Some were added by baptism, and some by letter and experience, so that at one time the church numbered nearly 60. Subsequently it was reduced by deaths, exclusions, and dismissions; there was serious apprehension of its becoming extinct. In 1835 it numbered only 30. For two years after Mr. Willard's resignation it was pastorless. During this period, however, it was supplied more or less by different ministers.

In February, 1840, Rev. Abel Brown, Jr., from the State of New York, became pastor, and remained a year or more. He was characterized as a plain, bold, earnest preacher, fearlessly assailing sin wherever he discovered it, whether in church or state. On intemperance and slavery he took an advanced position, and wielded a mighty influence. His persistent, effective labors contributed largely to the formation of that strong anti-slavery sentiment which has ever since prevailed in this town. A revival occurred during his pastorate, which added much to the pecuniary and numerical strength of the church. It received 24 by baptism.

Mr. Brown was succeeded by Rev. Wm. M. Doolittle, of Mount Pleasant, N. Y., who began his labors here May 16, 1841; but his career was short. He died after a brief illness, Feb. 13, 1842, at the early age of twenty-seven, and just at the commencement of a revival. Six had already been baptized, and others were waiting. The sudden, mysterious removal of their pastor overwhelmed the little struggling church in disappointment. Mr. Doolittle was a shining laborer of the Lord, exhibited singular evidences of future eminence and usefulness. He was a faithful pastor, and as a preacher much beyond the average. Though he had labored here only a short time, he was much beloved by the church, and had gained public confidence and respect to a remarkable degree. He was immediately succeeded in the pastorate by his brother, Rev. H. D. Doolittle, under whose judicious, earnest labors the revival already in progress increased in power. During the joint ministry of these brothers of nature and grace the church was greatly strengthened and encouraged. More than fifty were received by baptism, so that in 1844 it numbered 93; but many of them were non-resident. His health failing, Mr. Doolittle resigned Sept. 12, 1845, after a successful pastorate of more than three years. Though less talented than his brother, yet he was highly esteemed in the church and in the community. During the labors of the brothers Doolittle, the long-standing opposition and prejudice against the church were very perceptibly modified. Still, there were those who regarded it with disfavor and contempt.

Hitherto the church had always been remarkable for its oneness and harmony, but, alas! a new experience awaited it. In an effort to settle a pastor a serious difficulty sprung up, which for a time threatened its dissolution. Members became so alienated and opposed to each other that there was little hope of reconciliation. At length, however, by the wise counsel and harmonizing influence of a neighboring pastor, the difficulty was so adjusted that nearly all connected with the church resumed their walk with it, and co-operated in the support of the ministry.

The church, having been pastorless nearly seven months, extended a call to Rev. D. Crane, of Vermont, which was reluctantly accepted. He entered upon his work here April 1, 1846, and remained more than twelve years. At first he had little to inspire hope or courage; the congregation and Sunday-school were small, and there were but two society men who could be relied on to contribute for the support of the Baptist ministry. But he labored on with fidelity and self-sacrificing zeal. In the early part of his pastorate the appropriations which had been received from the Massachusetts Baptist Convention for a series of years were discontinued. Subsequently, the church and pastor were largely aided by the sympathy and timely contributions of numerous friends in the other denominations. During Mr. Crane's ministry many excellent members were lost by deaths and removals to other places, among them the two deacons, who went West with their families. Four special revivals occurred, which, though not remarkable in extent or power, were, nevertheless, of inestimable value to the church. To it were added 162,—79 by baptism and 77 by letter and restoration. In the mean time 26 died, 46 were dismissed by letter, 17 excluded and dropped, leaving a gain of 73.

Fifteen hundred dollars were expended in alterations and repairs on their house of worship, $1000 of which was paid by the church and society; the rest was raised outside. The contributions to objects of benevolence during his pastorate averaged from $75 to $100 per year. He retired, leaving the church free from debt, united, and prosperous. His farewell sermon was preached June 6, 1858. While a resident in town, Mr. Crane labored to promote its educational as well as its religious interests; was ten times elected a member of the school committee, and for six years was superintendent of the public schools. He left the town with the confidence and kind wishes of the entire community.

Mr. Crane was followed by Rev. D. Burrows, of Chester, Vt., who began his labors with the church October, 1858, and closed them December, 1859. There were few accessions during his short pastorate, a gain of only two. He was esteemed a good man, an able, instructive preacher, yet for some reasons the church and society failed to encourage and sustain him in his work.

From Mr. Burrows' resignation to May, 1861, the church had no pastor, but at that date called Rev. E. Jerome, who immediately commenced his labors with them. He was a devoted Christian worker, a sound preacher, and faithful pastor. Under his ministry the church increased in strength and influence, though there was a loss of members, occasioned by an unusual number of erasures, exclusions, and dismissals. Through his efficiency extensive alterations and repairs in their meeting-house were accomplished. The health of his wife becoming impaired, Mr. Jerome resigned July, 1861, to the regret of all.

The next pastor was Rev. I. D. Clark, who began his ministry with the church November, 1862, and continued it until March, 1866. In him was a remarkable combination of excellent and exceptionable qualities,—singularly self-confident and strangely given to hyperbole, a sagacious manager and indefatigable worker, with peculiar eccentricities, which gave him notoriety and always drew him a large audience. During his pastorate the church edifice, having been damaged by fire, was enlarged and neatly repaired at a cost of more than $3000, and suitably rededicated December, 1864, by a sermon from the pastor. Near the close of his labors here he was assisted by Rev. A. B. Earle in a series of revival-meetings, which added 70 to the church by baptism, which then numbered 309, 146 having been received by baptism during Mr. Clark's labors, and a sufficient number by letter and otherwise to make the net gain 180.

In April, 1867, after an interval of one year, Mr. Clark was succeeded by Rev. G. L. Hunt, of Athol, Mass. The late Dr. Ide, of Springfield, preached the installation sermon. Mr. Hunt's friends regarded his effort in the pulpit his strong point. "His sermons were rich effusions of intellectual culture." He taught the people, and was esteemed a preacher of uncommon ability. His ministry here, however, was that of the sower, having baptized only three.

Mr. Hunt was followed by Rev. C. Y. Swan, who began his labors as pastor Jan. 1, 1870. He was regarded as an able preacher,—plain, fearless, and earnest, and somewhat peculiar. The congregation immediately increased, and a fresh impulse was given to the religious activity and zeal of the church. A revival of considerable power was enjoyed under his ministry; meetings were multiplied, and the pastor assisted by his father, Rev. I. Swan, of Connecticut. During this pastorate the church gained in strength; 44 were added by baptism and 21 by letter and experience, so that its membership November, 1872, when Mr. Swan resigned, was 333.

Immediately after Mr. Swan retired, Mr. E. T. Hiscox, son of Rev. Dr. Hiscox, of Brooklyn, N. Y., was engaged as a temporary supply. He was called to become pastor March, 1873, and was ordained the following May, his father preaching the sermon. Mr. Hiscox was a young man of rare excellence, liberally educated, and delivered well-written, instructive sermons. "The church esteemed him very highly as a Christian brother." Nevertheless, wanting fluency and earnestness in the pulpit, he failed to interest and attract the people. His pastorate closed April, 1875, during which five were received by baptism and seven by letter. In the mean time the membership of the church was reduced by erasures, exclusions, and dismissals to 250.

Mr. Hiseox was succeeded by Rev. A. W. Jefferson, of South Boston. Accepting the call of the church, he at once began his labors with them. Installation June, 1875; sermon by Dr. Adams, of Holyoke. The congregation immediately increased. The following December a series of revival meetings was sustained, in which Mr. Jefferson had assistance from neighboring pastors. Good was accomplished, Christians revived, sinners converted, and the young people's prayer-meeting re-established. Mr. Jefferson's resignation took effect Aug. 1, 1878. While he had warm friends and was generally regarded as a devoted Christian, anxious to do good, he failed to command as a preacher the confidence and respect of the people. During his pastorate thirteen were received by baptism and fifteen by letter and experience. Since the close of Mr. Jefferson's labors the pulpit has been supplied by Rev. D. M. Crane, to whom the church extended a call, March 16, 1879, again to become their pastor. Having accepted it, he returns to finish his work in this beautiful town.

The present membership of the church is 243. It has had twelve pastors and twelve deacons; nine of the former and nine of the latter are still living.

THE UNITARIAN CHURCH.

The Second Congregational Society in Northampton was organized on Feb. 22, 1825, six years subsequent to the preaching of the celebrated sermon on "Unitarian Christianity," by Dr. Channing, in Baltimore,—a sermon that did more than any other agency to bring about a separation of the two elements which had long existed in all the Congregational churches of New England, known as the Calvinistic and the Unitarian, or Armenian, parties. Fortunately, or unfortunately, in Northampton, the rupture was postponed several years beyond the time when it would naturally have occurred, owing to certain circumstances of a local character, among which was the fact that the church of the town was presided over by a minister who was far advanced in years, whom both classes respected and loved, and for whom neither party wished to make trouble by taking the initiative in any important movement that would be sure to break up the hitherto harmonious and pleasant relations that had subsisted between members of differing beliefs in the one and only church of the town.

But when the time came for the settlement of a new and young man as colleague pastor, the liberals felt that their reasonable wishes must be fairly recognized and respected. What they wanted—and the utmost they at any time demanded—was that the new minister should occasionally give them the opportunity of hearing in their own church the preaching of views which to them were fundamental in Christianity, by exchanging with neighboring Unitarian ministers. The demand was not an unreasonable one, when it is considered that the liberal party represented a third part of the taxable property in the society and embraced some of the most respectable people in the community, and also that the town, having jurisdiction in the matter, passed the following preamble and vote:

"Whereas it is well known that there are many members of this society whose religious sentiments differ from those of their present pastor, but who are desirous to preserve the spirit of unity in the bonds of peace, and are willing to concur in the settlement of a colleague whose religious sentiments are different from their own: Therefore, voted, unanimously, that this society are willing that the colleague who may be settled with us in pursuance of the vote passed in November last should exchange with, or invite to preach in the desk, any pious clergyman of any denomination of Christians."

This vote was passed by the town on the second day of February, 1824. It was afterward unanimously voted in the same meeting to extend to Rev. Mark Tucker an invitation to settle over the society as colleague pastor with Rev. Mr. Williams. As this colleague pastor figured largely in the events which resulted finally in the separation, it will be necessary to go back and narrate somewhat in detail some previous circumstances in relation to the differences in controversy, in which he was a prominent actor. Within a fortnight after Mr. Tucker came to town, some time in the early part of January, 1824, to preach as a candidate, Judge Howe, a prominent member of the liberal party in the church, sought and secured a lengthy interview with the future pastor. This gentleman stated the fact to him that "he differed from him in his religious opinions, and was desirous to avoid any division in the society; but that he and some others had made up their minds that they would not concur in the settlement of any person as a colleague, unless upon the principles of Christian liberty and perfect toleration; that in former years it was sufficient that a man was settled and known as a Christian minister (if his life and conversation were such as became his station) to entitle him to all the courtesies and civilities of Christian intercourse; that for a few years past a different course had been pursued; the clergy had assumed the right to sit in judgment on their fellow-mortals, to institute a scrutiny into the private sentiments entertained by them, and to decide upon their correctness. This circumstance had led the members of this Ministerial Association to refuse to make any exchanges with neighboring ministers, while Unitarian ministers, of regular standing and unexceptionable morals, had been suffered to attend meeting here through the day without being invited to preach."

The candidate replied that he had heard something of the difficulties which had existed here, and expressed his decided disapprobation of the course which he had been informed the pastor, Mr. Williams, had pursued; that he thought he should have no difficulty in relation to the subject; that he should not undertake to decide who were or who were not Christians; that he had long lived among and had intercourse with Christians of other denominations, but that he had avoided all difficulty by putting them all on the same footing.*

The candidate on this occasion stated to Mr. Joseph Lyman—afterward known as Judge Lyman—that "he should pursue such a course here in relation to invitations and exchanges as would satisfy the expectations of all."

On the evening next previous to the town-meeting already alluded to, another interview was held between several of the liberal party and certain members of the church who differed with them, to see if any arrangement could be made on the subject of exchanges. One gentleman of the latter party said that "he should have no objection that Unitarian ministers who should happen to be here, and who had not rendered themselves obnoxious by their actions or writings, should be occasionally invited to preach." To this it was explicitly affirmed on the other side that it would be no satisfaction to the liberal party to have a Unitarian minister occasionally smuggled into the pulpit; that it was the principle they were contending for, and not an idle ceremony or childish gratification.

In the forenoon of the following day the liberal party, after much discussion, secured in town-meeting the passage of the preamble and resolutions given above. In the afternoon a committee was appointed to wait upon Mr. Tucker and inform him of the vote of the town, extending to him a call to settle. The chairman of that committee first read to him the vote of the town in relation to ministerial exchanges, and asked him if he had any conscientious scruples about carrying it into execution. He replied that he had none; that he cordially approved of the vote, and was glad it had been adopted. The vote of the town was then communicated to him, extending to him a call to become the colleague pastor of the church.

* From "Statement of Facts in Relation to the Call and Settlement of Rev. Mr. Tucker."

Notwithstanding all the fair promises received from the newly-elected pastor, that the vote of the town relative to exchanges should be duly respected by him, various significant events, subsequent to his settlement, convinced the liberal portion of the society that they had really nothing to hope from him in that regard. They were therefore forced to the painful conclusion, after employing all honorable means looking to an amicable composure of their differences without avail, that union between the two parties on the old basis was no longer possible. The formation of a new society they felt to be their only honorable recourse left. But of course their property rights involved in the act of separation must be fully recognized, and, if possible, equitably and peacefully adjusted.

The second article in the warrant, calling for a town-meeting to be held on the 21st day of February, 1825, only one day previous to the formation of this society, reads, "To see if the town will adopt any measures for the relief of those persons who are disappointed at the course pursued here in relation to ministerial exchanges, and to pass such votes as may be necessary to effect their object." At a certain stage in this meeting, the question being on the disposition to be made of the aforesaid article, the following vote was offered: "Whereas, our numbers have greatly increased since we erected our meeting-house, and are still increasing to such degree as to render it expedient to make further provision for public worship,

"And whereas, circumstances have occurred since the settlement of a colleague pastor which induced many members of this town to form themselves into a new society for religious worship,

"Therefore voted, That an advance ought to be made by the town to those individuals who form themselves into a new society, for their interest in the present meeting-house, proportioned to the amount of their property as set in the valuation of the present year." The question being on the adoption of this motion, it was voted down.

A motion was then made for a reconsideration of this vote, which, after considerable discussion, was also negatived.

Next a motion was offered to grant to the disaffected the use of the meeting-house six Sabbaths in the year, and this was lost.

Next a motion for the indefinite postponement of the whole subject failed of an adoption.

Thomas Shepherd then submitted the following: "Voted, to choose a committee to wait on the colleague pastor to see on what considerations he will ask for a dismissal;" and this was not carried.

But the following vote, next offered by a Mr. Strong, was carried: "Voted, that in case any article or articles affecting the character of the Rev. Mr. Tucker in his relations to this society be proposed for insertion in any future warrant, the selectmen be instructed to insert them, if at all, in a distinct warrant to be issued for that purpose." Thus completely foiled in every attempt, outvoted, routed, and fairly driven from the field, the liberal party probably that same day went out in a body from the ancient church in the town, and the day following, the 22d of February, 1825, they celebrated the birthday of the great Father of this country by organizing themselves into, so giving birth to, the "Second Congregational Church and Society of Northampton," which should forever stand for freedom of thought and a common and equal recognition of the rights of conscience.

The corner-stone of the building that should shelter and be a home for the new society—the simple but beautiful edifice that the society still worships in—was laid with Masonic ceremonies on Wednesday, May 25, 1825, on which occasion prayer was offered by the Rev. Mr. Hall, afterward the pastor of the society, an address delivered by Charles E. Forbes, Esq., now living, and the then clerk of the society, and a concluding prayer given by a Rev. Mr. Trumbull, pastor of the Baptist Church in Cummington. The house was completed and dedicated on the 7th of December of the same year, the dedicatory sermon being preached by Rev. Henry Ware, Jr., of Boston. In the early stages of the building's construction a catastrophe occurred, which the enemies of the movement were only too ready to take advantage of by calling it "providential," furnishing as it did an opportunity to be improved to "point a moral" of supernatural warning of a still greater retribution that awaited the little company of "infidels" in the final catastrophe of the future. When about a third of the frame of the building had been raised and firmly secured, as was supposed, in its upright position, it was blown down by a gale of wind, many of the timbers being broken and rendered useless, but without the slightest injury to a single workman,—a providential circumstance that seems to have been entirely overlooked by the seekers after providential signs and warnings of another kind.

Rev. Edward B. Hall was ordained the first minister over the society, on the 16th of August, 1826, whose happy and successful ministry was continued up to the time of his resignation, self-compelled by sickness.

The next minister of the society was Oliver Stearns, afterward president of the Meadville Theological School, and later Parkman Professor of Systematic Theology in Harvard University. The length of his ministry was eight years.

He was succeeded by John Sullivan Dwight, the present conductor of "Dwight's Journal of Music," who remained with the society only a year and a half.

Next came Rufus Ellis, the present pastor of the First Church in Boston. He was ordained over the society in May of the year 1843, and dismissed in May of 1845, having received a call to settle in Boston.

Rev. Wm. Sillsbee was installed as pastor on the 1st of May, 1855, and, after a useful ministry of eight years, resigned. He is now settled over the "Reformed Christian Church" of Trenton, N. Y.

Rev. Wm. Lincoln Jenkins was called to the pastorate, and installed therein on May 1, 1865. Resigned May 1, 1870.

Mr. Wm. H. Fish was ordained for the work of the ministry, and settled as pastor of the society on the 18th of May, 1871; his ministry covering the space of two years.

The present pastor, Rev. Charles B. Ferry, was installed on the 10th day of June, 1874.

The society numbers not far from 80 families, with an average congregation of 150. It has a good Sunday-school, and is, altogether, in a healthy and prosperous condition. Its influence in the community, and in the vicinity, in liberalizing the theology of the churches and in promoting the Christian religion of daily life among men, has been, from first to last, very marked. As a social factor in the life of the town (although as a church it has been numerically comparatively small) it has been second to none. Its history and its present outlook can be said to fully justify the hopes and the faith of its brave and noble founders.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The minutes of the New England Conference show that there was Methodist preaching in Northampton in 1830 by W. Ward and J. Knight. From this time to the organization of the church in 1842 the following preachers officiated here: Erastus Otis, O. Wilder, E. Scott, D. Leslie, E. M. Bebee, Asa Niles, and Geo. W. Green.

The church was organized in 1842, and the following is a list of the pastors who have served from that time to the present, with the date of their appointment and years of service: W. Ward, 1842, two years; M. Dwight, 1844, two years; W. R. Bagnall, 1846, one year; C. Baker, 1847, one year; J. W. Mowry, 1848, one year; T. Marcy, 1849, one year; D. Wait, 1850, one year; G. Haven,* 1851, two years; J. S. Cushman, 1853, one year; W. C. High, 1854, two years; J. S. Barrows, 1856, one year; J. E. Rounds,† 1857, one year; H. F. Morse, 1858, two years; J. Capin, 1860, two years; S. Jackson, 1862, one year; H. P. Andrews, 1863, one year; G. News, 1864, one year; C. D. Hills, 1865, two years; J. H. Mansfield, 1867, two years; J. S. Whedon, 1869, two years; G. W. Mansfield, 1871, two years; D. Richards, 1873, two years; I. H. Packard, 1875, two years; Albert Gould, 1878, two years.

The present church edifice was completed in 1851, and dedicated April 15th of that year by Rev. C. K. True,‡ D.D., then of Springfield. The present trustees of the church are as follows: Roland Lewis, Zenas Field, Edward S. Barrett, Frank Knowlton, Ira H. Stevens, Henry N. Ensign, Chas. W. Rowley.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH.

The first Protestant Episcopal Church services were held in this town in August, 1826. The corner-stone of the church was laid June 13, 1829, and the church was opened for divine service Dec. 22, 1829. It was consecrated by Right Rev. A. V. Griswold, D.D., on Jan. 13, 1830. The principal mover and largest contributor to this enterprise was Mr. Joseph Coggeshall, then proprietor of a large boarding-school for boys on Round Hill. The church building was materially altered in 1855.

The rectors of the church have been as follows: Rev. Geo. Griswold, Rev. Joseph Muenscher, Rev. D. S. Devans, Rev. William Chatterton, Rev. Henry Burroughs, Rev. John P. Hubbard, Rev. O. Sievers Barten, Rev. Henry H. Bean, Rev. Royal Marshall, Rev. E. D. Tompkins, Rev. J. F. Spaulding, Rev. J. K. Lombard, Rev. — Foxcroft, Rev. Gordon M. Bradley. The present rector is J. Sturgis Pearce.

The following are the present officers: William C. Robinson, David W. Crafts, Wardens; E. C. Clapp, Wm. Warnock, A. L. Hall, Vestrymen; Lewis Warner, Treasurer; W. C. Robinson, Parish Clerk.

ST. MARY'S (CATHOLIC) CHURCH.

Previous to the erection of a church the Catholics of Northampton and vicinity assembled for worship at the house of a man named Foley, in what was then termed "Straw Hollow," now Leeds, and in the upper part of the Indelible Pencil Shop. The first Catholic clergyman that ever came to Northampton was the first bishop of Boston, M. Cheverus, on the occasion of the conviction and execution of two Irish boys some fifty years ago. These lads were accused of having robbed and murdered a mail-carrier in the vicinity of Whately. On this occasion Cardinal Cheverus preached to an immense crowd at the Old Church. As an interesting fact connected with this it may be added that years afterward, on his death-bed, the real murderer of the mail-carrier acknowledged his guilt and vindicated—too late—the innocence of the lads who were executed for the crime.

In 1834 the King Street lot was secured for the erection of a church, and ten years afterward Rev. John Brady erected the church which has since been, at various times, enlarged and improved by his successors.

At first Northampton was attached to the Cabot (now Chicopee) parish, and was afterward transferred to the Holyoke parish, being occasionally visited from these places by Father Brady, Father Strain, Father Benkinsop, Father O'Callaghan, and Father O'Sullivan.

In February, 1866, Northampton was erected into a parish by Bishop Williams. The history of the parish is, therefore, for the most part yet to be made. The late Rev. P. V. Moyce was appointed the first resident pastor. He enlarged the church by the addition of galleries, erected the beautiful churches of Haydenville, Easthampton (since destroyed by fire), and Amherst. His labors here are so recent that they are well known.

The society has become a large one, and plans have been already discussed for the erection of a larger and more convenient church.

The present efficient pastor of the church, Rev. M. E. Barry, took charge of the parish in February, 1872. He is a native of South Boston. His early education was obtained at the schools of Cambridge and New York City. He was prepared for college in St. Mary's Latin School at Boston. Subsequently entered St. Charles College, near Ellicott City, Md., and in 1860 finished his college and seminary course at St. Bonaventure's College, Allegany, N. Y. Father Barry was ordained June 12, 1869, and assigned to the Springfield parish, from which Cathedral parish he came to Northampton.

THE PRESS.

THE HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE.

One of the veteran newspapers that seem to live through all time without growing beyond an influence acquired in their youth is the Hampshire Gazette, published at Northampton. It is now nearing the close of a full century of existence. It is a historical paper. In the midst of the excitement growing out of the Shays rebellion, when meetings were held at which the supposed grievances of the people were strongly depicted, it became necessary to establish a paper to convey information to the people in the interest of the government and to stem the current of popular insubordination. The Hampshire Gazette was the paper thus established. Among the writers for its columns in its earlier years were Caleb Strong, afterward Governor of the State; Maj. Joseph Hawley, the eminent patriot; and Rev. Joseph Lyman, D.D., of Hatfield. It became the duty of patriotism, in the infancy of the republic, to crush at once the schemes of the demagogues then floating with the débris of the Revolution throughout the country, taking advantage of the scarcity of money and the heavy taxes to excite the people to revolt, and it was only by means of newspapers that this could be effectually accomplished. Open insurrections and rebellions are physically suppressed by military power, but the only way to reach the minds of the people, and unite sections and communities in the bitterness of their supposed troubles, is through the newspaper, which penetrates to the hearts and heads and hearts of every family, and silently and effectually accomplishes its object.

After the suppression of the Shays rebellion the Gazette continued in existence, and became a permanent institution, prospering far beyond the majority of country papers. It ranks as the ninth oldest paper in the United States, and the third in Massachusetts. The two papers in this State that outrank it in age are the Salem Gazette, established Aug. 5, 1768, and the Worcester Spy, established July 17, 1770.

The Gazette was established Sept. 6, 1786, by William Butler, then a young man of twenty-three years of age. He came to Northampton from Hartford, Conn., where he served an apprenticeship with Hudson & Goodwin, printers and publishers. He also had a job printing-office and a book-bindingery, and kept a book-store. School-books and the Westminster Catechism were prominent among the books that he sold. His store, printing-office, and bindingery were for many years in the wooden building on Pleasant Street opposite the present residence of Maj. Harvey Kirkland, and now occupied by Dewey & Loomis, grocers; but at first it was "a few rods east of the court-house." The size of the paper was 14 by 18 inches, three columns per page, and the type small pica, long primer, and bourgeois, old style. There being no mails in this region in those days, the paper was circulated by post-riders, of whom there were eight. The post-routes were about as follows: 1. To Hadley, Amherst, and Belchertown. 2. To Hoekanum, South Hadley, and Granby. 3. To Easthampton

* Now a bishop in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

† President of a theological institute in Baltimore, Md.

‡ Deceased.

and Southampton. 4. To Westhampton, Norwich (now Huntington), Middlefield, and Chester. 5. To Roberts Meadow, Chesterfield, and Worthington. 6. To Williamsburg, Goshen, Cummington, Plainfield, and Hawley. 7. To West Hatfield, Conway, Ashfield, Buckland, and Charlemont. 8. To Hatfield, Whately, Sunderland, Deerfield, Greenfield, Shelburne, and Heath. These post-routes were maintained substantially as here given until about 1860, and four of them are still in existence. They were given up in consequence of the multiplication of post-offices and the increasing frequency of the mails. It was customary to take the produce of the farms in payment for the paper. In 1788, John Long, post-rider, notified his subscribers in Shelburne that "wheat will be received in payment at Mr. Ransom's store, provided each one pays his proportion of the transportation to Northampton." Several of the post-riders came to Northampton on the day before the day of publication, and on some of the routes it required two days to complete the distribution of the papers. The nearest post-office to Northampton was the office at Springfield, and to that place Mr. Butler was accustomed to send for his exchange papers and letters. A man brought them up on horseback. Thus the "latest news" was obtained. The post-office in Northampton was established in 1792, when the Gazette was six years old, and that was for many years the only office in the present county of Hampshire. The mail which supplied that office passed up and down between Springfield and Brattleboro' once a week. There was no mail-route leading to the east or the west from Northampton.

The paper, under Mr. Butler's management, was chiefly filled with foreign news, Congressional proceedings, speeches and public documents, and communications relating to public affairs. There was very little home news, and the editor rarely ventured to express his opinions. The lists of marriages and deaths were very meagre, less than half a dozen death-notice appearing during the first two years, and not a single notice of a marriage. In the early years of the paper the advertisements were quite limited in number and extent. In one paper, in 1787, only one advertisement appeared.

Mr. Butler built the first paper-mill in Hampshire County. It was on Mill River, on the site of the Vernon paper-mill that was destroyed by fire in 1878, and was built about 1794 for the manufacture of writing-paper. It had but one vat, and all the paper was made by hand. It afterward passed into the hands of his brother, Daniel Butler. He lived on Hawley Street, and the house in which he lived and which he owned is still occupied by two of his daughters. He sold the paper June 28, 1815, on account of impaired health, but retained the book-store several years afterward. He died March 9, 1831, aged sixty-eight years. To show the great change in the manner of conducting newspapers since that time, the fact is here recorded that the only notice taken in the Gazette of the decease of the man who founded the paper, published and edited it twenty-nine years, and was likewise printer, book-publisher, book-binder, bookseller, and paper-manufacturer, was a notice of four lines under the head of deaths!

June 28, 1815, Mr. Butler sold the Gazette to William W. Clapp, of Boston, afterward editor and publisher of the Boston Saturday Evening Gazette, who conducted it until Jan. 1, 1817, when it was sold to the law-firm of Bates & Judd (Hon. Isaac C. Bates, the distinguished lawyer, advocate, and statesman). Neither Mr. Bates nor Mr. Judd was a printer, and in June, 1817, Thomas W. Shepard, a practical printer, was admitted to the firm, and it was published under the firm-name of Thomas W. Shepard & Co. until April 10, 1822, when Sylvester Judd, Jr., brother of Hophin, purchased the establishment and became both publisher and editor, Mr. Shepard continuing to be the printer. Mr. Judd was led to purchase the Gazette through his brother's ownership of a quarter-interest in it, he having deceased while one of its proprietors. Under his control the paper for thirteen years enjoyed a remarkable degree of prosperity and achieved a wide-spread reputation.

Mr. Judd was born in Westhampton, April 23, 1789. He studied with Rev. Enoch Hale, the first minister of that town, pursuing a classical course. In 1816 he gratuitously superintended the erection of the meeting-house in Westhampton, in 1817 was sent to represent the town in the Legislature, and for several years was in the mercantile business in Westhampton. He came to Northampton April 2, 1822. He early enlisted the paper in behalf of temperance, and, it is believed, was the first who excluded liquor advertisements. His management of the paper was characterized by candor, truthfulness, and respect for the rights of all classes. He was distinguished as a historian, and enriched the columns of the Gazette with much of the fruits of his historical labors. He was likewise distinguished for his moderation, his exactness of statement, and his high sense of honor and fair dealing. He scrupulously avoided objectionable matter, and elevated his paper by keeping it free from the bitter and offensive politics and personalities which were prominent features of his local contemporaries. Thus he gained the confidence, respect, and support of the public to a remarkable degree, placing his paper, in prosperity and usefulness, second in the list of Massachusetts weeklies. The only other paper that exceeded it in circulation was the Massachusetts Spy, published at Worcester.

In 1833, Mr. Judd commenced keeping a regular journal, in which were entered, with scrupulous reference to exactness, the state of the thermometer, the changes of the weather, the progress of vegetation, the appearance and disappearance of birds, frogs, different kinds of insects, etc. This he continued with great regularity until the day of his last illness. His labors in the department of manuscript collections, which he began at the age of seventeen, were immense, the volumes, closely filled, amounting to about seventy-five. He was made an honorary member of the Massachusetts and Connecticut Historical Societies, and of the American Antiquarian Society. In 1816 he published a pamphlet entitled "Thomas Judd and his Descendants."

Why he sold the Gazette may be inferred from these extracts from his private journal. Probably his sensitive and independent spirit recoiled from the rigid party discipline which prevailed in those days. In reference to giving up the paper he wrote: "The truth is I have become too skeptical in politics to be the conductor of a public press. I have but little confidence in politics or politicians. I dislike high Whigism and high Jacksonism, and cannot go with either. I have no reason to complain of the people of this county as wanting confidence in me or my paper. They have adhered to me to the last." He further says: "I have added many books to my library that I might help the Gazette by extracts and abstracts. I have thought but little of money-making; have labored much more to make the Gazette interesting and useful to others (perhaps unsuccessfully) than to make it profitable to myself."

After he gave up the paper, Mr. Judd devoted much time to historical and antiquarian researches, extending his labors to Hampshire County, and to the States of Massachusetts and Connecticut. In 1857, at the urgent solicitation of many leading citizens, he commenced the publication of a history of Hadley. This work he pursued diligently until his death, April 18, 1860, when he had completed 460 printed pages of the work, the remaining 150 pages being finished by others, from material which he had prepared. This book was printed by John Metcalf, who for thirty-two years was a job-printer in Northampton, and who for many years printed the Gazette for Mr. Judd,—all the press-work being done on a hand-press.

Jan. 1, 1835, Mr. Judd sold the Gazette to Charles P. Huntington, then a young lawyer, and William A. Hawley, a young printer just out of his apprenticeship of seven years with J. S. & C. Adams, at Amherst.

An incident occurred at this time which, viewed in the light of later experience, renders it somewhat curious and decidedly amusing; but which at that time, with the sensitive feeling which then prevailed with regard to religious matters, was undoubtedly considered a wise stroke of policy. Mr. Huntington was a Unitarian, and the patrons of the Gazette were largely made up of the staunch converts to, and defenders of, the doctrines of the orthodox church as it was represented by the old-school theologians of the Congregational order. It would not do to have so pronounced a Unitarian as Mr. Huntington take charge of the Gazette. Therefore, when Mr. Judd retired, he made the following announcement:

"Mr. Hawley, whose theological opinions correspond with those of the undersigned, will have the charge and control of the religious part of the paper, and there will be no change in that department unacceptable to the friends of sound religion."

In the next number of the Gazette, Jan. 7, 1835, the new editors fortified themselves against any possible charge of religious heresy by a similar announcement. They said:

"Mr. Huntington will have the editorial charge of the paper, except in that portion of its columns occupied with religious subjects, which Mr. Hawley will control, conducting that department with views corresponding to those of the late proprietor."

Mr. Huntington remained connected with the paper only five months, and on June 3, 1835, sold his interest to his partner, Mr. Hawley, who continued as publisher and editor until March, 1853, when, his health having failed, he sold the establishment to Hopkins, Bridgman & Co., booksellers and publishers, at the old Butler book-store, on Shop Row.

At the time Mr. Hawley became an owner of the paper he was employed in the office as a journeyman printer. It is related of him that, while the negotiations for the purchase of the paper were going on, his ambition led him to walk to Amherst to consult with his former employers, arriving there before they were at breakfast. The paper under his management enjoyed a high degree of prosperity, and fully maintained its former reputation for excellence. He was a careful, industrious, painstaking man, scrupulously honest and trustworthy, and an apt and successful newspaper manager. He was an ardent Whig, and a faithful laborer for his party. In 1846 he was sent to the Legislature as representative from Northampton, and in 1847 and 1848 as senator from Hampshire County. In 1853, soon after he sold the Gazette, he was appointed by Governor Clifford to be sheriff of Hampshire County, which office he held two years. He then engaged in business in Northampton, with Lewis McIntire, one year; then removed to Chicago, where he was for a short time in the lumber trade; and then became connected with the Chicago Journal, as business manager. On the breaking out of the Rebellion he was appointed a quartermaster in the army, and for most of the time was stationed at Alexandria, Va., where he died of consumption, Dec. 24, 1863, aged fifty-one years. He was born in Andover, Mass.

From March, 1853, to Jan. 1, 1858, the Gazette was published by Hopkins, Bridgman & Co., James R. Trumbull being employed as editor. Thomas Hale, of Windsor, Vt., then purchased a half-interest in the establishment, and became the editor, the publishing firm being Thos. Hale & Co. In September of the same year the paper was purchased by James R. Trumbull, who published and edited it until Nov. 1, 1858, when the Hampshire Gazette, and the Northampton Courier, both then prosperous papers and rivals for popular favor, were united under the ownership and management of Trumbull & Gere. This firm continued until Jan. 1, 1877, when, on account of his impaired health, Mr. Trumbull sold his interest in the establishment to his partner, who has since owned and conducted the paper alone. Mr. Trumbull learned the printer's trade in the Gazette office, under Mr. Hawley, and for four years published and edited the Amherst Express. His editorial service was almost continuous for twenty-eight years. The present proprietor and editor, Henry S. Gere, learned the printer's trade in the Hampshire Herald office, in Northampton, the first abolition paper published in Western Massachusetts. He edited that paper in 1847-48, one year, and afterward owned and edited the Northampton Courier nearly ten years, from May 1, 1849, to Nov. 1, 1858. He has thus been in continuous newspaper labor thirty-two years.

Under the management of Trumbull & Gere the paper for eighteen years enjoyed great prosperity, with a gradually-increasing circulation. It devoted much of its space to matters of local interest, and in this respect led all of its contemporaries. It also gathered and published much historical matter. The history of Easthampton, afterward enlarged and published in a pamphlet by Rev. Payson W. Lyman, was first published in the Gazette by Mr. Lyman while he was a college student. Histories of Williamsburg, Haydenville, Florence, and Amherst College were also compiled for and published in its columns. It published a carefully-prepared compendium of the general news of the week, and devoted a liberal space to choice and instructive reading of a high moral and literary character, and thus won an enviable reputation as a first-class family paper, which it has since fully maintained.

The long service of the conductors of the Gazette is something remarkable and worthy of special mention. Mr. Butler conducted the paper twenty-nine years; Mr. Judd, thirteen years; Mr. Hawley, eighteen years; and J. R. Trumbull, Trumbull & Gere, and H. S. Gere (to date), twenty-five years; covering in these four editorships a total of eighty-five years.

During the ninety-three years of the Gazette's existence thirteen other papers have been started in Northampton, and have died; also five in Amherst, besides college publications, and three in Ware. It has been enlarged eight times, to meet the demands of its patrons. No complete file of it is in existence, the nearest approach to it being in possession of the public library of Northampton, and open to the inspection of the public. Nothing is known respecting the extent of the circulation of the paper during Mr. Butler's proprietorship, but when Mr. Judd took it, in 1822, the number of copies printed was 1020; in 1827 it had risen to 1968; and in 1834, when Mr. Judd sold out, he stated the circulation to be 1900. It continued to increase, and at the close of Mr. Hawley's proprietorship it had risen to 2400. In 1858, when the Gazette and the Courier were united, the circulation was upward of 3000, and it steadily increased until it reached a weekly issue of 3550 copies. All this was accomplished without systematic canvassing. Its subscribers have come to it voluntarily, and the associations thus formed have, in numerous cases, been continued half a century, and in some instances much longer. In many families the paper has been taken by father, son, grandson, and great-grandson, from its first issue, and it has been greeted from year to year with ever-increasing cordiality and appreciation.

A familiar feature of the Gazette is the peculiar type in which the heading is printed. This style of type was used in the first issue of the paper, and remained in use until 1790, when a more ornamental heading appeared, and was used until 1804, at which time the old type was restored, and has been in use ever since. Tradition says that when the old style of type disappeared from the paper the subscribers fell off. The style of type now in use has been the same for eighty years.

The paper was printed on a hand-press until about the year 1840, when a power-press was used, the motive-power still being that of the human arm. In 1853 a small steam-engine was used, and from 1860 to 1866 the motive-power was furnished by a caloric-engine. Since then, a ten-horse power steam-engine has been in use. Until 1865 the office of the Gazette was in various places; but in that year its proprietors purchased the brick school-house just in the rear of the old church and the court-house, and in this eligible location the paper has since been printed and its business conducted.

Job-printing was not a prominent feature of the Gazette office until about 1850; but since that time that department has gradually increased, until now the Gazette Printing Company's job-office is one of the best equipped in Western Massachusetts.

Twice, for short periods, the Gazette has been issued daily. In 1846, while the interest in the Mexican war was at its highest pitch, Mr. Hawley issued a daily from May 27th to July 20th; and in 1861, from April 26th to May 25th, when the excitement over the war of the Rebellion was most intense, a daily was printed by Trumbull & Gere.

The first directory of Northampton was issued from the Gazette office in 1860, by Trumbull & Gere, containing valuable historical matter relating to the business-men of the town. In 1874 another directory of the town was issued by the same firm, and again in 1875, the latter being the most complete and valuable historical register ever published in Northampton.

The subscription price of the paper during its earlier years does not appear in its columns. Jan. 1, 1796, at the time of the first enlargement of the paper, the following publisher's announcement was made: "The price from the 1st of January, 1796, will be nine shillings per annum. He flatters himself that every person of liberality will readily acknowledge the justice of so trifling an advance, when they advert to the intolerable rise of almost every article of consumption in the country, without taking into notice the extra labor and expense of a sheet of this size." In 1803, under the heading "Conditions of the Gazette," it was announced that to town subscribers the price was $1.50 a year. "In neighboring towns, $1, provided payment is made within the year; if not, $1.25." Under Mr. Judd's management (1822 to 1835), the price was $2; under Mr. Hawley (1835 to 1853), the price was $1.50, in advance, and $2 at the close of the year. In 1864, after seven enlargements, the price was advanced 50 cents.

It is, perhaps, needless to say that during the whole period of its long existence the Gazette has been a power in the field it has occupied. It has never been of a sensational order, and has never attempted to influence the public by any other means than calm and candid appeals to reason and judgment. Its conductors have been men of wisdom, experience, and high moral sentiment; and sound sense and a desire to elevate the moral tone of the community have been its leading characteristics. It has had many able contributors, and the foremost men of the Connecticut Valley and the adjacent hill country have from time to time communicated their views to the public through its columns. From long association, and from that confidence which comes from continued appreciation of worth, the people of the county have been largely influenced by it in their political action. It was the able and fearless defender of the cause of the government in the stormy period succeeding the war of the Revolution, and of the Whig party and its principles, and of anti-slavery, loyalty, and patriotism as embodied in the Republican party. But not alone nor least in politics has its influence been felt. To all measures affecting the industrial interests of the people of its region it has given a vigorous and efficient support; and as a teacher of good morals it has exerted an influence that has been salutary and far-reaching. And to future generations may it continue to teach wisely and be heard.

THE HAMPSHIRE COUNTY JOURNAL.

On the 13th day of April, 1860, Henry M. Burt issued the first number of the Northampton Free Press, which, after various vicissitudes of fortune, fourteen years later was consolidated with the Northampton Journal, the paper thereafter bearing the name for a few years of The Journal and Free Press, when, passing into the hands of the present proprietors, its name was again changed to the Hampshire County Journal.

A history of the independent journalism of the town of Northampton would be incomplete without a mention of the establishment and the proprietor whose work has led to its present culmination, and we will therefore briefly pass them in review. Mr. Burt's venture was in the shape of a semi-weekly sheet of four pages, 20 by 28, five columns to the page. The new paper met with a warm reception, and the marked independence of character and managerial ability of its owner and editor soon impressed itself upon the paper which he edited, and the Free Press became noted for the vigor and independence of its conduct. We may as well mention just here that the paper has always been what it claimed to be, a free press, non-sectarian in character, and extending to all phases of political and religious belief a representation, through correspondence, in its columns. This policy has continued with the successors of the old Free Press, and is a characteristic of the present Hampshire County Journal. In 1864, Mr. Burt enlarged his paper, making it 21 by 33, and taking as partner Charles H. Lyman. This partnership, however, lasted but a few months, and Mr. Burt remained the sole conductor of the paper a few months longer, disposing of his entire interest in the paper Dec. 9, 1864, to Albert R. Parsons, a native of Northampton, and a graduate of Yale College. The Free Press was again enlarged under Mr. Parsons' management the following year, making it 23 by 35. In December, 1869, Mr. Parsons disposed of the establishment to Calvin Porter and H. M. Converse, of Northampton, who gave the paper a new dress of type and improved it generally. With the beginning of the new year, 1871, the paper was again enlarged, and changed from a weekly to a semi-weekly paper. Mr. Porter severed his business connection with the Free Press November 3d of the same year, and the new firm took the name of Converse & Burleigh, the senior partner being Le Moynes Burleigh, a young man of considerable experience in journalism, and one well qualified, so far as education and ability were concerned, to make the paper what it should be. Mr. Converse sold his interest in the Free Press to Mr. Burleigh Feb. 1, 1873, and Mr. Burleigh continued alone the management of the paper until its consolidation with the Journal, the latter being established Sept. 12, 1874. This was an eight-page paper, printed in old-style type, as is the present Journal, its successor. Its proprietors were H. H. Bond & Co., H. H. Bond and A. M. Powell being editors. In 1875, A. G. Hill, of Florence, bought of Mr. Bond the entire interest in the Journal property, and consolidated the Free Press with the Journal. Geo. R. Edwards was publisher of the paper until November, 1876. Jan. 1, 1877, the present proprietors, Wade, Warner & Co., took charge of the office. During the famous Scott and Dunlap burglary trial in Northampton, in 1877, the Journal evinced a characteristic enterprise in publishing two daily editions of the paper, in which stenographic reports of the trial appeared.

LE JEAN BAPTISTE

was founded in Northampton the 24th of February, 1875, by Burleigh & Chatel. September 21st, P. O. Chatel became the only proprietor, and it was enlarged for the first time Dec. 15, 1879, being then only 19 by 25, and becoming 21 by 31. On April 10, 1876, the proprietor moved to Holyoke, taking the publication of the paper there, and on May 16, 1877, it was enlarged again. On March 6, 1878, Mr. Chatel took as partner Mr. A. Dupenault, but dissolved 18th of March of the same year, when it was removed back to Northampton, where the paper started with about 300 subscribers, and has now reached over 1200, and was all this time well patronized by advertisers. It has the largest circulation of any French paper in Western Massachusetts.

The following are the names of obsolete publications: The Patriotic Gazette, established April 12, 1799, discontinued soon after. The Republican Spy, started in Springfield in 1803, removed to Northampton, and in 1808 changed to the Anti-Monarchist and Republican Watchman. Its name was subsequently changed to the Democrat, and it died out soon after the close of the second war with England. The Hive was started in August, 1803, by T. M. Pomeroy. It died in 1805. The Oracle, a religious paper, was established in 1823. The Christian Freeman was moved from Greenfield to this place, and published by J. A. Saxton. The Hampshire Republican was begun Feb. 18, 1835, with Chaneey Clark as editor. It was soon changed to the Northampton Democrat, and in 1847 was purchased by the Springfield Post. The Temperance Banner was commenced in 1835 by T. H. Mather, and continued about one year. The Hampshire Courier was established in 1845 by A. W. Thayer, and was merged in the Courier in 1848. The shortest-lived sheet commenced in Northampton was the Independent Citizen, in 1849, by H. S. Smith, two numbers only of which were issued.

REPRESENTATIVE MANUFACTORIES.

The Williams Basket Manufacturing Company.—This establishment is one of the leading industries in the State, and the largest of its kind in the world. The business was originated in Huntington, by L. B. Williams, in 1850. It was continued at that place until 1862, when it was transferred to Northampton, and conducted under the firm-name of L. B. Williams & Co. until 1867, when it was organized as a corporation under the name of the Williams Manufacturing Company.

In the beginning about 20 persons were employed, and the daily production amounted to about 300 baskets. By shrewd management and the manufacture of the best quality of goods the business has grown from a comparatively small beginning, until now the building is supplied with the latest improved machinery in this manufacture; they employ 150 persons, and manufacture 5000 baskets per day. The main building is 40 by 210 feet, three stories high. In addition to this is the engine-room, etc., 30 by 70 feet in size.

As remarked above, none but the best quality of goods are manufactured. Rattan, bamboo, oak, hickory, elm, and ash are used in the manufacture, and every style and size of basket is made. L. B. Williams, the head of the company, who is a thorough and energetic business-man, has rendered this establishment a grand success, and it has a reputation as a successful business concern second to none in the country.

THE NONOTUCK SILK-MILL, mentioned on page 222, in connection with the history of Florence, is really a continuation of the silk enterprises started by Mr. Whitmarsh in 1830. The establishment took the name of the Nonotuck Silk-Mill in 1844. From a comparatively small beginning the business of the mill has increased, until now it is one of the largest in the country, employing over 500 persons, and the monthly pay-roll ranges from $9000 to $15,000. There are two mills belonging to this company,—one located at Florence, and the other at Leeds. The latter mill is under the superintendency of Lucius Dimock.

At the Centennial Exhibition in 1876, the Nonotuck Company made a very fine and comprehensive exhibition of goods, and attracted much attention. It has become world-famous for its particular trade-mark silk, the "Corticelli," and the business promises to be greatly stimulated by its Philadelphia exhibit.

The officers of the company are Ira Dimock, president, and A. T. Lilly, treasurer.

The Belding Bros. Silk-Mill.—The Beldings established their mill in this town in 1874, in the building formerly used by the Arms Manufacturing Company. The pay-roll amounts to $1000 per month.

Warner's Silk-Mill.—The present site of this mill has been occupied in silk-manufacture since 1844. It passed through various hands, and finally was operated a long time by Joseph Warner as sole proprietor. He died in 1877, and in the same year his son Luther purchased the interest of J. S. Lathrop,—with whom Mr. Warner had been in partnership since 1871,—and has since conducted the business alone. The pay-roll ranges from $800 to $1000 per month.

The last established silk-mill in Northampton is that of J. S. & Henry Lathrop, who employ about 20 persons, and manufacture sewing-silk.

The Northampton Cutlery Company, at Bay State, was organized in 1871, and employs about 250 persons, and the annual product amounts to about $500,000.

The Florence Sewing-Machine Company was organized in 1861, with a capital of $125,000, and the first machine was brought out during the same year. The present Florence Machine Company is the successor to that company, and was organized about three years ago. They manufacture oil-stoves, skates, etc., and will probably soon manufacture the new "Crown" sewing-machine. The present officers are as follows: D. G. Littlefield, president; L. S. Parsons, vice-president; H. P. Dibble, treasurer.

The Florence Furniture Company was organized in 1873, with a capital of $30,000, and its present officers are A. T. Lilly, president, and H. B. Haven, treasurer and agent.

Among the leading industries the Maynard Hoe-Factory may be mentioned. This is the only establishment of its kind in Northampton, and justly merits its present success. Other industries are the Lamb Wire-Works, Munn's Foundry, etc.

The Greenville Manufacturing Company, located at Florence, is the only cotton-mill in this town. The building now occupied by this company was erected by the "Community" in about the year 1836, and used by them as a silk-mill. With the decline of the "Community" this property passed into the hands of Mr. S. L. Hill, who, in 1844, sold it to J. P. and Samuel Williston, who then began the manufacture of cotton. In 1846 the present company was formed. The establishment employs about 100 persons, and its daily product amounts to about 6000 yards of sheetings and drills. A. L. Williston is president of the company, and F. H. Stoddard, secretary.

The Florence Tack Company was organized in 1874, under the superintendence and management of Geo. W. Bond, of Florence, who made the original drawings for the machines, which were made at Florence under his directions. The company was fairly under way when the factory and machinery were destroyed by an incendiary fire in March, 1876. The company rebuilt and repaired its works and machinery, and commenced running again in 1877. It is now manufacturing about forty tons of goods per month. This company manufactures all kinds of tacks, brads, finishing, Hungarian, trunk, chair, and other small nails, between three and four hundred different sizes. It is a new industry in this section of the State, and thus far has been carried on successfully.

The Florence Manufacturing Company commenced business early in 1866, and was organized by the following persons, viz., Daniel G. Littlefield, J. S. Parsons, Geo. A. Burr, Sam'l L. Hinckley, and Geo. A. Scott, all of whom, with the exception of Mr. Scott, were former members of the firm of Littlefield, Parsons & Co., which had for more than twenty years previous been manufacturers of various kinds of goods from compositions, but more especially daguerreotype cases and buttons.

In 1865, Mr. Scott introduced to the firm the idea that toilet-brushes could be manufactured to advantage by the use of their material to form the backs and handles, which, after many months of experimenting, resulted in the organization of the present company and the liquidation of the old firm of Littlefield, Parsons & Co. The company immediately proceeded to the erection of a new factory, 40 by 125 feet, three stories in height, which was completed and occupied by them in December, 1866. Since that time the company have manufactured very many different kinds of goods, but brushes, hand-mirrors, and buttons have always been the most prominent of their wares. The predecessors of this company were the first in the world to successfully combine the various materials used in the construction of their goods, and in fact were the first successful manufacturers of composition goods of any kind.

FLORENCE MANUFACTURING COMPANY, FLORENCE, MASS.

We clip the following concerning this establishment from the Dry Goods Bulletin:

"Of all the various materials employed in the formation of the backs of hair-brushes and the frames of hand-mirrors, nothing can surpass ivory in costly elegance, or wood for cheapness and general utility. For a large class of trade, however, something of value between these extremes is highly requisite, and the attention of inventors and manufacturers has for many years been directed toward supplying this important demand.

"There is an artificial substance—the composition of which is a secret known only to the manufacturers—which has stood the test of practical application for many years, and steadily gained upon popular appreciation, until it is now very widely recognized as one of the most beautiful materials in use for the manufacture of such goods as we have mentioned.

"The article referred to is known by the name of 'Lionite,' and is made only by the Florence Manufacturing Company, of Florence, Mass., organized in 1866 for the production of goods under this patent. Their works are large and completely equipped with the most improved machinery and appliances, and turn out an immense quantity of goods.

"This 'Lionite,' when it emerges from the steel dies in which it is moulded to any desired form, possesses a brilliant and enduring polish, and faithfully reproduces the original ornamentation, with a sharpness of outline and perfection of minute detail that are unapproachable in any other material shaped by the moulding process.

"It is perfectly impervious to the action of water, and is not affected by changes of temperature. Its strength and elasticity are all that could be desired, and in point of durability it is practically indestructible. It can be colored in many different shades, but black and a beautiful shade of brown seem to be most generally preferred for the backs of brushes and mirrors. It is cheaper than celluloid, much cheaper than ivory, and for these goods equals any known material in beauty. It can be moulded in patterns of the most elaborate designs, every outline being brought out with such clearness and accuracy as to challenge comparison with the most elaborate carving by hand.

"The backs being of solid 'Lionite,' not merely veneered with it, the bristles are held with great strength. Besides hair-brushes, in many sizes and shapes, the company also manufacture a large line of cloth- and hat-brushes, etc., with backs of the same material.

"The hand-mirrors are made in numerous graceful shapes, and the ornamentation of the frames is very beautiful. The glass is of French or German manufacture, made and imported expressly for these goods. In quality it cannot be surpassed.

"In addition to the above uses for 'Lionite,' it is now applied to the manufacture of buttons for ladies' dresses and gentlemen's coats and vests. These beautiful goods are produced in all sizes and various colors, such as blue, brown, green, slate, drab, and mottled combinations of color, to harmonize with the shades of popular dress fabrics. The demand for these buttons is very large.

"The company also manufacture a fine line of hair-brushes with solid wooden backs, and the best article of metallic hair-brushes in the market. Their sales extend to all sections of the United States, among dry-goods jobbers, dealers in fancy goods and notions, druggists, etc., and they also do considerable export trade to Canada and South America. They are interested in a large factory in London, England, where they make full lines of all the above-named goods for the European markets."

The company is now in a flourishing condition, and is under the active management of George A. Burr, Esq., who is treasurer and agent. Capital employed, $140,000.

Other manufactures may be found in the history of Leeds.

NORTHAMPTON STREET RAILWAY.

In 1865 the Legislature granted a charter to Lewis Bodman, Thomas E. Hastings, Joel Hayden, Jr., and their associates, under the name of the Northampton and Williamsburg Street Railway, for the purpose of building a street railroad from Northampton to Williamsburg, the capital stock not to exceed $300,000, and the corporation to hold real estate to an amount not exceeding $100,000. Work was commenced on the road in April, 1866. The company soon after purchased the American House property, corner of Pleasant and Pearl Streets, to be used for offices, stables, and general headquarters. The road was finished and the cars commenced running September 6th of that year. In 1873 the Legislature authorized the corporation to change its name to the Northampton Street Railway, and reduced the capital stock to $50,000. The road is a trifle more than three miles in length, commencing at the Connecticut River Railroad depot, and ending at corner of Park and Pine Streets, in Florence. In 1873 the road was newly equipped with smaller and lighter cars, which are run regularly every hour. The road is quite an accommodation to the citizens, and is well patronized. The total cost of construction and equipment was $50,125.

CIVIL LIST.

SELECTMEN, 1655 TO 1879.

The following is a list of the selectmen of this town from 1655 to 1879:

- 1655.—Mr. Fitch, Richard Lyman, William Miller.
 1656.—Joseph Parsons, Samuel Wright, Jr., Isaac Sheldon.
 1657.—William Holt on, Robert Bartlet, Thomas Woodford.
 1658.—Thomas Root, Richard Lyman, and Joseph Parsons.
 1659-60.—No record.
 1661.—William Clark, Henry Woodward, Henry Cncliffe, Zachary Field, Sr., John Stebbins.
 1662.—Capt. Cooke, Lieut. Clarke, Ensign Wilton, John Strong, Edward Baker.
 1663.—David Wilton, William Clark, Deacon Holt on, Joseph Parsons, Robert Bartlet.
 1664.—Capt. Aaron Cooke, Lieut. David Wilton, Lieut. William Clark, Deacon Holt on, Mr. Woodward.
 1665.—William Clark, David Wilton, Deacon Holt on, Henry Woodward, Samuel Wright.
 1666.—David Wilton, William Clark, Deacon Holt on, Thomas Root, Sr., Joseph Parsons.
 1667.—Mr. Woodward, Thomas Root, Sr., and John Lyman.
 1668.—William Clark, William Holt on, Thomas Hanchett, Josias Dewey, Medad Pomeroy.
 1669.—Lieut. Wilton, Lieut. Clark, Deacon Holt on, Joseph Parsons, Medad Pomeroy.
 1670.—Henry Woodward, Richard Weller, John King, Medad Pomeroy, Jonathan Hunt.
 1671.—William Clark, Deacon Holt on, Sergt. King, John Stebbins, Medad Pomeroy.
 1672.—William Clark, David Wilton, Deacon Holt on, Henry Woodward, Medad Pomeroy.
 1673.—Same as above.
 1674.—David Wilton, John Stebbins, John King, Jonathan Hunt, Medad Pomeroy.
 1675.—William Clark, Deacon Holt on, John Lyman, Henry Woodward, John Stebbins.
 1676.—William Clark, David Wilton, Thomas Root, Sr., Jonathan Hunt, Medad Pomeroy.
 1677.—John Lyman, John Stebbins, John King, Jonathan Hunt, and Medad Pomeroy.
 1678.—Aaron Cooke, William Clark, Deacon Holt on, John Stebbins, John King.
 1679.—William Clark, Joseph Hawley, Jonathan Hunt, Judah Wright, and Medad Pomeroy.
 1680.—Aaron Cooke, Joseph Hawley, John King, Thomas Strong, Medad Pomeroy.
 1681.—William Clark, Thomas Judd, Jonathan Hunt, Judah Wright, Ebenezer Strong.
 1682.—William Clark, John King, Joseph Hawley, Joseph Parsons, and Medad Pomeroy.
 1683.—Jonathan Hunt, John Clark, Preserved Clapp, John Bridgman, Medad Pomeroy.
 1684.—Judah Wright, James Wright, Mr. Hawley, Joseph Parsons, John Bridgman.

- 1685.—Capt. Cooke, Deacon Pomeroy, Sergt. King, Jonathan Hunt, Samuel Bartlett.
- 1686.—Jonathan Hunt, Joseph Parsons, Ensign Clapp, Medad Pomeroy, Ebenezer Strong.
- 1687.—Joseph Hawley, John King, Ebenezer Strong, Joseph Parsons, Samuel Wright.
- 1688.—Medad Pomeroy, Samuel Bartlett, Joseph Parsons, Samuel Wright, Sergt. King, Deacon Hunt.
- 1689.—J. King, Ebenezer Strong, Preserved Clapp, John Clark, Medad Pumroy.
- 1690.—Deacon Phelps, Deacon Hunt, Joseph Parsons, Thomas Lyman, John Parsons, Philip Paine.
- 1691.—John King, Sr., Joseph Parsons, Ebenezer Strong, William Holton, Jr., Medad Pumroy.
- 1692.—Jos. Hawley, Ensign Baker, John King, Preserved Clapp, Medad Pumroy.
- 1693.—Capt. Clapp, Jos. Parsons, Samuel Allin, Judah Wright, Samuel Wright.
- 1694.—Jos. Hawley, Noah Cooke, Thomas Lyman, John Clark, Medad Pumroy.
- 1695.—Capt. Clapp, Judah Wright, Samuel Wright, Wm. Clark, Medad Pumroy.
- 1696.—Joseph Parsons, Wm. Holton, Samuel Parsons, Enos Kingsley, Thomas Lyman.
- 1697.—Capt. Clapp, John Clark, Wm. Clark, Thomas Sholders, Medad Pumroy.
- 1698.—Preserved Clapp, John Clark, Judah Wright, Thomas Lyman, and Samuel Wright.
- 1699.—Joseph Hawley, John Parsons, Lyman Weaver, Ebenezer Pomroy, Wm. King.
- 1700.—Joseph Parson, Samuel Marshall, Benjamin Edwards, Medad Pumroy.
- 1701.—Capt. Clapp, Ebenezer Strong, John Clark, Sam'l Wright, Thomas Shelden.
- 1702.—Joseph Hawley, Samuel Parsons, Thomas Lyman, John Clark, Medad Pumroy.
- 1703.—Preserved Clapp, Ebenezer Strong, Judah Wright, Samuel Wright, Ebenezer Wright.
- 1704.—Capt. Clapp, Deacon Clark, Benjamin Edwards, Isaac Shelden, Medad Pumroy.
- 1705.—Ebenezer Strong, Samuel Clark, Benjamin Edwards, Thomas Shelden, and Ebenezer Wright.
- 1706.—Preserved Clapp, Ebenezer Wright, William Southwell, John Stoddard, John King.
- 1707.—Samuel Bartlett, Sr., Samuel Wright, Sr., Samuel Clark, Sr., Nathaniel Phelps, Isaac Shelden.
- 1708.—Preserved Clapp, Samuel Clark, Thomas Shelden, Ebenezer Wright, Wm. Southwell.
- 1709.—Ebenezer Pomroy, Ebenezer Wright, Isaac Shelden, Jonathan Hunt, Ebenezer Strong.
- 1710.—Joseph Parsons, Samuel Clark, Samuel Wright, Isaac Shelden, Thomas Shelden.
- 1711.—John Parsons, Samuel Wright, Benjamin Edwards, Ebenezer Wright, Thomas Strong.
- 1712.—Joseph Parsons, Samuel Clark, Thomas Shelden, Ebenezer Wright, Benj. Edwards.
- 1713.—Samuel Clark, Samuel Marshall, Samuel Wright, Jonathan Hunt, Ebenezer Pumroy.
- 1714.—Joseph Parsons, Thomas Shelden, Ebenezer Wright, Benjamin Edwards, John Clark.
- 1715.—John Stoddard, Ebenezer Pumroy, John King, Ebenezer Wright, Joseph Hawley.
- 1716.—John Stoddard, Joseph Parsons, Ebenezer Pumroy, Samuel Clark, Joseph Hawley.
- 1717.—John Stoddard, Jos. Parsons, Thomas Shelden, Samuel Clark, John Clark.
- 1718.—John Stoddard, Ebenezer Pumroy, Samuel Wright, Ebenezer Strong, Jos. Hawley.
- 1719.—Joseph Parsons, Thomas Shelden, Samuel Clark, John Clark, Jos. Hawley.
- 1720.—Jos. Parsons, Samuel Clark, John Clark, Judah Hutchinson, Joseph Hawley.
- 1721.—Ebenezer Strong, Benj. Lyman, Jno. Kingsley, Ebenezer Parsons, Preserved Clapp.
- 1722.—Col. John Stoddard, Joseph Hawley, Preserved Clapp, Nathaniel Strong, John Clark.
- 1723.—John S. Stoddard, Ebenezer Pumroy, Jos. Hawley, Ebenezer Strong, Jr., Ebenezer Parsons.
- 1724.—E. Wright, Jos. Hawley, E. Parsons, E. Strong, John Clark.
- 1725.—John Stoddard, Preserved Clapp, Samuel Allin, Nath. Strong, and Jos. Hawley.
- 1726.—Ebenezer Pumroy, Ebenezer Wright, Ebenezer Strong, Ebenezer Parsons, John Clark.
- 1727.—Ebenezer Wright, Ebenezer Parsons, Jno. Clark, Preserved Clapp, Jos. Hawley.
- 1728.—Ebenezer Wright, Ebenezer Strong, Ebenezer Parsons, Judah Hutchinson, Jos. Hawley.
- 1729.—John Stoddard, Eben. Pomeroy, P. Clapp, Jno. Clark, Jos. Hawley.
- 1730.—Eben. Pomeroy, Jos. Hawley, Eben. Wright, Eben. Parsons, Preserved Clapp.
- 1731.—Jno. Stoddard, Jno. Hawley, Eben. Parsons, Jonathan Strong, Ebenezer Clark.
- 1732.—Eben. Pomeroy, Jos. Clark, Preserved Clapp, John Parsons, Samuel Clapp.
- 1733.—John Stoddard, Jos. Hawley, Ebenezer Parsons, Samuel Mather, Jonathan Strong.
- 1734.—John Stoddard, Capt. Clapp, Jr., Eben. Parsons, Samuel Mather, Timothy Dwight.
- 1735.—Ens. Ebenezer Parsons, Increase Clark, Samuel Phelps, Capt. Tim. Dwight, Ebenezer Pumroy.
- 1736.—Ens. Ebenezer Parsons, Capt. Preserved Clapp, Capt. Tim. Dwight, Jonathan Strong, Sergt. Joseph Wright.
- 1737.—John Stoddard, Capt. John Clark, Capt. Preserved Clapp, Ebenezer Pumroy, Jr., Samuel Mather.
- 1738.—Ebenezer Pumroy, Capt. John Baker, Capt. Ebenezer Parsons, Dr. Samuel Mather, Increase Clark.
- 1739.—Ebenezer Pumroy, Capt. Ebenezer Parsons, Capt. John Baker, Increase Clark, Samuel Clark.
- 1740.—Col. Stoddard, Col. Dwight, Capt. Clapp, Jonathan Strong, Samuel Mather.
- 1741.—John Stoddard, Timothy Dwight, Samuel Mather, Capt. Preserved Clapp, Capt. Ebenezer Parsons.
- 1742.—John Stoddard, Ebenezer Pumroy, Noah Wright, Capt. John Clark, Samuel Mather.
- 1743.—Not recorded.
- 1744.—Col. Stoddard, Col. Tim. Dwight, Lieut. Noah Wright, Dea. Ebenezer Pumroy, Samuel Mather.
- 1745.—Not recorded.
- 1746.—Lieut. Noah Wright, Dea. Ebenezer Pumroy, Josiah Parsons, Sergt. Ebenezer Hunt, Jonathan Strong.
- 1747.—Maj. Joseph Hawley, Lieut. John Lyman, Samuel Mather, Lieut. Jonathan Hunt, Sergt. Ebenezer Hunt.
- 1748.—Ebenezer Hunt, Dea. Ebenezer Pumroy, Samuel Mather, Noah Clark, Lieut. Noah Wright.
- 1749.—Lieut. Noah Wright, Lieut. John Lyman, Dea. Ebenezer Pumroy, Ebenezer Hunt, Nathaniel Clark, Jr.
- 1750.—Capt. Jonathan Hunt, Dea. Ebenezer Pumroy, Lieut. Gideon Lyman, Jonathan Strong, Jr., Joseph Hawley.
- 1751.—Dea. Waitstill Strong, Ebenezer Kingsley, Lieut. Ebenezer Hunt.
- 1752.—Col. Timothy Dwight, Dr. Samuel Mather, Capt. Noah Wright, Ens. Nathaniel Clark, Ens. Daniel Pumroy.
- 1753.—Dr. Samuel Mather, Ens. Nathaniel Clark, Sergt. Jonathan Strong, Jr., Capt. Timothy Dwight, Maj. Joseph Hawley.
- 1754.—Dr. Samuel Mather, Sergt. Jonathan Strong, Jr., Sergt. Ephraim Wright, Ens. Daniel Pomeroy, Joseph Hawley.
- 1754-72.—There are no records to be found.
- 1772.—Joseph Hawley, Ephraim Wright, Elijah Hunt, Caleb Strong, Jr., T. Dwight.
- 1773.—Joseph Hawley, Esq., Timothy Dwight, Solomon Stoddard, Esq., Benjamin Sheldon, Jr., Dr. Eben. Hunt, Jr.
- 1774.—Joseph Hawley, Esq., Timothy Dwight, Elijah Hunt, Ephraim Wright, Elijah Clark.
- 1775.—Joseph Hawley, Esq., Mr. Ephraim Wright, Josiah Clark, Jr., Elijah Hunt, Elijah Clark.
- 1776.—Joseph Hawley, Ephraim Wright, Elijah Hunt, Jacob Parsons, Ezra Clark.
- 1777.—Ephraim Wright, Jacob Parsons, Josiah Clark, Jr., Elijah Hunt, Caleb Strong.
- 1778.—Caleb Strong, Esq., Jacob Parsons, Elijah Hunt, Abner Barnard, Simeon Parsons.
- 1779.—Joseph Hawley, Esq., Caleb Strong, Esq., Elijah Hunt, Mr. Jacob Parsons, Mr. Abner Barnard.
- 1780.—Joseph Hawley, Esq., Mr. Timothy Dwight, Benjamin Sheldon, Stephen Baker, Dea. Joseph Clark.
- 1781.—Jos. Hawley, Esq., Mr. Quartus Pomeroy, Mr. Abner Barnard, Capt. Joseph Cook, Caleb Strong, Esq.
- 1782.—Hon. Joseph Hawley, Esq., Caleb Strong, Esq., Benj. Sheldon, Elijah Hunt, Abner Barnard.
- 1783.—Hon. Joseph Hawley, Hon. Caleb Strong, Benjamin Sheldon, Elijah Hunt, Stephen Baker.
- 1784.—Caleb Strong, Esq., Benjamin Sheldon, Elijah Hunt, Moses Kingsley, Doctor Eben. Hunt, Jr.
- 1785.—Benj. Sheldon, Elijah Hunt, Moses Kingsley, Doctor Eben. Hunt, Mr. John Lyman.
- 1786.—Elijah Hunt, Benj. Sheldon, Dea. Moses Kingsley, Mr. John Lyman, Dea. Elijah Clark.
- 1787.—Benj. Sheldon, Elijah Clark, Moses Kingsley, Doctor Eben. Hunt, Mr. Joseph Clark.
- 1788.—Elijah Hunt, Deacon Moses Kingsley, Deacon Elijah Clark, Mr. Joseph Clark, Mr. Benj. Sheldon.
- 1789.—Solomon Stoddard, Esq., Samuel Henshaw, Esq., Joseph Clark, Simeon Clapp, Asahel Pomeroy.
- 1790.—Solomon Stoddard, Esq., Samuel Henshaw, Esq., Mr. Joseph Clark, Mr. Asahel Pomeroy, Wm. Lyman, Esq.
- 1791.—Elijah Hunt, Benj. Sheldon, Samuel Henshaw, Eben. Hunt, Joseph Clark.
- 1792.—Eben. Hunt, Samuel Henshaw, Moses Kingsley, Joseph Clark, Josiah Dickinson.
- 1793.—Elijah Hunt, Sol. Stoddard, Joseph Clark, Jona. Strong, Jr., Daniel Wright.
- 1794.—Elijah Hunt, Sol. Stoddard, Samuel Henshaw, Esq., Jona. Strong, Jr., Daniel Wright.
- 1795.—Solomon Stoddard, Daniel Wright, Medad Alvord, Moses Wright, Jos. Cook.
- 1796.—Samuel Henshaw, Esq., Eben. Hunt, Esq., Mr. Josiah Dickinson, Mr. Moses Wright, Mr. Isaac Clark.
- 1797.—Eben. Hunt, Esq., Samuel Henshaw, Esq., Josiah Dickinson, Moses Wright, Isaac Clark.
- 1798.—Mr. Josiah Dickinson, Dr. Levi Shepherd, Mr. Moses Wright, Mr. Jonas Clark, Levi Lyman.

1799.—Levi Shepherd, Josiah Dickinson, Moses Wright, Jonas Clark, Levi Lyman.
 1800.—Moses Wright, Isaac Clark, Levi Lyman, Asahel Pomeroy, Nathaniel Phelps.
 1801.—Asahel Pomeroy, Moses Wright, Levi Lyman, Isaac Clark, William Edwards.
 1802.—Asahel Pomeroy, Moses Wright, Isaac Clark, Levi Lyman, William Edwards.
 1803.—Levi Shepherd, Esq., Maj. Erastus Lyman, Charles Starkweather, Abner Hunt, Asahel Pomeroy.
 1804.—Asahel Pomeroy, Moses Wright, Jos. Lyman, Jr., Esq., Wm. Edwards, Jona. Strong.
 1805.—Asahel Pomeroy, Moses Wright, John Breck, Wm. Edwards, Jonathan Strong.
 1806.—Moses Wright, Asahel Pomeroy, Josiah Dickinson, Jona. Strong, John Breck.
 1807.—Asahel Pomeroy, Moses Wright, Josiah Dickinson, Lemuel Clark, Solomon Stoddard, Jr.
 1808.—Josiah Dickinson, Phineas Parsons, Eli Edwards, Solomon Stoddard, Jr., Jona. Strong.
 1809.—Asahel Pomeroy, Phineas Parsons, Eli Edwards, Jona. Strong, Soln. Stoddard, Jr.
 1810.—Eli Edwards, Jona. Strong, Isaac Gere, Elisha Graves, Phineas Parsons.
 1811.—Asahel Pomeroy, Eli Edwards, Isaac Gere, Asahel Strong, Lewis Strong.
 1812.—Joseph Lyman, Esq., Elisha Graves, Eli Edwards, Joseph Cook, Cephus Clapp.
 1813.—Joseph Lyman, Eli Edwards, Joseph Cook, Elisha Graves, Lemuel Clark.
 1814.—Joseph Lyman, Esq., Elisha Graves, Isaac Clark, Eli Edwards, Oliver Warner.
 1815.—Lewis Strong, Isaac Clark, Oliver Warner, Elisha Strong, Jonas Clark.
 1816.—Isaac C. Bates, Abner Hunt, Preserved Bartlett, Oliver Warner, Elisha Strong.
 1817.—Isaac C. Bates, Oliver Warner, Lemuel Clark, Elisha Strong, David Strong.
 1818.—Jonathan H. Lyman, David Strong, Eli Edwards, Elisha Strong, Oliver Warner.
 1819.—Jonathan H. Lyman, Eli Edwards, David Strong, Elisha Strong, Oliver Warner.
 1820.—Jonathan H. Lyman, Eli Edwards, David Strong, Elisha Strong, Oliver Warner.
 1821.—Asahel Pomeroy, Levi Lyman, Elisha Graves, Elisha Strong, Isaac Damon.
 1822.—Levi Lyman, Asahel Pomeroy, Elisha Graves, Elisha Strong, Isaac Damon.
 1823.—Levi Lyman, Elisha Graves, Elisha Strong, Isaac Damon, Samuel Parsons.
 1824.—Levi Lyman, Samuel Parsons, Joseph Burnell, James Dickinson, James Shepherd.
 1825.—Levi Lyman, Joseph Burnell, Jonathan Strong, Oliver Warner, John Wright.
 1826.—Jonathan Strong, John Wright, Samuel Parsons, Levi Lyman, Joseph Burnell.
 1827.—Levi Lyman, Jonathan Strong, Joseph Burnell, John Wright, Samuel Parsons.
 1828.—Levi Lyman, Jonathan Strong, Joseph Burnell, John Wright, Samuel Parsons.
 1829.—Levi Lyman, Jonathan Strong, Joseph Burnell, John Wright, Samuel Parsons.
 1830.—John Wright, Samuel Parsons, Eliphalet Williams, William W. Thompson, Jonathan Strong.
 1831.—Eliphalet Williams, John Wright, Samuel Parsons, Azariah Clapp, Joseph Burnell.
 1832.—Eliphalet Williams, Samuel Parsons, Azariah Clapp, Joseph Burnell, Thomas W. Shepard.
 1833.—Eliphalet Williams, Samuel Parsons, Azariah Clapp, Joseph Burnell, Samuel Whitmarsh.
 1834.—Samuel Whitmarsh, Azariah Clapp, Eliphalet Williams, John Wright, William W. Thompson.
 1835.—John Wright, Azariah Clapp, Julius Phelps, William W. Partridge, George Cook.
 1836.—John Wright, Azariah Clapp, Julius Phelps, William W. Partridge, George Cook.
 1837.—William W. Partridge, George Cook, Joseph Warner, Azariah Clapp, William Clark.
 1838.—William W. Partridge, George Cook, Joseph Warner, Azariah Clapp, Jona. H. Butler.
 1839.—W. W. Partridge, Azariah Clapp, George Cook, Joseph Warner, Theodore Clapp.
 1840.—William W. Partridge, George Cook, Benjamin Barrett, Thomas W. Shepard, Amri Allen.
 1841.—W. W. Partridge, Benjamin Barrett, George Cook, Oren Munger, John P. Williston.
 1842.—W. W. Partridge, Benjamin Barrett, George Cook, Oren Munger, John P. Williston.
 1843.—William W. Partridge, George Cook, Amasa D. Wade.
 1844.—John P. Williston, George Shepard, Samuel Williams.
 1845.—Samuel Williams, Geo. Shepard, Amasa D. Wade, Milo J. Smith, Chester Clark.

1846.—Samuel Williams, Geo. Shepard, Amasa D. Wade, Milo J. Smith, Wm. W. Partridge.
 1847.—Samuel Williams, Milo J. Smith, W. W. Partridge, Amasa D. Wade, Ansel Jewett.
 1848.—Wm. W. Partridge, Charles Smith, Henry Strong, Lyman Kingsley, Ebenezer Strong.
 1849.—Charles Smith, Lyman Kingsley, Henry Smith, Ebenezer Strong, Amasa D. Wade.
 1850.—Samuel Parsons, George Shepard, David Ivy, Wm. Parsons, Samuel Day.
 1851.—Samuel Day, William Clark, Chamney Clark.
 1852.—Samuel Day, Porter Nutting, John W. Wilson.
 1853.—Harvey Smith, Charles Clark, Sydney L. Clark, Lucius Lewis.
 1854.—Charles Clark, Samuel Williams, Oliver Warner.
 1855.—Azariah Clapp, Charles Clark, Oliver Warner, Justin Thayer, Samuel L. Parsons.
 1856.—Oliver Warner, Azariah Clapp, Justin Thayer, Charles Strong (2d), Luke Lyman.
 1857.—Samuel L. Parsons, Justin Thayer, Luke Lyman, Milo J. Smith, Edward Parsons.
 1858.—Samuel L. Hill, J. B. Graves, Hervey Smith, Milo J. Smith, Luke Lyman.
 1859.—John B. Graves, Luke Lyman, Samuel L. Parsons, Milo J. Smith, Haynes K. Starkweather.
 1860.—John B. Graves, John F. Warner, Luke Lyman, S. S. Wright, H. K. Starkweather, Jr.
 1861.—John B. Graves, S. S. Wright, John F. Warner, H. K. Starkweather, Jr., Nathaniel Day.
 1862.—John B. Graves, Nathaniel Day, John F. Warner, S. S. Wright, H. K. Starkweather, Jr.
 1863.—John B. Graves, Nathaniel Day, H. K. Starkweather, Jr., John F. Warner, Emory B. Wells.
 1864.—John B. Graves, Nathaniel Day, H. K. Starkweather, Jr., John F. Warner, Emory B. Wells.
 1865.—John B. Graves, Emory B. Wells, H. K. Starkweather, Jr., John F. Warner, Nathaniel Day.
 1866.—H. K. Starkweather, Jr., John B. Graves, Emory B. Wells, John F. Warner, Nathaniel Day.
 1867.—H. K. Starkweather, Nathaniel Day, Ebenezer Strong, Milo J. Smith, Charles Strong (2d).
 1868.—H. K. Starkweather, Nathaniel Day, Milo J. Smith, Ebenezer Strong, Charles Strong (2d).
 1869.—H. K. Starkweather, Ebenezer Strong, Nathaniel Day, Milo J. Smith, Charles Strong (2d).
 1870.—Haynes K. Starkweather, Ebenezer Strong, George A. Burr, William F. Quigley, Joseph C. Williams.
 1871.—H. K. Starkweather, Ebenezer Strong, George A. Burr, William F. Quigley, Joseph C. Williams.
 1872.—Haynes K. Starkweather, Ebenezer Strong, George A. Burr, Joseph C. Williams, W. F. Quigley.
 1873.—Haynes K. Starkweather, Ebenezer Strong, George A. Burr, J. C. Williams, W. F. Quigley.
 1874.—H. K. Starkweather, Ebenezer Strong, J. C. Williams, W. F. Quigley, George A. Burr.
 1875.—H. K. Starkweather, J. L. Otis, J. C. Williams.
 1876.—M. H. Spaulding, J. L. Otis, J. C. Williams.
 1877.—Luke Lyman, Marcus Morton, Oren Storer.
 1878.—Luke Lyman, Oren Storer, Marcus Morton.
 1879.—Luke Lyman, Oren Storer, Marcus Morton.

MEMBERS OF GENERAL COURT.

1834.—Asahel Strong, Chas. E. Forbes, Seth Strong, Solomon Stoddard, Jr.
 1835.—Isaac C. Bates, Asahel Strong, Seth Strong, Solomon Stoddard, Jr.
 1836.—Thomas Pratt, C. P. Huntington, William Clark, Jr., Samuel Strong.
 1837.—C. P. Huntington, Roswell Hubbard, Solomon Stoddard.
 1838.—Eliphalet Williams, Joseph Warner, J. P. Strong.
 1839.—Eliphalet Williams, Wm. Clark, Jr., Calvin Strong.
 1840.—Charles P. Huntington, Cornelius Delano.
 1841.—Charles P. Huntington, Oren Mungan.
 1842.—Benjamin Barrett, Milo J. Smith.
 1843.—Erastus Hopkins, Nathan Dikeman.
 1844.—Erastus Hopkins, W. W. Partridge.
 1845.—Erastus Hopkins, Henry Dikeman.
 1846.—Elisha Strong, W. A. Hawley.
 1847.—Erastus Hopkins, Charles S. Smith.
 1848.—Erastus Hopkins, Wm. Parsons.
 1849.—Erastus Hopkins, Wm. Parsons.
 1850.—No choice.
 1851.—Erastus Hopkins, Azariah Clapp.
 1852.—No choice.
 1853.—Oliver Warner, Daniel Kingsley.
 1854.—No choice.
 1855.—Daniel Kingsley, Samuel L. Parsons.
 1856.—Erastus Hopkins, John Denning.
 1857-58.—W. F. Arnold.
 1859.—Samuel L. Parsons.
 1860-61.—Daniel G. Littlefield.
 1862-63.—Erastus Hopkins.
 1864-66.—Lewis J. Dudley.
 1867.—W. F. Arnold.

1868.—H. K. Starkweather.
 1869-71.—W. F. Arnold.
 1872.—L. J. Dudley.
 1873.—Porter Nutting.
 1874.—Isaac Stone, Wm. H. Gaylord.
 1875-76.—Mark H. Spaulding.
 1877.—John L. Otis, Timothy G. Spaulding.
 1878.—Wm. M. Gaylord.

FLORENCE.

This locality was first settled by a family named Warner, and was formerly known as the Warner School District. It is evident that for more than a century the population centred chiefly in the village of Northampton, for as late as 1812 there were only seven houses within its limits, viz., those of Enoch Jewett, where Samuel A. Bottum now lives, of Oliver Warner, who kept a hotel, Wm. Warner, known as the Bosworth place, now the site of Cosmian Hall, Josiah White, Gains Burt, Capt. Julius Phelps, and Joseph Warner, and even as late as 1847 there were only about a dozen houses in the district.

The village received its name from Florence, the great silk emporium of Italy. It had previously been known as the "Community," "Bensonville," and Greenville.

One of the first enterprises started in Florence was the manufacture of silk, by the late Samuel Whitmarsh, in 1835. In June of that year Mr. Whitmarsh purchased of William Clark about 400 acres of land, embracing the site of the present village, except perhaps some of the upland near the sewing-machine company's works. A company was formed with a capital of $150,000, called the New York and Northampton Silk Company. Ebenezer Jackson, Charles H. Talbot, and others were connected with the enterprise. The purchase included the oil-mill of Mr. White and the water-privilege.

The company erected the brick building now used by the Greenville Manufacturing Company for the manufacture of silks, but before its completion some machinery was put in the oil-mill. Mr. Whitmarsh soon after went to Europe in search of a better variety of mulberry than was then grown here. He obtained seeds of a variety which he called the "Alpine mulberry." About 100 acres of the meadow land were set with this mulberry. The excitement over the mulberry-trees was almost marvelous, and the people all over the country seemed to grow crazy on the subject. It proved a speculative bubble which, when it burst, brought ruin to thousands. This silk enterprise attracted considerable attention, and Daniel Webster, Abbott Lawrence, and James K. Mills, famous for their advocacy of protection to home industries, came here to inspect it. A small quantity of sewing-silk was manufactured, and samples of plain and figured satins were woven. Specimens of the latter were taken to Washington by Mr. Whitmarsh and presented to Henry Clay. Mr. Whitmarsh left the company after two years, and little was done afterward. In 1840 the property was purchased by Capt. Joseph Conant, of Mansfield, Conn., and he sold it in 1842 to the Community Association. From 1841 to 1846 there flourished here an association called the "Community," which gave considerable notoriety to the village. The objects of the association were "progress toward a better state of society and the development of a true social and moral life." Its founders were doubtless attracted to this point in consequence of the failure of the silk company and the sale of its property. The total investment of the association in real estate reached $50,000, its members numbered 150, and the estate included about 500 acres of land, a silk-factory, saw- and grist-mills, and four or five houses. Its business was divided into departments, each branch being under the management of a special director. One department of its business was the manufacture of silk, and from that beginning has been developed the present flourishing Nonotuck Silk Company. In 1846 the association was dissolved, but it laid the foundation of the present busy and thriving village. The leading men engaged in the association were S. L. Hill, Geo.

W. Benson, Capt. Joseph Conant, David Mack, and William Adam. Another outgrowth of this association was the "Free Congregational Society,"* which is now in a flourishing condition.

The first store was opened in Florence in 1850 by I. S. Parsons, son of Capt. Samuel Parsons and S. L. Hill.

The post-office was established in December, 1852, with Mr. Parsons as postmaster. The postmaster at Northampton strenuously opposed the establishment of the office, but the Florence people finally triumphed.

THE FLORENCE KINDERGARTEN

was started in 1874, under the management of Mrs. C. B. Aldrich. At first it was carried on in the dwelling-house of Mr. Samuel L. Hill, and for a short time in "Lower Cosmian Hall," and in 1876 a building was erected by Mr. Hill expressly for this purpose, with grounds set apart for it suitable to be used in connection with it for plant culture by the children. The institution was placed under the direction of a board of trustees, and made free to all the people of Florence, each one contributing such sum as he felt disposed. Mrs. Aldrich still remains the principal, and there are several assistant Kindergartens employed with her. The experiment thus far has proved a very great success, and is becoming more and more beneficial as people begin to see its advantages and avail themselves of them for their children. In connection with the Kindergarten regular meetings are held at the Kindergarten building, called "mothers' meetings," where the mothers of Florence meet and consider such matters as relate to the care and culture of their children. In 1877 a training-class for Kindergartens was started in connection with the Kindergarten. The Kindergarten and training-class have gained quite a reputation in all parts of the United States, and there is every prospect that the benefits which its founder desired to bestow upon the Florence people will be realized more and more as the institution continues, and the people will have advantages as to the culture of their children such as few other places will ever possess.

FREE CONGREGATIONAL SOCIETY OF FLORENCE.

This society was probably the first religious body in the world to organize on a platform of entire freedom of thought and speech.

About thirty-five years ago, a band of noble men and women tried at Florence a somewhat crude experiment of a new form of social life. Their ideal was high, their motives evidently pure; but, their pecuniary means being too limited for the successful working of their praiseworthy undertaking, the enterprise was, after a few years, given up. In all their public meetings freedom of discussion was maintained. Some of the members of the association remained in Florence, and they and their friends held Sunday meetings in that place, though not regularly, down to the time of the formation of the Free Congregational Society of Florence.

In pursuance of the following call, signed by 27 citizens of Florence who had been interested in these Sunday exercises, and who believed that the friends of religious freedom should avail themselves of the strength there is in union and organized effort, a meeting was held at the time and place therein named.

"To the People of Florence and vicinity:

"All interested in the promotion of good morals, general education, and liberal religious sentiments, whether Catholic or Protestant, or of whatever sect, creed, or nationality, are invited to meet in the South School-House, on Sunday, May 3, 1863, at 3½ o'clock P.M., to organize arrangements for the better attainment of the objects above-named."

At the meeting a society was organized by the adoption and signing of the following articles of agreement:

"We, the undersigned, inhabitants of Florence and its vicinity, in the town of Northampton, wishing to avail ourselves of the advantages of associate effort for our advancement in truth and goodness, and for the promotion of general intelligence, good morals, and liberal religious sentiments, do hereby agree to form ourselves into a body corporate under the name of the 'Free Congregational Society of Florence.'

* See history elsewhere.

"Respecting in each other and in all the right of intellect and conscience to be free, and holding it to be the duty of every one to keep his mind and heart at all times open to receive the truth and follow its guidance, we set up no theological condition of membership, and neither demand nor expect uniformity of doctrinal belief, asking only unity of purpose to seek and accept the right and true, and an honest aim and effort to make these the rule of life. And, recognizing the brotherhood of the human race and the equality of human rights, we make no distinction as to the conditions and rights of membership in this society, on account of sex, color, or nationality."

When it became necessary to provide or erect a suitable church edifice, it was found that the society was not incorporated as the statute required in order to hold property. To secure this right a new organization was formed on the 10th of April, 1872, the old society continuing, on its original platform, to exercise all the educational and religious functions for which it was originally founded.

Charles C. Burleigh, who had been for a number of years prior to May 3, 1863, employed as Sunday lecturer at Florence, remained as resident speaker of the Free Congregational Society of Florence from that date until April 6, 1873, when he resigned. In May, 1871, Miss Elizabeth M. Powell, now Mrs. Henry H. Bond, began to officiate as associate resident speaker, and continued until May, 1872, when Rowland Connor took her place, and officiated in that capacity until the resignation of Mr. Burleigh, when Mr. Connor became resident speaker, and held the office until Aug. 1, 1874. From this last-mentioned date the society had no resident speaker until Sept. 1, 1875, when David H. Clark, the present incumbent, took the office.

The resident speaker is not, like the minister or pastor of other religious societies, the mouth-piece of the members, voicing the doctrines of a cast-iron creed; he speaks only for himself, and his utterances, like those of any other member, are open at all times to criticism. He is usually engaged to speak for a portion of the year, as it is the purpose, and has been the practice, of the society to have, during each year, a variety of speakers, so that every phase of thought shall be fairly represented.

When the society was first organized, its meetings were held in the district school-house; but on Sunday, April 17, 1864, it began to hold meetings in the new chapel and hall built for the purpose, in the then new building called Florence Hall. The use of the chapel, hall, and library-room for ten years was given to the society by its president. In 1874 a spacious and beautiful edifice, called Cosmian Hall, was completed, having been erected for the uses of the society by the subscriptions of members and others; the larger part being contributed by its generous-hearted president. Cosmian Hall cost about $40,000, and includes an attractive and richly-decorated auditorium, capable of seating 700 persons, a choice organ, and a spacious and amply-furnished stage, upon which dramatic entertainments are frequently given during the winter. The basement contains "Lower Cosmian Hall" and a suite of rooms which constitute the parlors and culinary department of the "Ladies' Industrial Union," an auxiliary of the society.

It is the aim of the society to maintain a free platform; to offer a cordial welcome to all shades of honest conviction and opinion. It has been addressed by women as well as men,—the representatives of Judaism, orthodox and heterodox Christianity, Spiritualists, Scientists, Theists, and Atheists,—and cherishes the persuasion that in this free exchange of ideas and hospitality to diverse religious theories is the surest promise of the truth which Lord Bacon pronounces "the sovereign good of human nature."

Among the prominent names who have addressed the society, some of them repeatedly, are Theodore D. Weld, John Weiss, Samuel Longfellow, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, D. A. Wasson, Charles E. Norton, A. Bronson Alcott, Parker Pillsbury, Mrs.

Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Wm. J. Potter, Frederick Douglass, M. D. Conway, William Lloyd Garrison, Francis E. Abbott, Beriah Green, Aaron M. Powell, Mrs. Caroline H. Dall, Wm. H. Burleigh, Henry C. Wright, Lucy Stone, Rabbi Schleisinger, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Samuel Johnson, Josiah P. Quincy, Horace Seaver, John W. Chadwick, Mrs. Frances D. Gage, William Denton, Susan B. Anthony, S. H. Morse, Giles B. Stebbins, J. L. Hatch, Mrs. E. A. Kingsbury, Dio Lewis, B. F. Underwood, Mrs. Lillie Devereux Blake, Prof. C. S. Chandler, John T. Sargent, Frederic Frothingham, S. J. Finney, John F. Moors, Erastus Hopkins, Susan H. Wixon, Elder F. W. Evans, Dr. R. T. Trall, Mrs. M. W. Campbell, Chas. Lenox Remond, Mrs. F. E. W. Harper, Edward C. Towne, Mrs. Nellie T. Brigham, Stephen S. Foster, Henry B. Blackwell, and George Thompson.

The present officers are as follows: Moderator, Samuel L. Hill; Clerk, A. G. Hill; Treasurer, A. T. Lilly; Executive Committee, Seth Hunt, A. T. Lilly, and Joseph Marsh; Committee on Music, L. F. S. Plympton, Mrs. M. B. Learned, and George Shepard; Committee on Sunday-school, D. H. Clark, Miss M. W. Bond, Mrs. H. Clark, Miss Sarah Titcomb, and J. M. Davis; Committee on Charity, A. Eldredge, E. L. Hammond, Mrs. Henry Gould, H. Townsend, R. M. Branch, and Miss Julia M. Lilly.

THE FLORENCE CHURCH.

In the fall of 1860 a movement was made for erecting a church edifice in Florence, Northampton. Land for this purpose and for a parsonage was given by the Greenville Manufacturing Company of that place. The requisite funds were raised by subscription, friends in the centre of the town making liberal contributions. The immediate success of the effort was in large measure due to the earnest co-operation of Rev. Z. Eddy, D.D., pastor of the First Church. In the chapel of that church, on Saturday, the 20th day of October, 1860, the "Florence Church Society" was organized. The subscribers to the building-fund were also present, and united with the society in choosing a building committee, consisting of Messrs. D. G. Littlefield, A. L. Williston, I. S. Parsons, Joel Hayden, and J. P. Williston. In the following spring the edifice was commenced, and by the ensuing fall it was finished and paid for.

On the 9th of October, 1861, 26 members of different evangelical churches, having adopted the subjoined Confession of Faith and Covenant, were regularly organized by an ecclesiastical council into a Church of Christ, and in the afternoon of the same day their house of worship was dedicated to the Lord. For six months after this they had the services of Rev. T. A. Leete, who had also labored with them for some time previous to the organization. He was then succeeded by Rev. S. O. Dyer, who supplied the pulpit for the term of three months. On the 15th of December, 1862, Rev. Horace C. Hovey was called to settle as pastor, and on the 5th of February, 1863, he was duly installed.

A special work of grace was enjoyed in the spring of 1863, which resulted in the hopeful conversion of 27 persons, who, on the profession of their faith, were admitted to the church.

On the 25th of August, 1866, Rev. Horace C. Hovey offered his resignation, was released by a mutual council September 3d, and closed his labors with this church Oct. 1, 1866.

On the 21st of the same month Rev. E. G. Colb was called to settle as pastor, and on the 6th of December, 1866, was duly installed.

An encouraging season of religious interest was enjoyed in the spring of 1867, and another in the spring of 1871. Both these seasons began with the week of prayer, and resulted in the addition of cheering numbers to the church of such as we hope will be saved.

The following were the first members: Thomas Pomeroy, Sarah Pomeroy, Joseph B. Whitehouse, Martha A. Whitehouse, A. Lyman Williston, Sarah T. Williston, Julius Phelps, Edith Phelps, Anson B. Clark, Sarah M. Clark, Israel A. Graves, Sarah Graves, Thomas Gladden, Mary O. Leete, Leavitt Beals, Mary A. Beals, Mehetable Pond, William C. Bamforth, Martha E. Bamforth, Plympton H. Smith, Mary A. Smith, Eleanor M. Squires, Eliza Whitehouse, Susan P. Smith, Isaac S. Parsons, and Anna S. Parsons.

A chapel for the use of prayer-meetings was built in 1864, at a cost of $2000, exclusive of the land which was donated by the Greenville Manufacturing Company. Parlors, cloak-rooms, etc., were added to the chapel in 1877, at a cost of about $3000, and in the following year the church was re-frescoed, organ-recess built, new organ put in, etc., at a cost of about $1500. The church has ever been in a prosperous condition, and has received an average of 25 members annually since its organization. The largest number—37—joined March 5, 1871.

The present membership numbers 201. The present officers are as follows: Rev. E. G. Cobb, Pastor; Thomas Pomeroy, A. L. Williston, A. B. Clark, A. C. Estabrook, W. L. Wilcox, and William M. Smith, Deacons; A. B. Clark, Clerk; A. L. Williston, Treasurer; and William M. Smith, Superintendent.

THE FLORENCE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The first Methodist church organization effected in Florence was in the spring of 1855, although congregations from time to time assembled to hear itinerant preachers as far back as 1848. In this year, 1855, Rev. Jonas M. Clark, now living in Northampton, was stationed in Florence, and under his administration the first class-meeting was formed; likewise a Sunday-school, which became prosperous. The Sunday-school library was a gift of a Mrs. Douglas, then residing at Dr. Munde's Water-Cure. The society numbered 25 members, and the congregation ranged from 60 to 100.

The church building was erected in the years 1873-74, at a cost of $10,000, and was finished and dedicated in September of the latter year,—that is, it was finished as far as the vestry and the exterior are concerned; but the upper interior of the building remains at present (March, 1879) unfinished, although an effort is now being made to complete it. The size of the building is 76 by 46 feet, of wood, and is situated at the corner of Main and Park Streets.

Services were held, previous to building the church, in Parsons' Hall. Jan. 22, 1871, Davis Hall was rented for the use of the society. From 1858 till 1870 Florence was abandoned by the Northeast Conference, no preacher being sent there. But in 1870 the Methodists in the place made a move, requested preaching, and obtained it.

The following are names of pastors of the church: Rev. Jonas M. Clark, 1855, one year; Rev. W. M. Hubbard, 1856, one year; Rev. John Noon, 1857, one year. No preaching regularly until July, 1870, when Rev. J. S. Whedon, of Northampton, preached a few months by request. Occasional preaching was done by Mr. Joseph Zwifvill and George E. Sanderson, of Wilbraham Academy. The church was reorganized in January, 1871, and at a Quarterly Conference held by L. R. Thayer, D.D., presiding elder, Rev. J. Zwifvill was appointed preacher in charge. But in the spring of 1871, Rev. T. W. Bishop was appointed by the Northeast Conference, and remained here two years. His successor was W. H. Cook, who remained here two years. His successor was R. F. Holway, who stayed three years. His successor was Rev. F. Bowler, present pastor.

The present trustees of the church are as follows: H. K. Parsons, G. F. Miller, D. W. Goodell, C. Humphrey, H. A. Crosby, C. Damon, F. W. Moore, J. A. Bray, and A. Back.

The church membership is 117.

LEEDS.

This village, which has been rendered famous by the extent of its manufactures and the disastrous flood of 1874, is pleasantly located on Mill River, in the northwest part of the town of Northampton.

The village was first known as a portion of the Rail Hill school district, and was afterward known as Shepherd's Hollow, or Shepherd's Factory, until 1849, when it received its present name in honor of Thomas Musgrave, the first postmaster at the place, who was a native of Leeds, England.

The pioneer building within its limits was the dwelling of Luke Day, erected in 1793. Other dwellings were erected about this time on the road leading to Williamsburg by James Smith, Calvin Clark, and Nehemiah Washburne.

The excellent water-power afforded by Mill River at this point early attracted the attention of manufacturers and capitalists, and the first manufactory in the town of Northampton was established here, and for many years it was the most active portion of the town.

The first industry started was a saw-mill, built by Joseph Burnell in 1800. A cotton-mill was erected on the same site by Job Cotton, in 1808, and in 1812 a cotton-mill was erected a short distance below by Col. James Shepherd. These mills were subsequently consolidated, and both operated as woolen-mills by the brothers James, Thomas, and Charles Shepherd, sons of the first druggist in Northampton, Dr. Levi Shepherd. This firm changed several times, and when it was abandoned in 1857, it was known as the Northampton Woolen-Manufacturing Company.

The first broadcloth in this country was made in Leeds. The weaver's name was Benjamin Jackson.

Another early manufactory in Leeds was a woolen-mill, built by Sidney Webster in 1813. It was subsequently purchased by James, Chester, and Calvin Cook, Jr., and conducted under the name of the Cook Brothers. The establishment was burned in 1823, but was, however, immediately rebuilt and carried on by the same firm until 1827, when they failed, and the property passed into the possession of the Shepherds.

In 1828 a hammer and screw-driver factory was built by J. D. Kellogg, and in 1835 he erected a larger establishment, which was located a short distance above the Nonotuck Silk-Mill.

Another prominent industry in Leeds is the Mill River Button Company. The manufacture of buttons from vegetable ivory was commenced by A. P. Critchlow, in 1860, in a wooden building, which was burned in 1870. This was replaced by a brick edifice, which was destroyed in the great flood of 1874. In 1870, Mr. Critchlow disposed of his business to George P. Warner, who conducted it until 1874 under the name of the Critchlow Ivory Button Company. The disaster of 1874 seemed to almost paralyze the business, but in the same year a new mill was built, and the business has since been conducted under the name of the Mill River Button Company.

In 1867 the Northampton Emery-Wheel Company was organized at Florence, by J. L. Otis and L. B. Williams, with a capital of $10,000. The business was commenced in 1868, and continued at Florence until 1870, when the company was reorganized, capital increased to $40,000, and the establishment removed to Leeds.

The people at Leeds have ever manifested a lively interest in schools, and as early as 1814 a school-house was built, which stood on the site now occupied by the lumber-yard of the Nonotuck Silk-Mill.

The first store was opened by the woolen company.

May 13, 1874, Leeds was one of the attractive and prosperous manufacturing villages of the State. The following day it was swept from existence by the rushing waters from the broken reservoir. Nothing stayed the fitful torrent. It obliterated streets and swept away mills and dwellings. The loss to the town was immense, and then, when it is told that 51 human beings perished, it confronts us in all its horrors.* None of the manufactories were, however, removed, and steps were at once taken to rebuild and repair, and Leeds has now resumed its former activity.

* See history of Mill River disaster elsewhere in this work.

NONOTUCK HALL.

Nonotuck Hall and School-House was erected in 1876. It is a commodious and substantial brick structure, two stories in height, and beautifully located. The lower story is used for school purposes, and the upper story for a hall. It was erected at a cost of about $17,000, $7000 of which was paid by the town, and $10,000, including furniture, fixtures, etc., by Lucius Dimmock, a public-spirited and generous citizen, one of the proprietors of the Nonotuck Silk-Mill. The hall is one of the most complete in all its interior decorations and appointments in Western Massachusetts, and the building is lighted by gas and heated with steam. Mr. Dimmock cannot be commended too highly for his indefatigable efforts and generosity in furnishing Leeds with this thoroughly-equipped edifice.

SECOND REGIMENT—THREE YEARS.

Benj. B. Clark, Co. D; must. May 25, 1861; re-enl. Dec. 31, 1863; disch. July 14, 1865.
 Jos. C. Clark, Co. D; must. May 25, 1861; re-enl. Dec. 31, 1863; disch. July 14, 1865.
 John Cahill, Jr., Co. D; must. May 25, 1861; disch. for disab., Jan. 27, 1863.
 Jerry Daley, Co. K; must. May 25, 1861; died Dec. 23, 1863.
 Edward G. Hoyt, Co. K; must. May 25, 1861; disch. June 10, 1864.
 Lewis Bianchi, must. Aug. 26, 1864.
 Michael Beouet, must. July 21, 1864.
 Henry W. Cole, Co. K; must. May 25, 1861; disch. Oct. 6, 1864.
 Peter Carter, Co. K; must. May 25, 1861; disch. for disab., Jan. 17, 1863.
 Richard Collios, Co. A; must. Jan. 7, 1864.
 Moses Caswell, Co. H; must. July 21, 1864; disch. July 14, 1865.
 Geo. Carey, Co. H; must. July 21, 1864.
 Jacob Cohn, must. Aug. 29, 1864; disch. July 29, 1865.
 John Connors, must. Aug. 24, 1864.
 Alfred Denten, must. June 3, 1864.
 John Eberhardt, Co. I; must. Aug. 26, 1864; disch. July 14, 1865.
 Geo. Fisher, Co. G; must. June 1, 1864; disch. July 14, 1865.
 Thomas Flynn, must. July 19, 1864.
 Ferdinand Gezenback, Co. A; must. June 9, 1864; disch. July 14, 1865.
 Thomas Hanley, Co. A; must. June 7, 1864.
 Thomas Hallenell, Co. A; must. June 8, 1864.
 John Handley, Co. A; must. June 2, 1864.
 Joseph Lainant, Co. C; must. July 16, 1864; disch. July 14, 1865.
 Chas. Munson, Co. C; must. June 6, 1864; sick to hospital when the regt. was disch.
 Patrick Murray, must. June 7, 1864.
 Chas. Miller, must. June 8, 1864.
 James Murphy, must. June 1, 1864.
 James Murray, must. July 20, 1864.
 Martin Maquinn, must. July 21, 1864.
 Adolph Nildeoble, must. July 16, 1864.
 Thomas Moore, must. July 23, 1864.
 Paul Offinger, must. June 8, 1864.
 John Ryan, Co. B; must. June 8, 1864.
 Geo. Wilson, Co. G; must. July 20, 1864.
 John Quinn, must. June 3, 1864.
 John Reardeo, must. July 21, 1864.
 Joseph F. Shepherd, Co. I; must. May 25, 1861; disch. for disab., June 5, 1862.
 Henry Smith, Co. B; must. June 8, 1864; disch. July 14, 1865.
 Patrick Sullivan, Co. A; must. June 7, 1864.
 Henry Speiver, Co. A; must. June 7, 1864.
 Albert Schneider, Co. C; must. July 16, 1864; disch. July 14, 1865.
 Patrick Scanlan, Co. C; must. July 16, 1864; disch. July 14, 1865.
 NINTH REGIMENT—THREE YEARS.
 Hercules Butler, Co. B; must. Aug. 19, 1863; trans. to 32d Regt., June 9, 1864.

SMITH'S FERRY

is a station on the Connecticut River Railroad, about four miles south of Northampton. The locality was first called "Lyman's Farms," then "South Farms," later "South Harbor," and in 1835 or 1836 was given its present name.

THE REBELLION OF 1861-65.

The inhabitants of Northampton responded promptly to the call for troops in 1861, and during the war furnished 751 men, 104 of whom enlisted for nine months, 29 for one year, and the remainder for three years. Seventy-one thousand five hundred and twelve dollars was paid for bounties, $5234 of which was refunded by the act of the Legislature of 1863 equalizing the bounties throughout the State.

The following are the names of those who enlisted from this town, as compiled by H. K. Starkweather, Esq., in 1868:

Henry Couklin, Co. E; must. Aug. 18, 1863; sub. for Watson L. Smith.
 John A. Reynolds, Co. A; must. Aug. 18, 1863; trans. to 32d Regt., June 10, 1864.
 Patrick Sweeney, Co. F; must. Aug. 19, 1863; sub. for O. A. Skilton; trans. to Navy.
 James Welch, Co. A; must. Aug. 9, 1863; sub. for John Metcalf; disch. for disab., Dec. 15, 1863.

TENTH REGIMENT—THREE YEARS.

Maj. W. R. Marsh, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; disch. June 14, 1862.
 Capt. J. B. Parsons, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; pro. to lieut.-col., July 25, 1862; disch. July 1, 1864.
 Lieut. J. H. Weatherell, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; pro. to capt., Sept. 8, 1862; died from wounds, June 20, 1864.
 Lieut. Chas. H. Brewster, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; pro. to 1st lieut., Sept. 29, 1862; disch. July 1, 1864.
 James H. Braman, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; killed in action at Fair Oaks, May 31, 1862.
 Lewis Day, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; disch. for disab., Oct. 28, 1861.
 John A. Nims, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; disch. for disab., July 18, 1862.
 Wm. J. Bishop, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; pro. to capt., Sept. 23, 1863; disch. July 1, 1864.
 Alanson E. Munyan, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; pro. to 1st lieut., Dec. 21, 1862; died of wounds, May 5, 1864.
 H. A. Brown, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; pro. to 1st lieut., Sept. 23, 1863; disch. July 1, 1864.
 Charles H. Bigelow, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; re-enl. Dec. 21, 1863; disch. July 16, 1865.
 Edwin Bates, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; disch. for disab., July 15, 1861.
 Frauk Boies, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; killed in action, no date.
 Wm. H. Bullard, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; disch. for disab., Oct. 22, 1862.
 Frederick W. Clark, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; disch. Oct. 17, 1862.
 John H. Cook, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; disch. for disab., July 16, 1862.
 Thomas Cahill, Co. E; must. June 21, 1861; disch. June 28, 1864.
 Chas. H. Daniels, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; disch. July 6, 1864.
 Chas. S. Edwards, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; re-enlisted; disch. July 16, 1865.
 Lewis Endicott, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; trans. to Sig. Corps, Oct. 7, 1863.
 Ezra Hines, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; disch. July 6, 1864.
 Eben M. Johnson, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; re-enlisted; trans. to 37th.
 Wm. M. Kingsley, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; disch. July 17, 1864.
 Marcus T. Moody, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; disch. for pro., Sept. 18, 1862.
 Edward F. Moody, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; disch. July 6, 1864.

Linus P. Noble, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; disch. July 6, 1864.
 Alvin Bust, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; disch. July 6, 1864.
 E. H. Stauley, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; died at Harrison's Landing, July 30, 1862.
 Wm. L. Strong, Co. C; must. June 1, 1861; disch. July 6, 1864.
 Geo. S. Bliss, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; disch. for pro., Nov. 18, 1862.
 Sidney S. Williams, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; taken prisoner, May 12, 1864; relieved at close of war.
 Frederick C. Wright, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; disch. for pro., Aug. 21, 1861.
 Wm. Mather, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; disch. July 6, 1864.
 Thos. Gordon, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; disch. for disability, Aug. 5, 1861.
 James Tuttle, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861.
 Albert Witherell, Co. E; must. June 21, 1861; re-enl. Dec. 21, 1863.
 Hiram P. Prentiss, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; disch. for disab., March 2, 1863.
 Chas. A. Rogers, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; disch. July 6, 1864.
 Geo. M. Kellogg, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; disch. July 6, 1864.
 Flavel Shurtleff, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; pro. to capt., July 31, 1862; disch. July 6, 1864.
 Henry W. Parsons, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; died at Washington, Oct. 7, 1861.
 Calvin B. Kingsley, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; disch. for disab., April 20, 1862.
 Geo. C. Wells, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; disch. July 6, 1864.
 James H. Abbott, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; killed in action at Spotsylvania, May 12, 1864.
 Wm. B. Allen, must. March 19, 1862; hospital steward; re-enl. in 37th.
 Constant E. Bamerat, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; killed in action, May 3, 1863.
 Timothy Brown, Co. D; must. June 21, 1861; disch. for disab., Dec. 23, 1862.
 Norman S. Cornwell, Co. C; must. Oct. 18, 1861; re-enlisted; disch. Jan. 6, 1865.
 C. N. Chamberlain, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; hosp. surg.; trans. to U. S. A.
 Henry French, Co. E; must. June 21, 1861; died April 19, 1862.
 Chas. Hickey, Co. E; must. June 21, 1861; re-enl., Co. K, 37th.
 David E. Hoxie, Co. C; must. Oct. 18, 1861; disch. for disab., March 20, 1863.
 Chas. McIntyre, Co. E; must. June 21, 1861.
 Henry L. Nichols, Co. E; must. June 21, 1861; disch. July 1, 1864.
 Edwin S. Pease, Co. C; must. Oct. 18, 1861; died Feb. 4, 1863.
 George L. Thayer, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; disch. for disab., Jan. 22, 1863.
 Chas. C. Wells, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; disch. for disability.
 James Welch, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; re-enl. Dec. 21, 1863.

Chas. H. Thompson, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; disch. for disab., Aug. 12, 1861.
 Patrick Lovett, Co. C; must. Nov. 6, 1862; killed in action, July 12, 1864.
 Dennis Shay, Co. C; must. Nov. 6, 1862; disch. July 1, 1864.
 Wallace B. Cullen, Co. C; must. March 18, 1862.
 Chas. W. Evans, must. March 31, 1862.
 Henry F. Fisk, must. Oct. 14, 1862.
 Frederick H. Crockett, must. Oct. 14, 1862.
 Chas. S. Dodge, Co. C; must. Sept. 7, 1861; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps.
 Michael Timothy, Co. D; must. Oct. 14, 1862; disch. for disab., March 12, 1863.
 Wm. A. Ely, Co. C; must. June 21, 1861; re-enl. in 37th.
 George F. Hubbard, Co. H; must. Dec. 21, 1863; trans. to 37th.
 James Londergan, Co. E; trans. to 37th.
 John O'Brien, Co. E; must. Feb. 29, 1864; trans. to 37th; disch. June 21, 1865.

ELEVENTH REGIMENT—THREE YEARS.

William Stone, must. July 18, 1864.

THIRTEENTH REGIMENT—THREE YEARS.

James Watson, must. July 20, 1864.

NINETEENTH REGIMENT—THREE YEARS.

Chas. H. Lewis, must. March 30, 1864.

TWENTIETH REGIMENT—THREE YEARS.

Francis W. Warren, Co. K; must. July 18, 1861.
 Frederick Rockman, Co. K; must. June 6, 1864.
 John G. Becker, Co. K; must. June 7, 1864.

TWENTY-FIRST REGIMENT—THREE YEARS.

Edwin Bates, Co. H; must. Aug. 5, 1861; disch. for disab., Dec. 8, 1862.
 John H. Withereil, Co. G; must. Aug. 2, 1861; disch. for disab., Jan. 24, 1863.
 Charles H. Morey, Co. G; must. Aug. 2, 1861; died Aug. 21, 1862.
 Thomas Gilmartin, Co. G; disch. for disab., Nov. 18, 1862.
 Edward S. Alvord, Co. H; must. Aug. 5, 1861; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps, April 1, 1864.
 Thomas Farrell, Co. C; must. Aug. 19, 1861; re-enlisted; disch. July 12, 1865.
 Lewis Holmes, Co. C; must. Aug. 19, 1861; disch. Oct. 15, 1864.
 Edward S. Wright, Co. C; must. Aug. 16, 1861; re-enlisted; disch. July 12, 1865.
 William H. Spear, Co. H; must. Aug. 5, 1861; re-enlisted.
 Lewis Smith, Co. H; must. Aug. 5, 1861; disch. for disab., May 7, 1862.
 Marcns M. Corbin, Co. B; must. Aug. 19, 1861; disch. for disab., May 13, 1862.
 Thomas Puffer, Co. B; must. Aug. 19, 1861; disch. for disab., May 13, 1862.
 Thomas Stephens, Co. B; must. Aug. 19, 1861; re-enl. Jan. 1, 1864; missing June 17, 1864.

TWENTY-FOURTH REGIMENT—THREE YEARS.

John Inber, Co. B; must. Feb. 16, 1864.

TWENTY-SIXTH REGIMENT—THREE YEARS.

James Bates, must. June 2, 1864.
 George Hall, must. June 7, 1864.

TWENTY-SEVENTH REGIMENT—THREE YEARS.

Frank Alvord, Co. A; must. Sept. 28, 1861; re-enlisted; disch. April 10, 1865.
 Calvin Blackmer, Co. O; must. Oct. 14, 1861; re-enlisted; disch. June 26, 1865.
 Wm. W. Braman, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; disch. Sept. 27, 1864.
 Henry C. Bardwell, Co. G; must. Oct. 18, 1861; killed at Roanoke Island, Feb. 8, 1862.
 Levi Brooks, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; disch. Sept. 27, 1864.
 George A. Birge, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; disch. Sept. 27, 1864.

Joseph A. Birge, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; killed by lightning, at Newbern, N. C.
 Thomas C. Brady, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; died July 11, 1864.
 Edmund Bride, Co. G; must. Oct. 19, 1861; re-enl. Nov. 25, 1864; disch. Jan. 26, 1865.
 John L. Clark, Co. G; must. Oct. 15, 1861; re-enl. Nov. 25, 1864; disch. Jan. 26, 1865.
 Patrick Coffee, Co. G; must. Oct. 17, 1861; re-enl. March 6, 1864; disch. Jan. 26, 1865.
 Joseph Cunningham, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; re-enl. in 37th; disch. July 16, 1865.
 Edward M. Cobb, Co. G; must. Oct. 21, 1861; re-enl. in 37th; disch. June 26, 1865.
 Andrew Cahill, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; died Sept. 15, 1862.
 Wm. H. Center, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; died Sept. 5, 1863.
 Sidney Davis, Co. K; must. Oct. 24, 1861; re-enlisted; disch. June 26, 1865.
 John R. Davis, Co. K; must. Sept. 14, 1861; re-enlisted; disch. June 26, 1865.
 Andrew J. Dunham, Co. G; must. Oct. 15, 1861; re-enlisted; disch. June 26, 1865.
 Charles M. Damon, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; disch. Sept. 27, 1864.
 Henry A. Dwight, Co. H; must. Sept. 27, 1861; pro. to capt. July 1, 1862; disch. Sept. 28, 1864.
 Leonard F. Dunn, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; disch. Sept. 27, 1864.
 Samuel H. Douglass, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; disch. for disab., Feb. 6, 1863.
 Edwin Foster, Co. A; must. Oct. 11, 1861; disch. for disab., Aug. 30, 1862.
 Frank Frey, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; re-enlisted; taken prisoner Jan. 20, 1865.
 Henry W. Howard, Co. D; must. June 14, 1861; disch. for disability.
 Charles A. Howard, Co. G; must. Oct. 16, 1861; disch. for disab., April 5, 1864.
 Stanley Howard, Co. G; must. Oct. 17, 1861; disch. for disab., Nov. 25, 1863.
 John F. Hannum, Co. G; must. Oct. 15, 1861; re-enlisted; disch. June 26, 1865.
 Patrick Hickey, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; re-enlisted; disch. June 26, 1865.
 Levi L. Holmes, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; disch. Sept. 27, 1864.
 Thomas W. Lavake, Co. G; must. Oct. 15, 1861; disch. Oct. 15, 1864.
 Thomas J. Porter, Co. G; must. April 8, 1862; died Nov. 8, 1862.
 Thomas Shay, Co. G; must. June 16, 1862; killed in action, Dec. 10, 1864.
 Albert Mier, Co. A; must. Sept. 17, 1861; disch. Sept. 27, 1864.
 Henry O. Moran, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; died July 4, 1862.
 John A. Stockwell, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; discharged.
 George A. Stockwell, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; disch. Sept. 27, 1864.
 Daniel Haney, Co. G; must. Oct. 15, 1861; re-enlisted; disch. June 26, 1865.
 Edward Hayden, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; died Nov. 4, 1864.
 Michael Keef, Co. G; must. Oct. 16, 1861; disch. Nov. 1, 1864.
 Daniel Knight, Co. G; must. Oct. 17, 1861; disch. Nov. 1, 1864.
 Quartus D. Kingsley, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; disch. for disab., April 1, 1863.
 Nelson H. Kingsley, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; re-enlisted; disch. June 26, 1865.
 Zenas M. Kingsley, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; died at Newbern, March 15, 1862.
 Louis Kreizer, Co. G; must. Oct. 13, 1861; disch. for disab., Oct. 22, 1862.
 Edward J. Lewis, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; disch. Sept. 27, 1864.
 Luke Lyman, lieutenant-col.; must. Sept. 17, 1861; res. May 27, 1863.
 Charles C. Loud, Co. G; must. Oct. 9, 1861; re-enlisted; disch. June 26, 1865.
 Albert Macomber, Co. G; must. Oct. 17, 1861; disch. Nov. 1, 1864.

James Mahar, Co. G; must. Oct. 15, 1861; re-enlisted; disch. June 26, 1865.
 Edwin Meacham, Co. G; must. Oct. 25, 1861; died in rebel prison, Oct. 20, 1864.
 John Manix, Co. G; must. Oct. 15, 1861; disch. Nov. 1, 1864.
 Thomas D. Morton, Co. G; must. Oct. 17, 1861; re-enlisted; disch. June 26, 1865.
 J. Freeman Nutting, Co. G; must. Oct. 19, 1861; re-enlisted; disch. June 26, 1865.
 E. Porter Nutting, Co. G; must. Nov. 1, 1861; disch. for disab., July 29, 1863.
 John M. North, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; killed in action, May 9, 1864.
 Charles H. Otto, Co. A; must. Sept. 20, 1861; disch. for disab., Jan. 1, 1863.
 Wm. W. Partridge, Co. G; must. Oct. 21, 1861; re-enlisted; died in rebel prison, Oct. 15, 1864.
 Edward W. Pease, Co. G; must. Oct. 14, 1861; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps, Aug. 14, 1863.
 Austin E. Phelps, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; disch. Sept. 27, 1864.
 Alner E. Parsons, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; disch. Nov. 1, 1863.
 Jonathan A. Polniatier, Co. G; must. Oct. 14, 1861; disch. Nov. 7, 1862.
 Theodore M. Place, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861.
 Patrick Riley, Co. G; must. Oct. 15, 1861; re-enl.; disch. May 6, 1865.
 Edwin J. Reed, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; disch. Sept. 27, 1864.
 Henry B. Smith, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; disch. for disab., Oct. 3, 1861.
 Isaac Smith, Co. G; must. Oct. 15, 1861; disch. Dec. 14, 1864.
 Sylvanus Smith, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; disch. Oct. 15, 1864.
 Elihu S. Smith, Co. G; must. Oct. 15, 1861; re-enl.; disch. June 26, 1865.
 Thomas F. Smith, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; re-enl.
 Henry W. Strong, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; died Oct. 17, 1862.
 Egbert Strong, Co. G; must. Oct. 22, 1861; died Oct. 4, 1864.
 Julius Strong, Co. G; must. Oct. 15, 1861; disch. for disab., Sept. 24, 1862.
 George A. Stockwell, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; disch. Sept. 27, 1864.
 Mark H. Spaulding, 1st lieut., Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; res. March 19, 1862.
 Fred. C. Wright, 1st lieut., Co. G; must. Nov. 20, 1861; died of wounds, June 27, 1864.
 Jas. M. Willard, Co. G; must. Oct. 16, 1861; disch. Oct. 15, 1864.
 Francis B. Willard, Co. A; must. Oct. 9, 1861; disch. Sept. 27, 1864.
 Justus Wisley, Co. G; must. Oct. 16, 1861; died April 1, 1862.
 Francis Valcour, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861.
 Joseph Valcour, Co. D; must. Oct. 14, 1861.
 Robert J. Kearney, Co. G; must. Oct. 17, 1861; died April 5, 1862.
 Edwin C. Clark, 2d lieut., Co. A; must. Oct. 16, 1861; res. March 19, 1862.
 John H. Hannum, Co. G; must. Oct. 15, 1861; re-enl.; disch. June 26, 1865.
 James Halloran, Co. G; must. Oct. 17, 1861; disch. for disab., March 1, 1862.
 Henry Dickinson, Co. A; must. Sept. 27, 1861; killed in action, May 16, 1864.
 Lewis H. Fuller, Co. A; must. Dec. 29, 1863.
 Francis G. Russell, Co. A; must. Dec. 19, 1863; died in rebel prison, July 17, 1864.
 Ezra B. Lovering, Co. G; must. Aug. 31, 1864; disch. June 26, 1865.
 Chas. L. Wright, Co. C; must. Jan. 16, 1864; disch. June 26, 1865.
 Henry M. Pittsinger, Co. C; must. Jan. 16, 1864; disch. May 25, 1865.
 Franklin Bailey, Co. C; must. Jan. 16, 1864.
 Hiram J. Van Steamerry, Co. A; must. Sept. 20, 1861.

TWENTY-EIGHTH REGIMENT—THREE YEARS.

Joseph Paynet, must. April 4, 1864.

THIRTY-FIRST REGIMENT—THREE YEARS.

Silas Bucknam, Co. B; must. Jan. 6, 1862; re-enl.; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Nathan H. Clapp, Co. B; must. Nov. 20, 1861.
 Sydney S. Clapp, Co. B; must. Oct. 11, 1861.
 Wm. L. Cowing, Co. B; must. Nov. 20, 1861.
 Michael H. Dunn, Co. B; must. Nov. 20, 1861.
 Daniel Franzen, Co. B; must. Nov. 26, 1861; re-enl.
 George Moran, Co. F; must. Nov. 26, 1861; re-enl.
 Feb. 13, 1864.
 George C. Green, Co. G; must. Nov. 26, 1861.
 Edwin B. Noble, Co. B; must. Nov. 20, 1861; disch.
 Nov. 19, 1864.
 Henry K. Noble, Co. B; must. Nov. 25, 1861; disch.
 Nov. 19, 1864.
 Joseph Neido, Co. G; must. Jan. 9, 1862.
 John R. Parsons, Co. B; must. Nov. 20, 1861.
 James O. Pierce, Co. B; must. Nov. 2, 1861.
 Wm. H. Sperbeck, Co. G; must. Jan. 9, 1862; re-enlisted; disch. Sept. 9, 1865.
 Jerry Sullivan, Co. B; must. Oct. 4, 1861.
 Henry Shurner, Co. H; must. Feb. 19, 1862; re-enlisted in U. S. A.
 Caleb F. Tufts, Co. H; must. Jan. 21, 1862; disch. for disab., June 18, 1862.
 Geo. W. Jones, Co. A; must. Jan. 2, 1864; disch. Sept. 9, 1865.
 Franklin Meyers, Co. A; must. Jan. 7, 1864.

THIRTY-THIRD REGIMENT—THREE YEARS.

Thomas Donnelly, must. June 9, 1864.

THIRTY-FOURTH REGIMENT—THREE YEARS.

Frank W. Gordon, Co. D; must. June 22, 1862; disch. for disab., May 7, 1863.
 Melvin Packard, must. Jan. 13, 1864.

THIRTY-FIFTH REGIMENT—THREE YEARS.

Charles Eyles, Co. K; must. July 21, 1864; trans. to 29th.

THIRTY-SIXTH REGIMENT—THREE YEARS.

Frederick Banfirth, Co. A; must. Aug. 25, 1864; disch. July 12, 1864.
 Michael Merrick, Co. A; must. Aug. 25, 1864; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps, March 8, 1865.

THIRTY-SEVENTH REGIMENT—THREE YEARS.

Austin J. Allis, Co. G; must. Aug. 6, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 George H. Ames, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Wm. Ackers, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; died Oct. 9, 1863.
 Hubbard M. Abbott, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; pro. to 1st lieut.; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Ira H. Aldrich, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Jonathan J. Aldrich, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Levi H. Bartlett, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Wm. Bliss, Co. G; must. Aug. 27, 1862; pro. to captain Res., Dec. 25, 1864.
 Samuel Burks, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Simeon Birge, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Wm. C. Birge, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. with loss of arm, Feb. 24, 1865.
 Edmund M. Bartlett, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; sick in hosp. when the regt. was must. out.
 Calix Bushman, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; killed at Fort Fisher, April 2, 1865.
 Wm. H. Bigelow, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; sick in hosp. when the regt. was must. out.
 John E. Banks, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; killed at Charlestown, Va., Aug. 21, 1864.
 Henry Belden, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Seth Belden, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; killed at Winchester, Va., Sept. 19, 1864.
 Ed. Bridgman, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; pro. to 1st lieut.; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Edward P. Bridgman, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.

Joseph Bushman, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; killed in Wilderness, May 6, 1864.
 Ogden D. Bucknam, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Ozro M. Bird, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 John Banhardt, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. for disab., May 30, 1865.
 Horace P. Clark, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Geo. C. Clapp, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. April 13, 1865.
 Christopher C. Colson, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; sick in hosp. when the regt. was must. out.
 John W. Carter, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 David Congden, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. July 10, 1865.
 James Crampton, Co. K; must. Aug. 9, 1862; killed at Gettysburg, July 13, 1863.
 Leander F. Dawes, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. July 21, 1865.
 Ashley W. Dickinson, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. July 21, 1865.
 Luke Day, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. July 21, 1865.
 Henry Doane, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; sick in hosp. when the regt. was must. out.
 Wm. H. Damon, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. for disab., Feb. 23, 1863.
 Henry E. Dayton, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862.
 Frank O. Dayton, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862.
 Thomas Duffree, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 George W. Edwards, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Wm. A. Ely, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Wm. Farrell, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862.
 John Fortune, Co. K; must. Aug. 15, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Francis A. Gouch, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. for disab., Nov. 17, 1863.
 Elisha Graves, Jr., Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; sick in hosp. when the regt. was must. out.
 Dolphus Hulburt, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. April 19, 1865.
 Milo Holmes, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; died at Washington, Aug. 9, 1863.
 Richard Haughton, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Segur R. Harris, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; died May 1, 1864.
 Osborne C. Hutchins, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Erastus Harris, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; pro. to 1st lieut., Co. E; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Pascal James, Jr., Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; killed at Petersburg, Va., June 18, 1864.
 Chas. A. Kellogg, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862.
 Theodore P. Kingsley, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Albert C. Kinney, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. for wounds, Aug. 21, 1863.
 Wm. M. Knapp, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; killed in action, May 6, 1864, in battle of Wilderness.
 Henry Leonard, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; died April 1, 1864.
 Solomon C. Lacore, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Lewis Lanier, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; died Feb. 5, 1863.
 Waldo Ludden, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 James Mitchell, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Thomas McKnight, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862.
 Joshua May, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Albert J. Munyan, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; on detached duty when regt. was must. out.
 Morris Moore, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; killed in Wilderness, May 6, 1864.
 Michael Melan, Co. K; must. Aug. 9, 1862.
 John Marcey, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Marcus T. Moody, capt., Co. G; must. Sept. 18,

1862; pro. to major, Dec. 5, 1863; disch. July 26, 1864.
 William C. Merrill, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Edward P. Nichols, Co. H; must. Aug. 15, 1862; disch. for disab., June 5, 1864.
 S. E. Nichols, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 John O'Brien, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Henry L. Pratt, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862.
 Horace P. Pratt, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Oscar C. Powell, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; sick in hospital when regt. was must. out.
 Chas. W. Phelps, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Ernest O. Pfiel, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; died April 6, 1865.
 Richard Porter, Co. H; must. Aug. 19, 1862; died Aug. 26, 1864.
 O. A. Parant, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Samuel Parent, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862.
 Mitchell Rushford, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862.
 Chas. W. Smith, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Austin H. Stockwell, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. for disab., Feb. 23, 1863.
 John W. Stockwell, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; pro. to 1st lieut.; disch. June 21, 1865.
 David G. Stockwell, Co. H; must. Aug. 27, 1862; disch. for disab., May 16, 1865.
 Lewis F. Stockwell, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Edward C. Stowell, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Jerome Sykes, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Albert G. Taylor, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Orson E. Train, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; in hospital when regt. was must. out.
 Henry D. Temple, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; killed in Wilderness, May 6, 1864.
 Ira Todd, Co. G; must. Aug. 30, 1862; sick when regt. was must. out.
 Geo. Stroug, Co. A; must. Sept. 3, 1862; disch. for disab., May 16, 1865.
 Wm. Burke, Co. K; must. Aug. 23, 1862.
 Michael Rowe, Co. K; must. Aug. 15, 1862.
 Edward H. Taylor, Co. G; must. Dec. 17, 1863.
 Jona. W. Phelps, Co. D; must. Feb. 20, 1864; died April 3, 1864.
 John D. Day, Co. A; must. Dec. 23, 1864; died, no date.
 James Berry, Co. F; must. Feb. 7, 1864.
 Joseph Cunningham, Co. G; must. Dec. 9, 1863; disch. July 16, 1865.
 John McGrath, Co. F; must. Feb. 7, 1864; trans. to 20th.

FIFTY-SECOND REGIMENT—NINE MONTHS.

Edw. L. Abercrombie, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Wm. L. Bolter, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Louis Beaugard, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Alex. H. Baker, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Jona. Bailey, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Jeremiah Broderick, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Albert L. Bartlett, Co. I; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Geo. S. Bliss, Co. G; must. Nov. 18, 1862; killed at Port Hudson, June 16, 1863.
 Chas. A. Belden, Co. C; must. Nov. 15, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Spencer Clark, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Edwin C. Clark, 1st lieut., Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Orman S. Clark, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.

Charles S. Clark, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 James W. Clark, 2d lieut., Co. I; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Luther A. Clark, 2d lieut., Co. C; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Geo. D. Clark, hosp. stew., Co. C; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Geo. W. Chapp, Co. C; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Fred. C. Clapp, Co. C; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 E. E. Cook, Jr., Co. C; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Royal Cook, Co. C; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Joseph M. Cole, Co. C; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Simeon B. Childs, Co. C; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 E. W. Cutler, Co. C; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Richard B. Davis, Jr., Co. C; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 John B. Darrow, Co. C; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Moses Elwell, Co. C; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Joseph French, Co. C; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Edward E. Graves, Co. C; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 L. D. Gould, Co. C; must. Oct. 11, 1862; killed at Port Hudson, June 14, 1863.
 Nathan P. Gould, Co. C; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Henry S. Gere, Co. C; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Henry Grosarth, Co. C; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Henry W. Gladden, Co. C; must. Oct. 11, 1862; died Aug. 6, 1863.
 John R. Hillman, 1st lieut., Co. C; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Geo. A. Hunt, Co. C; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Edward F. Hamlin, Co. C; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 William Hickey, Co. C; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 John Hannah, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Clevis A. Harley, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Geo. W. Harlow, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Dwight A. Johnson, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Thos. L. Jewett, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Levi R. Kellogg, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Judson L. Lee, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Chas. W. Moore, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; died at Port Hudson, July 9, 1863.
 Orin Q. Moore, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Luther A. Martin, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Edward Martin, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Nelson Marsh, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Francis M. Osdon, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Gerrit O'Neil, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862.
 Arthur B. Noble, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Wm. C. Pomeroy, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Albert R. Parsons, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Joseph P. Pray, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Spencer Phelps, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; died at Port Hudson, July 23, 1863.

Lewis M. Phelps, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Edward Potter, Co. I; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 John A. Pittsinger, Co. E; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Orrin M. Potter, Co. I; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Wm. J. Parker, Co. I; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Geo. W. Perigo, Co. A; must. Oct. 11, 1862; died at Baton Rouge, April 27, 1863.
 Frank Ready, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Alfred Riley, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Horace L. Richardson, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 John Ross, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862.
 David L. Sammis, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Francis A. Shaw, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 E. G. Southwick, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Geo. H. Strong, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Edward B. Strong, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Henry H. Strong, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 J. W. Strong, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; died in New York.
 Edwin D. Strong, Co. I; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 E. J. Smith, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Delos Smith, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 M. D. Smith, Co. C; Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Sidney C. Smith, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; died at Brazier City, La., May 29, 1863.
 Mark H. Spaulding, captain, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Edward A. Stevens, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Edward M. Twiss, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Henry E. Thompson, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Elen W. Thayer, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 John N. Thayer, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Leander Triegner, Co. C; must. Oct. 6, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 John B. Taylor, Co. I; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Truman A. Taylor, Co. I; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Wm. B. Wilson, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Martin L. Williston, Co. K; must. Oct. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Lewis L. White, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; died at Baton Rouge, Feb. 11, 1863.
 Nathan T. Warren, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; died at Baton Rouge, May 15, 1863.
 Albert A. Willis, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; died Aug. 14, 1863.
 Alphonso Witherell, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Joseph M. Warner, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Franklin G. Waite, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; died Feb. 14, 1863.
 Salmon Waite, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Henry M. Whitney, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Edward A. Whitney, sergt.-maj., Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Charles L. Wright, quartermaster, Co. C; must. Oct. 2, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Wm. Burrow, Co. A; must. Dec. 26, 1861; disch. July 12, 1865.

Thomas Farrell, Co. A; must. Jan. 21, 1864; disch. July 12, 1865.

FIFTY-SEVENTH REGIMENT—THREE YEARS.

John H. Cook, 1st lieut., Co. A; must. Nov. 27, 1863; disch. for disab., Dec. 27, 1864.
 John Cahill, Jr., Co. E; must. Feb. 2, 1864.
 Edwin J. Gough, Co. E; must. Sept. 1, 1864.
 John Gray, Co. E; must. Jan. 16, 1864.
 James O. Halloran, Co. E; must. Jan. 28, 1864; disch. for disab., Oct. 29, 1864.
 Martin Haley, Co. I; must. March 10, 1864; died Oct. 16, 1864.
 Joseph L. Bastin, Co. E; must. Feb. 18, 1864.
 Thomas O. Keef, Co. E; must. Feb. 18, 1864; disch. July 30, 1865.
 Michael O'Connor, Co. E; must. Jan. 4, 1864; killed in action, May 6, 1864.
 Sylvester Myers, Co. I; must. March 10, 1864; disch. for disab., Dec. 17, 1864.
 Thos. Timothy, Co. E; must. Jan. 2, 1864; disch. for disab., March 1, 1864.
 Chas. Sidel, Co. I; must. March 10, 1864; disch. July 30, 1865.

FIFTY-NINTH REGIMENT—THREE YEARS.
 Fredk. Soulie, Co. G; must. Feb. 18, 1864; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps, Jan. 28, 1865.

SIXTY-FIRST REGIMENT—THREE YEARS.
 Alanson Coats, Co. H; must. Jan. 12, 1865; disch. July 15, 1865.
 Franklin O. Pierce, Co. H; must. Jan. 12, 1865; disch. July 15, 1865.

FIRST CAVALRY—THREE YEARS.

Wallace S. Clark, Co. E; must. Aug. 25, 1864; disch. May 8, 1865.
 Henry D. Graves, Co. A; must. Dec. 29, 1863.
 Edward S. Kneeland, Co. F; must. Aug. 20, 1862; re-enl. Dec. 20, 1863; disch. June 26, 1865.
 Thomas O. Donnell, Co. M; must. Dec. 15, 1863; disch. June 6, 1865.
 Philip Purcell, Co. E; must. Oct. 31, 1861; missing in action.
 Franklin Prince, Co. M; must. Dec. 24, 1863; disch. June 26, 1865.
 Lewis E. Prince, Co. M; must. Jan. 14, 1864; disch. June 26, 1865.
 Wm. C. Pelton, Co. M; must. Jan. 14, 1864.
 Chas. H. Thayer, Co. E; must. Aug. 20, 1862; disch. June 26, 1865.

SECOND CAVALRY—THREE YEARS.

Henry Anderson, Co. K; must. June 3, 1864.
 Chas. E. Bosworth, Co. C; must. July 19, 1864.
 Horatio W. Fern, Co. B; must. July 19, 1864; disch. July 28, 1865.
 Chas. Green, Co. H; must. June 7, 1864.
 Hugh F. Gallagher, Co. H; must. July 16, 1864.
 James Jordan, Co. K; must. July 3, 1864; disch. July 20, 1865.
 Thomas Jones, Co. K; must. Aug. 29, 1864.
 Bernard Kelley, Co. C; must. March 31, 1864.
 John Mahen, Co. C; must. July 16, 1864.
 John O'Brien, Co. A; must. June 6, 1864; disch. July 20, 1865.
 Wm. Riley, Co. K; must. June 4, 1864.
 Joseph P. Tracy, Co. K; must. July 16, 1864.
 David Thompson, Co. K; must. June 6, 1864.
 Wm. S. Wells, Co. H; must. June 20, 1863.
 John Williams, Co. K; must. June 3, 1864.
 Wm. Wildo, Co. K; must. June 8, 1864.

THIRD CAVALRY—THREE YEARS.

Frary Muller, must. June 1, 1864.
 Nicholas Boek, must. July 22, 1864.
 Fredk. Baker, must. July 22, 1864.
 John Boersche, must. July 22, 1864.

FOURTH CAVALRY—THREE YEARS.

Wm. H. Warner, must. July 21, 1864.
 Chas. Henry, must. July 21, 1864.
 John Allen, must. July 21, 1864.
 Robert Anderson, must. July 21, 1864.
 James Crogan, must. July 21, 1864.

FIFTY-SIXTH REGIMENT.

Wm. Burrow, Co. A; must. Dec. 26, 1861; disch. July 12, 1865.

L B Williams

Henry G. Bickford, Co. F; must. Jan. 27, 1864; disch. July 6, 1865.
 Joseph Eames, Co. B; must. Feb. 24, 1865; disch. Nov. 14, 1865.
 Riley Chase, Co. E; must. Jan. 27, 1864; disch. June 8, 1865.
 Jeremiah Cragin, Co. F; must. Jan. 27, 1864.
 Jeremiah Deo, Co. F; must. Jan. 27, 1864.
 Chas. Fish, Co. G; must. Jan. 27, 1864; disch. Nov. 14, 1865.
 Wm. McDonald, Co. G; must. Jan. 27, 1864; disch. Nov. 14, 1865.
 Frank Morey, Co. G; must. Jan. 27, 1864.
 Walworth Smith, capt., Co. G; must. Jan. 19, 1864; disch. Nov. 14, 1865.
 Thomas Kilmartin, Co. II; must. Jan. 12, 1864; died Nov. 1, 1864.

FIFTH CAVALRY.

Chas. Thompson, Co. E; must. Jan. 4, 1864; disch. Oct. 31, 1865.
 Geo. W. Clark, must. Aug. 24, 1864.

FIRST HEAVY ARTILLERY.

Wm. W. Graves, Co. E; must. Nov. 2, 1863; disch. Aug. 16, 1865.
 Wm. W. Harvey, Co. E; must. Nov. 2, 1863; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps, March 18, 1865.
 Charles E. Moore, Co. E; must. Nov. 11, 1863; killed in action, April 2, 1865.
 Edward Oberempt, Co. G; must. Dec. 21, 1863; disch. Aug. 16, 1865.
 Orange H. Richardson, Co. D; must. Dec. 10, 1863; disch. Aug. 16, 1865.
 Lorenzo Cady, Co. M; must. July 18, 1864; disch. Aug. 16, 1865.
 George W. Foster, Co. B; must. Aug. 24, 1864; disch. May 22, 1865.
 Cornelius Geary, Co. B; must. June 7, 1864.
 David H. Kneeland, Co. D; must. July 20, 1864; disch. Aug. 16, 1865.

SECOND HEAVY ARTILLERY.

John P. Blackman, Co. G; must. Oct. 20, 1863; trans. to U. S. Col. Troops.
 Stephen Bulley, Co. C; must. Sept. 2, 1864; disch. June 5, 1865.
 Frank Blodgett, Co. C; must. Sept. 1, 1864.
 Horace L. Clark, Co. C; must. Aug. 4, 1863; disch. for pro., Nov. 30, 1863.
 George Curran, Co. F; must. Oct. 5, 1863; disch. Sept. 5, 1865.
 Garrett Conden, Co. E; must. Sept. 1, 1864; trans. to 17th, Feb. 9, 1865.
 Samuel H. Douglass, Co. E; must. Oct. 5, 1863; disch. July 4, 1865.
 Henry T. Goetin, Co. II; must. July 26, 1864; trans. to 17th, Dec. 16, 1864.
 Charles E. Leonard, Co. M; must. July 16, 1864; disch. Sept. 3, 1865.
 Elisha Mather, Co. F; must. Oct. 21, 1863; disch. Sept. 3, 1865.
 Timothy Maley, Co. M; must. Sept. 2, 1864; trans. to 17th.
 Arnold Miller, Co. B; must. Jan. 2, 1864; disch. Sept. 3, 1865.
 Alfred Riley, Co. C; must. Sept. 2, 1864; trans. to 17th, Jan. 9, 1865.
 Peter Rice, Co. C; must. Sept. 7, 1864; trans. to 17th, Jan. 9, 1865.
 Edwin E. Ryther, Co. C; must. Sept. 3, 1864; disch. June 21, 1865.

Timothy Shea, Co. E; must. Sept. 1, 1864; trans. to 17th.

THIRD HEAVY ARTILLERY—THREE YEARS.

John V. Hennessey, Co. M; must. Aug. 23, 1864; disch. June 17, 1865.
 Nicholas Renke, Co. M; must. Aug. 23, 1864; disch. June 17, 1865.
 James H. Wiley, Co. M; must. Aug. 23, 1864; disch. June 17, 1865.
 William Carver, Co. M; must. Aug. 26, 1864; disch. June 17, 1865.
 John J. Kelly, Co. M; must. Aug. 26, 1864; disch. June 17, 1865.
 Peter Lynch, Co. M; must. Aug. 26, 1864; disch. June 17, 1865.

FOURTH HEAVY ARTILLERY.

Henry Hodsdon, Co. D; must. Sept. 1, 1864; disch. Sept. 12, 1865.

FOURTH U. S. ARTILLERY.

William L. Baker, 1st lieut., Co. E; must. Aug. 6, 1861; killed at Antietam, Sept. 17, 1862.

FIRST LIGHT BATTERY.

John W. Main, must. Dec. 29, 1864; disch. June 6, 1865.

THIRTEENTH LIGHT BATTERY.

Lewis Frederick, must. June 7, 1864; disch. July 28, 1865.

FIFTEENTH LIGHT BATTERY.

John Mack, must. Aug. 23, 1864; disch. June 19, 1865.

ANDREW SHARPSHOOTERS.

James P. Chenery (2d), must. March 8, 1862; disch. for disability.

REGULAR U. S. SERVICE.

Marcus R. Canfield, hosp. steward; must. Sept. 1, 1864; disch. June 10, 1865.

NAVAL SERVICE.

Anson R. Hitch, must. March 5, 1862, on "North Carolina."
 E. S. D. Howland, must. May 8, 1862, on "Connecticut."
 James B. Hopkins, must. Jan. 28, 1863, on "Ceres."
 Thomas Horner, must. April 23, 1861, on "Colorado."
 John Harper, must. April 23, 1861, on "Colorado."
 William H. Hughes, must. April 15, 1861, on "Colorado."
 John Haigh, must. April 15, 1861, on "Colorado."
 Peter Hammond, must. April 25, 1861, on "Colorado."
 Geo. Hickey, must. April 25, 1861, on "Colorado."
 James Huidle, must. April 25, 1861, on "Colorado."
 James Harrison, must. April 25, 1861, on "Colorado."
 Dennis Harrington, must. April 18, 1861, on "Colorado."
 Thomas F. Henderson, must. April 26, 1861, on "Colorado."
 Matthew J. Hall, must. April 27, 1861, on "Colorado."
 George A. Hathaway, must. April 27, 1861, on "Colorado."
 John Thomas, must. Oct. 18, 1862, on "Colorado."
 Thos. Young, must. Oct. 20, 1862, on "Colorado."
 Wm. Zoller, must. Oct. 10, 1862, on "Colorado."

James Hayde, must. April 24, 1861, on "Bainbridge."
 Charles Haulder, must. April 24, 1861, on "Bainbridge."
 Wm. E. Harrison, must. April 27, 1861, on "Bainbridge."
 John Harris, must. April 22, 1861, on "Mississippi."
 Henry Ivers, must. April 15, 1861, on "Minnesota."
 Chas. James, must. April 9, 1861, on "Minnesota."
 Joseph Jewett, must. April 13, 1861, on "Minnesota."
 John Jackman, must. April 20, 1861, on "Minnesota."
 David Jones, must. April 24, 1861, on "Minnesota."
 John Williams, must. Nov. 28, 1862, on "Minnesota."
 John White, must. Dec. 6, 1862, on "Minnesota."
 Alonzo Wardbeck, must. Dec. 6, 1861, on "Minnesota."
 Francis Doyle, must. Sept. 18, 1862, on "New York."
 Michael Daley, must. Sept. 24, 1862, on "New York."
 Wm. F. Denman, must. Sept. 27, 1862, on "New York."
 Alex. Davis, must. Sept. 22, 1862, on "New York."
 John Orms, must. Oct. 31, 1862, on "Ossipe."
 David J. Parker, must. Oct. 21, 1862, on "Rhode Island."
 Robert Masters, must. Nov. 18, 1862, on "Rhode Island."
 Jacob Hackerman, must. Nov. 18, 1862, on "Rhode Island."
 John Welmes, must. Nov. 18, 1862, on "Rhode Island."
 Thos. P. Webber, must. Nov. 24, 1862, on "Rhode Island."
 David Wharton, must. Nov. 29, 1862, on "Rhode Island."
 Peter White, must. Nov. 29, 1862, on "Rhode Island."
 Wm. Payne, must. Sept. 11, 1862, on "Sabine."
 Adgih Young, must. Oct. 18, 1862, on "Sabine."
 Edward Zaller, must. Oct. 10, 1862, on "Sabine."
 Spragne S. Barren, must. Sept. 25, 1862, on "Sabine."
 Thos. H. Short, must. Aug. 31, 1864, on "Sabine."
 Joseph M. Warren, must. Aug. 21, 1864, on "Sabine."
 Charles Payne, must. Sept. 18, 1862, on "Trogan."
 John McDernsett, must. Nov. 20, 1862, on "Trogan."
 John McNeil, must. Nov. 20, 1862, on "King Fisher."
 George W. Wing, must. Nov. 10, 1862, on "King Fisher."
 Horatio N. Webster, must. Nov. 13, 1862, on "King Fisher."
 Charles Williams, must. Nov. 13, 1862, on "King Fisher."
 Thomas Walle, must. Nov. 13, 1862, on "King Fisher."
 Henry Ward, must. Nov. 13, 1862, on "King Fisher."
 Richard N. Wenberg, must. Nov. 13, 1862, on "King Fisher."
 Edward Williams, must. Nov. 12, 1862, on "Queen of the Sea."

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

L. B. WILLIAMS.

L. B. Williams was born in Becket, Berkshire Co., Mass., Feb. 3, 1825, and is a descendant of that sterling old patriot Roger Williams, whose name is familiar in history as the first settler in the State of Rhode Island. Dr. Leonard Williams, grandfather of L. B. Williams, was a leading physician in Chester for more than fifty years. His wife was the daughter of Deacon Benjamin Wadworth, of Becket, a citizen prominent in that portion of the county for his worth and influence. Jabin B. Williams, the father of the subject of this sketch, was for a long period a successful merchant in Chester.

L. B. Williams, whose name heads this article, received his education at "Mountain Seminary," at Worthington, and Wesleyan Academy, at Wilbraham. He was a diligent and careful student, and acquired an education that well qualified him for his subsequent successful business career. In 1846 he became associated with his father in the mercantile business at Huntington, formerly known as Chester Village, which he continued until 1850, when he began the industry of manufacturing baskets by machinery, and to him belongs the honor of establishing the first institution of the kind in this country. The business rapidly developed under his energetic management, and in 1862, desiring a more convenient location with better shipping facilities, he removed the business to Northampton, which gave it a new impetus, and to-day the "Williams Manufacturing Company," of which he is the head, is the largest one in the world engaged in the manufacture of this line of goods. It is larger than any other four concerns in the country, and than all the basket manufactures in New England combined. Mr. Williams resolved to manufacture none but the best quality of goods, which resolution he has strictly adhered to. He is instinctively a thorough business-man, prompt, active, and fearless in all transactions, and, in the language of an honored citizen of Northampton, "he has won a reputation as a business-man second to no one in this State."

In the political arena, although not active, he was identified with the Democratic party until the breaking out of the Rebellion, when he took a prominent part in the raising of troops, and has since voted the Republican ticket.

He has been a director in the old Northampton Bank seven years, and with Mr. Edwards took the laboring-oar in the bank troubles which followed the great robbery of 1876. He has been a trustee of the Hampshire Savings-Bank since its organization, and also treasurer of the Florence Sewing-Machine Company during its prosperous period.

In 1847 he was united in marriage with Harriet Louisa, daughter of Melvin Copeland, of Huntington, Mass., formerly of Hartford, Conn. Mr. Copeland was a leading man, intellectually and morally, in the community of which he was a part.

Mr. and Mrs. Williams have one child living, Harry L., who is at Yale College.

The Williams mansion in Northampton is a charming home, and is known as "the Whitmarsh Place," formerly the property of the late Samuel Whitmarsh, for a long time one of Northampton's leading citizens.

LUTHER BODMAN.

The subject of this sketch dates his ancestry in this country to John Bodman, one of the earliest settlers at the Bay, and whose wife was a member of the "Old South Church." He had three sons,—John, born Aug. 6, 1645, Manoh, born March 6, 1647, and Joseph, born Oct. 17, 1653. No further record is found of the first two, but Joseph next appears in Westfield, in 1681, and subsequently in Hatfield. He died in Hatfield May 11, 1711, and the unique old stone still marks his resting-place. He had a family of seven children, who settled in Sunderland, Deerfield, and Hatfield. Samuel, youngest son of Joseph, was born about 1709, and had a family of seven children, three of whom—Joseph, Samuel, and William—removed from Hatfield to Williamsburg, and settled there during the years 1770-75. Joseph died Sept. 3, 1818, aged eighty-eight; Samuel, June 26, 1827, aged ninety-one; and William, Jan. 15, 1835, aged ninety-four, the united ages of the three being 273 years. William was a prominent man in the district, and afterward town, of Williamsburg, was a member of the convention that framed the State constitution, and repeatedly represented the town in the Legislature. Luther and Clarissa Bodman, father of L. B., had a family of six sons and one daughter; five of the sons are now living. The father died at the age of eighty-five.

The subject of this sketch passed his boyhood on the old farm at Williamsburg, working summers and attending the district school winters, where he received a common-school education. At the age of nineteen he left the farm, and entered a country store as clerk, and at the age of twenty-three went into business at Charlemont, Mass., for himself, with a capital of $200. For the first four or five years he made no headway in the business, and in 1842 went West for the purpose of trafficking in wool and woolen goods, and trading with the manufacturers. Here his energy and executive ability found ample scope for development. This business was successful, and continued for about twelve years, he in the mean time keeping the store at Charlemont.

In 1854 he retired from active business, and, removing to Williamsburg, located on the old farm by his father. He was solicited by Gen. James S. Whitney, who was residing in Conway, to assist in organizing a bank at that place. The bank was organized, and he was chosen its president, which position he occupied until 1864, when he resigned to take the presidency of the Hampshire County National Bank at Northampton, which was organized through his instrumentality. It was thought by wise heads that a new bank could not live beside the time-honored institutions of this old town, but time has proved this a mistake, as the bank has ever flourished, and at present has a capital of $250,000 and a surplus of $50,000. Its success has been chiefly due to the ripe experience of Mr. Bodman in banking, and its able and efficient cashier, Mr. Lewis Warner, who has occupied that position fourteen years. The new bank building is one of the finest specimens of architecture in the village, and, for the beauty and safety of its interior arrangements, is said to be one of the best in Western Massachusetts. The Hampshire Savings-Bank is also kept in this building, of which Mr. Bodman is president and Mr. Warner treasurer.

Mr. Bodman, with that keen foresight that ever characterizes a successful business-man, early saw that the then undeveloped West must eventually "blossom like the rose," and in 1854 entered with others of the government a large tract of land in Piatt Co., Ill., and he still retains a large farm, upon which, in addition to other crops, he raises one hundred and fifty tons of broom corn per year, which he ships East and sells mainly throughout this valley. The farm is not, however, exclusively devoted to crops, as he annually feeds about three hundred hogs, grinding and cooking their feed on the farm. It is beautifully located in one of the best sections of the State, and has twelve miles of Osage orange hedge. Mr. Bodman still retains the "old paternal acres" at Williamsburg, which have been in the possession of the Bodman family over a century.

Mr. Bodman has always manifested a lively interest in public matters, and, although not an active politician, has held various offices within the gift of his fellow-citizens. While at Charlemont he held the offices of selectman, town treasurer, deputy-sheriff, postmaster, and trial-justice.

June 26, 1838, he united in marriage with Philena N. Hawks, a native of Charlemont, Mass., and their family consists of four children, viz.: Edward C., now a grain and commission merchant, doing business in Toledo and Baltimore, but residing in the former city. He is a prominent business-man, and is director in two banks. Luther W. is a resident of Bement, Ill., and is a member of the banking firm of Bryant & Bodman. He is also engaged in the grain and commission business. Nellie R. is the wife of Rev. C. H. Parkhurst, Congregational clergyman, residing at Lennox, Mass. The other daughter, Miss Clara P., is unmarried, and at the present time is traveling in Europe.

In religious matters Mr. Bodman evinces the same spirit of enterprise that marks his business career, and is an active and leading member of the Edwards Church. Politically, he is a Democrat.

Luther Peckham

D. W. Bond

H. W. Thompson

DANIEL W. BOND.

The subject of this sketch is a descendant of William Bond, who settled in Watertown, Mass., in 1630, and a branch of the Bond family, which located in Canterbury in the year 1710. Daniel W. is a son of Daniel H. Bond and Deborah White, the former a native of Canterbury, Conn., and the latter of Tunbridge Wells, England. She was the daughter of Rev. George S. White, who emigrated to America in 1812.

Daniel W. Bond was born in Canterbury, Windham Co., Conn., April 29, 1838. His boyhood was passed at home at work for neighboring farmers and attending the "district school" during the summer and winter as much as the duties of the farm would allow until ten years of age, when he abandoned the summer school, only attending during the winter season, until sixteen years of age. In the mean time, however, young Bond had advantages that all boys in country towns during this period did not enjoy. His father, though not a man of large property, was highly intellectual, and he provided himself and his children with some of the leading periodicals of the day, and among his books were found some choice and valuable works. The intellectual and studious traits of the father descended to the children, and during these years the subject of this sketch acquired a vast fund of knowledge which was not valueless in his subsequent career. At the age of sixteen years he entered the private school in his native town taught by William Kinnie, now of Ithaca, N. Y. He subsequently attended the Plainfield Academy, then under the charge of Rev. Lucien Burleigh, and still later the normal school at New Britain, Conn. A portion of the time, also, he was assisted in his studies by the Rev. Robert C. Learned, the settled minister of the parish where he lived, and by Charles C. Burleigh.

If we were to place before the reader a list of names of the distinguished attorneys, divines, and physicians of this State, many of whom have risen to exalted positions in their various spheres, who at one period in their career taught the "district school" and enjoyed the felicity of "boarding round," that list would indeed be a large one. Mr. Bond was no exception to this rule. His previous education had fitted him for successfully wielding the sceptre of the "district school," and during three winters he "taught school" and "boarded round" in his native town and vicinity.

In 1859, having resolved to enter the legal profession, he commenced the study of the law in the office of Daniel Frost, Esq., of Canterbury, a celebrated temperance lecturer. Soon after, however, he went to Florence, Mass., and taught an evening school for a year and a half,—the latter portion of the time teaching the day school also,—while he continued reading law, and also perfected himself in phonography.

In the fall of 1860 he entered the Columbia College law-school at New York, then, as now, under the charge of Theodore W. Dwight. He pursued his studies with diligence and attention, passing his vacation in the law-office of William Dyer, Esq., at Central Village, Conn. He graduated in 1862, and won the proud distinction of obtaining the prize of two hundred dollars, awarded in the department of political science, then under the charge of Dr. Francis Lieber.

After graduating he returned to his native town, and was admitted to the Bar in Windham County, at the August term of the Supreme Court, in 1862. He then went to Providence, R. I., and entered the office of Benjamin T. Eames,—now a member of Congress from Rhode Island,—and was admitted to the Bar of that State in February, 1863. In the following May he united in marriage with Susan J. Dyer, daughter of Mr. Hervey R. Dyer, of Canterbury, and removed to Florence, Mass., and for several years acted as the attorney for the Florence Sewing-Machine Company. He found this position suited to his taste, as it required a thorough knowledge of the patent laws, in which he became proficient, and has ever since had considerable practice in this branch of the law. After ceasing to act as attorney for the machine company, he conducted a general law-business at Florence, and in 1869 his youngest brother—who had studied law with him, and graduated at the Columbia College law-school, where he took the prize in the department of political science—became a partner, and the business was continued by them until May, 1870, when they formed a copartnership with Hon. William Allen, a legal practitioner in Northampton for more than twenty years. The firm had an office in both Florence and Northampton until 1872, when Mr. Allen was appointed judge of the Superior Court of Massachusetts, and the Florence office was discontinued. The business was then conducted under the firm-name of D. W. & H. H. Bond until 1875, when J. B. Bottum, Esq., who had studied law with them, became a member of the firm. He was also a graduate of the Columbia College law-school. The firm has since been Bond Bros. & Bottum.

In 1877, D. W. Bond was elected to the office of district attorney for the northwestern judicial district, which comprises the counties of Hampshire and Franklin. Previous to his election the firm had attended to the general law-business, but upon the senior member's elevation to this office they ceased to act for defendants in criminal cases, and Mr. Bond refused to become either counselor or advocate in criminal cases, except in his official capacity.

It may truthfully be written that while Mr. Bond has ever been interested in political affairs, as it is the duty of every citizen to be, still he never has been a partisan. With the "Know-Nothings" he did not sympathize, believing it intolerable to make any distinction in regard to Irishmen in consequence of their nationality, and he believed slavery wrong, and never had that prejudice against colored people that some men seemed to have. He sympathized with the Republican party and cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln, and became a great admirer of him as a great and wise man. After the war he was in full accord with the teaching of the precept, "with malice toward none and charity for all." He voted for Gen. Grant at his first election, but, like others throughout the Union, as his administration drew toward its close became dissatisfied with him, and when the movement which resulted in the Cincinnati convention was set on foot he was in sympathy with it, was an earnest, outspoken "Greeley man," and received the nomination for Congress on the Greeley ticket. Although receiving a large vote, he was defeated. In 1876, although not much could be hoped for in the platform, the letter of acceptance seemed to presage an advance in the right direction, and he acted with the Republicans. He has always voted with the Republicans in the State elections. He believes in reform, and says he does not think that he was ever constituted for a party man.

Mr. Bond says that as he looks back upon his life during the period from 1856 to the time he graduated at the law-school, he can see that it had its hardships as well as advantages over any other; that when he commenced his studies he had nothing, and was obliged to work and earn from year to year the greater part of what was necessary to pay his expenses; that during that period he was aided by a number of persons, without whose assistance he might never have gone on, but that he attributes his success, so far as he has attained any, more to the assistance and encouragement which he received from his oldest sister than to the assistance of any other person.

Mr. Bond has ever manifested an interest in public men and measures, and has labored earnestly to advance the welfare of the community wherein he resides.

AUSTIN WHITE THOMPSON, A.M., M.D.

It is the historian's pleasure to place upon his page "passing incidents" in the lives of men whose energy and talents are devoted to the relief of the unfortunate and the amelioration of the human race.

And such we find to have been the career of the subject of this sketch, who was born in Pelham, Hampshire Co., Mass., May 22, 1834. His father, Peleg Pierce Thompson, died when the doctor was only four years of age, and the child came to Northampton, joining the family of his uncle, Dr. Daniel Thompson, then the leading physician of this county. The rudiments of his education were obtained at the excellent high school of the town, and he subsequently became a student in what was at that time known as the Northampton Collegiate Institute, a flourishing and celebrated institution, conducted by Lewis J. Dudley, in the very building now occupied by Dr. Thompson. He decided upon taking a thorough collegiate course, and after completing his studies at this institution was prepared for college by Rev. Rufus Ellis, at present editor of the Christian Register, of Boston.

Pursuing the curriculum of studies at Harvard College, he graduated in 1854 with the commencement honor of the "salutatory" oration. His taste and proficiency in college work were in the direction of the languages and intellectual philosophy.

Among other distinguished men of his class were Gen. Chas. R. Lowell, who fell at the memorable battle of Winchester; Truman Henry Safford; William J. Potter, one of the leading freethinkers of the age; H. H. Furness, of Philadelphia; and Hon. William Wirt Warren, now a member of Congress from Boston. Dr. Thompson manifested in subsequent years a decided interest in mental philosophy, and for a number of years during the life of the late Samuel Bowles was a valued contributor on special subjects to the Springfield Republican.

Soon after graduating he read law a few months with Judge Huntington, and then began the study of medicine in the office of his uncle in Northampton. Here he remained a short time, and during his practice made a specialty of mental diseases, and upon the opening of the insane hospital at Northampton he was appointed assistant superintendent. Previously, however, to the opening of this institution he was ordered to visit the asylums at Taunton and Worcester, for the purpose of becoming familiarized with the manner of treatment, etc. He retained the position of assistant superintendent at the asylum about two years, when for reasons of health he returned to the general practice of medicine, making a specialty, as mentioned above, of mental diseases and diseases of women, until quite logically he created, in the line of his aptitude and experience, the institution which has already rendered him famous, known as "Shady Lawn, a Medical Home for Invalids."* He was president of the Hampshire County Medical Society in 1856 and 1857, and is now a member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, etc. Dr. Thompson has one child, Caroline Anna, now seventeen years of age, whose mother died in the child's infancy.

OSMORE O. ROBERTS, M.D.,

son of Charles and Hannah Roberts, was born in Lyndon, Vt., Oct. 27, 1828. His boyhood was passed in his native town, attending school at Lyndon Academy. As he approached the age of manhood he manifested a decided liking for medical study, and finally resolved to enter the lists as a medical student, with a determination to make it a life-work. Accordingly, in 1850 he began the study of the profession with Dr. H. J. Cate, with whom he remained two years, and then removed to Concord, N. H., and finished his studies with Drs. Morrill and Cate. He pursued his studies with diligence and attention, and after attending two courses of medical lectures at the medical college at Woodstock, Vt., went to Philadelphia and entered the Pennsylvania Homeopathic College, where he graduated in 1853. Among other distinguished men of his class may be mentioned William Todd Helmoth, now a celebrated surgeon in New York, and Dr. I. T. Talbot, a distinguished physician residing in Boston.

Soon after graduating, Dr. Roberts located in Milford,

N. H., and entered into the active practice of his profession. Here he remained until 1857, when, desiring a more extended field for his labors, he removed to Northampton, and formed a copartnership with his brother, Dr. George W. Roberts, with whom he continued about two years, when the copartnership was dissolved, and the doctor has since continued the practice alone.

When Dr. Roberts came to Northampton there were but few families favorable to the homeopathic practice. After a few years this state of affairs began to change, and he has since enjoyed an extended and remunerative practice, and today is ranked among the leading physicians of Western Massachusetts. He has ever manifested a decided interest in the advancement of the homeopathic school, and during the year the Western Massachusetts Homeopathic Medical Society was organized became a member, and is now president of that society. In 1857 he married Emilie E., daughter of Abial and Mary L. Eastman, a native of Danville, Vt.

JOSEPHUS CRAFTS

is the eldest of a family of ten children, and was born in South Deerfield, Franklin Co., Mass., March 2, 1810. Chester Crafts, his father, was born in Whately, Mass., in 1783; he died in 1827, and thus at the age of seventeen the subject of this sketch was thrown upon his own resources. His opportunities for acquiring an education had been very poor, for the common schools of that day were vastly inferior to those of the present, and his father's straitened means could furnish him no better advantages than these afforded. He showed, however, at an early age that he possessed both industry and perseverance, and the lessons learned in the "school of adversity" are not easily forgotten. In 1828 he went to Greenfield, and entered the employ of Hiram Root, as hostler, receiving eight dollars per month for six months. He then commenced driving the stage from Greenfield to New Salem, and afterward from Greenfield to Ashfield, receiving twelve dollars per month until 1832. He afterward purchased Mr. Abererombie's team and drove between Greenfield and Ashfield until 1835, when he went to Hancock, and bought two stage teams, one on the Union and one on the Phoenix line. He remained in that place only a few months, and then, disposing of his interest, returned to Ashfield and purchased the team he had originally bought of Mr. Abererombie, and drove the stage from Greenfield to Ashfield, with an extension to South Adams. At the expiration of a year he again sold out, purchased a farm, and leased the hotel in Ashfield. He soon sold his lease, but kept the farm until May, 1851, when he removed to Berkshire County and engaged in the hotel and livery business, in which he remained two years. At the expiration of that period he returned to Ashfield, where he resided, with the exception of two years spent in Shelburne Falls, until 1869, when he retired from active business and removed to Northampton, where he now resides. By industry, perseverance, and economy he has acquired a competency, and by a life of integrity has gained the confidence and respect of all with whom he has been associated. He has been a member of the Congregational Church since 1841, and has filled many offices of trust in the towns in which he has resided. In 1855 he was elected director of the Conway National Bank, and also of Shelburne Bank; but as, in accordance with the laws of the State, he could hold but one of these offices, he accepted the former, and has filled that position up to the present time,—a period of over twenty-three years. He is also a director of the Hampshire County Bank, and trustee of the Hampshire Savings-Bank. During the past eight years his time has been much occupied with the duties of executor, administrator, trustee, etc., he having during this period settled sixty-seven estates. Mr. Crafts was married Feb. 13, 1833, to Roxie D., second daughter of Lyman Cross. By this union he had six children, only two of whom are living at present (December, 1878).

* See history of "Shady Lawn," elsewhere.

Josephus Crafts

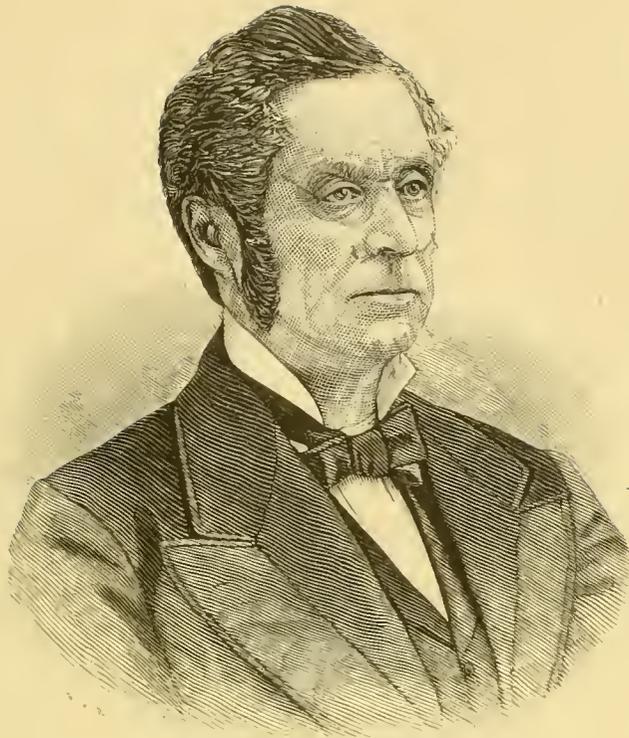

Photo. by Hardie & Schadee.

H. A. Longley

Prominent among the pioneer families of Western Massachusetts was that of Longley, descendants of which are still reckoned among the leading and honored residents of this locality.

Henry A. Longley, the subject of this sketch, is a native of Hawley, born Jan. 5, 1814. His father, Col. Joshua Longley, was a native of Hawley, and his mother, Elizabeth F. Hawks, was born in Charlemont. Mr. Longley's boyhood was passed in his native town, where he attended the common and select schools, finishing his education at the Bennington (Vt.) Seminary. He was a diligent student, and at the age of nineteen had obtained an education sufficient to enable him to teach school, and during the years 1833, 1834, and 1835 he enjoyed the felicity of teaching school and boarding round in the towns of Agawam, Springfield, Grafton, etc.

His father, Col. Joshua, was a merchant in Belchertown, and after young Longley ceased his labors as teacher he entered the store of his father as clerk, and in 1837 became a partner in the business, and remained there twenty years.

Major Longley, as he is familiarly called, was fond of the military, and was major in the old militia. He ever manifested an active interest in the affairs of his native town and county, and was clerk, treasurer, and collector of Belchertown for eleven years, and represented that town in the Legislature in the years 1849, 1852, and 1854. In 1855 he was appointed sheriff, which he held by appointment two years, when the office was made elective. During the two years of his service he discharged the duties of the office in so faithful a manner, and so thoroughly satisfied his fellow-citizens, that he was then elected to the office, and has since been chosen to that position at each successive election. A quarter of a century in one official position! Certainly a sufficient commentary upon the manner in which he has discharged the duties of that important office. Kind and considerate, though firm, he always wins the respect of those whose fortune it is to be placed in his keeping, and that he is prompt and fearless in the administration of his office, and that he discharges its manifold duties to the satisfaction of the electors of old Hampshire, is evinced by his long term of office.

Sheriff Longley always manifests an interest in all projects tending to the public good. As a father he is kind and affectionate; as a citizen, upright and generous; and as a public official, ever faithful to his trust. Politically he is a Republican, and prior to the organization of that party was a Whig.

He was married in Belchertown, Oct. 16, 1839, to Eliza O. Smith, of Belchertown, daughter of Obed Smith. They have had two children,—William Hyde Longley, died at the age of nine years; and Sylvia Elizabeth, who resides with her parents.

H. K. PARSONS.

The ancestors of the gentleman whose name appears at the head of this sketch were residents of Enfield, Conn., for nearly two hundred years: Philip, born in 1697; Nathaniel, born in 1736; Josiah, born in 1776; and Josiah, born in 1804. His grandmother was a daughter of Daniel Kellogg, an officer in the Revolutionary war.

H. K. Parsons, son of Josiah Parsons and Lucy Markham Parsons, was born in Enfield, Conn., Sept. 11, 1835. He remained in his native town until he was eighteen years of age, and was educated at Thompsonville and the Wilbraham Academy.

At the breaking out of the Rebellion he was in the mercantile business in Thompsonville, Conn.; but, with that patriotism which distinguished the sons of this old commonwealth, he left the store for the battle-field, enlisting in October, 1861, in Company C, 10th Regiment Infantry. Lieut. Parsons participated in many of the severest battles of the war.

He was in the Burnside expedition; battles of Roanoke Island; Newbern, N. C.; siege of Charleston, S. C.; St. Augustine, Fla.; Walthall Junction, Va.; Drury's Bluff; Bermuda Hundred; Strawberry Plains; Deep Bottom; Deep Run; siege of

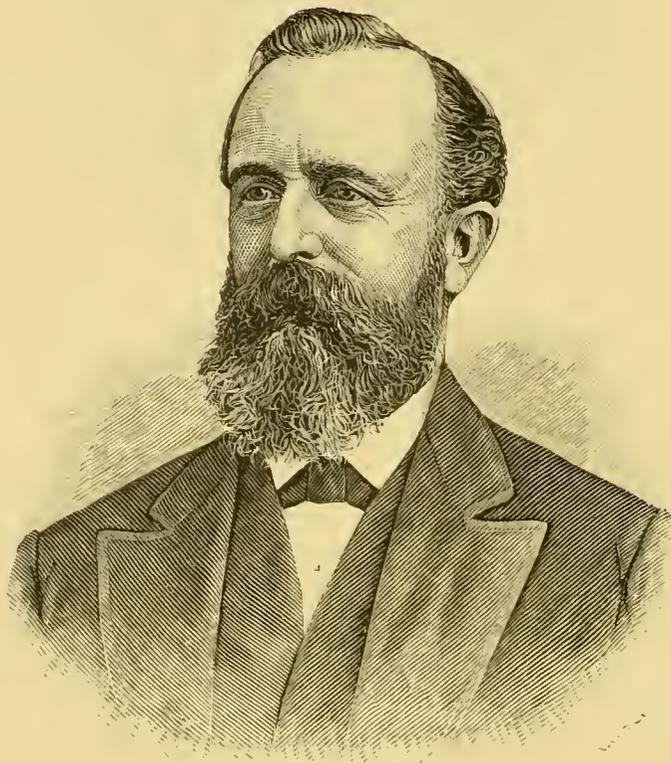

Photo. by Hardie & Schaefer.

H. K. Parsons

Petersburg; Hatcher's Run; Fort Gregg; and Appomattox Court-House. Was commissioned 1st lieutenant and regimental quartermaster, and was detailed for special service on staff of Gen. J. R. Hawley, in the expedition to New York, at the reelection of President Lincoln. Served on staffs of Gens. H. M. Plaisted and G. B. Dandy, as brigade commissary, and with Maj.-Gen. John Gibbon, as assistant quartermaster of the 24th Army Corps. He was mustered out, with regiment, Aug. 25, 1865.

In January, 1867, he moved to Florence, Mass., and for ten years was agent and manager of the Florence Mercantile Company, one of the most successful co-operative stores in the State.

In 1860 he united in marriage with Sarah A. Leavitt, at Thompsonville, Conn. Their family consists of five children, viz., H. Lincoln, Charles O., Royal A., George K., and Harry M.

He has always commanded the utmost respect of the citizens of Florence, and has been a justice of the peace ten years. Politically, he is a Republican; in religious matters, a Methodist.

Lieut. Parsons is now engaged in the coal and flour trade at Florence, and has a fine residence on Main Street.

Geo. F. Misher

Photos. by Moffitt, Springfield.

Amundson

ANSEL WRIGHT

was of the eighth generation from Samuel Wright, who came from England and settled in Northampton in 1654. The father of Ansel was Asahel Wright, a Revolutionary soldier, who had two sons and one daughter,—Chester, Ansel, and Anna. Ansel Wright was born in Northampton, Oct. 29, 1797, and died Feb. 19, 1872. His parents were in humble circumstances, and were in part supported by him. He had few advantages of schooling, but possessed natural abilities of a high order, and which made him one of the most successful of business-men. From 1815 to 1825 he was in the employ of Hon. Lewis Strong, and in 1823, having saved from his earnings $115, he formed a copartnership with Theodore Rust, their united capital being $236. They commenced the grocery business in the basement of the old town-hall building. During the first two years of their copartnership he continued to work for Mr. Strong, assisting Mr. Rust in the evenings, after which he went into the store and continued until the firm expired by limitation, after an existence of twenty-five years. The firm-name of Wright & Rust was like a household word to the citizens of Northampton. It was successful to a large degree, not by reason of its speculations, but by reason of its careful, persistent, and steady application of correct business principles. On the dissolution of the firm in 1848, Mr. Wright associated with himself his son, George F. Wright, and continued in trade, afterward admitting as a partner another son, Ansel, the firm at first being Ansel Wright & Son, then G. F. Wright & Co, and last, A. Wright & Co.

Ansel Wright was a deputy-sheriff for Hampshire County or constable for the town of Northampton thirty-eight years, and during the most of that time he held both those offices. He was also deputy-sheriff for Franklin County sixteen years, and for Hampden County fourteen years. During this time he did an amount of legal business that was almost wonderful. He was keeper of the jail and master of the house of correction one year, and was the first officer to set the prisoners at work for the benefit of the county.

He was collector and treasurer of the town of Northampton twenty-two successive years. During the war of the Rebellion he received and disbursed, as town treasurer, over a half-million dollars for State bounties to volunteers and their families. He was engineer and fire-warden of the town nineteen years, and was a coroner twenty-four years. He was active in the effort to establish the Northampton Savings-Bank, and was one of its trustees for several years.

Ansel Wright was one of the most active men that ever lived in Northampton, and perhaps no man in Hampshire County in a life of equal duration accomplished more. He possessed an iron constitution, which enabled him to endure a vast amount of hard labor and exposure. He was a man of wonderful perseverance and energy. He was never discouraged nor cast down; so self-possessed, so careful, cautious, and painstaking, so methodical and accurate, was he in all that he did, that he seldom, if ever, made a mistake. Considering the great amount of important and intricate business which he transacted and the delicate nature of a great portion of it, the accuracy which he displayed and the satisfaction which he always gave were most remarkable. His prisoners were always his friends. His business was largely with those who were in trouble; yet he ever maintained the most friendly relations with them all, and they regarded him rather as a helper and protector than as one armed with the hostile authority of the law. He was a kind-hearted man, and many will remember his acts of kindness and deeds of charity.

Politically, he was first a Democrat, then a Free-Soiler, and at the time of his death was a member of the Republican party.

Religiously, he was a Unitarian. He married Elizabeth Bolyn, daughter of Elijah Bolyn, of Northampton, and formerly of Enfield, Conn. Mrs. Wright died Sept. 10, 1848. By this union they had nine children,—seven sons and two daughters,—only one of whom, Ansel, is now living. One of the sons, Frederick C., was a promising officer (first lieutenant 27th Massachusetts Infantry) in the late war of the Rebellion, and died from the effects of a gun-shot wound received in the battle of Cold Harbor, Va. Another son, Chauncey, was a graduate of Cambridge University. He was noted as a mathematician and metaphysician, and was the author of several scientific works. He was extensively known among scientific men, numbering as his correspondents Canon Kingsley, Chas. Darwin, etc., and was a teacher in Professor Agassiz' school. He died in Cambridge, Sept. 12, 1875.

Ansel Wright, one of the present deputy-sheriffs of Hampshire County,—appointed in 1867,—inherits largely the qualities which distinguished his father. Nov. 22, 1858, he married Sarah L. Fitts, daughter of Robert Fitts, of Northampton, formerly of Leverett, Mass. They have four children, all living,—Elizabeth B., Frederick W., Lucy F., and Sarah H.

GEORGE F. WRIGHT,

eldest son of Ansel Wright, was born in Northampton, Mass., March 13, 1826. He was educated at the common schools of his native town, and was subsequently associated with his father in business in Northampton. He was appointed deputy-sheriff by Sheriff Hinckley in 1847, the day after he attained his majority, and continued in the uninterrupted and active discharge of the responsible duties of that office until his last illness.

He was remarkable for promptness, correctness, and efficiency in executing whatever business was intrusted to him, rarely failing to meet the highest expectations of those whom he served. He possessed a noble and generous nature and kindness of heart much beyond the average of men, and no one of the poor and humble, as well as the rich and influential, ever appealed to him in vain for words of sympathy or for an act of kindness. His business brought him much in contact with the poorer classes, and among them he numbered his chiefest mourners. Though always pressed with business, he never was too much engaged to afford the assistance required, so ready was he on all occasions to devote his time and labor to others; and so successful was he in advice and in execution that he came to be regarded as the one necessary man in the community, to whom all classes appealed in times of trouble, and with whom all rejoiced in days of prosperity. As may be naturally inferred, his friends were numerous, limited only by the extent of his acquaintance; and not only were they many in number, but strong and steadfast in their attachment and appreciation of his excellent qualities.

He was appointed deputy-collector of internal revenue for a large portion of Hampshire County when the revenue law first took effect, and gave the same degree of satisfaction in that office that distinguished him in others. He was one of the best accountants and general business managers in the county. His engagements were always faithfully fulfilled, for promptness, truthfulness, and conscientiousness were among his leading characteristics. His promise he never violated. As an officer of the town, and, in fact, in whatever situation he was placed,—being often summoned to positions of responsibility and trust,—he never failed to meet the public expectation. As a friend, he was faithful, steadfast, and true; as a citizen, upright, reliable, and public-spirited; and in his family he was all that the affectionate and trusting heart could wish.

He was an active supporter of the Free-Soil party, connecting himself with it when it was just forming, and later was a Republican. He was an active member of the Unitarian Society of Northampton, and its treasurer for many years.

Nov. 20, 1855, he married Hannah B. Fitts, by whom he had two children,—Harriet E. and George F. He died November 16, 1865.

GEN. JOHN LORD OTIS.

The subject of this sketch is a descendant of one of the oldest New England families, many of whose ancestors fought in the arduous struggle for American liberty. His mother was a member of the celebrated Lord family, of Lyme, Conn.

Samuel Otis was born in Lyme, New London Co., Conn., July 15, 1827. He was educated at the common schools in his native State, and early manifested a decided predilection for mechanical engineering, the study of which profession he pursued with diligence and attention, and soon became master of his business. He remained in South Manchester for four years, during which time he started for Messrs. Cheney Bros. the first set of machinery ever put in operation in the United States for the manufacture of silk and wool knit goods.

In 1859 he disposed of his interest in South Manchester, and returned to the Pacific Mills, which, during his absence, had been so unsuccessful in business as to necessitate their stoppage.

In 1851, after putting in operation several sets of delicate foreign machinery for the Pacific Manufacturing Company of Manchester, Conn., designed for the manufacture of knit goods, and which the men who accompanied the machinery from France were unable to put in operation, he remained for five years superintendent of the business, which was very successful. In 1855 he left this concern and established the Otis Manufacturing Company of South Manchester.

When war's "loud alarm" sounded over this republic, calling for brave men to strike at the hideous head of Rebellion, Mr. Otis promptly responded to the President's first call for troops, and in August, 1861, enlisted as a private in Company B of the 10th Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry; was made a second lieutenant in September, 1861, first lieutenant November 4th, and captain a week later. In November, 1862, was made major, colonel in February, 1863, and brevet brigadier-general, as his commission recites, "for special gallantry at the crossing of the James River, June 20, 1864, and at the battles of Flusser's Mills and Deep Run."

He was in all the engagements of Burnside's and Foster's commands in North Carolina, Roanoke Island, Newbern, Kinston, White-Hall, Goldsboro' Bridge, etc; was wounded once at the battle of Newbern, and twice at Kinston. At the latter place his regiment charged over three other regiments, who had been previously ordered to make the charge, but had halted and laid down. Col. Otis' regiment carried the position with the loss of one-third of the enlisted men engaged and seven commissioned officers, capturing twice as many prisoners as the regiment had men in the ranks, with several pieces of artillery. They drove the enemy across the Neuse River, and extinguished the fire which they had set to burn the bridge. Was twice wounded in this engagement, but continued with the command, and was the next day in the battle of Whitehall, and two days later in that of Goldsboro' Bridge. The battle of Kinston was fought on Sunday, Dec. 14, 1862.

In January, 1863, went to South Carolina with Gen. Foster's army, and commanded the advance in the capture of Seabrook Island, landing under the guns of Com. Geo. Rogers' monitor. Had a sharp skirmish with the enemy's cavalry at nine in the evening in front of Seabrook Mansion, drove the enemy off, and took possession of the causeway leading to John's Island. June 10th, while in command of a reconnoitring party of a small force of infantry and two guns, was attacked by a force of cavalry and artillery from John's Island, which they defeated and drove back. In July accompanied Terry's command to James and Morris Islands. On James Island two causeways, half a mile apart, connected that part of the island occupied by our forces with that occupied by the enemy. Col. Otis, with his regiment, the 10th Connecticut Volunteers, was ordered to advance over the causeway opposite our left, while Col. Shaw, with the 54th Massachusetts, performed the same movement on the right-hand causeway. During the night of the 14th the enemy planted two batteries at Grimball's plantation, just in front, and at daylight opened a fearful fire on the gunboat "Pawnee," lying in the Stone River, not one hundred yards distant, at the same time attacking the causeways; the 10th Connecticut held its ground and repulsed the enemy, but the 54th was driven back in confusion, suffering considerable loss, while the gunboat was compelled to slip her cables and drop down the stream to get range. The 10th did not retire until twice ordered to do so by Gen. Stevenson, their right and rear being exposed by the defeat of the 54th. The day following, Terry's entire command marched across Coles' to Morris Island.

A week later, having been so ill from malarial fever for three weeks as to be almost unfit for duty, was detailed to go North and take command of the conscript camp at New Haven, Conn. The camp had a regular garrison of eighty officers and five hundred men. The position was an arduous and disagreeable one, entailing constant care and watchfulness night and day. After remaining in command for two months was detailed by Gen. Dix to preside at a court-martial detail for the purpose of trying a number of officers for grave offenses. After presiding for six weeks, and finding that the court was liable to continue in session some time longer, asked to be relieved and ordered back to the front. Was relieved, joined the regiment at St. Augustine, Fla., in November, and was soon after placed in command of that post. Was relieved April 17, 1864, and ordered to join the Army of the James. Joined at Gloucester Point, and was in all the movements and engagements of that command.

On the 20th of June, Terry's division, with an additional brigade from Turner's, marched down to the James River after dark for the purpose of placing a pontoon-bridge across at Jones' Landing and capturing the position of Deep Bottom. But it was found that there would be so much delay it would be daylight before it was accomplished and the entire movement frustrated, and it was decided to send a small force across in boats to make the attack. Col. Otis was given the command and allowed to select any two regiments in the command. He took his own, the 10th Connecticut Volunteers, and the 11th Maine, commanded by Lieut.-Col. Hill, crossed just after midnight, carried the position, and held it, repulsing an attack of the enemy at sunrise, the main body getting across about eight o'clock. It was for this and his conduct at Flusser's Mills and Deep Run—at both of which he had command of the advance of his corps, and, at the latter, of the rear-guard in the retreat—that he was breveted a brigadier-general. At Strawberry Plain, in the latter part of July, with two regiments, he attacked and drove back a force of the enemy which had just driven in a brigade of the 19th Corps, and early the next morning, with the same regiments, drove the enemy out of a strong work from which they had just repulsed Barlow's division, capturing three guns.

To mention in detail all of the battles and lesser affairs in which Terry's division of the Army of the James took part would be simply tedious, nor within the bounds of this work.

At the close of his military career, in January, 1865, he took charge of the business of the Florence Sewing-Machine Company, at Florence, as superintendent. His skill and ability in the management of these works have never been questioned. In the spring of 1867 he established the Northampton Emery-Wheel Company, of which he is still treasurer. The business, under his management, has been very successful.

Gen. Otis has ever been alive to the advancement of the public interest, and all measures tending to the public good found in him an earnest advocate. Politically, he is a Republican,

[ERRATA.]

GEN. JOHN LORD OTIS.

The subject of this sketch is a descendant of one of the oldest New England families, many of whose ancestors fought in the arduous struggle for American liberty. His mother was a member of the celebrated Lord family, of Lyme, Conn.

General Otis was born in Lyme, New London Co., Conn., July 15, 1827. He was educated at the common schools in his native State, and early manifested a decided predilection for mechanical engineering, the study of which profession he pursued with diligence and attention, and soon became master of his business. He remained in South Manchester four years, during which time he started for Messrs. Cheney Bros. the first set of machinery ever put in operation in the United States for the manufacture of silk and wool knit goods.

In 1851, after putting in operation several sets of delicate foreign machinery for the Pacific Manufacturing Company of Manchester, Conn., designed for the manufacture of knit goods, and which the men who accompanied the machinery from France were unable to put in operation, he remained for five years superintendent of the business, which was very successful. In 1855 he left this concern and established the Otis Manufacturing Company of South Manchester.

In 1859 he disposed of his interest in South Manchester, and returned to the Pacific Mills, which, during his absence, had been so unsuccessful in business as to necessitate their stoppage.

Nov. 20, 1855, he married Hannah B. Fitts, by whom he had two children,—Harriet E. and George F. He died November 16, 1865.

GEN. JOHN LORD OTIS.

The subject of this sketch is a descendant of one of the oldest New England families, many of whose ancestors fought in the arduous struggle for American liberty. His mother was a member of the celebrated Lord family, of Lyme, Conn.

Samuel Otis was born in Lyme, New London Co., Conn., July 15, 1827. He was educated at the common schools in his native State, and early manifested a decided predilection for mechanical engineering, the study of which profession he pursued with diligence and attention, and soon became master of his business. He remained in South Manchester for four years, during which time he started for Messrs. Cheney Bros. the first set of machinery ever put in operation in the United States for the manufacture of silk and wool knit goods.

In 1859 he disposed of his interest in South Manchester, and returned to the Pacific Mills, which, during his absence, had been so unsuccessful in business as to necessitate their stoppage.

In 1851, after putting in operation several sets of delicate foreign machinery for the Pacific Manufacturing Company of Manchester, Conn., designed for the manufacture of knit goods, and which the men who accompanied the machinery from France were unable to put in operation, he remained for five years superintendent of the business, which was very successful. In 1855 he left this concern and established the Otis Manufacturing Company of South Manchester.

When war's "loud alarm" sounded over this republic, calling for brave men to strike at the hideous head of Rebellion, Mr. Otis promptly responded to the President's first call for troops, and in August, 1861, enlisted as a private in Company B of the 10th Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry; was made a second lieutenant in September, 1861, first lieutenant November 4th, and captain a week later. In November, 1862, was made major, colonel in February, 1863, and brevet brigadier-general, as his commission recites, "for special gallantry at the crossing of the James River, June 20, 1864, and at the battles of Flusser's Mills and Deep Run."

He was in all the engagements of Burnside's and Foster's commands in North Carolina, Roanoke Island, Newbern, Kinston, White-Hall, Goldsboro' Bridge, etc; was wounded once at the battle of Newbern, and twice at Kinston. At the latter place his regiment charged over three other regiments, that part of the island occupied by our forces with that occupied by the enemy. Col. Otis, with his regiment, the 10th Connecticut Volunteers, was ordered to advance over the causeway opposite our left, while Col. Shaw, with the 54th Massachusetts, performed the same movement on the right-hand causeway. During the night of the 14th the enemy planted two batteries at Grimball's plantation, just in front, and at daylight opened a fearful fire on the gunboat "Pawnee," lying in the Stone River, not one hundred yards distant, at the same time attacking the causeways; the 10th Connecticut held its ground and repulsed the enemy, but the 54th was driven back in confusion, suffering considerable loss, while the gunboat was compelled to slip her cables and drop down the stream to get range. The 10th did not retire until twice ordered to do so by Gen. Stevenson, their right and rear being exposed by the defeat of the 54th. The day following, Terry's entire command marched across Coles' to Morris Island.

A week later, having been so ill from malarial fever for three weeks as to be almost unfit for duty, was detailed to go North and take command of the conscript camp at New Haven, Conn. The camp had a regular garrison of eighty officers and five hundred men. The position was an arduous and disagreeable one, entailing constant care and watchfulness night and day. After remaining in command for two months was detailed by Gen. Dix to preside at a court-martial detail for the purpose of trying a number of officers for grave offenses. After presiding for six weeks, and finding that the court was liable to continue in session some time longer, asked to be relieved and ordered back to the front. Was relieved, joined the regiment at St. Augustine, Fla., in November, and was soon after placed in command of that post. Was relieved April 17, 1864, and ordered to join the Army of the James. Joined at Gloucester Point, and was in all the movements and engagements of that command.

On the 20th of June, Terry's division, with an additional brigade from Turner's, marched down to the James River after dark for the purpose of placing a pontoon-bridge across at Jones' Landing and capturing the position of Deep Bottom. But it was found that there would be so much delay it would be daylight before it was accomplished and the entire movement frustrated, and it was decided to send a small force across in boats to make the attack. Col. Otis was given the command and allowed to select any two regiments in the command. He took his own, the 10th Connecticut Volunteers, and the 11th Maine, commanded by Lieut.-Col. Hill, crossed just after midnight, carried the position, and held it, repulsing an attack of the enemy at sunrise, the main body getting across about

James Island two causeways, half a mile apart, connected in him an earnest advocate. Politically, he is a Republican,

J. S. Otis

J. Howe Garrison.

and has labored assiduously in the ranks of that party. He was selectman and assessor of Northampton in 1875-76, member of the House of Representatives in 1878, and at present is a member of the State Senate from the Hampshire District. He was married at the age of twenty-one to Catherine Preston, of Northampton, Mass.

Whether upon the battlefield, in the work-shop, or in the Senate-chamber, Gen. Otis has ever discharged his duties with honor and marked ability.

J. HONE DEMOND

was born in Rutland, Worcester Co., Mass., Oct. 5, 1825. He lived with his father upon a farm until he was ten years old. His father then became engaged in the manufacture of rakes, and subsequently bought a grist-mill. Young Demond worked in the shop and mill for three years, excepting the winter months, when he attended the common school. In January, 1828, his father removed to Springfield, and was without capital or means of subsistence, having lost his entire property by fire. Springfield at that time was but a village, without even a railroad. They moved into a house on Main Street which was connected with the old Springfield Bakery, and situated on the spot now occupied by the Second National Bank. The son worked one year in the bakery, and afterward wherever he could find employment, meanwhile attending school during a part of each winter. Among other things, he was paid two shillings per week for attending to the street lamps. It was his duty to fill, trim, and hang the lamps in their places, and to bring them in at ten o'clock. He worked one season for Justin Lombard, feeding silk-worms and cultivating the mulberry on the land where Pyncheon Street is now. He worked three summers for Deacon Bontacue, and received for his labor at first eight, and afterward nine, dollars per month. Mr. Bontacue was wont to say that Demond was the most faithful and trusty boy he had ever employed.

When eighteen years of age he took charge of Judge Hooker's farm, on what is now North Main Street. The place had been sadly neglected. Going to work with energy and perseverance, he brought it nearly all under cultivation in the four and a half years he remained upon it, and for his labor he received the munificent (?) sum of sixteen dollars per month and board, and house-rent for his parents. He was allowed to manage the farm according to his own judgment, his employer not seeing him oftener than once a month. He set out a fine orchard of different kinds of fruit-trees, and considered this one of his greatest achievements. When twenty-one years of age he purchased of John Mills seventeen acres of land situated in what was then Plainfield, now "Brightwood," for which he agreed to pay two thousand and eighty-seven dollars. He gave him four notes, running a number of years, and eighty-seven dollars in money, which was all he possessed. It was with difficulty that he was able to meet the notes as they became due, but he succeeded at last in paying them, and subsequently purchased of Day & Morgan seven acres adjoining his farm, and stocked it with cows and engaged in the dairy and milk business, selling the milk in Springfield.

With his father's assistance he built a house, and improved his farm by planting fruit- and maple-trees, and setting out hedges. He increased his purchases of land until he had fifty acres running from the Connecticut River to Chicopee Street. He raised vegetables and tobacco, and did his own marketing. He followed this business until he liquidated all his debts in 1861.

He was married on the 6th of March, 1866, to Emma W. Browne, of Bernardston, Franklin Co., Mass., by whom he has had three children, only one of whom survives.

In 1871 he sold his farm to Hyde & Fisk for $60,000. He then purchased a residence in Northampton, on Elm Street, the surrounding grounds consisting of seven acres, mostly covered with different kinds of fruit. He removed there in February, 1872.

The esteem in which Mr. Demond is held by his townsmen has been shown by his election to numerous offices of public trust. He has been connected with the Hampden Agricultural Society for many years, and has expended a great deal of time and money in improving Hampden Park, attending to the building of dykes and fences, and setting out trees and shrubbery. He has also won a number of premiums,—one of fifty dollars for the best-conducted farm, and a silver cup, presented by Francis Brewer, to the owner of the best herd of milch cows. In agriculture he was a leader, and among the first to avail himself of the improvements in farming utensils. He bought the first mowing-machine brought to Springfield, which, it may well be said, was far inferior to those of the present day. He was one of the four gentlemen who originated the Hampden Harvest Club. In 1861 he was elected councilman, and served four years. He is president of the village improvement society, and of the Hampshire, Hampden, and Franklin Agricultural Society, and of the Western Massachusetts Poultry Association. Mr. Demond looks back with pleasure to the struggles and privations of his earlier years, and he owes his success, as expressed in his own words, "to great industry, good health, temperate habits, honesty, good parents, and a kind Providence."

A M H E R S T.

THE town of Amherst, formerly a part of Hadley, lies east of the Connecticut River, being separated therefrom by the present town of Hadley, and is bounded north by the towns of Sunderland and Leverett, in Franklin County; east by Shutesbury, in that county, and by Pelham and Belchertown, in Hampshire County; south by Granby and South Hadley; and west by Hadley. The town contains in the vicinity of 18,400 acres, having received additions from the mother-town, Hadley, at four separate times.

By the State census in 1875, the town contained 3937 inhabitants, of whom 2006 were males and 1931 females. Of the whole number, 334 were of foreign birth. (See general census tables.)

TOPOGRAPHY.

Amherst presents an uneven surface, interspersed with low and level reaches—some of which are swampy—and wide ranges of broken upland. The principal village, Amherst, unincorporated, occupies a picturesque position upon a wide, flattened ridge of considerable extent from north to south, of which Mt. Pleasant at the north, and the elevation occupied by the college buildings at the south, are prominent features.

"Laurence Swamp" is a large tract of wet land in the southeastern portion of the town. The Holyoke range, with its several peaks, forms the town's southern boundary and hems in the southward view, while the hills of Pelham and Shutesbury, just over the eastern border, present a similar barrier in that direction. Northward loom up the high and rugged prominences of Sunderland and Leverett, above the less ambitious "Flat Hills" of Amherst, which intervene; and westward lie the broad, rich intervalles and wooded swamps of Hadley. The greatest elevation is "Hilliard's Knob," of the Holyoke range, 1120 feet in height, standing midway of the southern boundary.

STREAMS.

The streams of note are two,—“Fort River” and “Mill River.” The former rises in Pelham, enters the town about two miles south of the northeast angle thereof, flows southerly under the Pelham hills, and thence south of west across the town, passing the western bounds into Hadley two and a half miles from the southwest angle. Mill River rises in the hills of Shutesbury, crosses the southeast corner of Leverett, enters Amherst a short distance west of the northeast angle, traverses the town in a general southwesterly direction, and escapes into Hadley across the south line of the 800 acres added to the town of Amherst in 1814.

EARLY SETTLEMENTS.

The first settlers of Amherst were chiefly from Hadley, Hatfield, and Northampton. Hadley and Hatfield had been settled by residents of Windsor, Wethersfield, and Hartford, in Connecticut, which towns had been colonized respectively from ancient Dorchester, Watertown, and Cambridge, in Massachusetts Bay.* Of the immigrants who settled in the latter towns in 1631 it is written that they “comprised men of gentle birth and life, men of learning and mark, men of heroism and deep-toned piety, and women and children.”* The historian could have shown that among the “women” were many noble, intelligent, and brave, who planned and toiled, who suffered and endured beyond what is or ever can be known.

The territory known as “Amherst” was set apart for settlement by legal action of the inhabitants of Hadley in town-meeting, March 4, 1700, as follows :

“Voted by the town, that three miles and one-quarter eastward from the meeting-house, and so from the north side of Mount Holyoke unto the Mill river, shall lye as common land forever, supposing that the line will take in the new swamp.

“Voted, that the rest of the commons eastward shall be laid out in three divisions, that is to say, between the road leading to Brookfield and the Mill river, notwithstanding there is liberty for the cutting of wood and timber so long as it lieth unfenced; there is likewise to be left between every division forty rods for highways, and what will be necessary to be left for highways eastward and West through every division is to be left to the discretion of the measurers, and every one to have a proportion in the 3d division, and every householder to have a £50 allotment, and all others who are now the proper inhabitants of Hadley, 16 years old, and upward, to have a £25 allotment in said commons.”

The principle which governed the distribution of the common lands among the proprietors varied at different periods,—the interests of the rich inclining to a property, and of the poor to a per capita, basis. By the third day of May, 1703, the town measurers† had laid out the lands known as “outward commons” into three divisions.

The first division—the most westerly—lay next the three-and-a-quarter-miles line, and was 240 rods in width, extending from the Brookfield road to Mill River, a “measured distance” of 1961 rods, which included three east and west highways, each 40 rods in width. This division contained 60 lots, of various widths, aggregating 2760 acres.

The second division was also 240 rods wide, and in length measured from the Brookfield road 1674 rods, inclusive of three east and west highways,—two of 40 rods and one of 32 rods. This division contained 37 unequal lots, comprising only 2343 acres, and so was much shorter than the first division.

Those who were entitled to lots in these two divisions drew them in the order given in the following table, commencing

* As quoted by Dr. Holland, Hist. of West. Mass., p. 18.

† Capt. Aaron Cooke, Cornet Nehemiah Dickinson, and Samuel Porter were the measurers, and laid out the lands without a compass.

at the Brookfield road and proceeding northward. The width of each lot is given in rods and feet. Hatfield people are marked thus *; other non-residents, thus †:

First Division—Brookfield Road.

	Rods.	Feet.
1. Jonathan Marsh	57	7
2. Samuel Nash	16	1
3. Ebenezer Nash	12	7
4. Samuel Marsh*	21	13
5. Ephraim Nash	12	7
6. Samuel Crow	35	0
7. Thomas Selding	70	0
8. John Selding	20	7
9. William Rooker	22	11
10. Joseph Smith	26	5
11. Widow Craft	3	0
12. Samuel Dickinson*	8	13
13. Mr. William Williams*	7	5
14. John Cole*	6	8
15. John Graves*	4	0
16. Stephen Belding*	10	5
17. Ebenezer Billing*	5	2
18. Samuel Belding, Jr.*	3	0
19. Daniel Warner*	8	7
20. Widow Warner*	8	7

Highway 40 rods wide, south of Fort River.

21. Joseph Smith*	4	6
22. Ebenezer Wells*	21	14
23. Nathaniel White	72	11
24. John Smith, Tailor	44	8
25. John Preston	29	9
26. Nathaniel Warner	45	0
27. Daniel Hubbard	60	8
28. Col. Samuel Partrigg*	40	8
29. Samuel Partrigg, Jr.	75	0
30. Samuel and Ebenezer Moody	69	5
31. John Ingram, Sr.	42	5
32. John Ingram, Jr.	24	1
33. Samuel Ingram	17	9
34. Nathaniel Ingram	17	9
35. Jonathan Ingram	17	9
36. Thomas Goodman	52	9
37. John Smith, orphan	48	2
38. Samuel Barnard	45	0

A highway 40 rods wide goeth over New swamp, and runs to Foot's Folly.

39. Samuel Church	45	0
40. Josiah Church	45	0
41. Joseph Church	16	1
42. John Taylor, Sr.	68	11
43. John Taylor, Jr.	17	8
44. Eleazar Warner	17	8
45. John Bilyard	17	8
46. William Brown	17	8
47. Nathaniel Dickinson*	3	11
48. Edward Church*	35	0
49. Samuel Smith, Sr.	17	8
50. James Smith	46	11
51. Preserved Smith	17	8

Highway 40 rods, N. end of Wells' Hill.

52. Samuel Gaylord	25	5
53. William Gaylord	17	5
54. Widow Hannah Porter	25	10
55. Samuel Porter	151	8
56. Hezekiah Porter	31	6
57. John Porter	13	6
58. Experience Porter	32	3
59. Ichabod Porter	23	6
60. Peter Montagne	89	0

Mill River, North.

Second Division—Brookfield Road.

	Rods.	Feet.
1. John Goodman	67	1
2. Aaron Cook, Esq.	39	7
3. Thomas Hovey	48	9
4. Westwood Cook	73	9
5. Samuel Cook	44	1

Highway, 40 rods—removed 1734.

6. Moses Cook	44	15
7. Samuel Boltwood	62	1
8. Daniel Marsh	134	3
9. Thomas Dickinson†	44	15
10. Deacon Samuel Smith	45	10
11. John Montagne	54	0
12. Isaac Warner	17	8
13. Daniel Warner	8	13
14. Widow Cooke	2	15
15. Ensign Chileab Smith	39	10
16. Samuel Smith (son of Ch.)	34	2
17. Luke Smith	55	7
18. Ebenezer Smith	21	15
19. John Smith	26	0
20. Mr. Isaac Channey	52	9
21. Town lot, 60 acres	40	0
22. George Stillman	55	7
23. Ichabod Smith	38	0
24. Jacob Warner	44	1

Highway, 40 rods, “runs down to Foot's Folly from New Swamp.”

25. Land of Coleman	39	6
26. John Kellogg	32	8
27. Edward Kellogg	17	8
28. Lieut. Joseph Kellogg	55	6
29. Nathaniel Kellogg	17	8
30. Mr. Samuel Russell†	4	3
31. Mr. Jonathan Russell†	7	6
32. John Nash	31	6
33. Joseph Nash	31	0
34. Thomas Nash*	8	13

Highway 32 rods in breadth.

	Rods.	Fect.
35. Neh'g Dickinson & Sons.....	113	13
36. Timothy Eastman.....	69	5
37. Peter Tilton, 59¼ acres.....	39	6

Commons, North.

The third division, separated from the second by a highway forty rods in width, was two miles in width east and west, thus making the lots two miles long. The number of lots was 93; length of the division, 1971 rods. No lateral highways crossed this division, whose total acreage was 7884.

In laying out these lands the measurers encroached upon what were afterward known as the "equivalent lands,"* now in the towns of Pelham and Belchertown. By subsequent survey of the line between Hadley and the equivalent lands this division was reduced to a half-mile in width at the north end, and a gore of about 3000 acres taken off.

To 31 persons owning lots in this division, who had suffered most by the later survey, the town of Hadley made a grant of "about 600 acres, on the 'Flat Hills,' so called, and west of them, between the second and third divisions and Mill River."

The highways separating and intersecting these divisions were subsequently reduced in width from time to time. The latest reduction was by Amherst, in 1788, when the portion taken off was sold to the adjacent land-owners.

It is not positively known when the first settlement was made on the lands so laid out.†

To provide a place for worship and a place for burial required the action of the inhabitants in town-meeting assembled. Much has, therefore, been preserved in the town-records that would else have been lost concerning these early communities. Jan. 5, 1730, the town of Hadley provided a "burial-place‡ for the east inhabitants." It is, therefore, probable that settlements began some time prior to that date. The following persons were residents in the year 1731: John Ingram, Sr., John Ingram, Jr., Ebenezer Kellogg, John Cows, Jonathan Cows, Samuel Boltwood, Samuel Hawley, Sr., Nathaniel Church, John Wells, who soon removed, Aaron Smith, Nathaniel Smith, Richard Chauncey, Stephen Smith, John Nash, Jr., Joseph Wells, Ebenezer Scovil, died 1731, Ebenezer Ingram, died 1735, Ebenezer Dickinson. Within the succeeding eight years the following persons became residents: Joseph Clary, Zachariah Field, Jonathan Atherton, died 1744, Solomon Boltwood, Charles Chauncey, William Murray, Joseph Hawley, Samuel Hawley, Jr., Nathan Moody, Pelatiah Smith, John Perry, Ebenezer Williams, John Norton, Moses Smith.

Another six years—1739 to 1745—brought the following: Samuel and Elisha Ingram, John Field, David and Jonathan Nash, Moses Hawley, Moses and Aaron Warner, Nathaniel Coleman, Jonathan Moody, Samuel Church, Daniel, John, Moses, Nathan, and Jonathan Dickinson, Jonathan, Peter, Phinehas, David, and Daniel Smith, Nehemiah Strong, Noah Baker, Charles Wright, Preserved Clapp, Westwood Cook, Jr., Joseph Eastman, Jr., Deacon Eleazar Mattoon, Rev.

* Massachusetts, adhering to a wrong south line, which was run in 1642, and crossed Connecticut River several miles too far south, granted south of the true line 105,793 acres of land, mostly to Suffield, Enfield, and Woodstock, but partly to individuals and to other towns. After a long controversy it was agreed, in 1713, that Massachusetts should give to Connecticut the same number of acres as an equivalent, and that the towns named should remain to Massachusetts. In 1715 two men from Connecticut and one from Massachusetts laid out for Connecticut 105,793 acres, viz., 51,850 acres east of Hully, afterward in Belchertown and Pelham,* 10,000 acres, afterwards in Ware, and 43,943 acres at Coasset, above the present village of Brattleboro', Massachusetts, then claiming the lower part of Vermont and New Hampshire."

† The tradition is recorded that a Mr. Foote, from Hatfield, put up a hut in the east precinct, north of the present meeting-house of the second parish, as early as 1703. He failed of his object,—that of gaining a support by hunting and fishing,—and abandoned the spot. From this incident the eastern portion of the town was for a long time called "Foote-Folly Swamp."

‡ This burial-place was laid out in March, 1730, "in the west highway, in length fifteen rods adjoining Nathaniel Church's lot on the west, and in width twelve rods east in the highway, making one acre and twenty rods."

* Judd's Hist. of Hadley, p. 298.

David Parsons, Nathaniel and Ephraim Kellogg, Alexander Porter, Joseph Morton, Seth Kibbe.

In 1738 there were 29 settlers or heads of families, who had "35 taxable polls, 49 horses, 39 oxen, 52 cows, some hogs, and 350 acres of improved land, and 6 non-residents had 43 acres of improved land."‡

Between 1745 and 1763, the following settled in East Hadley and Amherst, the latter title having meantime been conferred: Ebenezer, Jr., Abraham, and Daniel Kellogg; Joseph Church, Isaac Hubbard, Moses Cook, Jacob Warner; Gideon, Reuben, Ebenezer, Jr., and Joseph, sons of Deacon Ebenezer Dickinson; Nathan, Jr., and Ebenezer (3d), sons of Nathan Dickinson; Simeon, Noah, and Jonathan, Jr., sons of Jonathan Dickinson; Jonathan, Azariah, Nathaniel, and Nehemiah, sons of Deacon Samuel Dickinson, who had removed from Hadley to Shutesbury; David, son of Israel Dickinson, of Hadley; Thomas Hastings, Simeon Strong, Ensign Josiah Chauncey, Isaac Goodale, Elijah Baker, Simeon Pomeroy, John Keet, Jonathan Edwards; Alexander, Edward, Pelatiah, Jr., Simeon, Jonathan, Jr., David, Martin, Noah, and Eleazar Smith; John Petty or Pettis; John, Jr., and Oliver Cows; Thomas Morton, Benjamin Harwood, Samuel Elmer, Eli Colton, James Merrick; Solomon, Jr., and William Boltwood; Ebenezer Mattoon, Simeon Clark, John Nash, Jr., Noadiah Lewis; John (3d), Philip, and Reuben Ingram; Ezekiah Belding, William Murray, Jr., John Field, Jr., John Allis, John Billing, Preserved Clapp, Jr., David Blodget; Jonathan, Jr., and Asahel Moody; Benjamin Rhodes, Justus Williams, Thomas Bascom, Gideon Henderson, Abner Adams.

The lands in the first and second divisions were estimated at about one shilling per acre; in the east, or third division, from four to six pence. The prices increased when the Indian wars ceased and settlement became safe.

The lands north of Mill River were divided in 1742, and those south of the Brookfield-Boston road, extending to Mt. Holyoke and to the southern limit of the present town, in 1743. The latter remained in Hadley until 1812.

ROADS.

The earliest of the roads of Amherst was probably the Bay Road, or Boston Road, which has undergone more or less change in its position. Mr. Judd says:

"In early days there was a 'Nashaway Path' north of Fort River, which still bears the old name. In 1674 and many years after, the Bay Road crossed Fort River near the south end of Spruce Hill. The road was laid out where it now is after 1688, but no record of the change is found."

The roads first made did not admit of the passage of vehicles, but were mere "paths for men and horses." The broad highways, laid out in 1703, separating and intersecting the three great divisions laid out in the same year, were at different periods reduced in width, until now few are left exceeding four rods. The decay and obliteration of the original monuments caused much trouble to the town and serious contentions with the adjoining proprietors. The most noted of these was occasioned by the supposed encroachments of John Morton and Nathan Dickinson, whose lots were "in the eastern division, north of the Pelham Road." Morton was the first settler in that division. They had been beaten at home, and applied to the General Court for relief. The town authorities, in a lengthy document,|| set forth the facts, justified their action, and prayed that the petition of Morton and Dickinson might be dismissed. The prayer was granted.

‡ Judd's Hist. p. 424. Of these settlers, Joseph Wells, Aaron Smith, Nathaniel Church, and John Perry removed about 1744; in addition, "David Nash removed to South Hadley, Phineas Smith to Granby, and David Smith returned to Hadley. Noah Baker removed to Sunderland; he was a Baptist preacher. Joseph Morton and Seth Kibbe died. Daniel Smith was crazy."—Ibid.

|| A copy of this interesting document, and other papers relating to Amherst, were recently deposited by M. F. Dickinson, Jr., of Boston, in the library of Amherst College.

INDIAN OCCUPANCY AND WARS.

Norwottuck was a favorite possession of the Indians. The rich bottom lands produced corn with little labor, and the higher ground, clad in a various foliage, sheltered the game which supplied so many of their needs. The custom followed by many of the tribes prevailed here,—that of burning annually the dried grass upon the meadows and the leaves and underbrush of the adjacent woodland. Thus extensive openings were made here and there favorable to the spread of grasses, and obstructions removed from the path of the savage hunter long distances through the forest. The "boundless and impenetrable wilderness," so often associated with the cabin of the pioneer, lay not in the path of the settlers at Norwottuck and other portions of the Connecticut Valley. Those at Hadley, learning the advantage of the annual burnings, "not only burnt over their own lands, but extended their fires to the hills of Pelham and Belchertown, in order to increase their pasturage."^{*}

The savages did not yield their plantations and hunting-grounds without a prolonged struggle, in which, though they were at last vanquished, many of the whites were sacrificed.

French-and-Indian War, 1744-53.—List of y^e mounted soldiers that went in quest of y^e enemy to Capt. Bridgman's Fort, above Northfield, under y^e command of Capt. Seth Dwight, Oct. 22, 1747, and were out six days,—Sergt. Solomon Boltwood, Joseph Clary, Aaron Smith, Pelatiah Smith, Hezekiah Belding, Samuel Ingram, David Nash, William Boltwood.†

In the company under Sergt. Wm. Lyman, at Fort Massachusetts, November 16th to Jan. 12, 1747-48, was William Murray.

In Capt. William Williams' company, out from March 10th to October 26, 1748, were Jonathan Dickinson and Eleazer Mattoon.

In Col. Joseph Dwight's company, on the Western frontiers from August 7 to 21, 1748, were the following, mostly from Amherst: Ens. Solomon Boltwood, Sergt. Solomon Keyes, Corp. William Montague, Corp. Timothy Nash, Corp. Joseph Hawley, Gideon Parsons, Reuben Smith, Joseph Kellogg, Eleazar Nash, Josiah Chauncy, Joseph Alexander, Ebenezer Dickinson, Ebenezer Kellogg, William Boltwood, John Ingram, Stephen Smith.

French-and-Indian War, 1754-63.—In Capt. Israel Williams' company, from Aug. 31, 1754, to March 14, 1755, were Corps. Preserved Clapp and Nathan Dickinson.

In Capt. Moses Porter's company,‡ in the Crown Point expedition, April 1st to Dec. 25, 1755, were Sergt. Reuben Dickinson,§ David Dickinson, David Smith, Jonathan Moody, Jr., Nathan Dickinson, Preserved Clapp; and in Col. Joseph Dwight's regiment, on the same expedition, were Joseph Clary, Oliver Cows, Benjamin Eastman, Samuel Hawley, Jr., and his son Elijah,|| aged nineteen.

Martin Smith was impressed into the service April 22, 1756.

In Lieut. Jonathan Dickinson's company, Col. Israel Williams' regiment, called out to defend the Western frontiers when Fort William Henry was besieged in 1757, were Lieut.

* Judd's Hist. of Hadley, p. 106.

† "In the 'brave little garrison' under Capt. Stevens that so courageously defended the fort at No. 4 (Charlestown, N. H.) near the first of April, 1747, were six men from South Hadley and Amherst, viz., Eleazar Smith, William Boltwood, Nehemiah Dickinson, Nathaniel Church, Jr., Josiah Snow, and Ebenezer Dickinson. In the same fort were nine men from Northampton."—Judd's Hist. p. 345, where he refers to Hoyt's Indian Wars, p. 242.

‡ This company was out in the "Bloody Morning Scout," September 8th, under Col. Ephraim Williams, when Capt. Porter, Ensign Reuben Wait, and three privates were killed, including Zebadiah Williams,—"perhaps from Amherst." Col. Williams fell that day.

§ Sergt. Dickinson became noted as the captain of the Amherst "Minute-Men," and served through the Revolution.

|| Died previous to March 19, 1757. His father received, by order of the General Court, April 7, 1757, "the full allowance for his son's subsistence on his return from ye army at Lake George in 1755."

Jonathan Dickinson; Ensign Zaccheus Crocker; Sergts. Bezael Wilder, Nehemiah Dickinson, and Robert Gillmore; Corps. Ephraim Osgood, Abner Adams, Philip Smith, and Moses Wilder; Privates Timothy Nash, Nathan Adams, Benjamin Harris, Jonas Locke, William Wheeler, Thomas Temple, Archelaus Temple.

The following were in the expedition to Crown Point, in the company of Capt. Elijah Smith, of Cold Spring, and were out from April 27, 1759, to Jan. 3, 1760: Israel Chauncy, Samuel Cutler, Oliver Cows, Robert Emmons, Abner How, Eleazar Harwood, Philip Ingram, Aaron Leonard, Matthew Scott, Isaac Ward, Jr.,¶ Charles Wright.

Judd gives these additional names, with year of enlistment: 1755, Elijah Baker; 1756, Justus Williams, Pelatiah Buckman; 1758, Noadiah Lewis, Cesar Prutt, Asahel Moody, Thomas Morton, Benjamin Buckman; 1759, Nathaniel Dickinson, Samuel Graham, Charles Chauncy, Charles Wright, Philip Ingram, Nehemiah How, John Keet, Jr., Isaac Temple, Alexander Smith, Moses Warner, David Blodget, Lemuel Moody, Eli Colton, Paul Guilford, Nathan Davis, Simeon Walker; 1760, Benjamin Harwood (died), Micah Guilford (died), Solomon Sartwell, John Gould.

The Revolution.—The larger portion of the people of Amherst favored the principles which led to the conflict with the mother-country, and many of them took active part in the measures of that period. Through their committee of correspondence, they approved the destruction of the tea in Boston Harbor, and in vigorous terms evinced their co-operation with the Boston committee. They were represented during the war by the usual committees of "correspondence," "inspection," and "safety," appointed between the years 1774 and 1779, in which the following names appear conspicuously: Capt. Reuben Dickinson, Joseph Williams, Moses Dickinson, Esq., Jacob McDaniel, Nathaniel Dickinson, Joseph Eastman, Nathaniel Dickinson, Jr., John Dickinson, Noah Dickinson, Nathan Dickinson, Hezekiah Belding, Isaac Hubbard, Ebenezer Dickinson, Gideon Dickinson, John Billings, Lieut. Simeon Smith, Thomas Hastings, Elijah Baker, Simeon Fobes, Ebenezer Mattoon, Martin Kellogg, James Merrick, Joseph Dickinson, Lieut. Ebenezer Mattoon, Jr., Josiah Warner, Maj. Nathaniel Peck, Timothy Green, Henry J. Franklin, Gideon Henderson.

Lexington Alarm.—The following enlisted as "Minute-Men" after the 19th of April, 1775, the time of the alarm at Lexington, in the company of Capt. Reuben Dickinson, of Amherst, Col. R. Woodbridge's regiment, and were in service as minute-men eleven days, though some remained longer, as indicated: Second Lieut. Joseph Dickinson, 16 days; Sergt. Ezra Rood, 20; Corp. Ebenezer Eastman, 15; Corp. Adam Rice, Privates Clement Marshall, Ebenezer Kellogg, John Hodden, 15; John Ingram, 16; Reuben Dickinson, Jr., 16; Thomas Morton, 35; John Eastman, 15; Ebenezer Mattoon, 15; John Dickinson (Hadley), Luke Coffin, Stephen Smith, 15; Waitstill Dickinson, 15; Eldad Moody, 35; Timothy Green, 21; Ebenezer Dickinson, 12; Martin Smith, 16; Reuben Smith, 32; Simeon Smith, 16; William May, 39; Ambrose Williams, Samuel Buckman.

The above company was disbanded April 30, 1775, and a new company enlisted by Capt. Dickinson for eight months, in which were the following, the first nine having served in the company of Minute-Men:†† Capt. Reuben Dickinson, ¶ Was left at Crown Point, sick, and there died about Dec. 20, 1760. His father was allowed £6 2s. 4d. for expenses incurred in sending men with horses to his relief, but who failed to reach him.

 This committee was composed of Moses Dickinson, Reuben Dickinson, Jacob McDaniels, Nathaniel Dickinson, Jr., and Joseph Williams. Their report to the town, including their reply to the Boston committee, is preserved in the office of the town clerk at Amherst.

†† Daniel Shays, of Shutesbury, the noted leader in the "Shays rebellion," had been sergeant in the company of "Minute-Men," but was promoted to ensign in the new company.

Sergt. Adam Rice, Corp. Ebenezer Kellogg, Corp. Elihu Dickinson, Samuel Buckman, Luke Coffin, Azariah Dickinson, Ambrose Williams, John Dickinson,* who now appears from Amherst; Fifer Levi Smith, Benjamin Buckman, Elijah Baker, Giles Church, David Pettis, Caesar Prutt,† Daniel Ralef, James Shay, Shelah Dickinson, in room of Richard Wait. The remainder of this company of 60 were mainly from Shutesbury and Leverett.

The following eight months' men were in Capt. Noadiah Leonard's company, same regiment: Ensign Samuel Gould, Sergt. Moses Cook, Corp. Samuel Field, Privates Moses Hastings, Simeon Pomeroy, John Billings, Abner Nash, Elias Smith, Isaac Goodale, Gideon Henderson, Ebenezer Field, Amos Nash, and Samuel Church.

A company of 60 men was enlisted by Capt. James Hendrick, of Amherst, concerning which the only account found in the State archives is headed as follows: "Roll for Rations to and from the camp. Charlestown Camp, No. 3, Jan'y 13, 1776," and names the Amherst men, viz.: Capt. James Hendricks, Sergt. Joel Moody, Reuben Dickinson, Jr., Joseph Petty, Stephen Smith, Joseph Nash, Amariah Dana, Samuel Ingram, Aaron Dickinson, Martin Smith, Elisha Dickinson, Ebenezer Petty, Levi Clark, Ethan Billings, Henry Dyer, John Lee, Jonathan Edwards, Timothy Smith, Timothy Smith (2d), and Elijah Elmer. Others in this company were from Hadley, South Hadley, and Granby. The march from Amherst is reckoned ninety-five miles: allowed for rations, 15s. 10d.

The following were attached to the train of artillery under Capt. Thomas Waite Foster, and were in Col. Woodbridge's regiment at Cambridge, April 25, 1775: Lieut. James Hendrick, Moses Dickinson, and Simon Fobes.

The return of Col. Woodbridge's regiment at Cambridge, June 14, 1775, gives the following statistics: Capt. R. Dickinson, 60 men, stationed at the college. Capt. D. Cowden, 31 men, stationed at the college. Capt. I. Dexter, 44 men, stationed at Lechmere Point. Capt. N. Leonard, 54 men, stationed at Cambridge. Capt. S. Pearl, 36 men, stationed at Cambridge. Capt. W. Meacham, 45 men, stationed at the college. Capt. S. Murray, 50 men, station not given. The return is signed by Richard Montague, adjutant, and appended to it is the following record:

"IN COMMITTEE OF SAFETY, June 16, 1775.—Col. Woodbridge informs this Committee, and it appears by the return he has made, that three hundred and sixty men stand ready to go under him. We would observe that Col. Woodbridge has been in the camp with his Minute-Men, doing duty, ever since the Battle, but did not apply to this Committee for inlisting orders until orders sufficient to complete the Army were issued; and therefore the Committee did not give him orders, but promised they would recommend him if there should be a vacancy."

Most of the companies composing this regiment, including Capt. Dickinson's, were in the battle on Bunker Hill,‡ June 17th, although the officers were not commissioned until the 21st.

A return dated Sept. 30, 1775, discloses that this regiment was then stationed on the west side of Prospect Hill, on the road leading from Charlestown to Menotomy. In December following the company of Capt. Dickinson was stationed at Lechmere's Point, where one of his men, Abel Woods, of Shutesbury, was wounded "by a swivel-ball from a ship of war belonging to the enemy." Woods was allowed £22 11s. 2d. for physician's and other charges.

In the company of Capt. Oliver Lyman, Col. Nicholas

* Squire John Dickinson, of East Amherst, who died in 1850, the last survivor of the company.

† Caesar Prutt was a negro, the fourth child of Arthur Prutt, who was said to have been the slave of Rev. Isaac Chauncy. Caesar was born in June, 1727, and lived for a time with Josiah Chauncy, Esq. Judd says, "In 1807, Aaron Kellogg, a deranged man, and Caesar Prutt, a negro aged eighty years, were set up at vendue to the lowest bidder, and the former was bid off for a year at $50, and the latter at $65." Ibid p. 422.

‡ Squire John Dickinson told Mr. Judd, in 1847, that a part of his company—Capt. Dickinson's—"was in the battle of Bunker Hill, but not in the hot fight."

Dike's regiment, stationed at Dorchester, were the following, who served from Aug. 12, 1776, to March 31, 1777: Sergt. Henry Lee, Azariah Dickinson, Levi Dickinson, Jonathan Warner, John Fox, Isaac Gould, Nathaniel Edwards, Simeon Dickinson.

The Canadian Campaign.—In Capt. Aaron Hayne's company, Col. Asa Whitcomb's regiment, were Selah Dickinson, April 1st to December, 1776, and Ebenezer Kellogg, enlisted May 1st, died Nov. 22, 1776.

Under the call of June 25, 1776, Capt. Reuben Dickinson enlisted a company of 86 men, from Amherst and towns adjacent, which was attached to Col. R. Woodbridge's regiment, and served from July 16, 1776, to March 1, 1777. Those from Amherst were Capt. Reuben Dickinson, Corp. Timothy Henderson, Drummer David Adams, Privates Firman Woods, John Billings, Jr., Adam Rice, John Hastings, Daniel Lane, David Hawley, Hezekiah Cowles, John Hodden, Elihu Dickinson, Amasa Allen, Gideon Lee, Noah Hawley, Eneas Ralef, Noah Gould, John Workman, James Barnes, Abner Nash, Simeon Pomeroy, Simeon Peck, Jr., Samuel Gould, Jr., Benj. Ralef.

The following, "to re-inforce the Northern Army," enlisted for two months, under Capt. John Thompson, Col. Leonard's regiment, May 7th to July 8, 1777: Lieut. Noah Dickinson, Sergt. Luke Coffin, Corp. Ebenezer Eastman, Corp. David Stockbridge, Fifer Levi Smith, David Blodgett, Benjamin Buckman, five Dickinsons,—Simeon, Levi, Zimri, Elijah, and Timothy,—Elihu Hubbard, John Ingram, Thomas Morton, Ebenezer Mattoon, Jr. Travel, 180 miles.

The following copy of the pay-roll of the company of Capt. Eli Parker, of Amherst, in Col. Leonard's regiment, raised to reinforce the army at Ticonderoga, contains many Amherst names:‡ Capt. Eli Parker, Lieut. Eliezer (?) Warner, Lieut. Samuel Cook, Ens. Ezra Day, Sergt. Silas Matthews, Sergt. David Town, Sergt. Matthew Moody, Sergt. Timothy Stockwell, Drummer Elisha Nash, Fifer Reuben Smith, Corporals Amasa Smith, Samuel Hastings, John Cowls, and Nathaniel Butterfield, Privates Moses Alvord, Nathan Abbott, Joshua Burt, John Burchet, John Bush, Jonas Burnet, Enos Cook, Judah Clark, Israel Cole, Sylvanus Chapin, Benjamin Clough, Adonijah Cole, Samuel Dean, Jonas Elwell, Daniel Gould, Enos Goodman, Eliphalet Gaylord, Joseph Goodale, Oliver Hastings, Timothy Hilyard, Elijah Hamum, John Kibbe, Ebenezer Kentfield, Silas Lee, Amos Lamb, Elisha Moody, William Montague, Lewis Morgan, Simeon Peck, Jeremiah Pike, James Persifield, Daniel Plumly, Daniel Reed, Daniel Smith, Aaron Smith, Caleb Smith, Paul Smith, Elisha —, Stephen Shumway, Amasa Shumway, Enoch Thayer, Samuel Taylor, William Town, William Town (2d), Jonathan Warner, David Worthington, Enos Woodbridge, Sewall Warner, Joshua Whitney, William Waite. This company enlisted for two months, and were in service from May 8th to July 16, 1777.

In Col. David Wells' regiment, under Capt. Jeremiah Ballard, with the "Northern Army," from May 10th to July 20, 1777, were Lieut. Jonathan Dickinson, David Lard, and Aaron Smith.

Capt. Reuben Dickinson, in July the same year, marched with a company to Moses' Creek to "reinforce the army," and was attached to Col. Elisha Porter's regiment. The company served 38 days, and included the following Amherst men: Capt. Reuben Dickinson, Sergt. Joel Moody, Daniel Benjamin, Azariah Dickinson, Medad Dickinson, Medad Moody, Thomas Williams, Giles Church, John Dickinson, Enos Cowles, Amos Ayres, Nathaniel Dickinson, Timothy Green, Samuel Ingram, Henry Chandler, Joseph Pettis, Reuben Smith.

The following, under Capt. Oliver Smith, in the same regiment, marched for the defense of Bennington, Aug. 17, 1777,

‡ The places of residence are not given in the document from which this is taken.

"found themselves, carried their own baggage," and were out seven days: Jonathan Ingram, John Kibbe, Moses Kellogg, Elihu Dickinson, Oliver Hastings, and Jonathan Cook.

The following went, under the call of August 9th, "for one-sixth part of the militia?" in Col. Woodbridge's regiment, Capt. Moses Hawey's company, Aug. 14th to Nov. 29, 1777; Lieut. Jonathan Dickinson, Lieut. Elisha Baker, and Sergt. Lemuel Clark; in same regiment, under Capt. Samuel Cook, of Amherst, Lieut. Ebenezer Mattoon, Jr.,* Lieut. Enoch White, Sergts. Luke Coffin (promoted to quartermaster, October 9th), Adam Rice, Ethan Pomeroy, and Nathaniel White; Corps. Isaiah Carrier and Daniel Lane; Fifer Levi Smith; Privates Elias Smith, Asa Ayres, David Blodget, Samuel Bacon, Enos Clark, Caleb Dodge, Samuel Dean, Ebenezer Darwin, three Dickinsons,—Zimri, Timothy, and Simeon,—John Elwell, Noah Hawley, Nathaniel Harrington, Thomas Judd, Amos Kellogg, Daniel Kimball, Zenas Leech, John Montague, William Montague, Isaac Marshall, Abner Nash, Jonathan Selden, Oliver Smith (died November 28th), Enos Woodbridge, Benjamin Whitney, Jacob Warner, Thomas Gaylord, Philip Ingram, Samuel Packard, Ebenezer Taylor, Francis Trainor, John White. Capt. Cook's company was out from August 17th to December 7th, and a part was in the battle at "Bemis' Heights," October 7th.

The companies of Capt. Dickinson, Capt. Harvey, and Capt. Cook "were in the army under Gen. Gates; all took a more or less active part in the battles of September 19th and October 7th, and all were present at the surrender of Burgoyne, October 17th."

Campaigns 1777-81.—Under the call for three years' men, issued in January, 1777, the following were enlisted from Amherst: Willis Coy, $50 bounty; Reuben Dickinson, $50; John Fox, Jr., fifer, $20; Samuel Gould, killed; David Pettis, Joseph Young, re-enlisted in 1780 for three years; Noadiah Lewis, "during the war;" and James Trumble, Samuel Brown, John Johnson, and Jonathan Battis, each three years.

The following marched Aug. 18, 1777, "on an alarm to New Providence," and were out four days, under Lieut. Noah Dickinson, Col. Porter's regiment: Lieut. Noah Dickinson; Sergts. Isaac Hubbard, Joseph Dickinson, Henry Franklin, and Josiah Warner; Privates Ebenezer Mattoon, Aaron Alvord, John Ingram, Abner Adams, Amariah Dana, William May, Martin Kellogg, Justus Williams, Ebenezer Dickinson, Daniel Church, Jeremiah Cady, Zachariah Hawley, John Eastman, Elijah Dickinson, Levi Dickinson.

The following on September 23d marched "on an alarm to Stillwater," and were out until October 24th, under Capt. Reuben Dickinson, Porter's regiment: Capt. Reuben Dickinson; Lieut. Noah Dickinson; Sergts. Henry Franklin and Josiah Warner; Corps. Thomas Marshall and Benjamin Buckman; Privates Stephen Smith, John Ingram, Elihu Dickinson, David Blodget, David Cows, Nathan Dickinson, Elihu Hubbard, William May, Simeon Cows, Hezekiah Belding, Ebenezer Dickinson, Lemuel Moody, Timothy Green, Ebenezer Eastman, Henry Chandler, Seth Dickinson, Elijah Dickinson.

The following enlisted for twelve months "in R. I. service," from Jan. 1, 1778, under Capt. Joshua Parker, in Nathaniel Wade's regiment: Lieuts. Ebenezer Mattoon, Elijah Dickinson, and Philip Ingram. May 15th, Ebenezer Boltwood enlisted in Capt. Parker's company for eight months.

* Ebenezer Mattoon, Jr.—known as Gen. Mattoon,—died at an advanced age in 1843. He was an ardent Whig, "was graduated at Dartmouth in 1776, and was many years Representative and Senator in the Legislature; afterward member of Congress, sheriff of Hampshire County, and adjutant-general of the State. He was, on the whole, the most distinguished public man—native of the town—who has resided in Amherst. He also was only twenty-four years of age when he became a Representative, in 1781, and his great influence contributed in marked degree toward keeping Amherst on the right side in the Revolutionary struggle."—Centennial address by M. F. Dickinson, Jr.

"List of men drafted from Amherst for nine months' service from date of arrival at Fishkill, July 8, 1778:" David Lard, age 38; Simeon Peck, 22; Daniel Gould, 18; Timothy Dickinson, 17; Zimri Dickinson, 20; Benjamin Buckman, 21. These were under Col. Porter.

"Men in Capt. Abner Pomeroy's company, Col. Ezra Wood's regiment, eight months' service, 1778:" Solomon Dickinson, Edmund Gould, Levi Smith, fifer, Samuel Buckman.

"Men enlisted from Amherst to serve nine months in the Continental Army, agreeable to a Resolve of the General Court passed June 9, 1779:" Jonathan Allen, Joseph Young, Eleazar Baker, John Canada, Nahum Darby, Joseph Kimball, William Ewing, Hugh Canada, Daniel Darby.

Men in service at New London, Conn., in Capt. Elijah Dwight's company, July 20th to August 25, 1779: Lieut. Luke Coffin; Enos Nash, Silas Lee, John Boltwood, Joseph Church, Nathan Smith, Reuben Ingram, Nathan Perkins, Enos Kellogg, Ashmael Prutt, Zimri Dickinson, James Cowden, Elihu Warner, Silas Wright, Josiah Pierce, Carmi Wright, Thomas Adams, Joseph Cook, Eldad Moody.

"In Capt. Joshua Woodbridge's company of New Levies, R. I. service, for the month of December, 1779," were Owen Briggs, Bezaleel Bowen, Simeon Dickinson, and Elihu Dickinson.

In Capt. Moses Montague's company, Oct. 1st to Nov. 21, 1779, were John Church, Solomon Dickinson, Edmund Gould, Elliott Gray.

"Six months' men enlisted from Amherst in the Continental service July 1, 1780, stationed near West Point. Travel, 144 miles to camp:" Simeon Dickinson, age 17; Samuel Root, 16; Edmund Gould, 17; Noah Hawley, 20; Gideon Moon, 20; Nathan Perkins (2d), Solomon Dickinson, 19; Lemuel Comant, 23; Zenas Dickinson, Aaron Bartlett, Joseph Kimball, 18; Zimri Dickinson, 21; Hezekiah Moon, 27; William Moore, 18; Joseph Robbins, 18; David Lard, 40; Simeon Morton.

Levi Dickinson, 21, enlisted Aug. 10th, for three months, under act of June 22, 1780.

"Men drafted to march to Horse Neck under Col. Samuel How, 1780:" in Capt. Thompson's company, Robert Emmons and Benjamin Leech; in Capt. Brackenridge's company, Levi Nash, John Boltwood, Solomon Boltwood, and Zachariah Field.

The following served from Aug. 12th to Nov. 15, 1781, under Capt. Oliver Coney, in Col. Sears' regiment: Corp. Solomon Dickinson; Drummer, John Fox; Simeon Morton, Levi Dickinson, Joseph Kimball, Noah Hawley, Eli Parker, Jr., Edmund Gould, John Belding, Elisha Ingram.

Dec. 18, 1780, the inhabitants of the town voted to "give to each soldier that shall enlist for this town for three years, or during the war, the sum of three pounds, hard money, per month, the town to receive their wages; or in lieu thereof, the town will give to each soldier that shall enlist as aforesaid forty shillings per month in hard money, in addition to their Continental Pay; also that the town will give each soldier that shall enlist as aforesaid two shirts, two Pairs of Stockings, and two pairs of shoes yearly, in case he fails of the same from the Continent, or State; and the Town Direct the Militia officers to make the above proposals to their respective companies in the name of the Town."

Toryism.—Amherst was not without prominent representation of Toryism. Their lack of zeal in the patriot cause, in the view of some historians, is palliated by the fact that they in general had most to lose in case of failure. Those of assured position and influence under the British crown had least to gain by revolution. Among the most prominent of this class were the minister, Rev. David Parsons, Josiah Chauncey and his son Isaac, Simeon Strong, Esq., Lieut. John Field, Ensign John Nash, Solomon, William, and Ebenezer Bolt-wood, Deacon Simeon Clark, Isaac Goodale, Moses Cook, Charles Chauncey, and Lieut. Robert Boltwood. The minister was a man of positive views and gave offense to the majority, who voted, in 1777, "that the conduct of the Rev. David Parsons* is not friendly with regard to the common cause, and that a committee notify him of this vote." The result of the committee's interview with the minister is not recorded.

Capt. Isaac Chauncey, Lieut. John Field, and Ensign John Nash, who had respectively received their commissions from the colonial Governor, Hutchinson, were required to formally renounce all authority thus conferred. This was done at Northampton in November, 1774, and subsequently at Amherst. The Whigs were still suspicious of Chauncey and Nash, and the district afterward voted that Chauncey should "burn all the commissions he had ever received from the king," and commit his firearms into the hands of the selectmen. The latter request was complied with, but the arms were afterward restored.† Nash also was required to destroy his commissions.

April 8, 1776, Chauncey was convicted of "insulting behavior" toward the committee of safety, and of being "an enemy to his country," and, as he afterward complained, was "refused bail and a fair Tryal by another committee, and ordered not to go from his father's Farm, except on Sundays and to Funerals, and was likewise ordered to pay 39 shillings lawful money to six men whom the committee had appointed to keep him the night before." He further complained that he was "confined in Northampton Jail with a mittimus to the Jailor setting forth that y^e petitioner was an enemy to America, and requiring the Jailor to keep y^e petitioner in close confinement until he should be dismissed by lawful authority." These facts appear in his petition to the General Court, dated at Northampton jail, April 13, 1776. On the 18th it was determined "that the petitioner have leave to withdraw." He was subsequently "confined to certain limits," but, on August 26th, was advertised by the committee as having "clandestinely departed ('tis supposed) to some part of Connecticut on no good design; this is therefore to desire the good people of that State or of other States, or of other States where he may be found, to secure him in such manner that he may not have it in his power to injure America." Lieut. Robert Boltwood was similarly advertised.

Church affairs suffered by disputes which the diversity of views engendered, and occasionally the services were intermitted because of them. A friend of Mr. Parsons, with whom he sometimes exchanged,—Rev. Abraham Hill, of Shutesbury,—greatly offended the people by his free expression of opinions which were deemed unpatriotic. He was prohibited from further preaching, by a vote of the town, in January, 1780.

In 1778 the town voted that "persons not owning Independence on the crown of Great Britain, agreeably to the Declaration of Congress, shall not vote."

NOTEWORTHY INCIDENTS.

Mr. Oliver M. Clapp was born in Amherst, in 1802, and is one of the few belonging to the ancient families of the town who antedate the last war with the mother-country. His grandfather Oliver, born in Northampton in 1744, was descended by five removes from Roger Clapp (an immigrant who settled at Dorchester), and in after-years removed to what is now Amherst. The house into which he moved, and in which Oliver M. was born, stood on East Street, and has since been demolished.

Mr. Clapp relates many stirring anecdotes, some of which are traditional, and others of happenings within his experience,—how some of the officers of Gen. Burgoyne, previous to the battles of Saratoga, ventured to attend a "country dance" somewhere beyond their lines, believing themselves sufficiently disguised to escape detection, and how they were captured by the vigilant "Yankees" and confessed that the latter were too sharp for them; how, during Shays' rebellion, when the insurgents were being driven to the mountain fastnesses in Pelham by the government forces, eleven loads of supplies were sent to their relief by sympathizers in Berkshire, each load guarded by two mounted soldiers. These twenty-two forming the escort sought entertainment at the house of Mr. Clapp's grandfather, but were advised to make all haste to Pelham, as the militia would soon be upon them. The advice was timely, for the pursuing horsemen were already to be seen coming over the hill from the west, right furious for the fray. One bold, well-mounted rebel spurred his steed in the direction of the pursuers, swinging his hat in taunting defiance until they came very near, when he suddenly wheeled and led the chase up the hills to the eastward. Selecting a favorable position, the guard displayed their arms to advantage across the path, and thus checked the valiant horsemen, who, believing they were decoyed into an ambuscade, sped down the hill again and reported that they had barely "escaped the jaws of hell."

Mr. Clapp has a fine collection of Indian and other relics, many of which were obtained near by, and are permanent reminders of the days of savage occupancy, and of the trials of those who opened this goodly land to the light of civilization.

Many of the cabinets of the country have been enriched by specimens procured by Mr. Clapp. Among them are many of the fossil foot-prints for which this portion of the Connecticut Valley is celebrated.

ORGANIZATION OF THE TOWN.

That portion of the town of Hadley which had been variously designated as "New Swamp," "Hadley Farms," "East Farms," and "East Hadley" was set off as "Hadley, Third Precinct," Dec. 31, 1734. In the language of the record, "the precinct being of the contents of two miles and three-quarters in breadth and seven miles in length, bounded westerly on a tract of land reserved by the town of Hadley to lie as common land forever, southerly on Boston Road, easterly on equivalent lands, and northerly on the town of Sunderland."

The term "precinct" signified a parish; hence the separation from Hadley was not entire, having reference chiefly to affairs ecclesiastical. Certain officers were chosen by the precinct, including a clerk, a treasurer, and assessors. The first proceedings are thus recorded:

"Warrant for Meeting in Hadley, Third precinct, Anno Dom., 1735.

"HAMPSHIRE, ss. In pursuance to the request of several freeholders of the third or east precinct of Hadley for the calling of a precinct-meeting. To Ebenezer Kellogg, of sd. precinct, these are In his Majesty's name to will and require you forthwith to notify the free holders and other Inhabetance of sd. Precinct on the eight day of October next, at eight of y^e clock in the fore noone, in order to make Choyce of all necessary Precinct officers, a Committee for the Calling of Precinct meetings for the future, and to do act and agree on what may be thought proper Respecting hiring a newester Building, a meeting-house, and agreeing on a place to set it in, and in finding out what Lands may be taxed for the Defraying charges About the same. Given under my hand and seale this 22nd day of Septem^r, 1735.

"ELEZER PORTER, Justis Peace."

At the meeting thus called, Samuel Hawley acting as a moderator, and John Nash as clerk, John Ingram, Sr., Samuel Boltwood, and Samuel Hawley were chosen a committee for calling precinct-meetings, and Ebenezer Dickinson, Aaron Smith, and John Nash were chosen assessors.

* The story is related of Mr. Parsons that, when required to read before his people a proclamation issued by the new government, he added to the usual conclusion—"God save the Commonwealth of Massachusetts!"—the following expression of his own views: "But I say, God save the King!" Whereupon, a patriot among his hearers arose and exclaimed, with emphasis, "I say you are a damned rascal!" This vehement response is attributed by Mr. M. F. Dickinson, Jr., to Nathaniel Dickinson, Jr., one of the foremost friends of the cause of liberty, and a graduate of Harvard College in 1771. Mr. Oliver M. Clapp, however, says that he was told more than sixty years ago by his grandfather, Oliver Clapp, and again about twenty years since by David Parsons, grandson of the offending minister, that Stephen Smith uttered the historic words.

† "According to tradition, the Whigs of Amherst burnt Capt. Chauncey's commission under a tree, with some display."—Judd's Hist., p. 419, note.

The territory embraced by the precinct boundaries was nearly that inclosed in the present town of Amherst, north of the Boston road. This territory became the "Second Precinct" in 1753.* In 1759,—just one hundred years after the "new plantation," Hadley, had been laid out at "Norwotuck,"—this precinct became a district. The bill creating the district was signed by the colonial governor, Pownall, February 13th in that year. The name of his friend, Gen. Jeffrey Amherst, was adopted by the governor as the name of the district.

Amherst assumed the functions of a town in 1774, and the distinct title in 1776, although no authority for so doing existed prior to 1786.†

As a district Amherst elected its first officers at a meeting held at the meeting-house March 19, 1759, as follows: Deacon Ebenezer Dickinson, Moderator; Josiah Chauncey, Clerk; Joseph Eastman, Treasurer; Deacon Ebenezer Dickinson, Jonathan Dickinson, Dr. Nathaniel Smith, Ensign John Dickinson, Moses Dickinson, Selectmen; Deacon Ebenezer Dickinson, Jonathan Dickinson, Moses Dickinson, Assessors; Pelatiah Smith, Isaac Goodale, Constables; Joseph Eastman, Jonathan Edwards, Tithingmen; Simeon Clark, Nathaniel Coleman, Fence-viewers; Joseph Church, John Petty, Reuben Ingram, Hog-Reeves; Gideon Dickinson, Daniel Dickinson, Ebenezer Mattoon, Nathaniel Dickinson, Jacob Warner, Surveyors; Alexander Smith, Clerk of the Market.

The town was somewhat enlarged in 1789 by the addition of the farms of "Silas Wright and three Dickinsons," situated in Hadley, on the road from Amherst to Sunderland; and, in 1812, by the absorption of a large portion of the fifth or "Mountain division," south of the Brookfield or "Boston" road. This division was laid out by Hadley, in 1743, and the part annexed to Amherst contained about 1700 acres, whose southern limit was the "top of the mountain,"—Holyoke. In 1814 the land which forms the offset in the west line of Amherst at the north end was taken from the northeast corner of Hadley, and contains 700 or 800 acres. A strip, 16 by 115 rods, from the farm of Elias Smith, where the Northampton road crosses the west line of the town, was taken in subsequently. The present town contains not far from twenty-eight and three-quarters square miles, or 18,400 acres.‡

By a survey and map made in 1833 by Alonzo Gray and Charles B. Adams, then of Amherst College, the boundaries of that town were fixed as follows, the magnetic variation being 6° 45' west: commencing at the west end of the southern boundary-line; thence N. 20° W. to the Boston road; thence S. 83° W. 48 rods; thence N. 12° 20' E. 800 rods; thence S. 89° W. 16 rods; thence N. 30° E. 115 rods; thence N. 89° E. 16 rods; thence N. 11° 31' E. 800 rods; thence due west 24½ rods; thence N. 11° 6' E. 592 rods to the Sunderland line; thence N. 86° 47' E. 210 rods; thence N. 88° 45'

* South Hadley, the original "second precinct," became a "district" in April, 1753, making the precincts in Hadley one less. A "district" was in effect a town, except in the matter of choosing representatives. The Colonial Government was enjoined by Great Britain to withhold this power from towns newly formed. This limitation was enforced from about the year 1753.

† A survey made in 1739 by Oliver Partridge, of Hatfield, fixed the east line of Hadley—now the east line of Amherst—at six miles due east from the old meeting-house. The same survey showed that the town of Sunderland possessed a strip of land belonging to Hadley 50 rods wide at the west end, and 55 rods at the east end, and containing 437 acres. Hadley was paid by Sunderland for this land, one-half of which was in the "third precinct,"—now Amherst. The north line of Amherst is therefore about 50 rods less than "five miles northward from the meeting-house." All these lines were run by the magnetic meridian, which was then 8° west of the true meridian.

‡ By a general law of 1786, all districts incorporated prior to Jan. 1, 1777, were declared towns.—M. F. Dickinson, Jr.'s, Centennial Address.

§ The territory was augmented by the following provision: "And be it further enacted that Isaac Ward, Reuben Ingram, Philip Ingram, Isaac Hubbard, and Edward Elnor, and their respective estates lying within the bounds of the tracts of seventeen hundred and seventy-seven acres petitioned for, and adjoining to said second precinct line, be, and hereby are annexed to the said district, there to enjoy privilege and do duty."

E. 684 rods to the northeast corner of the town; thence S. 1° 22' E. to the line between Amherst and Granby; thence westerly along said line and the Holyoke range to the place of beginning.‡

CIVIL LIST.

REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS. ||

Ebenezer Mattoon, Jr., 1801-3; Osmyn Baker, 1839-45; Edward Dickinson, 1853-55; Julius H. Seelye, 1874-75.

STATE COUNCILORS.

Edward Dickinson, 1846-47; Timothy J. Gridley, 1849-50.

STATE SENATORS.

Simeon Strong, 1792-93; Ebenezer Mattoon, Jr., 1795-96; John Leland, 1833-34; Edward Dickinson, 1842-43; James W. Boyden, 1858; Lucius M. Boltwood, 1860.

DELEGATES AND REPRESENTATIVES TO THE GENERAL COURT.

Nathaniel Dickinson, Jr., delegate to First Provincial Congress, at Salem, Oct. 7, 1774; to Second, at Cambridge, Feb. 1, 1775; to Third, at Watertown, May 31, 1775; Moses Dickinson, July, 1775; John Billings, May, 1776; Ebenezer Mattoon, Jr., delegate to State Convention at Concord, May, 1776; John Billings and Moses Dickinson, May, 1777; Nathaniel Dickinson, Jr., and Joseph Eastman, 1778; Ebenezer Mattoon, Jr., delegate to convention at Concord which formed State Constitution, 1779; Nathaniel Dickinson, 1780; Ebenezer Mattoon, Jr., 1781; Nathaniel Dickinson, 1783; Eli Parker, 1784-85; Daniel Cooley, 1787-88; Simeon Strong, 1790-91; Moses Cook, 1792-93; Ebenezer Mattoon, Jr., 1794; Zelina Montague, 1796-1804; Samuel F. Dickinson, 1805-7; Samuel F. Dickinson, Zelina Montague, 1808; Samuel F. Dickinson, Simeon Strong, 1809; Medad Dickinson, Elisha Smith, 1810-11; Ebenezer Mattoon, Simeon Strong, 1812; Samuel F. Dickinson, Simeon Strong, 1813; Simeon Strong, Noah Webster, 1814; Noah Webster, 1815; Samuel F. Dickinson, 1816-18; Noah Webster, 1819; Timothy Jones Gridley, 1820; Nathan Franklin, 1821; Aaron Merick, 1822; Isaac Robbins, 1823-24; Timothy Jones Gridley, 1826; Chester Dickinson, Samuel F. Dickinson, 1827; Enos Dickinson, Samuel F. Dickinson, 1828; Elijah Boltwood, Daniel Dickinson, Samuel F. Dickinson, 1829; Isaac G. Catler, Zelina Dickinson, 1830; Zelina Dickinson, John Leland, 1831; Oliver Dickinson (2d), John Leland, 1832; Osmyn Baker, Daniel Dickinson, George Nutting, 1833; Osmyn Baker, Elijah Boltwood, Zelina Dickinson, 1834; Elijah Boltwood, Reuben Roberts, Ebenezer Williams, 1835; Martin Baker, Osmyn Baker, George Nutting, 1836; Osmyn Baker, Enos Dickinson (2d), Ebenezer Mattoon, Jr., 1837; Edward Dickinson, Eleazer Kellogg, 1838; Edward Dickinson, Oliver Dickinson, 1839; Charles Adams, Ebenezer Mattoon, Jr., 1840; Samuel C. Carter, 1841-42; Ezra Ingram, 1843; Timothy Jones Gridley, 1844; Thomas Jones, 1845; Timothy Jones Gridley, 1846; John Leland, 1847; Alfred Baker, 1848; Luke Sweetser, 1849; Waitstill Dickinson, 1850; William Chauncey Fowler, 1851; Oliver Watson, 1852; Moses Billings Greene, 1853; Ithamar F. Conkey, 1854; Benjamin F. Smith, 1855; Baxter Eastman, 1856; Enos Dickinson Williams, 1857; George Warner, 1858; Lorenzo S. Nash, Granby, 1859; Josiah Ayres, 1860; Marcus C. Groat, Pelham, 1861; John R. Cushman, 1862; Samuel Smith, Jr., Granby, 1863; William S. Clark, 1864-65; John Jones, Pelham, 1866; William S. Clark, 1867; Horace Ward, 1868; E. Montague, Hadley, 1869; Levi Stockbridge, 1870; Avery R. Cushman, 1871; Ira Wright, South Hadley, 1872; Henry But, 1873; Edward Dickinson, 1874; James W. Gaylord, South Hadley, 1875; Newton Smith, South Hadley, 1876; Chauncey W. Lessey, 1877; Martin W. Burnett, South Hadley, 1878; Edward P. Crowell, 1879.

For the years 1782, 1786, 1789, 1795, and 1825, there were no representatives chosen.

Ebenezer Mattoon and Israel Scott were delegates to the Constitutional Convention of 1820, and Ithamar Conkey to the convention of 1853.

SELECTMEN.

1759.—Ebenezer Dickinson, Jonathan Dickinson, Nathaniel Smith, John Dickinson, Moses Dickinson.

1760.—Jonathan Edwards, Nathaniel Coleman, Jonathan Moody, Josiah Chauncey, Daniel Kellogg.

1761.—Jonathan Dickinson, John Dickinson, Peter Smith, Joseph Eastman, John Field.

1762.—Josiah Chauncey, Simeon Strong, Alexander Smith, Daniel Kellogg, Moses Dickinson.

1763.—Elisha Ingram, John Billings, Joseph Eastman, Moses Dickinson, Simeon Clark.

1764.—Peter Smith, Nathaniel Dickinson, Jonathan Edwards, Jonathan Dickinson, John Dickinson.

1765.—John Billings, Moses Dickinson, Simeon Clark, Joseph Eastman, Azariah Dickinson.

1766.—John Dickinson, Jonathan Edwards, John Field, Samuel Ingram, Alexander Smith.

1767.—Jonathan Dickinson, Nathaniel Coleman, Joseph Eastman, Moses Dickinson, Simeon Clark.

1768.—John Dickinson, Alexander Smith, Jonathan Edwards, John Field, Moses Dickinson.

‡ Three of the distances of the above survey are not given.

|| Amherst is now in the Tenth Congressional District, which is represented by Amasa Norcross, of Fitchburg.

- 1769.—Simeon Strong, Joseph Eastman, Moses Dickinson, Nathaniel Coleman, Jonathan Dickinson.
- 1770.—John Dickinson, Solomon Boltwood, Jonathan Edwards, Josiah Chauncey, Gideon Dickinson.
- 1771.—Simeon Strong, John Field, Moses Dickinson, Alexander Smith, Peter Smith.
- 1772.—John Dickinson, Nathaniel Dickinson, Moses Dickinson, Reuben Dickinson, John Billings.
- 1773.—John Dickinson, Moses Dickinson, Nathaniel Dickinson, Ebenezer Mattoon, Reuben Dickinson.
- 1774.—Reuben Dickinson, John Dickinson, Moses Dickinson, Nathaniel Dickinson, Ebenezer Mattoon.
- 1775.—Moses Dickinson, John Dickinson, Reuben Dickinson, Nathaniel Dickinson, Ebenezer Mattoon.
- 1776.—Joseph Eastman, Joseph Williams, Moses Dickinson, Simeon Smith, Simeon Dickinson.
- 1777.—Moses Dickinson, John Billings, Reuben Dickinson, Elijah Baker, Joseph Williams.
- 1778.—Moses Dickinson, Joseph Williams, Reuben Dickinson, Elijah Baker, John Billings.
- 1779.—James Merrick, Nathaniel Dickinson, Jr., Joseph Dickinson, Josiah Warner, Ebenezer Mattoon, Jr.
- 1780.—Eli Parker, Thomas Hastings, Alexander Smith, Jonathan Dickinson, Martin Kellogg.
- 1781.—John Billings, Elijah Baker, Isaac Hubbard, Gideon Henderson, Moses Dickinson.
- 1782.—Elijah Baker, Gideon Dickinson, Elisha Smith, Jonathan Smith, Jonathan Dickinson, Jr.
- 1783.—Eli Parker, Eleazer Smith, Martin Kellogg, Joel Billings, Thomas Hastings, Jr.
- 1784.—Joel Moody, Jonathan Dickinson, Jr., Enos Dickinson, Stephen Smith, Ebenezer Boltwood.
- 1785.—Joseph Church, Noah Smith, Elisha Smith, Jonathan Dickinson, Jr., John Nash.
- 1786.—Elisha Smith, Moses Cook, Joseph Church, Joseph Eastman, Jr., Ebenezer Boltwood.
- 1787.—John Field, Elisha Smith, Ebenezer Boltwood, Joseph Church, Jonathan Dickinson, Jr.
- 1788.—Josiah Warner, Joseph Dickinson, John Billings, Thomas Hastings, Timothy Greenfield.
- 1789.—Joseph Eastman, Jr., Ebenezer Boltwood, Elisha Smith, Ebenezer Mattoon, Joseph Church.
- 1790.—Ebenezer Mattoon, Ebenezer Boltwood, Joseph Church, Elisha Smith, Joseph Eastman, Jr.
- 1791.—Ebenezer Mattoon, Ebenezer Boltwood, Joseph Church, Elisha Smith, Joseph Eastman, Jr.
- 1792.—Moses Cook, Ebenezer Boltwood, Noah Smith, Daniel Kellogg, Elijah Dickinson.
- 1793.—Ebenezer Boltwood, Moses Cook, Daniel Kellogg, Jr., Jonathan Dickinson, Timothy Henderson.
- 1794.—Zebina Montague, Elisha Smith, Joseph Dickinson, Medad Dickinson, Elijah Dickinson.
- 1795.—Zebina Montague, Noah Smith, Elisha Smith, Ebenezer Boltwood, Jonathan Dickinson.
- 1796.—Zebina Montague, Medad Dickinson, Noah Smith, Elisha Smith, Jonathan Dickinson.
- 1797.—Zebina Montague, Medad Dickinson, Elijah Dickinson, Ebenezer Boltwood, Moses Hastings.
- 1798.—Zebina Montague, Medad Dickinson, Ebenezer Boltwood, Moses Hastings, Elijah Dickinson.
- 1799.—John Dickinson, Gideon Stetson, Medad Dickinson, Samuel Hastings, Jonathan Dickinson.
- 1800.—Medad Dickinson, Noah Smith, Samuel Hastings, Gideon Stetson, John Dickinson.
- 1801.—Medad Dickinson, Noah Smith, Gideon Stetson, Samuel Hastings, Moses Hastings.
- 1802.—Timothy Henderson, John Kellogg, Nathan Franklin, Gideon Stetson, Elijah Dickinson.
- 1803.—Elijah Dickinson, Gideon Stetson, Nathan Franklin, Timothy Henderson, John Kellogg.
- 1804.—Elijah Dickinson, Timothy Henderson, Gideon Stetson, Nathan Franklin, John Kellogg.
- 1805.—Elijah Dickinson, Medad Dickinson, Timothy Henderson, Nathan Franklin, John Kellogg.
- 1806.—Medad Dickinson, Elijah Dickinson, Timothy Henderson, Nathan Franklin, John Kellogg.
- 1807.—Medad Dickinson, Elijah Dickinson, Timothy Henderson, Nathan Franklin, John Kellogg.
- 1808.—Elijah Dickinson, Moses Hastings, Calvin Merrill, Ebenezer Ingram, Aaron Merrick.
- 1809.—Moses Hastings, Calvin Merrill, Aaron Merrick, Elijah Smith, Chester Williams.
- 1810.—Elijah Dickinson, Moses Hastings, Aaron Merrick, Chester Williams, Elijah Smith.
- 1811.—Elijah Dickinson, Moses Hastings, Chester Williams, Aaron Merrick, Elijah Smith.
- 1812.—Martin Baker, Chester Williams, Chester Smith, David Smith, Aaron Merrick.
- 1813.—Moses Hastings, Calvin Merrill, Justus Williams, Jr., Martin Baker, Aaron Merrick.
- 1814.—Elijah Dickinson, John Eastman, Justus Williams, Jr., Martin Baker, Enos Dickinson (21).
- 1815.—Elijah Dickinson, John Eastman, Justus Williams, Jr., Martin Baker, Enos Dickinson (21).
- 1816.—Elijah Dickinson, John Eastman, Justus Williams, Jr., Martin Baker, Enos Dickinson (21).
- 1817.—Calvin Merrill, Nathan Franklin, Ebenezer Mattoon, Jr., Enos Dickinson (21), Chester Dickinson.
- 1818.—Calvin Merrill, Ebenezer Mattoon, Jr., Enos Dickinson (21).
- 1819.—Enos Baker, Elijah Boltwood, Chester Dickinson, Aaron Merrick, Timothy S. Goodman.
- 1820.—Chester Dickinson, Elijah Boltwood, Benoni Rust, George Nutting, Justus Williams.
- 1821.—Chester Dickinson, Josiah Warner, Jr., Seth Nelson, Nathaniel C. Dickinson, Hosea Goodale.
- 1822.—Chester Dickinson, Asahel Thayer, Jonathan Bridgman, Andrew Hyde, Rufus Cows.
- 1823.—Chester Dickinson, Andrew Hyde, Martin Baker, Ebenezer Williams, Zebina Hawley.
- 1824.—Chester Dickinson, Martin Baker, Levi Jones, Oliver Dickinson, Rufus Kellogg.
- 1825.—Asahel Thayer, Elijah Boltwood, Jonathan Cows, Oliver Dickinson (21), Levi Jones.
- 1826.—Elijah Boltwood, Jonathan Cows, Oliver Dickinson (21), George Nutting, Zebina Dickinson.
- 1827.—Elijah Boltwood, George Nutting, Oliver Dickinson, Jonathan Cows, Zebina Dickinson.
- 1828.—Elijah Boltwood, Jonathan Cows, Zebina Dickinson, Nathaniel C. Dickinson, Ebenezer Williams.
- 1829.—Elijah Boltwood, Zebina Dickinson, Jonathan Cows, Nathaniel C. Dickinson, Ebenezer Williams.
- 1830.—Elijah Boltwood, Ebenezer Mattoon, Jr., William Kellogg, Enos Dickinson, David Dexter.
- 1831.—Elijah Boltwood, David Dexter, Enos Dickinson, Ebenezer Mattoon, Jr., William Kellogg.
- 1832.—Elijah Boltwood, Zebina Dickinson, Solomon R. Eastman, Ebenezer Williams, Jonathan Bridgman.
- 1833.—Solomon R. Eastman, Nathaniel C. Dickinson, Jonathan Cows, Luke Sweetser, Asahel Thayer.
- 1834.—Thomas Hastings, Chester Dickinson, Lucius Dickinson, Jonathan Rice, Aaron M. Chandler.
- 1835.—Zebina Hawley, W. S. Howland, Lucius Dickinson, Daniel Dickinson, Eleazer Gaylord.
- 1836.—Alfred Baker, Enos Dickinson (21), Salvador Andrews, Leonard M. Hills, Ezra Ingram.
- 1837.—Enos Dickinson (21), Leonard M. Hills, Alfred Baker, Salvador Andrews, Ezra Ingram.
- 1838.—Alfred Baker, Ezra Ingram, Oliver Dickinson (21), Nelson Rust, Frederick A. Palmer.
- 1839.—Enos Dickinson, Simeon Clark, Charles Adams, Charles Roberts, Thomas Hastings.
- 1840.—Luther Nash, Eleazer Kellogg, Cotten Smith, Seth Nims, Willard M. Kellogg.
- 1841.—Simeon Clark, Oliver Watson, Seth Nims, Eleazer Kellogg, William Merrick.
- 1842.—Simeon Clark, Alfred Baker, Enos Dickinson.
- 1843.—Ebenezer Williams, Eleazer Kellogg, Frederick A. Palmer.
- 1844.—Frederick A. Palmer, Salem Hammond, Ezra Ingram.
- 1845.—Russell T. Wheelock, Lyman Gunn, Waitstill Dickinson.
- 1846.—Russell T. Wheelock, Lyman Gunn, Waitstill Dickinson.
- 1847.—John Dickinson, Jr., Ansel C. Marshall, Waitstill Dickinson.
- 1848.—Russell T. Wheelock, Ansel C. Marshall, Waitstill Dickinson.
- 1849.—Ansel C. Marshall, Waitstill Dickinson, Willard M. Kellogg.
- 1850.—Alfred Baker, Leonard M. Hills, Simeon Clark, Truman Nutting, Ansel C. Marshall.
- 1851.—Alfred Baker, Leonard M. Hills, Simeon Clark, Ansel C. Marshall, Truman Nutting.
- 1852.—Albin P. Howe, Ezra Ingram, Enos D. Williams.
- 1853.—Josiah Ayres, Ezra Ingram, Enos D. Williams.
- 1854.—Edward A. Stanley, Austin Eastman, Enos D. Williams.
- 1855.—Josiah Ayres, Austin Eastman, William Dickinson, James Hastings, Robert Cutler.
- 1856.—John R. Cushman, M. Adams Allen, Bela U. Dickinson, Daniel Converse, Ezra Ingram.
- 1857.—Baxter Eastman, Russell T. Wheelock, David Pomeroy.
- 1858.—Russell T. Wheelock, Alfred Baker, Austin Eastman.
- 1859.—Ezra Ingram, Willard M. Kellogg, Daniel Converse.
- 1860.—Ezra Ingram, Daniel Converse, Bela U. Dickinson.
- 1861.—Ezra Ingram, Eleazer Kellogg, Harlem L. Pomeroy.
- 1862.—Ezra Ingram, Eleazer Kellogg, Daniel Converse.
- 1863.—Ezra Ingram, Eleazer Kellogg, Daniel Converse.
- 1864.—Ezra Ingram, Daniel Converse, Avery R. Cushman.
- 1865.—Ezra Ingram, Eleazer Kellogg, Porter Dickinson.
- 1866.—Ezra Ingram, Eleazer Kellogg, Porter Dickinson.
- 1867.—Ezra Ingram, Eleazer Kellogg, Porter Dickinson.
- 1868.—Ezra Ingram, Eleazer Kellogg, Porter Dickinson.

1869.—Ezra Ingram, Eleazer Kellogg, Porter Dickinson.
 1870.—Levi Stockbridge, Harrison Ingram, Flavel Gaylord.
 1871.—Flavel Gaylord, Harrison Ingram, Charles S. Smith.
 1872.—Flavel Gaylord, Harrison Ingram, George H. Prince.
 1873.—Chauncey W. Lessey, Edmund Hobart, Waitstill Dickinson.
 1874.—Chauncey W. Lessey, Edmund Hobart, Waitstill Dickinson.
 1875.—Chauncey W. Lessey, Allen P. Merrick, Harrison Ingram.
 1876.—Chauncey W. Lessey, Allen P. Merrick, Harrison Ingram.
 1877.—Chauncey W. Lessey, A. J. Robinson, Jonathan Cowles.
 1878.—Dwight W. Palmer, Harrison Ingram, James E. Merrick.

RECORDERS OR TOWN CLERKS.

After 1774, with the exception of a few years when separate treasurers were elected, the offices of clerk and treasurer were combined. The exceptions are appended hereto. From 1759 to 1776, when Amherst was incorporated as a town, these officers were chosen by and represented the "district of Amherst."

Josiah Chauncey, 1759-62; Simeon Strong, 1763-66, Josiah Chauncey, 1767; Seth Coleman, 1768-74; Nathaniel Dickinson, Jr., 1773-87; Seth Coleman, 1788-1803; Samuel F. Dickinson, 1804-18; Elijah Dwight,* 1819; Elijah Smith, 1820-22; Ebenezer Mattoon, Jr., 1823-27; Ithamar Conkey, 1828-29; Lucius Boltwood, 1830-34; John S. Adams, 1835; Russell T. Wheelock, 1836; Samuel C. Carter, 1837-45; Newton Fitch, 1846-47; James W. Boyden, 1848-52, and 1854; Alvin P. Howe, 1853, '55, '56; Samuel C. Carter, 1857,—the present clerk, whose two periods of service exceed thirty-one years.

PRESENT TOWN OFFICERS.

Selectmen and Overseers of the Poor, Dwight W. Palmer, Harrison Ingram, James E. Merrick; Clerk and Treasurer, Samuel Cutts Carter; Assessors, Oliver D. Hunt, Ebenezer P. Spear, James E. Merrick; School Committee, Warren H. Beaman, Henry C. Nash, William B. Graves; Auditor, Henry Holland; Fence-Viewers, Marquis F. Dickinson, Harvey White, William W. Smith; Field-Drivers, Charles W. Newell, David S. Warner, H. Shaw, Watson W. Cowles, Waitstill Dickinson; Measurers of Wood and Bark, B. F. Kellogg, Forrester P. Ainsworth, Henry Holland, Oliver D. Hunt, J. Hastings, Albert Clark, W. Dickinson, George W. Smith, L. Roberts, Charles L. Dadman; Surveyors of Lumber, F. Gaylord, B. F. Kellogg, L. E. Dickinson, Albert Clark, J. Hastings, Wm. E. Lyman, S. Harrington; Sealers of Leather, R. W. Stratton, D. H. Kellogg; Sealer of Weights and Measures, James Hasting; Pound-Keeper, J. P. Gray; Weighers of Coal, T. W. Sloan, E. T. Wilson, E. S. White, Leander Merrick, Waitstill Dickinson; Collector of Taxes, Samuel C. Carter; Sextons, C. W. Dana, H. White, E. D. Marsh, W. V. Cutter; Constables, G. B. Gallond, T. W. Sloan, W. W. Smith, W. E. Stebbins, E. B. Sears, W. W. Cowles, C. L. Dadman, T. M. Armstrong; Elector under Oliver Smith Will, W. S. Clark; Deputy-Sheriff, G. B. Gallond; Medical Examiner, Dr. D. B. N. Fish; Trial-Justice, E. A. Thomas; Policeman, R. D. C. Ingram.

VILLAGES.

AMHERST, OR AMHERST CENTRE,

is a post-village, and the largest and most important village in the town. It occupies the uplands near the town's geographical centre, and is the seat of Amherst College, founded in 1821, and of the State Agricultural College, opened in 1867.

In the midst of the village is a common containing many beautiful elms, which is a part of the former wide highway between the divided lands, called the first and second divisions. Many of the buildings of Amherst College occupy an elevation at the south end of the common, while those constituting the principal business portion of the village are grouped around the north end.

Main Street leads east from the business centre to a suburb called "East Amherst," a mile distant, passing, midway, the depot and "crossing" of the New London Northern Railway.

The village contains the town clerk's office, eight churches, two printing-offices, three hotels, one national and one savings bank, and a post-office, with a branch at East Amherst. The place has a small fire department and a gas-works, two hat-manufactories, and two establishments which produce gold pens. There are thirty resident ministers.

Latitude at the college observatory, 42° 22' 17"; longitude, 72° 34' 3". Elevation above sea-level, 267 feet.

NORTH AMHERST

is a considerable hamlet in the northern portion of the town, whose interests are mainly agricultural. It has a post-office and one church edifice. Easterly, about one mile distant, is a settlement called "North Amherst City," where is situated

* Mr. Dwight died during the year, and Mr. Smith was elected to the vacancy in December, 1819.

the depot, on the line of the New London Northern Railway. The city contains also a branch of the North Amherst post-office and one church.

On Mill River, about three miles from North Amherst, are two mills where artificial leather, or "leather board," is made, and one mill which turns out coarse wrapping-paper. It is said that a man named Williams had a mill on this stream in 1782.

SOUTH AMHERST,

another small place in the southeastern part of the town and south of Fort River, is chiefly sustained by its agricultural interests. It has one establishment for the manufacture of children's carriages, a post-office, and one church. This village, like the preceding, is situated on the line of the New London Northern Railway. The post-office was established here in 1838. The postmasters have been Hiram H. Allen, 1838 to 1844; Waitstill Dickinson, 1844 to 1850; Charles F. Hayward, 1850 to 1857; Daniel Paine, 1857 to 1859; Sylvanus M. Wright, 1859 to 1863; Thomas Reed, 1863 to 1866; Waitstill Dickinson, 1866, the present incumbent.

PICTURE OF AMHERST IN 1800.

The two principal streets, lying with the cardinal points, and intersecting at the centre of the village, were originally laid forty rods wide, forming a spacious common before the dwellings fronting upon them. They were afterward narrowed, and the lawn in front of the dwellings thus extended. The Strong house, on Amity, and the Dr. Rufus Cowles house, on Pleasant Street, illustrate the change which has taken place. Says Prof. Tyler:†

"At the commencement of the present century, Judge Strong owned all the land at and near the northwest and northeast corners of the two main streets, as far north as the Dr. Cowles house and the Dr. Coleman house, which then stood near the cemetery, and as far east as the Dr. Cutler house, which then stood on the brow of Sunset Hill, now Mrs. Jones'. Gen. Zebina Montague owned the southeast corner, and Dr. (David) Parsons the whole southwest angle, except the corner, which was occupied then, as it has been ever since, by the hotel. In 1815, when the college began to be talked of, there were still not more than twenty-five houses in the entire village. Three of these were gambrel-roofed houses,—the then aristocratic style,—viz., those of Judge Strong and Dr. Parsons, and the hotel, the last, however, only one story, and then kept by Elijah Boltwood. Of these the Judge Strong house is the only remaining specimen. Between the hotel and the Parsons house there was no building, except a school-house, near the site of the present tin-shop, which was used sometimes for a district school, and sometimes for a select school. There was no sidewalk, and the road (for a street it could hardly be called, although it was the main road leading to the 'meeting-house') was often so muddy as to be impassable. Prof. Snell remembers being obliged more than once, by reason of the mud, to betake himself to the Virginia fence that run its zigzags alongside this road. The common was partly swamp and partly pasture ground, grown up to white birch, on which each family was allowed, by annual vote of the town, to pasture a cow so many weeks every season. On the east side there was a goose-pond, skirted with alders, and alive and vocal with large flocks of geese.

"The corner diagonal to the hotel, now the site of Phoenix Row, was then occupied by the house and store of H. Wright Strong. Till about this time this was the only store in town, and there was no such thing as a drug-store or carpenter's or blacksmith's shop in existence. At the east end of what is now Phoenix Row was the house which was owned and occupied by Noah Webster for ten years, from 1812 till 1822. This house was destroyed by fire in 1838. The orchard which Mr. Webster planted and cherished (now Foster Cook's) is still, perhaps, the best orchard in town. Samuel Fowler Dickinson had recently erected the house now owned by his son, the first brick house in the village. The road between Mr. Webster's and Mr. Dickinson's then took a zigzag course toward the present residence of Mr. Sweetser, to avoid a marsh in which, in old times, cattle were not unfrequently mired. The causeway of Main Street now crosses the centre of that swamp, and the village church is built on its margin. When Esquire Dickinson built his brick house, he removed the wood house which he had previously occupied on the same site to Pleasant Street, where it still stands, a small, old-fashioned, two-story house, a little north of the blacksmith-shop. The old Whiting house, between Pleasant Street and North Street, now owned by Mr. Ayers, is also one of the antiquities of Amherst. And the grand old elm, which overshadows it like a protecting forest, if it were only gitted with speech like some trees of the mythical ages, could tell tales older and more impressive than all the history that has been gathered from the oldest inhabitants. There is no finer specimen of 'the American tree,'—'the tree of Liberty'—in the valley of the Connecticut, and of course none anywhere else in the country or the world.

† Hist. of Amherst College, 1873.

"There are two houses on the east side of the common which existed at the time of which we are speaking, and still remain quite unchanged,—the Warner house and the Merrill house. And we must not forget to mention an institution, quite characteristic of the good old times, which once stood on the back side of the Merrill lot, but which has passed from the knowledge of the present generation, though some traces of it have been brought to light in recent excavations. We refer to a distillery—the first, but by no means the last, in this region—which used up some 3000 barrels of cider every year, turning it into cider-brandy, and used up as effectually some of the old settlers. Their children, who are still on the stage, recount some first lessons learned there, which, with the help of later lessons of a counter-tendency, have made them ever since the sturdy friends of temperance.

"In the construction of Prof. Seelye's fish-pond lately, the aqueduct of logs which brought water into the distillery was discovered, and found to be still, after three-quarters of a century, in a state of perfect preservation. College Street now runs along near the brow of this distillery ravine, which used to be covered with barrels of cider and cider-brandy. Fact significant not only of change but of improvement! The world does move; and it moves to the right direction,—toward temperance, intelligence, virtue, and piety."

INDUSTRIES.

Gold Pens.—It is now—1879—nearly thirty years since Ira C. Haskins commenced the manufacture of gold pens, and twenty-five years, or more, since he transferred the business to the vicinity of Amherst. For a considerable time his brother, Joseph A., as the senior partner, was associated with him, "Haskins Brothers" being the title of the firm. Joseph, because of ill health, about 1869 retired from the business to a farm in Shutesbury,—the town in which their earlier business was conducted.

Two years before his retirement, however, an act was secured incorporating the two brothers and Henry A. Marsh, of Amherst, as the "Haskins Gold Pen Manufacturing Company," and authorizing a property in real estate to the amount of $20,000, the capital being $100,000. There has been, as yet, no regular organization under the act.

The products of the present establishment—now conducted by Ira C. Haskins—are gold pens, in nearly 50 different patterns, varying in size, style, and number, some of which, as specialties, bear the peculiar names, reservoir, double reservoir, crow-quill, and stub nib.

Previous to the location at Shutesbury, Mr. Haskins had an office in New York City, and, having purchased the stock of Wm. Ball & Co., English manufacturers of steel pens, at Newark, N. J., engaged for a time in the sale of pens of both steel and gold.

POST-OFFICES.

Amherst.—The first postmaster in the town of Amherst was Daniel Kellogg, who was appointed about the period of the Revolution, and kept the post-office in East Street. His successors have been J. White, J. White, Jr., H. Wright Strong, Samuel C. Carter,* Seth Nims, L. M. Boltwood, J. L. Skinner, John Jamieson.

North Amherst.—A post-office was established at North Amherst nearly or quite forty years ago, upon the application of Samuel Davis and others. Mr. Davis was the first appointee, and served about years, when William H. Robinson succeeded him. Mr. Cutler was restored to the office by President Buchanan, and held it until 1869, when he resigned. C. H. Hobart then served three months and, in turn, resigned. F. P. Ainsworth, the present incumbent, then entered upon his duties in that office.

THE PRESS.

The first paper of any kind issued in Amherst was The Chemist and Meteorological Journal, by Carter & Adams; edited by John B. Cotting. The first number appeared on the 1st of July, 1826. On December 1st, of the same year, Messrs. Carter & Adams commenced the New England Enquirer. It was edited successively by Hon. Osmyn Baker and Rev. Samuel Worcester. In 1839 the Amherst Gazette appeared. It was edited and published by James B. Yerrington. The year 1844 witnessed the advent of a journal of more permanent character, the Hampshire and Franklin Express, edited by Samuel C. Nash. In 1848 it passed into the possession of Homer A. Cook. J. R. Trumbull, now of the Hampshire Gazette, became its publisher and editor in 1849. Messrs. Adams Bros. received it again in 1853, having Leander Wetherell as editor. Subsequently Mr. William Faxon became its editor and publisher. He turned it over to J. H. Brewster, who took as partner the Rev. Pliny H. White. After some time Mr. Brewster repurchased Mr. White's interest, and took into partnership Rev. J. H. M. Leland. Afterward Mr. Brewster left, and for a short time Mr. Leland had sole charge. Mr. H. A. Marsh purchased it in 1858, changing the name in the year 1865 from Hampshire and Franklin Express, which it had borne since 1844, to Hampshire Express. In the fall of 1866 he disposed of it to Capt. J. L. Skinner, who published and edited it till February, 1868, when he associated with himself as partner Mr. H. M. McCloud. In May, 1868, the name of the paper was changed to Amherst Record, and Mr. McCloud had Mr. Charles L. Storrs as an associate for a couple of years. In 1871, Mr. McCloud enlarged the paper to eight pages, and published till June, 1877, when he took as partner Mr. J. E. Williams. The paper is still published by McCloud & Williams.

The Amherst Transcript was established Sept. 18, 1877, by the brothers Robert A. and Charles H. Marsh, the former being the publisher, the latter editor. Robert A., in 1875, opened a job-office in a drug-store in the First National Bank building, and removed early in the next year to the American House block, where he continued until August, 1877, when he moved the office to its present quarters in "Palmer Block," and took a contract to publish the Amherst Student, a fortnightly college paper of sixteen pages, which is still regularly issued. The Transcript is independent in politics, treats of local affairs, and has a circulation of about 800 copies, chiefly within the counties of Hampshire and Hampden. The paper was enlarged Jan. 7, 1879.

* Served at two periods, in all nine years,—first under Jno. Tyler, last under Z. Taylor.

BANKS.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF AMHERST

was organized in January, 1864, with a capital of $51,000. The first board of directors was constituted as follows: Leonard M. Hills, Jared T. Westcott, Enos D. Williams, James G. Vose, Ansel C. Marshall, Seth J. Bennett, Calvin Bridgman. The first president was Leonard M. Hills; the first cashier, William P. Smith.

During the presidency of Mr. Hills the capital was twice increased,—in November, 1864, to $100,000, and in May, 1865, to $150,000, where it remains.

In March, 1872, Calvin Bridgman was chosen president, Mr. Hills having resigned, and held the position until January, 1874, when he was succeeded by the present incumbent, Leonard D. Hills. In October, 1865, Reuben J. D. Westcott was chosen cashier in place of Mr. Smith, resigned.

Present Directors.—Leonard D. Hills, Jared T. Westcott, Ansel C. Marshall, Calvin Bridgman, Enos F. Cook, William A. Dickinson, William S. Tyler.

Officers.—Leonard D. Hills, President; Reuben J. D. Westcott, Cashier; William N. Scott, Teller; Edgar T. Scott, Book-keeper.

Capital, $150,000. Surplus, $50,000.

THE AMHERST SAVINGS-BANK

was incorporated April 5, 1864, and went into operation in January, 1865. The first board of trustees was composed of C. W. Lessey, Charles Adams, E. F. Cook, H. Holland, Calvin Bridgman, James Hastings, D. W. Palmer, W. A. Dickinson, George Cutler, A. R. Cushman, David Rice, Horace Ward, N. Austin Smith.

The same persons constitute the present board, with the exception of B. F. Kendrick, whose name appears in place of C. W. Lessey. The deposits Jan. 1, 1879, were $498,060; surplus, $17,625.98; guarantee fund, $2683. Loans, $501,623.10; cash, $16,746.71.

Present Officers.—E. F. Cook, President; D. W. Palmer, Vice-President; George Cutler, Secretary; Samuel C. Carter, Treasurer.

Board of Investment.—James Hastings, H. Ward, Amherst; N. A. Smith, Sunderland; C. Bridgman, Belchertown. The annual meeting is the first Wednesday in January.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The fire department of Amherst, as a lawfully-constituted organization, is of recent origin, dating from March 3, 1874. Previous to this time the town had for several years appointed fire-wardens, and made a small annual appropriation for fire purposes. In the year named apparatus was provided, and a board of twelve engineers was appointed by the selectmen. The village has no system of water-works, and its situation is unfavorable for obtaining a supply of water from any of the streams of the town that would not involve large expenditure of money. Twelve cisterns have therefore been provided by the town,—all of which are near the centre of the village, five being on the "common,"—whose united capacity is 68,000 gallons. One holds 13,000, the others each 5000. These are supplied from roofs and springs. Edward A. Thomas was chosen as the first chief-engineer, and served until March, 1878, when the present chief, Henry Holland, succeeded to the position.

The force of the department consists of two companies,—Cataract Engine Company, with a hand-engine, and Lafayette Hook-and-Ladder Company, 100 buckets, one Babcock extinguisher, and 850 feet of good hose.

Losses by Fire in Amherst.—1874, $19; 1875, $15; 1876, $41,472; 1877, $3785; 1878, $18,582.90; January, 1879, $3000.

Present Department Officers.—Henry Holland, Chief-Engineer; Lewis J. Spear, First Assistant; Rufus T. Dickinson, Second Assistant; M. E. Cushman, Clerk; John A. Pierce, Watson W. Cowles, L. H. Pomeroy, William E. Stebbins, E. Hitchcock, Henry E. Johnson, Horace D. Dana, Assistants.

Company Officers.—"Cataract Engine Company," Timothy W. Sloan, Foreman; Henry E. Wheeler, First Assistant; George J. Gallond, Second Assistant; Henry E. Paige, Clerk and Treasurer; Timothy W. Sloan, James W. T. Davis, George B. Gallond, Trustees; Frank Martin, Steward. "Lafayette Hook-and-Ladder Company," M. N. Spear, Foreman; C. M. Osgood, Assistant; J. A. Hall, Clerk and Treasurer; David S. Warner, Commissary.

HOTELS.

The first keepers of inns in the east precinct, now Amherst, were Ebenezer, Ephraim, and Martin Kellogg; the first, from 1734 to 1737 and 1752 to 1757; the second, 1744 to 1756; and the last named, from 1771 to 1773. "Ephraim had mills on Mill River. Moses Smith kept a tavern on the Boston road from 1758 to 1766, Alexander Smith on West Street, south of the meeting-house, from 1758 to 1763, and Moses Warner, north of the meeting-house, from 1757 to 1771. Josiah Chauncey was a retailer of spirits many years from 1759, and Elisha Ingram from 1766, and others one or two years. Chauncey and Ingram sold other goods. The second Solomon Boltwood and his son Ebenezer, and Jacob McDaniel, traded. From 1780 to 1793, 3, 4, or 5 tavern-keepers were yearly licensed in Amherst, and 4, 5, or 6 retailers of liquors. In 1783 there were 5 taverners and 8 rum-sellers.*"

Amherst House.—In 1800 there was a hotel on the ground now occupied by the "Amherst House," described as a low one-story building, with a gambrel roof. This was then kept by Elijah Boltwood. The succeeding proprietors have been—Rockwood, A. P. Howe, Frank Kingman, and George Parker. N. S. Beebe, who took the property in August, 1875, still presides worthily over the spot which in the preceding century was dedicated to good cheer and hospitality. The house was rebuilt in 1821.

Union House.—This house was erected as a dwelling in 1853, for the use of a conductor of the Amherst and Belchertown Railroad,—Nathan Patten. It was enlarged and made a public-house by S. W. Whitney, who was succeeded by T. T. Sisson, the present proprietor, about the year 1867-68.

ALMSHOUSE.

What now constitutes the "poor-farm" of the town of Amherst was purchased in 1837, and contains about 150 acres. The cost of the farm and the buildings since erected thereon amounts to nearly $7000, of which sum all but $1000 was paid by the "United States Surplus Revenue Fund." Expended for the relief of the poor for year ending March 1, 1878, $2254.47.

There was distributed in the town during the year ending March 1, 1878, under the provisions of the will of the late Oliver Smith, of Hatfield, as follows:

To 140 widows, $50 each	$7,000
To 80 indigent young women, $50 each.....	4,000
	$11,000

Under other provisions of that will there are now 127 indigent boys and 53 girls serving terms of indenture.

The will of the late Whiting Street, of Northampton, gives the town of Amherst $6000, as a permanent fund whose income shall be used "for the relief and comfort of the worthy poor . . . who shall not be in the almshouse nor be town nor city paupers."

RAILROAD.

The New London, Willimantic and Palmer Railroad was opened in 1850, and an extension, under the name of the "Amherst and Belchertown Railroad," in 1853. This road, since farther extended, traverses the town, near its geographical centre, in a northerly and southerly direction, touching each of the three villages, and is at present known as the New London Northern Railway. It is operated under lease by the Vermont Central Railroad Company.

* Jud., p. 422.

SOCIETIES.

PACIFIC LODGE OF FREE AND ACCEPTED MASONS was chartered June 8, 1801, with the following members: Phineas Hubbard, Roswell Field, Edward Ruggles, Samuel Church, Joseph Willard, Caleb Hubbard, Friend Smith, Rufus Field, David Stockbridge, Cornelius Wells, John Prentiss, William Mather, and Elijah Allis. The charter was executed by John Boyle, S. G. W., and Isaac Hurd, J. G. W., and attested by John Proctor, Grand Sec., and authorized meetings "within the town of Sunderland." Dec. 13, 1802, permission was granted for the removal of the lodge to the town of Amherst, and again, June 8, 1807, to the town of Leverett. A final change was authorized Sept. 8th, of the latter year, when the lodge was transferred to Amherst again.

While in Sunderland meetings were held at the hotel of Maj. Caleb Hubbard, at Plum-Trees. Here, it seems, the first officers were chosen, as follows: Phineas Hubbard, W. M.; Roswell Field, S. W.; Samuel Church, Jr., J. W.; Caleb Hubbard, Treas.; David D. Grey, Sec.; Rufus Field, S. D.; Beal Crocker, J. D.; Joseph Watson, S. S.; Friend Smith, J. S.; Ezra Winslow, Tyler. When first removed to Amherst, the lodge met at the house of Capt. Calvin Merrill, where a memorandum made upon a return to the Grand Lodge shows that "the lodge was constituted and officers installed in public Sept. 5, 1804, by Solomon Vose, D. D. G. M.; sermon by R. W. Bro. Pond." Another return in the following year discloses that the lodge then embraced three physicians, two gentlemen of public education, two merchants, four innkeepers, three majors, four captains, four lieutenants, two selectmen, seven joiners, two hatters, two saddlers, one goldsmith, two shoemakers, one clothier, one cooper, one paper-maker, twenty farmers, one coroner. During the few months' stay in Leverett, the meetings were convened at the hotel of Lucius Field, and after the last removal to Amherst, "at the hotels of John Baggs, in East Street, Rufus Kellogg, at the 'City,' and last at Boltwood's Hotel, now the Amherst House."

Because of the Morgan excitement, the lodge suspended and returned its charter, and was not revived until 1860, when a dispensation was issued under which the lodge worked one year. After the long interval of thirty-three years, only a few of the old members remained, Riley Johnson and Dr. Seth Fish, alone of these, joining in the appeal for a dispensation. Nearly all the furniture of the old lodge had disappeared.

"On the 24th of September, 1861, Pacific Lodge was again constituted, its hall was dedicated, and its officers installed." The installation ceremonies were performed in the Baptist church.

The regular communications of this lodge are held at Masonic Hall, on each Monday evening next preceding the full moon in each month. Annual elections in November.

Inclusive of the year 1875, the lodge has received over 350 members within its fold.

Present officers: O. F. Morse, W. M.; C. W. Adams, S. W.; Edward A. Thomas, J. W.; Henry Holland, Treas.; E. J. Wheaton, Sec.; R. D. C. Ingram, S. D.; F. F. Adams, J. D.; J. L. Lovell, Chaplain; T. W. Sloan, Marshal; J. H. Warner, S. S.; E. W. Carpenter, J. S.; Loren L. Ball, J. S.; H. E. Wheeler, Organist; Daniel Currier, Tyler; Lecturer, D. H. Bartlett; Auditing Com., O. G. Couch, Levi Stockbridge, E. D. Bangs; Visiting Com., George B. Gallond, Henry Holland, George Field, D. A. Horton, Noah Dickson.

WELLS LODGE, No. 140, was organized about the year 1850, and existed about ten years, when it was discontinued.

E. M. STANTON POST, 36, G. A. R.,

Department of Massachusetts, was formed in the parlors of the Amherst House, Dec. 9, 1864, the charter bearing date Dec. 11, two days later. The following were the charter members: A. W. Barrows, W. M. Bassett, Edmund Boltwood, D. B. N. Fish, B. R. Franklin, T. W. Sloan, T. W. Lavake, J. L. Skinner, L. J. Winslow, A. H. Daniels.

Until April 1, 1869, the meetings of the post were held in the third story of the Amherst House, when a transfer was made to rooms in "Phoenix Row," which had been remodeled for the purpose, at a cost of about $200. These rooms were leased for five years. Here the post remained until April 1, 1875, having meantime suffered slightly from fire. Again, having hired rooms with Amherst Grange, in "Union Block," they suffered loss by the fire which destroyed the building, March 13, 1876. The next lodge was with "Amherst Grange," in rooms prepared for their use in the second story of the carpenter-shop of Harvey White, where, pursued again by the fire-fiend, the post lost all their furniture and even their charter, Jan. 3, 1879. Their last resort is the police court-room, where they hope to arrest the approach of the destroyer.

The following have served as Commanders: T. W. Sloan, Dec. 9, 1861, to Jan. 6, 1868, and for the year 1877; L. J. Winslow, six months; C. L. Storrs, six months; E. Boltwood and J. A. Baker, each one year; J. L. Skinner, 1871, and 1873 to 1876; H. C. Comins, 1872 and 1878; Adjutants, J. L. Skinner, three years; J. J. Young, five years. Since the organization, D. B. N. Fish has served as Post Surgeon, except for the year 1868-69, when A. W. Barrows held the office; B. R. Franklin has been Quartermaster for eight years, from Jan. 1, 1871, to Jan. 1, 1879.

Whole number on the muster-roll, 95; present members, 30; eight have died within eleven years.

Roster of Officers for 1879.—B. R. Franklin, P. C.; L. W. West, S. V. C.; H. C. Russell, J. V. C.; Edgar G. Thayer, Adj.; J. J. Young, Q.-M.; George Newell, O. D.; D. B. N. Fish, Surgeon; J. D. Miller, O. G.; L. D. Smith, S. M.; P. D. Hubbard, Q.-M.-S.; W. B. Kimball, Delegate to Department Convention; L. W. West, Alternate.

Regular meetings are held the last Tuesday of each month.

THE VILLAGE IMPROVEMENT SOCIETY

was originally formed as the "Ornamental Tree Association," of which R. B. Hubbard was the first President, Oliver D. Hunt, Secretary, and A. R. Henderson, Treasurer. In 1877 the name of the society was changed to that it now bears. The objects aimed at are local village improvements, such as do not come within the purview of the customary town regulations. The officers are E. F. Cook, President; D. W. Palmer, B. F. Kendrick, O. G. Couch, Vice-Presidents; H. M. McCloud, Secretary; O. D. Hunt, Treasurer; W. A. Dickinson, O. F. Bigelow, E. P. Crowell, W. L. Montague, M. N. Spear, Charles Deuel, L. J. Spear, Mrs. — Cooper, Mrs. Edward Tuckerman, Mrs. J. L. Lovell, Miss Laura Emerson, Executive Committee.

THE AMHERST GRANGE, PATRONS OF HUSBANDRY, has been in existence as an organization for several years. The grange store, established by a number of stockholders of the grange, was opened March 1, 1877. The following are officers of the grange: Charles S. Smith, Master; William W. Smith, Overseer; Levi Stockbridge, Lecturer; H. W. Cook, Steward; H. E. Stockbridge, Assistant Steward; H. L. Cowles, Chaplain; P. D. Spaulding, Treas.; E. T. Sabin, Sec.; H. D. Dana, Gatekeeper; Mrs. W. W. Smith, Ceres; Mrs. E. T. Sabin, Pomona; Mrs. C. S. Smith, Flora; Mrs. H. W. Cook, Lady Assistant Steward.

TEMPERANCE SOCIETIES.

There are two temperance organizations in Amherst, as follows: the "Temperance Reform Club," George W. Newell, President, and D. H. Bartlett, Sec.; and the "Ladies' Christian Temperance Union," Mrs. P. H. White, President, and Miss Kate Merrick and Mrs. E. E. Wheeler, Secs.

THE EAST HAMPSHIRE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY was incorporated by act approved May 1, 1850, constituting "Alfred Baker, Edward Dickinson, and their associates and successors," a society by that name, "for the encouragement of agriculture and the mechanic arts," and authorizing them to "hold and manage real estate not exceeding the value of $15,000," and personal property of like amount. The meeting for a formal acceptance of the act and for organization was held Aug. 20, 1850, at which Joseph Smith, of Hadley, presided, and Joseph Colten, of Amherst, officiated as secretary. By-laws were then adopted and officers chosen, as follows: Alfred Baker, Amherst, President; Luke Sweetser, Amherst, Joseph Smith, Hadley, Paoli Lathrop, South Hadley, Josiah B. Woods, Enfield, Horace Henderson, Sunderland, Vice-Presidents; James W. Boyden, Amherst, Secretary and Treasurer; Edward Dickinson, Horace Kellogg, and Willard M. Kellogg, Amherst, Levi Stockbridge, Hadley, William Thayer, Belchertown, Benjamin Witt, Granby, Asa L. Field, Leverett, Executive Committee.

At a regular meeting held the same day it was voted "to accept the pair of North Devon cattle received from the Massachusetts Agricultural Society;" and further voted, on motion of Moses B. Green, "that ladies be admitted to seats on cattle-show day."

The first "show" was held in Amherst, Oct. 30, 1850, and was an inspiring success in all its features. The records reveal that "the number of working-cattle on the ground at noon was six hundred and thirty, and was the largest display ever made in this part of the State," and that "the artillery company escorted a long and respectable procession to the church, where Rev. George Cook made a prayer introductory to the excellent address of Professor Fowler." The dinner was capital, speeches good, and "the presence of many ladies gave new interest to the occasion." The show was held upon the "common" and the satisfying dinner served at the Amherst House.

This society, though somewhat local in its organization, welcomes all localities to a generous competition at its annual exhibitions. The present officers are W. L. Warner, Sunderland, President; Charles S. Smith, Amherst, Vice-President; Moody Harrington, Amherst, Secretary; E. E. Webster, Amherst, Treasurer; E. F. Cook, Amherst, A. W. Stacy, Belchertown, H. C. Comins, Hadley, E. H. Judd, South Hadley, Asabel Gates, Pelham, Executive Committee; D. W. Palmer, Amherst, Auditor.

EDUCATIONAL.

Mr. Judd in his history of Hadley says, "The first vote of East Hadley relating to schools was March 13, 1749. A committee was to hire three school-dames for three or four months, in the summer season, to teach children to read. Undoubtedly there were private schools before 1749, and some boys were sent to the Hopkins school. Samuel Mighill, an old schoolmaster, resided in East Hadley in 1739. In 1753 there were to be three schools in the precinct,—in the north, middle, and south parts. The schools were long kept in private rooms. The first vote to build school-houses was in 1761, and they could not agree where to set them. In 1764 the precinct voted to build four school-houses, named north, south, west-middle, and east-middle. One was built near the Hartling Stake.*

* Mr. Judd, on page 413, makes this note: "The Hartling Stake was noted in East Hadley, and is several times mentioned. The records state in 1795 that it stood one rod east of the northeast corner of Lieut. Gideon Parson's house. That house was where Howe's public-house now stands,* near the northwest corner of the common. There was formerly a school-house not far from the Hartling Stake, and a pound." The public-house mentioned is now the "Amherst House."

* Written about 1860.

In 1780 there were to be six schools, and each was to be kept three months. There were six districts in 1809."

In regard to school-dames, he adds, "Females taught private schools, but were not often employed and paid by towns previous to the Revolution. They were commonly married women or elderly maids, and rarely young women, and they taught in their own rooms. Amherst hired school-dames to teach children to read, and perhaps girls to sew, in 1749 and 1752."

The late John Dickinson, born in 1757, said that "females seldom taught a public school in Amherst when he was a young man." And again, "Oct. 27, 1766, Josiah Pierce, the Hadley schoolmaster, began to teach school in Amherst, and he taught six months or more in a year for three years, half the time in each of the middle school-houses, which were then new. His pay was 32s., or $5.33, a month and his board. In winter evenings he kept ciphering schools a few weeks at Is. an evening. In cold months from 30 to 42 scholars attended his day school in Amherst, and in warm months from 15 to 20. His family resided in Hadley. He sometimes preached in vacant pulpits gratis, or at 18 or 20s. a Sabbath. March 29, 1769, he dismissed the school for want of wood. Such things happened in other towns. In 1769 he lent three volumes of Dryden to Ebenezer Williams, a farmer in Amherst. He probably taught Latin if any desired, and in 1772, Wm. G. Ballantine taught Latin and English, and read theology with Mr. Parsons."†

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Previous to 1860 the schools of Amherst were not graded. Three, called North, South, and Centre High-Schools, performed each in part the functions of the more modern schools of that name. In the year named, the town, after some years of opposition and delay, voted to "grade the schools, with one high school at the centre," and the subordinate schools in various localities substantially as now, 1879.

The high-school building, now standing on School Street, was erected and made ready for occupancy in September, 1861, when 26 scholars were admitted.‡ Mr. Samuel J. Storrs was the first principal, and remained until the fall of 1862. He was succeeded by C. D. Adams, one term; J. G. Merrill, until the fall of 1863; E. S. Frisbie, until January, 1867; C. H. Parkhurst, from spring term, 1867, until the end of the school year, in 1869; W. J. Holland and A. H. Buck, each one term; Harvey Porter, until the fall of 1870; E. C. Winslow, until the close of winter term, 1871; J. K. Richardson, until spring, 1872; Vincent Moses, three weeks; H. B. Richardson, one year; Arnold N. Heap, spring, 1873, one year; C. H. K. Sanderson, two years; George L. Smith, two years. Edward B. Marsh succeeded, and is now principal.

Buildings and Departments.—The public schools consist of eighteen departments, embraced within eleven structures, some of which are large and substantial. The buildings and departments are distributed in the town as follows: High School, School Street, a large and elegant brick building, contains the high and first and second grammar grades; Amity Street School, of brick, contains first and second primary, and first and second intermediate grades; East Amherst School, on East Street, is of wood, and has one primary and one intermediate grade; North Grammar School, Leverett Street, North Amherst, of wood, has a grammar and an intermediate grade; North Primary, West Pleasant Street, North Amherst, of brick, has one primary grade, and accommodations for one other; City Primary, Northeast Street, North Amherst, of brick, has one department; Mill Valley School, South Pleasant Street, of brick, has one primary and one intermediate grade; South Green School, on South Green

† See Judd's Hist., pp. 421 and 426.

‡ An interesting historical sketch of the Amherst high school was read before its alumni association in June, 1878, by Miss M. E. Harris. Vide Amherst Transcript of July 2, 1878.

Street, of brick, has same as the preceding; South Grammar School, Green Street, South Amherst, of wood, has one grammar department; Southeast School, on East Street, South Amherst, of wood, has one primary and one intermediate department; Southwest School, on West Street, South Amherst, of wood, has grades like the preceding. Whole number of pupils, 654. Expenditures for school purposes for the years 1877-78, $9381.37, of which the sum of $6588.34 was for teachers' wages. School committee, Rev. Warren H. Beaman (Superintendent), Henry C. Nash, William B. Graves.

PRIVATE SCHOOLS.

Professor H. C. Nash has a select private school for young men at his residence on Mount Pleasant, north of Amherst "centre." This residence is the "central edifice" of the once-renowned "Mount Pleasant Classical Institute," so famous in the school-days of Henry Ward Beecher, who, with hundreds of others, was there prepared for college. The long, low wings, formerly attached to the sides of the central building, have disappeared.

The Misses Howland have a select school of about thirty scholars; and Mrs. E. A. Stearns, widow of William F. Stearns, whose splendid gift of $30,000 secured to Amherst College her finest edifice,—the College Church,—conducts a small select boarding-school for young ladies, at her residence, the "President's House."

LIBRARIES.

The North Amherst Library Association was formed by citizens of North Amherst, March 17, 1869, at a meeting presided over by George Eastman. The following persons were then chosen an executive committee: George E. Atkins, George Eastman, James B. Roberts. Subscriptions were at once solicited, and the foundation laid for the present library of 641 volumes. For the first two or three years the number of books did not exceed 200.

Though not at first a free library, it was made such in 1876, when it was reorganized in conformity with the statute which requires that all libraries receiving aid from the town shall be free to "all the inhabitants thereof." The following officers were chosen by the new organization, and still continue to serve in their several capacities, having been each year re-elected: President, Harrison Ingram; Vice-President, Almon E. Cowles; Directors, Harrison Ingram, George E. Atkins, Henry W. Haskins; Treasurer, Clerk, and Librarian, Forrester P. Ainsworth. The library receives annually $100 from the town.

The Amherst Free Library originated in a book club, formed in 1872, whose members contributed their individual private collections, or parts thereof, as a nucleus for a library. In the spring of 1873, at a meeting convened at the house of Dr. H. J. Cate, one of the originators of the club, a three days' fair was determined upon, whose proceeds should, with whatever subscriptions could be obtained, form a book fund. The fair, which was held in the following October, netted $640. A meeting was then called and the present association formed, in which the annual membership fee was fixed at $5, and life-memberships at $25. A small association at East Amherst, possessing about 200 volunteers, was absorbed by the new organization, and its members admitted without payment of the regular fee. The library then contained, including recent purchases, about 750 books. The association was further strengthened by a stipulation on the part of twenty individuals to give yearly $5 each for five years. In addition, the town has appropriated annually $200 for this library. The number of books has now reached nearly 1800. The annual expenses are about $425.

The officers are E. A. Thomas, President; Levi Stockbridge, Vice-President; H. J. Cate, D. B. N. Fish, P. E. Irish, L. H. Allen, J. A. Rawson, E. P. Crowell, O. G. Couch, H. H.

Goodell, O. F. Bigelow, Managers; S. C. Carter, J. L. Lovell, Auditors; O. G. Couch, Secretary; J. A. Rawson, Treasurer.

The college library is mentioned in connection with the history of the college.

AMHERST COLLEGE.

This celebrated educational institution is an outgrowth from Amherst Academy, whose origin and opening were synchronous with the events of the last war with England; but it was indirectly the result of the high moral and intellectual aspirations of the early inhabitants of this portion of the colony.

Fourteen years prior to the Revolution—Jan. 20, 1762—a portion of the people of Hampshire County memorialized the General Court, saying "that there are a great number of people of this county of Hampshire, and places adjacent, disposed to promote learning, and by reason of their great distance from the colleges and the great expense of their education there, many of good natural genius are prevented a liberal education, and a large country filling up at the northwest of them, which will send a great number of men of letters." "They therefore pray for an act of the government constituting a corporation with power to receive monies and improve them for setting up a seminary for learning, and that a charter may be granted to the corporation for the said seminary, endowing it with power to manage all the affairs relative to the same, and confer the honors of learning upon the students of the same qualified therefor."

This effort, though meeting with some encouragement and the favor of Gov. Bernard,* was bitterly opposed by the authorities of Harvard College, who took immediate, earnest steps to prevent the founding of "a college or collegiate school in Hampshire County, by charter from home (England) or elsewhere." This and kindred opposition, together with the pre-Revolutionary agitations which soon followed, defeated the movement.

While the people of Western Massachusetts deemed the founding of a collegiate institution somewhere within their borders a necessity, they were not agreed upon the question of location. Among the competitors of Amherst in this matter, Northampton seems to have been the most formidable. The claim of the former was subsequently strengthened by the action of the Franklin County Association of ministers, who, having convened at the house of Rev. Theophilus Packard, at Shelburne, May 10, 1815, resolved that "knowledge and virtue might be greatly subserved by a literary institution situated in that important section of the commonwealth,"—Hampshire County; and further, that Amherst was the "most eligible place for locating it."† Such influential endorsement, from a foreign source, did much to disarm the opposition to a location at Amherst; but the projectors of the college were destined to see another and less ambitious institution in some measure anticipate their action, and eventually prove the stepping-stone to full success. This was the Amherst Academy. It was opened in 1814 and dedicated in 1815. Because of "opposition in Amherst and in the neighboring towns," arising in part from local differences and religious prejudice, the charter was delayed until 1816. Samuel Fowler Dickinson and Hezekiah Wright Strong were active agents in establishing the academy, as afterward the college. Other

* At the instance of Gov. Bernard a charter was prepared, Feb. 27, 1762, incorporating Israel Williams and eleven others "a body politic by the name of the President and Fellows of Queen's College." This college was to be in Northampton, Hadley, or Hatfield, and in the latter place a building was in fact erected, which was called "Queen's College," and was described by those who remembered it as an "old gambrel-roofed school-house."

† Besides Mr. Packard, the following ministers were present: Samuel Taggart, Josiah Spaulding, Jonathan Grout, Joseph Field, Thomas A. Wood, Moses Miller, Alvan Sanderson, and Josiah W. Cannon. Among other early efficient friends of Amherst who resided in Franklin County were Rev. James Taylor, of Sunderland; Col. Rufus Graves, Nathaniel Smith, and Dea. Elish Billings, of Conway.

citizens of Amherst appear upon the honor-roll of helpers in the times of adversity and of prosperity through which the academy and the college passed. Dr. David Parsons—the second pastor of the original church, formed in 1739—gave the land for the academy building, and became the first president of its board of trustees. The following were the original trustees: David Parsons, Nathan Perkins, Samuel F. Dickinson, Hezekiah W. Strong, Noah Webster, John Woodbridge, James Taylor, Nathaniel W. Smith, Josiah Dwight, Rufus Graves, Winthrop Bailey, Experience Porter, and Elijah Gridley.

A grant was made by the State to the academy of half a township of land in the district of Maine, upon condition that the town of Amherst should raise $3000.

Female students were admitted to this institution for the first ten or twelve years. The instructors were, in the main, able, and placed the academy on a par with, if not in advance of, the other academies of New England.

Dr. Parsons, Noah Webster, and Dr. Packard, with other prominent citizens, were often present at the regular public exercises. It is written that "once a year, at the close of the fall term in October, the old meeting-house was fitted up with a stage, and, strange to tell, in the staid town of Amherst, where dancing was tabooed and cards never dare show themselves, reverend divines went with lawyers and doctors and all classes of their people to the house of God to witness a theatrical exhibition."

Other influences combined to place this institution in the front rank of academies,—chief among which were the comparative cheapness of living, and the intimate, kindly relations existing between citizens and students. The same pleasant relations continued after the founding of the college, and in considerable measure still exist.

The number of students at its most flourishing period was about 180, of whom nearly one-half were females. Here, in 1821, Mary Lyon, who became the founder of Mount Holyoke Seminary, pursued her studies. After the abolition of the female department, at or about the year 1825, when the charter was granted to Amherst College and the trustees of the academy ceased to be trustees of that institution, the academy entered on what is termed a "second period," and became chiefly a preparatory school.

The establishment of new schools in other places and the quickening of many already founded subsequently caused the decline of Amherst, in common with other unendowed academies, by robbing it of non-resident patronage, and it was finally superseded by the present high school.

The able historian of Amherst College, after indulging in a pleasant retrospect concerning the old academy building, says: "This venerable and sacred edifice was taken down in the summer of 1868 to make way for the grammar-school, west of the hotel* which now occupies the site. Amherst Academy did a great and good work in and of itself, for which many who were educated there, and not a few who were spiritually 'born there,' will bless God forever. But the best work which it did, and which it is believed will perpetuate its memory and its influence, was the founding of Amherst College."†

The principal male teachers during the first period, in their order, were: Francis Bascom, Joseph Estabrook, John L. Parkhurst, Gerard Hallock, Zenas Clapp, David Green, and Ebenezer S. Snell. Lady teachers: Lucy Douglas, afterward Mrs. James Fowler, of Westfield; Orra White, afterward Mrs. Dr. Hitchcock; Mary Ann Field, afterward Mrs. Henry Merrill; Sarah S. Strong, daughter of H. W. Strong, who became Mrs. McConihe, of Troy; and Hannah Shepard, sister of Prof. Shepard, afterward Mrs. Judge Terry, of Hartford. During

* The Amherst House.

† Prof. W. S. Tyler's "History of Amherst College," which has been freely consulted for the present sketch. Those wishing a more minute history of the academy and college are referred to its genial, ample pages.

the second period, Elijah Paine, Solomon Maxwell, Story Hebard, Robert E. Pattison, William P. Paine, William Thompson, Simeon Colton, William S. Tyler, Evangelinus Sophocles, Ebenezer Burgess, George C. Partridge, Nathan Gale, and Lyman Coleman were among the principal or assistant teachers.

CHARITY FUND AND COLLEGE.

The Franklin County Association, previously mentioned, having directed the public attention toward the founding of a college at Amherst, did not appear again as such in the steps subsequently taken. The "Charity Fund," which ultimately proved the immediate basis of the college, and was aptly termed its "sheet-anchor," originated in a movement by the trustees of the academy to add to the usefulness of that institution by securing a fund for the gratuitous instruction of "indigent young men of promising talents and hopeful piety, who shall manifest a desire to obtain a liberal education with a sole view to the Christian ministry."

Notwithstanding the ability and zeal of the committee appointed to raise the fund, they reported that "the establishment of a single professorship," as contemplated, "is too limited an object to induce men to subscribe." They recommended the founding of a separate institution, of a higher grade, but with the same object,—the education of young men for the ministry,—and framed a constitution and by-laws for the raising and management of a charity fund. This was approved by the trustees, but more than this was needed, and that nothing less than the favor and support of Christian brethren generally. To secure these, the scheme was submitted to a convocation, duly appointed, embracing the Congregational and Presbyterian clergy and lay delegates from the nearer counties, held in the church of the west parish of Amherst, Sept. 29, 1818. While for a time the location of the proposed institution at Amherst was warmly opposed, the delegates seem to have been finally convinced of the superior advantages of that place by the eloquent appeals of Samuel F. Dickinson and George Grinnell, Jr., the secretary of the convention. This body thereupon not only approved of the "Charitable Institution," but recommended the establishment also of a college, to be connected therewith, "possessing all the advantages of other colleges in the commonwealth, and that such preparations and arrangements be made as will accommodate students at the institution as soon as possible."

Thus supported, the trustees made quick work in raising the fund, and by the following July had secured subscriptions amounting in money and other property to $51,404.

At this period, the question concerning the removal of Williams College to some more favorable situation—a subject seriously debated at intervals since 1815—was again actively pressed by the friends of that institution. This fact caused the trustees of the Amherst Institution to delay further action until the question of removal should be settled. They appointed a committee, Oct. 26, 1818, consisting of Rev. John Fiske, Noah Webster, and Nathaniel Smith, to confer with the authorities of Williams College. This resulted in the appointment by Williams College of a committee, who were instructed "to visit the towns of Hampshire County, and determine the place to which the college shall be removed, the trustees pledging themselves to abide by their decision, provided the requisite sum be raised." The claims of Amherst were presented before this committee by Noah Webster, John Fiske, Rev. Edwards Whipple, Rev. Joshua Crosby, and Nathaniel Smith, a body duly constituted for the purpose. Their efforts did not avail. The committee were "unanimous in naming Northampton as the most suitable place for the institution;" but upon an appeal being made to the Legislature for permission to remove the college to that place, it was determined that the step was "neither lawful nor expedient," and so the project failed.

Thus much of this episode in the history of Amherst College

Photo. by Lovell, Amherst.

Samuel C. Carter

SAMUEL CUTTS CARTER, the subject of our sketch, was born in Newburyport, Mass., March 9, 1803, and was the son of Nathaniel and Elizabeth Cutts Carter. His mother was a granddaughter of Edward Holyoke, D.D., a former president of Harvard College. His father was a prominent merchant and importer of Newburyport previous to the great fire of 1811, by which, and by losses at sea, and by the French spoliations about the same time, he was reduced from wealth to a small competence. This was an important crisis to young Carter, and forced him to forego his hopes of a higher and easier walk in life and adopt one of toil. To the end that he might do so profitably as well as honorably he chose to learn a trade, and for this purpose entered the establishment of Jonathan Leavitt, of Andover, Mass., where he undertook a regular course of instruction in book-binding. Serving five years as an apprentice, he arrived at manhood independent of the chances of trade or fortune so far as the means to secure an honest livelihood were concerned. Before going to Andover he was engaged in the book-store of Charles Whipple, in his native town, and in the extensive publishing house of Wells & Lilley, Boston. Book-making seems to have been his natural calling, for he was engaged in some department of that pursuit from the time he commenced until his retirement from active business. In September, 1825, Mr. Carter settled in Amherst, and at once entered into partnership with Mr. John S. Adams, under the firm-name of Carter & Adams, and established a book-store, printing-office, and bindery. The first volume published was an octavo of some three hundred and fifty pages of sermons, by Rev. Daniel A. Clark, a former pastor of the First Congregational Church. This work was followed by several volumes of Scott's novels (Waverley) for a Boston firm. In June, 1826, they commenced the publication of an octavo serial called The Chemist, with Prof. John R. Cotting as editor. In December, 1826, they started the first newspaper in Amherst, the New England Inquirer, with Hon. Osmyn Baker as editor. In 1827, Mr. Carter dissolved his partnership with Mr. Adams. During this year he organized an engine company in Amherst, being mainly instrumental in raising the money for the purchase of the engine. He was connected with the company for more than twenty years, and was foreman for a long time. In 1828 he was chosen librarian and treasurer of the Amherst Lyceum, also secretary and treasurer of the West Amherst Temperance Union, which offices he held twelve years. It was while in his position in the temperance society that he was instructed to collect statistics touching upon intemperance in the vicinity of the society. The care bestowed upon the work, as exhibited in the extract we give from the records, is but a sample of the thoroughness with which he did everything intrusted to him. The record says that during the year 1827 eighty hogsheds of ardent spirits were sold, besides what was retailed in six taverns, making a fair estimate of one hundred hogsheds sold during the year, besides about two hundred barrels of cider. It was reported that there were forty-eight drunkards in town, and twenty-three widows who were made so by rum. Deaths forty-five, one-ninth of which were directly traceable to intemperance. Three-fourths of the pauperism were also traced to the same cause. Five crimes were committed, and five licenses to sell liquors were issued. On the first night of meeting only ten names were obtained, but in eight years no less than nine hundred and seventy-three names were added, a large majority of whom remained faithful.

In 1829 he was appointed librarian of the West Parish Sunday-school, and for nearly fifty years has been directly connected with that school, either as scholar, librarian, teacher, or superintendent, a fact which speaks more for him than could columns from our pen. His connection with the church and the parish is quite as remarkable, he having held the positions of clerk and treasurer, and served as one of the parish committee. He is now one of the trustees and also treasurer of the parish sinking fund. By referring to the town records we find how honorable has been his connection with the affairs of the village. In 1837-39 he was one of the prudential school committee. In 1837 he was appointed town agent to receive and loan all the money received from surplus revenue of the United States. In 1841 and 1842 he was representative to the General Court, and here again he made his mark, being one of the committee to draft what is now known as the registration law. This selection was a fitting recognition of his ability, and made in consideration of the fact that for three years before he had made the registration of births, marriages, and deaths a matter of investigation. Finally, in connection with Judge G. P. Bigelow, he secured the passage of the law above referred to. Of its inestimable value to our town and city records there can be no possible doubt, and its authorship is an honor he may proudly wear. In 1841 he was appointed postmaster, and held the office nine years. There are many who remember distinctly the outburst of feeling caused by his removal, coming as it did from men of all parties, his gentlemanly bearing and courteous manner having won to his defense many who differed from him in politics. Mr. Carter's contributions to the press have been frequent and valuable, his statistics on educational and farm matters being standard authority. But his greatest work has been in the position of town clerk and treasurer, which office he has filled for thirty-two years, during which time he has received and disbursed $1,300,000. He has kept statistics of the schools that are interesting, and as zealously guarded their welfare and success as it was possible for man to do. Another work to which he has devoted over a year's time was the preparation of the descriptive list of the soldiers of Amherst in the late war. It is sufficient to say that it is perfect, every man's name, age, occupation, date of enlistment, battles in which he or his regiment or company was engaged, promotion, and final "muster out" or other discharge, being accurately arranged, the whole in alphabetical order. It is a work for easy reference in all time to come, and he deserves the highest praise for his labors and untiring research. Nor did his work for the soldiers end there. His pleasant face and kindly word, as he ministered to the widows and orphans of those who "sleep the sleep of the brave," made the small amount he was commissioned to deal out to each seem the more that it was delivered by a cheerful giver. In 1865 the Amherst Savings-Bank was organized, and Mr. Carter became its treasurer, which office he still holds, discharging this as well as all other trusts with the same unvarying fidelity. Mr. Carter was married in 1826 to Miss Matilda Ayers, of Haverhill, and after her decease to Miss Elizabeth D. Jackson, of Boston, in 1835. Mr. Carter's five children all died in their infancy or early youth. Although in the seventy-seventh year of his age, his step is as firm and quick as most men at fifty, and his appearance indicates that he may be spared many years. It is perhaps needless to say that he owes his long life and perfect health to his strictly temperate habits. He never used tobacco or spirits in any form. It is safe to say that no man in Amherst is more honored or respected, or would be missed more, than Samuel C. Carter. He has built his own monument, and built it well.

OREN WILLIAMS.

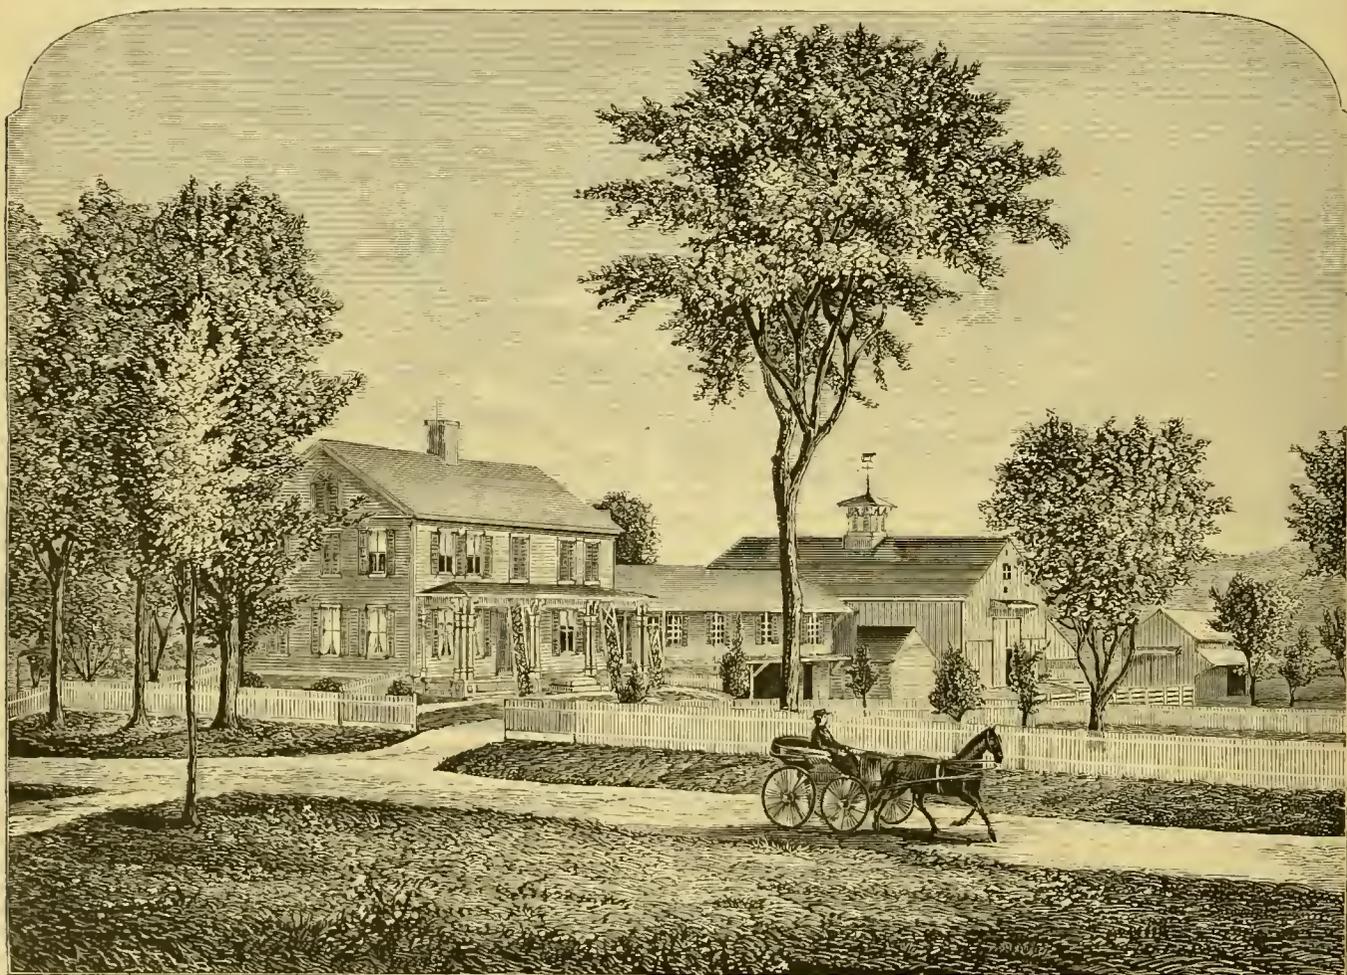

OREN WILLIAMS was born in Amherst, Hampshire Co., Sept. 16, 1812, son of Justus and Sarah (Warner) Williams. His grandfather, Justus Williams, was one of the early settlers of Amherst. He had six sons and two daughters. Three of the sons and the two daughters, the latter wives of Dr. William Sellen and Isaac Robbins, settled in Amherst. Justus Williams, his father, was born in Amherst, April 7, 1766; married, Jan. 1, 1800, Sarah Warner, daughter of Jonathan and Mary (Coleman) Warner, by whom he had children as follows: Zebadiah, born Dec. 27, 1800, who died in the State of Maine, date not known. Jonathan, born Sept. 3, 1802; married, removed to California, and died there. Mary Ann, born July 5, 1805; died in Amherst, of consumption. Oren and Onam, twins, born Sept. 16, 1812. Onam died in infancy. Onam (second), born Aug. 3, 1824; died in Lamoille, Ill., June 1, 1878. The father died in 1824; the mother, Dec. 29, 1838. Both are buried in the cemetery at South Amherst.

Oren Williams

Mr. Williams from an early age was thrown upon his own resources. His opportunities for education were quite limited, being confined to the district school, and one term at Amherst Academy. He was married, May 29, 1836, to Eliza J. Howe, daughter of Sylvanus and Sukey Howe. Mrs. Williams was born in Enfield, Mass., Nov. 17, 1812. They have no children. Upon the death of his mother he came into possession of the homestead and three acres of land, which constituted his start in life. By indefatigable industry and strict economy he was enabled to add to the original three acres nearly fifty more. In 1841 he exchanged the place now known as the Wellington farm for the home and farm of Deacon Nathaniel C. Dickinson, bordering "Fiddler's Green," South Amherst. To the original one hundred acres constituting the farm he has added about one hundred and fifty acres.

In politics he is a Republican. Both himself and Mrs. Williams have for many years been members of the South Amherst Congregational Church.

RESIDENCE OF OREN WILLIAMS, SOUTH AMHERST, MASS.

is given in order the more clearly to show the difficulties and anxieties attendant upon her days of incubation, and because the questions involved aroused the people of the "Connecticut Valley" and of Western Massachusetts in scarcely less degree than those graver ones which, nearly a half-century before, had precipitated the Revolution. The later combat, however, was one of words, not swords.

At the time of this agitation Dr. Zephaniah Swift Moore was president of Williams College, and in all honorable ways favored its removal to some more promising situation. The same is true of Rev. Theophilus Packard, then one of the trustees of that college.

First College Building.—The field was thus made clear for action, and on the 15th of March, 1820, the trustees of Amherst Academy took appropriate steps to secure and augment the Charity Fund, and "erect the necessary buildings."

Although dependent almost entirely upon voluntary contributions of material and labor,* the work progressed like magic, and the corner-stone of the first college edifice in Amherst was laid by Dr. David Parsons, the president of the board, on the 9th of August, 1820. On that occasion Noah Webster delivered an address, and Rev. Daniel A. Clark a sermon.

The trustees of the academy and of the fund at this time were Rev. David Parsons, President; Noah Webster, Vice-President; Revs. James Taylor, Joshua Crosby, Daniel Clark, Nathaniel Smith, Samuel F. Dickinson, and Rufus Graves. Dr. Parsons resigned at the close of the exercises of the day, and was succeeded by Noah Webster.

The act relating to the Charity Fund provided for the election of a board of "overseers of the fund." The first board was chosen by the subscribers on the day the corner-stone was laid, viz.: Henry Gray, of Boston; Gen. Salem Towne, Jr., of Charlton; Rev. Theophilus Packard, of Shelburne; Rev. Thomas Snell, of North Brookfield; Rev. Luther Sheldon, of Easton; Rev. Heman Humphrey, of Pittsfield; and H. Wright Strong, of Amherst.

Ninety days after these events the roof-timbers were put in place, and before the end of September, 1821, the building was finished and a large part of the rooms had received their furniture. This structure was of brick, was four stories high, and in size 30 by 100 feet. It was erected on land set apart for the purpose by Col. Elijah Dickinson, and which contained "nine acres, more or less," as conveyed, Nov. 22, 1820, by his widow, Jerusha, and his son, Moses, to the trustees of the college. This land contains all the earliest buildings, and is the centre of the college grounds. The college well was dug during the progress of the building.

First President.—By unanimous vote of the trustees, May 8, 1821, Zephaniah Swift Moore was called to the presidency of the "Charity Institution," which office included that of professor of theology and moral philosophy. Dr. Moore, at the time president of Williams College, in his letter of acceptance, June 12, 1821, signified his previous intention to resign that office, and says,—

"In my opinion no subject has higher claims on the charity and benevolent efforts of the Christian community than the education of pious young men for the gospel ministry. Their classical education should be thorough, and I should be wholly averse to becoming united with any institution which proposes to give a classical education inferior to that given in any of the colleges of New England. On this subject I am assured your opinion is the same as my own, and that you are determined that the course of study in the institution to which you have invited me shall not be inferior to that in the colleges of New England. I am also assured that you will make provision for the admission of those who are not indigent and who wish to obtain a classical education in the institution."

The board† were in accord with the sentiments of this letter, and gave public notice that "young men who expect to defray the expenses of their education will be admitted into the collegiate institution on terms essentially the same as those prescribed for admission into other colleges in New England."

Inauguration and Dedication.—President Moore was inaugurated and the college edifice dedicated Sept. 8, 1821, the ceremony taking place in the parish church, Noah Webster presiding. On this occasion the prayer of dedication was made by Rev. Mr. Crosby, of Enfield, a sermon preached by Rev. Dr. Leland, of Charleston, S. C., and Professors Olds and Estabrook formally inducted into their positions,—the former as professor of mathematics and natural philosophy, the latter as professor of the Greek and Latin languages. The concluding prayer was made by Rev. Mr. Snell, of North Brookfield. The day's exercises were finished with the ceremony of laying the corner-stone of the president's house.‡

On the day following, the 19th, "the college was opened and organized by the examination and admission of forty-seven students, some into each of the four regular classes."

The senior class had two members,—Pindar Field§ and Ebenezer S. Snell (subsequently professor),—who roomed together "in the southwest corner of the fourth story" of the college, and there received daily instruction from President Moore.

During Dr. Moore's administration the president's house was completed, the present North College erected, the first lectures in chemistry given, by Colonel Rufus Graves, and others afterward in the North College by Prof. Amos Eaton; the first catalogue published March, 1822, the Alexandrian and Athenian Literary Society formed and their library established, and the first revival of religion enjoyed. He presided at the first commencement exercises, when Senior Snell delivered a salutatory in Latin and Senior Field an oration in English.|| The juniors, six in number, generally supplied the remainder of the exercises. Gerard Hallock, then principal of the academy, delivered a poem.

The following at this period constituted the faculty: Rev. Zephaniah Swift Moore, D.D., President and Professor of Divinity; Rev. Gamaliel S. Olds, A.M., Professor of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy; Joseph Estabrook, A.M., Professor of Languages and Librarian; Rev. Jonas King, A.M., Professor of Oriental Literature; and Lucius Field, A.B., Tutor. Prof. King was never installed.

Until the college was duly chartered, graduates received testimonials in Latin that they had completed the usual college course. All such afterward received the degree of A.B.

The death of Dr. Moore, which occurred June 29, 1823, after a short illness, spread such a gloom over the brightening prospects of the college that the senior class, then nearing graduation, were with difficulty persuaded to remain. Dr. Moore was born Nov. 20, 1770.

Rev. Heman Humphrey succeeded to the presidency, and was installed Oct. 15, 1823. In spite of much bitter opposition, similar to that encountered by "Queen's College," the institution made marked advance during his incumbency. Largely through his efforts, after repeated applications to the Legislature, the act incorporating the college was secured, and became operative Feb. 21, 1825.

During his incumbency, another dormitory was erected, 1828, which was dubbed North College,¶ a new house for the

† The trustees of the academy were also trustees of the college until the latter was incorporated, Feb. 21, 1825.

‡ The house now occupied (1879) by M. A. Allen.

§ Founder and first superintendent of the first Sabbath-school in Amherst.

|| The third Senior, Ezra Fairchild, who had joined the class, left before the close of the year,—afterward received his Bachelor's degree, in 1822.

¶ Burned in 1857. The site is now occupied by "Williston Hall."

* Prof. Tyler records that one afternoon the lime gave out, and the workmen, who were about to pack their kits and leave, were persuaded to delay till morning. That night "a strange team was seen coming through the village from the north. It proved to be a wagon loaded with lime, sent some twenty-five miles by a man not a subscriber, but a friend of the cause," and who knew nothing of the emergency. It was easy to believe the aid providential.

president, in 1834-35, a "College Church" organized 1826, of which he was installed pastor, Feb. 28, 1827, and a gymnasium and bathing establishment provided by the students. In August, 1830, the "Antivenian Society" was formed.*

This period of prosperity was followed in 1837, '38, by one of adversity. "Zeal for orthodoxy and evangelical piety was no longer at a white heat. The passion for missions and the education of ministers had somewhat cooled," and, worse still for the college, the question of slavery gave birth to opposing forces † within its halls, which contained many students from the South. The "home influence" of these wrought injury, which the embarrassed financial condition of the college made still more grievous. To crown all, many students became disaffected toward the president and others of the faculty, and a change was somewhat persistently sought. Dr. Humphrey resigned in January, 1844, and was succeeded by Prof. Edward Hitchcock, April 14, 1845. Between 1825 and 1836, the number of students increased from 126 to 259. Dr. Humphrey died at Pittsfield, April 3, 1861, aged eighty-two.

A new policy ‡ was inaugurated with the incoming president, which proved advantageous. The self-sacrificing action of the professors met its full fruition in the generous gifts that thenceforth blessed the institution. In 1847 the "Woods Cabinet and Lawrence Observatory" was erected on "Meeting-House Hill," on the site of the first meeting-house, and a grant of $25,000 obtained from the Legislature, after repeated failures, in 1837-38 and '39; the library building appeared in 1852-53, in which stone was first used as the chief material, brick having hitherto prevailed. A fund of $15,000, § raised by Professor Bela B. Edwards, William S. Tyler, and others, was expended for building and books,—one-third for the latter.

In 1853 a scientific department was opened, embracing studies somewhat collateral to those of the regular college course; but the "Parallel Course," established for a similar purpose in 1826, proved a failure, and after a trial of about four years was dropped.

Many and generous were the gifts and endowments that flowed in upon the college during Dr. Hitchcock's presidency, a full account of which, and of the multitude of benefactions at other periods, would consume too much space in this history. The admirable work of Prof. Tyler makes enduring record of these. Before the retirement of Dr. Hitchcock, four professorships had been permanently endowed, and important scientific collections secured. Not the least of these acquisitions was the doctor's own collection of "fossil footmarks," which he gave to the college a few months previous to his resignation.

Dr. Hitchcock resigned the presidency, to take effect when his successor should be appointed, but retained the professorship of natural theology and geology.

Prof. William A. Stearns was chosen president and professor of moral philosophy and Christian theology, and inaugurated Nov. 22, 1854. He was given a brilliant welcome; the college buildings were illuminated, and kind words of greeting spoken. Thus auspiciously, with all the affairs of the institution in a prosperous condition, began the last of the administrations of Amherst College which have become historic.

Six new buildings were added to the group of college structures during this period, and the donations for buildings and

* The members were pledged to abstain totally from the use of "ardent spirits, wine, opium, and tobacco, as articles of luxury or diet." A proposition made by John Tappen, of Boston, involving similar conditions, though not fully accepted, led to the formation of this society.

† The "Colonization Society" and the "Anti-Slavery Society."

‡ Prior to the appointment of the new president, the professors had united upon a plan of retrenchment unique as rare. They agreed, if allowed to manage the institution and regulate its running expenses, that they would accept for their services whatever of the income might remain after paying such expenses; with the proviso that "the agency for the solicitation of funds should cease, and with the expectation that Professor Hitchcock would be appointed president." This plan was adopted.

§ Of this sum $4000 were raised in Amherst and vicinity, $3000 given by Mr. Williston, and $5000 by George Merriam, of Springfield.

other purposes amounted to nearly $800,000. Among the buildings added were the Barrett Gymnasium, Williston Hall, Walker Hall, and the College Church, which are the finest and most costly of the structures on College Hill.

Dr. Stearns possessed rare executive ability, yet his government was characterized by a wise gentleness, as of one who believed in "moral suasion," which drew rather than forced obedience. His excellent qualities of head and heart, his Christian character, his forbearance and kindly sympathy, and not less his firmness and persistence in pursuit of truth and right, were characteristics which insured, as they surely brought, to Amherst College a condition in name and substance she had not before attained. During his presidency the teachers in the college increased from 11 to 21, the students from 201 to 338, while the alumni were more than doubled in number.

Dr. Stearns died June 8, 1876, after a sudden attack and brief illness, at the age of seventy-one.

Dr. Julius H. Seelye, the present head of the institution, was inaugurated May 24, 1877. While not inferior in administrative ability, his superior qualities as an instructor chiefly distinguish him from his predecessor. There is little of historic interest that can be said of this, the dawning of a still more hopeful era, and this sketch of Amherst College may be fitly closed with a record of the fact that never were the prospects brighter than to-day, when students from every clime have come to drink at her ample fount, whose sources were unlocked by the pious, worthy fathers amid the sturdy hills of Franklin and Hampshire more than a century ago.

The total number of students, by the catalogue of 1878-79 is 333, distributed as follows: seniors, 76; juniors, 75; sophomores, 90; freshmen, 92. There are two resident graduates.

Buildings.—"South College," a dormitory, erected in 1820-21, at an ultimate cost of about $10,000, has already been sufficiently described.

"Middle College," the second dormitory, was erected in 1822, at a cost of $10,000. It is four stories high, and in size the same as South College; it contains the reading-room.

"The Chapel," or "Johnson Hall," dates from 1827, and cost $15,000. For a long time it was known by the name of its principal donor, Adam Johnson, of Pelham, who had bequeathed $4000 for such a structure. It has always been used for morning and evening prayers, and public worship. The chapel proper is in the second story. Below are recitation-rooms and an herbarium. The tower || contains the college clock. The chapel was renovated in 1863-64 at a cost of $16,000.

"North College," a dormitory erected in 1828, cost $10,000. It was burned in 1857, and its site is now occupied by Williston Hall.

"The President's House" was built in 1834, on land purchased from the estate of Dr. Parsons. The house built for Dr. Moore in 1821 was sold, and the proceeds, with additional funds, applied to the erection of the new residence, which is of brick, and cost $9000.

"The Woods Cabinet and Lawrence Observatory," erected in 1847, at a cost of $9000, occupies a prominent situation in front of Chapel Row, and contains the geological collection, embracing specimens from the formations of Europe and the Missionary, United States, and other collections. The observatory contains a transit circle, a sidereal clock, and two portable telescopes.

|| The tower is 94 feet in height. The view from its top is extensive and of unusual beauty and majesty. To the east are seen the mountains Lincoln, Mygeia, and Aquilo; north, Pleasant, Taurus, Mettawampe, and Sugar Loaf; north-west, Bald Mountain, Pocumtuck, the Hoosac Range, and in the blue distance the Green Mountains of Vermont. Westward rises Mount Warner, while through the magnificent valley courses the silvery, winding thread of the "Great River"—Connecticut. Beyond, appear the mountains of Western Massachusetts, and southward, the near, majestic peaks of the Trap range, Norwottuck, Holyoke, Nontuck, and Tom. The river finds a narrow passage between Holyoke and Nontuck. In clear weather the villages of Amherst, Hadley, Northampton, Easthampton, Whately, and Sunderland may be seen.

A room adjoining, called the "Nineveh Gallery," costing $567, was the gift of Enos Dickinson, and contains valuable archaeological treasures, including six sculptured slabs from the palace of Sardanapalus, seals, cylinders, and bricks from Nineveh and Babylon, and many coins of gold, silver, and copper.

"The Library Building," to which reference has been made, was erected in 1853, and cost $10,000. The first floor is devoted to working-rooms. The second story contains the library proper, consisting now* of 40,488 volumes, including the "Society Library" of 5319 volumes. The nucleus from which this larger mass has grown consisted in the earlier years of a few books in a case at South College, and experienced several removals before its transfer to the present building.

"The Appleton Cabinet" was erected in 1855, cost $10,000, and was named in honor of Samuel Appleton, of Boston, its chief donor. It contains Dr. Hitchcock's technological collection, the Gilbert museum of "Indian relics," and the Adams zoological cabinet. The geological lecture-room is in this building.

"Williston Hall" occupies the site of "Old North College," which was burned, cost $15,000, and is the magnificent gift of Hon. Samuel Williston, of Easthampton. Here are found the chemical laboratory with its various departments. The rooms of the two literary societies—"Alexandria" and "Athenæ"—are in the second story.

The upper story is devoted to the "art gallery," opened in July, 1874, in "Alumni Hall." The contents of this splendid gallery are multifarious and valuable, among them copies of the Elgin marbles, Ghiberti bronze doors, Angelo's "Moses," and other casts of celebrated statues, bas-reliefs, and vases. For this fine collection the college is chiefly indebted to the labors of Prof. Richard H. Mather.

"East College," built the same year, is a dormitory similar to the others, and cost $15,000. It will also, like the other dormitories, accommodate fifty students. This building, now obstructing the front of the College Church, will doubtless soon be removed to a better situation toward the southwest.

"Barrett Gymnasium" is the nursery of the athletes of Amherst, and furnishes pleasurable and profitable physical discipline to all the students, for all who are able are required to take therein daily a prescribed round of exercise. This building is of Pelham gneiss, of plain style of architecture, was furnished in 1860 at a cost, including fixtures, of $15,000. The upper story, where the classes exercise, contains a gallery for visitors.

"Walker Hall," originating in the generous bounty of Dr. William J. Walker and other friends of the college, was formally opened Oct. 20, 1870. This edifice is palatial in style and proportions,—a gem among the many fine buildings of Amherst. It is built of stone, cost $120,000, and contains the department of mathematics and astronomy, natural philosophy, and the Shepard cabinet of minerals. Here also are recitation- and lecture-rooms, and rooms for trustees, president, and treasurer.

"College Church," for which a donation of $30,000 had been made in 1864 by William F. Stearns, the eldest son of the late president, after much delay in selecting a proper site, was commenced in 1870. The corner-stone was formally laid September 22d, in that year, Rev. Christopher Cushing, of Boston, delivering the address. A chime of bells hangs in the tower, the gift of George Howe, of Boston, and is intended in part to commemorate Amherst's fallen soldiery. The church was finished in 1872, and cost $70,000.

"College Hall," formerly the village church, erected in 1828, was purchased in 1867, and remodeled, to fit it for its present use, for commencement exercises, examinations, and public entertainments. Cost of building and improvements, $16,000.

College Grounds.—The present college grounds, comprising about 30 acres, are the aggregate of several purchases and donations. In 1820, 9 acres were purchased from the estate of Col. Elisha Dickinson, and, in 1827, 2½ acres more, lying east of the first purchase. These purchases now contain the principal buildings. Five acres, on which stand the president's house, the library, and College Hall, were purchased of John Leland, in 1828. Meeting-House or Observatory Hill, a part of the old common, was given by the town. In 1861, 5 acres were purchased from Judge John Dickinson, as a site for the College Church; in 1866, 2½ acres from Lucius Boltwood, as a site for Walker Hall and other improvements. The original cost of the foregoing land was about $15,000.

Hallock Park was a special gift to the college in 1868, upon condition that the trustees should "preserve, improve, and keep it forever as a public park." It contains 7 acres of grand old forest-trees, chiefly oaks and pines.

The College Church was organized in 1826. Articles of faith and covenant were adopted in consonance with the views of the participants, and were of the most rigid, orthodox Trinitarian type. To these, thirty-one students gave in their adhesion, and the church was formed as the "Church of Christ in Amherst College." All subsequent revivals in the college have been conducted under the auspices of this church society. In Prof. Tyler's history much prominence is given to these special seasons of ingathering. Changes in the pastorship have corresponded with the changes in the presidency of the college, each of the presidents having been inducted, in turn, into the pastorate of the church.

College Press.—The printed literature of Amherst College, the production of under-graduates, dates from the year 1831, when a magazine called The Sprite was issued at bi-monthly periods, and continued about one year. It was devoted to the fanciful and romantic. This was followed by monthlies called The Shrine and The Guest, each about one year. Then appeared Howe Collegiana, 1837-40; The Indicator, 1848-51; The Experiment, 1850-51; The Amherst Collegiate Magazine, 1853-57 and 1861-62; The Ichnolite, 1857-61. The present publications are the Olio, a students' catalogue, started in 1868, and published annually; and the Amherst Student, which originated the same year, and is issued on alternate Saturdays during the college term. Both are edited by members of the junior class.

Boating became an institution at Amherst in 1869, but was not continued more than six years. In 1872 the "Amherst boys" were victors in a regatta, and made what was then the best time on record.

July 24, 1872, in the second regatta of the rowing association of American colleges, at Springfield, Amherst beat Amherst Agricultural, Bowdoin, Williams, and Yale in a university six-oared race with shells, three miles straightaway. Time, 16m. 32 4-5s.

College Corporation.—Rev. Julius H. Seelye, President; Henry Edwards, of Boston; Hon. Alexander H. Bullock, LL.D., of Worcester; Hon. Henry Morris, LL.D., of Springfield; Rev. S. Dwight, D.D., of Hadley; Nathan Allen, M.D., LL.D., of Lowell; Hon. Edward B. Gillett, of Westfield; Rev. Richard S. Storrs, D.D., LL.D., of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Rev. Roswell D. Hitchcock, D.D., LL.D., of New York; Rev. Edmund K. Alden, D.D., of Boston; Hon. John E. Sanford, of Taunton; Rufus B. Kellogg, of Green Bay, Wis.; Rev. William S. Karr, D.D., of Hartford, Conn.; Henry D. Hyde, of Boston.

Rev. Edward S. Dwight, D.D., Secretary; William A. Dickinson, Treasurer.

Officers of the "Charity Fund."—Rev. Charles Cushing, D.D., of Boston; Rev. Rowland Ayres, D.D., of Hadley;

* Jan. 18, 1879.

Hon. Charles Adams, of North Brookfield; Rev. John M. Greene, of Lowell; Eleazar Porter, of Hadley; M. Fayette Dickinson, of Boston; Prof. William B. Graves, of Amherst, Overseers; William A. Dickinson, Commissioner; George Montague, Auditor.

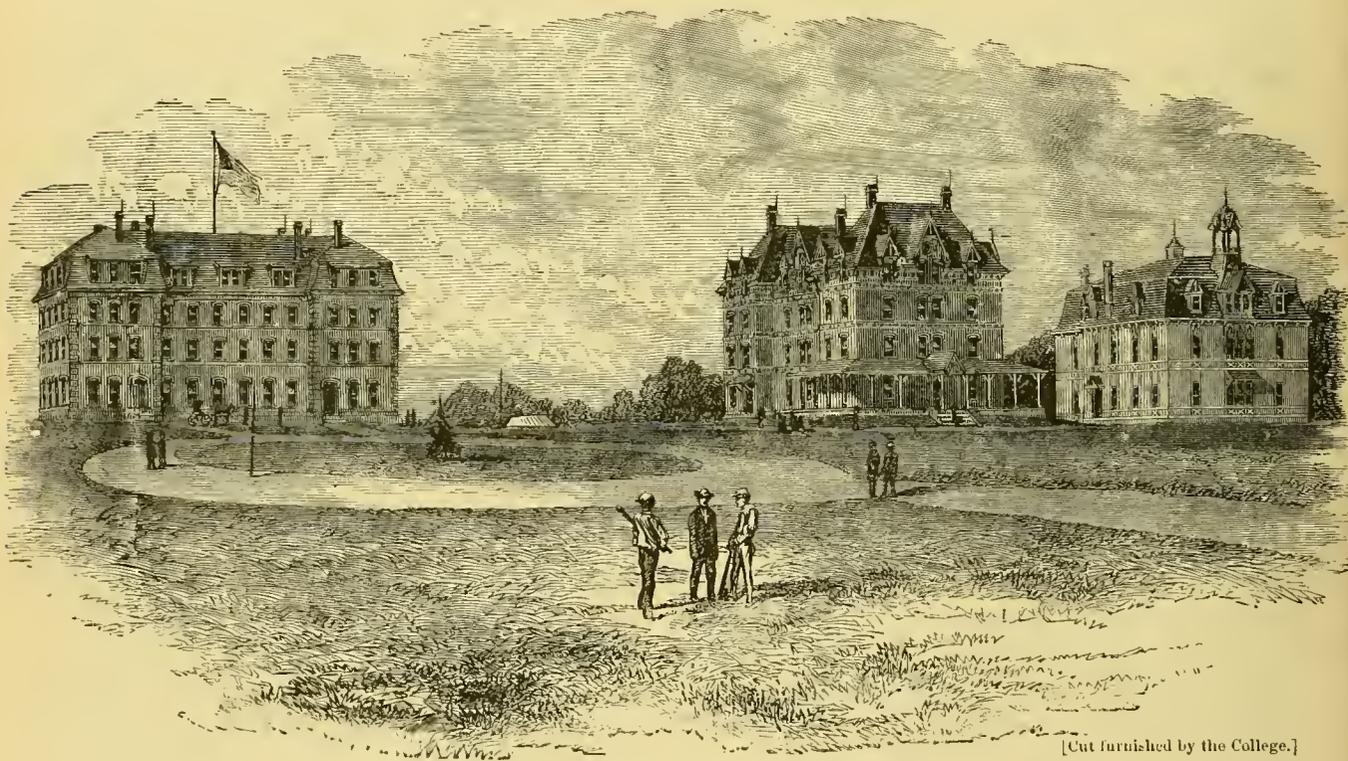

Faculty of Amherst College.—Rev. Julius H. Seelye, D.D., LL.D., '49, President, Professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy, and Pastor of the College Church; Charles U. Shepard, M.D., LL.D., '24, Emeritus Professor of Natural History; Rev. William S. Tyler, D.D., LL.D., '30, Williston Professor of the Greek Language and Literature; Edward Tuckerman, LL.D., Professor of Botany; Edward P. Crowell, A.M., '53, Moore Professor of Latin Language and Literature; Edward Hitchcock, A.M., M.D., '49, Professor of Hygiene and Physical Education; William L. Montague, A.M., '55, Professor of French, Italian, and Spanish; Richard H. Mather, A.M., '57, Professor of Greek and German; William C. Esty, A.M., '60, Walker Professor of Mathematics and Astronomy; Elijah P. Harris, Ph.D., '55, Professor of Chemistry; Benjamin K.

perienicing by the way some periods of exciting change. The former has 72 members; the latter, 42. "Hitchcock Society of Inquiry," formed in 1870, has 62 members; the "Antivenian Society," 1830, 114 acting and 1924 graduated members; the "Musical Association," 1869.

Secret Societies.—"Alpha Delta Phi," 1836, 18 members; "Psi Upsilon," 1841, 19 members; "Delta Kappa Epsilon," 1848, 19 members; "Chi Psi," 1864, 22 members; "Chi Phi," 1873, 28 members.

Non Secret.—"Delta Upsilon," 1847, 39 members.

Semi-Centennial.—The alumni and friends of the college celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of its existence in a manner loyal, fraternal, and enthusiastic, during the commencement season, in July, 1871. On this occasion addresses were made by President Stearns, who also gave the baccalaureate sermon, Hon. A. H. Bullock, Prof. Snell, Dr. Edward P. Humphrey, Revs. H. N. Barnum and Henry Ward Beecher, Profs. Park and Hitchcock, and Waldo Hutchins. Nearly seven hundred of the alumni were present.

[Cut furnished by the College.]

MASSACHUSETTS AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, AMHERST, MASS.

Emerson, Ph.D., '65, Hitchcock Professor of Geology and Zoology; Rev. H. Humphrey Neil, A.M., '66, Williston Professor of Rhetoric and Oratory, and of English Literature; Elihu Root, Ph.D., '67, Walker Professor of Mathematics and Natural History; Joseph H. Chickering, A.M., '69, Associate Professor of English; Anson D. Morse, A.M., '69, Professor of History and Political Economy; Rev. Thomas P. Field, D.D., '34, Samuel Green Professor of Biblical History and Interpretation, and Pastoral Care; Leverett Mears, Ph.D., '74, Instructor in Chemistry; Levi H. Elwell, A.M., '75, Instructor in Greek; Henry B. Richardson, A.M., '69, Instructor in Latin; Benjamin E. Smith, A.B., '77, Walker Instructor in Mathematics; John M. Clarke, A.B., '77, Assistant in Geology; Rev. Enoch F. Burr, D.D., '68, Lecturer on the Scientific Evidences of Religion; Frederick Zuchtman, Instructor in Vocal Music; Walter S. Biscoe, A.M., '74, Acting Librarian; Melven J. Allen, '79, Assistant.

The "Alexandrian" and "Athenian," the principal literary societies, were formed early in the life of the college, in 1821, and have continued their existence to the present time, ex-

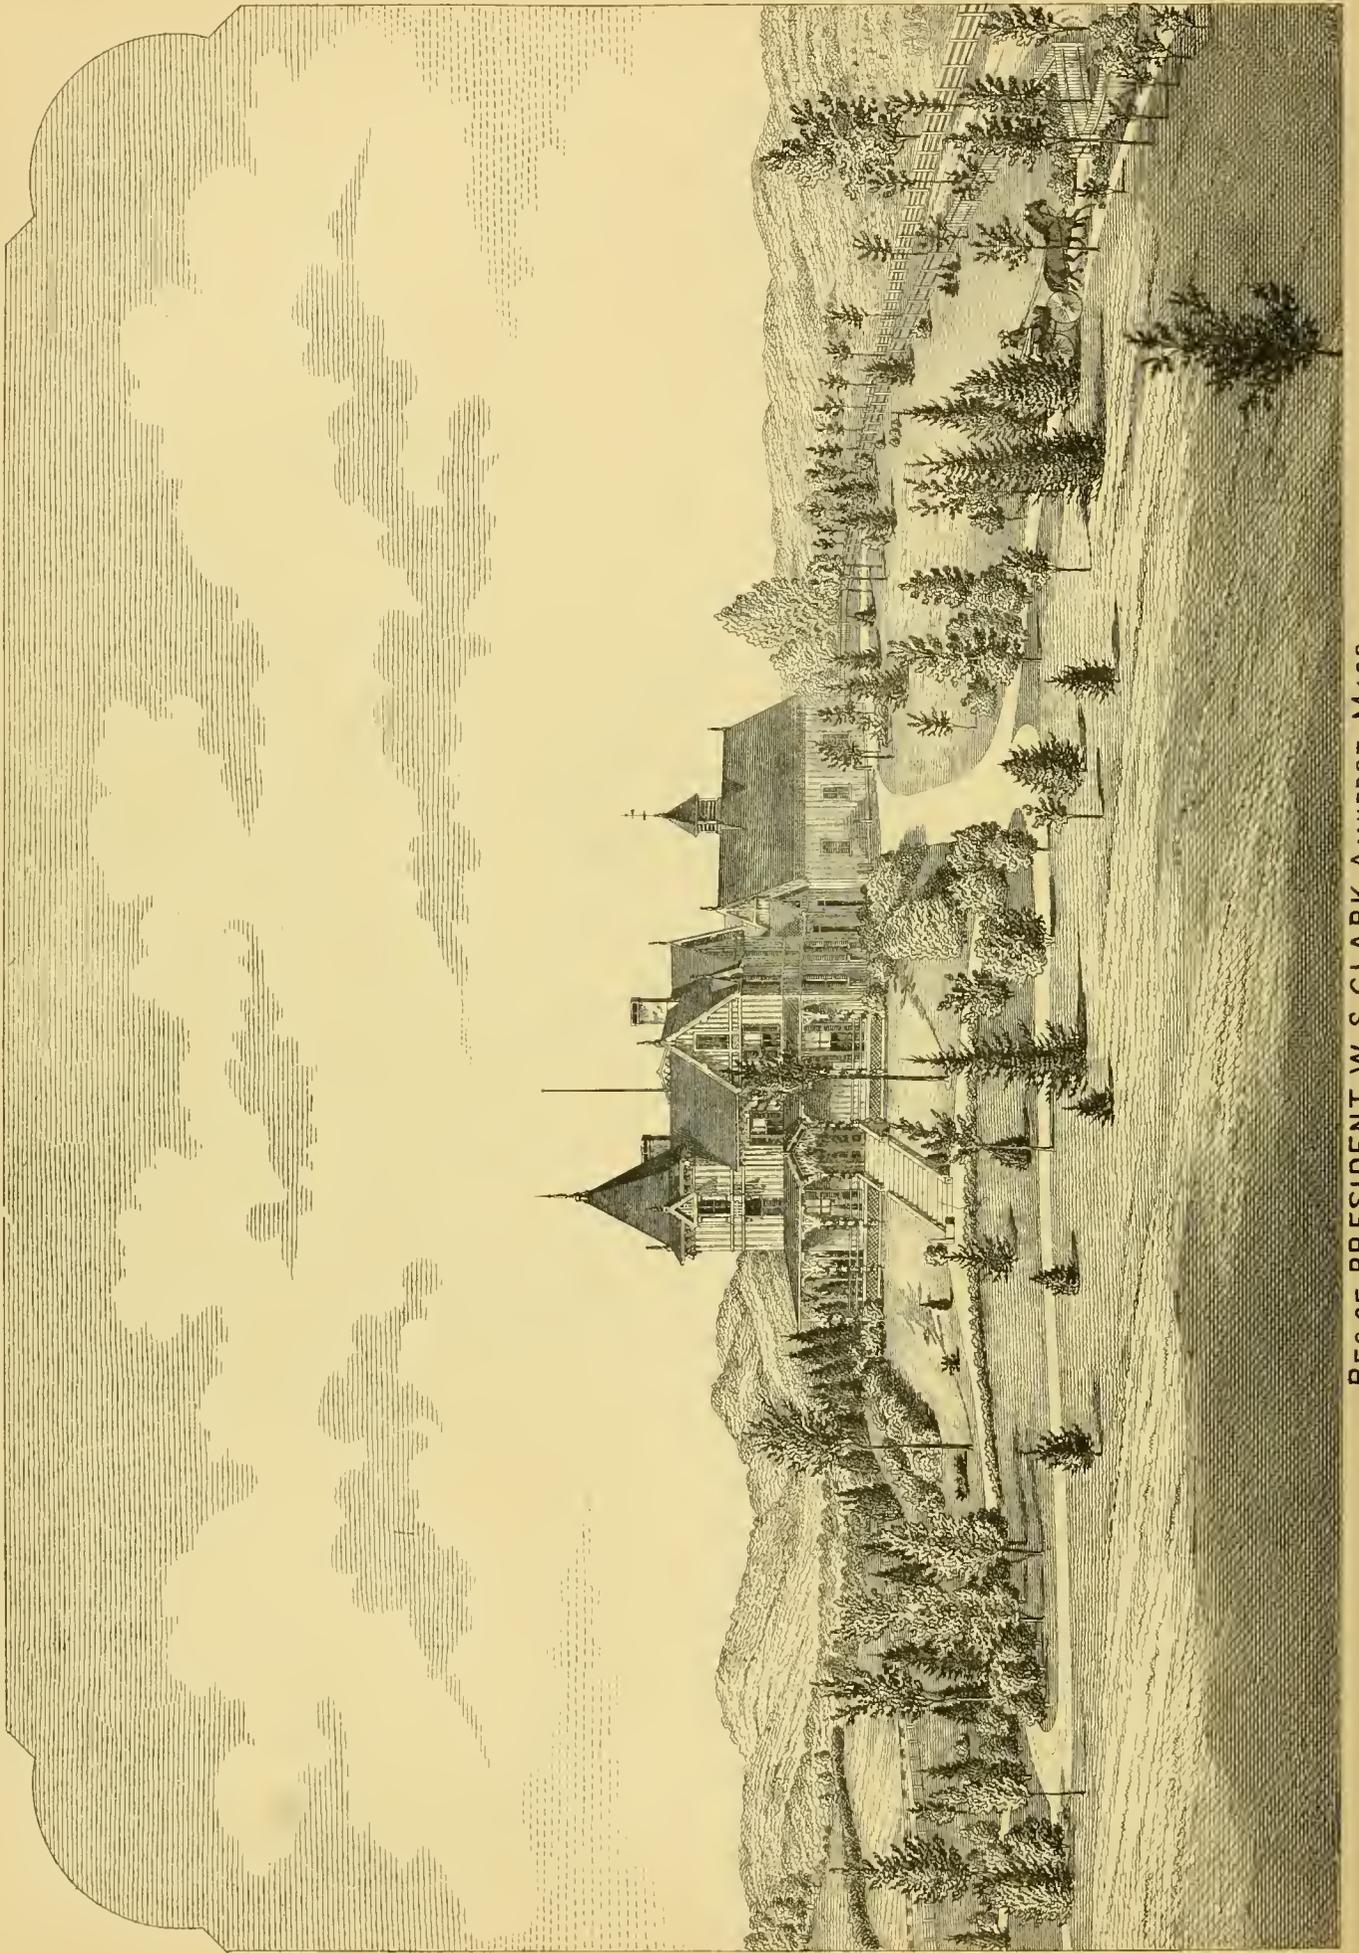

MASSACHUSETTS AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

Little had been done in the United States, prior to 1849, toward the practical application of science in agriculture, and no school existed for the scientific preparation of young men for farming and kindred pursuits. The founders of the Norfolk Agricultural Society had this in view at the time of its formation, and at their first exhibition, Sept. 26, 1849, were favored with an address by Marshall P. Wilder, embodying valuable suggestions upon the subject.

